

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

The Musical World

THIS BOOK IS FOR USE
WITHIN THE LIBRARY ONLY

Harvard College Library

FROM THE ELKAN NAUMBURG
FELLOWSHIP FUND

By the terms of the gift the income of this Fund in any year when the Fellowship is not assigned is to be used for the Library of the University for the purchase of works, preferably pertaining to Music.

MUSIC LIBRARY

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

VOL. LV.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,
244, REGENT STREET.

1877.

Mus 18.2$ *

Harvard College Library
Mar. 15, 1921
Naumburg Fellowship fund

LONDON :
PRINTED BY HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON,
73 & 74, MARYLEBONE LANE, W.

INDEX—1877.

A climb to Cloudland (D.T.), 650
 A Belgian musician on Indian music, 320
 A book of old Scotch ballads and airs, by the Dean of Moray, 176
 A canard about Patti and Gerster, 567
 A festival sermon, 618, 633
 A few days in a country house (Punch), 528
 A letter from John Barnett, 520
 A letter to Ernst from Joachim, 232
 A letter to Rosenhain from Mendelssohn, 785
 A letter to F. C. Burnand from Paul Moist, 87; Stephen Round, 507
 A model opera house, at Leicester, 621
 A night w' Burns, 86
 A nightmare of copy and moral right, 262
 A paroxysm, 232
 A professional career (Pencordd Gwffyn), 25, 36, 54
 A query, 397
 A question of vibrations, by William Chappell, 474
 A reminiscence of Prince Albert, by C. K. Salaman, 607
 A reminiscence of Amsterdam in 1842, by C. K. Salaman, 727
 A scene at the Edinburgh Castle, 8
 A Wagnerian Teatraylogy (Punch's Pocket Book), 38, 51, 67
 Academus watches the case for Athensæus, 56
 Albani, Mdle, 56, 57. In Paris, 164
 Albani, Mdle, as Ophelia, 570, 606
 Alboni, marriage of Mdme, 90
 Alexandra Palace, band and choir contests, 561
 Allison, presentation to Mr Horton C., 506, at Dublin, 718
 American debutantes (New York Music Trade Review), 576
 Ambros, death of Dr A. W., 457. His Musical collection, 510
 Amphigouri, by Wellben, 92
 An acrostic, 203
 An epicure as a critic and a musician, 736
 Answers to correspondents (Punch), 416
 Are we a musical people? (Echo), 118
 Art in Hospitals (J. Lawrence Hamilton), 99; (Dr Sidney Chater), 117
 Albani, Mdle, 215, 217, (Pall Mall Gazette), 443
 Amateur Madman at Bayreuth, 328.
 Armes' (Dr Hezekiah, at Newcastle, 803
 Astonishing impudence (Theophilus Queer), 122
 Auber's MS. opera, Jean de Chimay, 265, 359
 Auber judged by Wagner, 219, 231, 284, 312
 Auber and Scribe, 104
 Auber's monument in Paris, 91, 166
 Austin's, (Mr) Fire King at Leeds, 702
 Autograph (Facsimile) Letters. F. Liszt, 17. G. Rossini, 492. R. Schumann, 12.
 Balfé's Trio, at the Monday Popular Concerts, 221, 236

Balfé's Trio (Illustrated Dramatic News), 287
 Balfé's music at Avignon, 637
 Barnett, Miss Emma, 806
 Baron Golf, a tragedy, 523
 Becker, death of Herr K. F., 782
 Beethoven, projected monument to, 42
 Beethoven's funeral, 57
 Beethoven at the Aquarium, 162
 Beethoven, Thayer's life of, 471, 536
 Benedict's St Peter in Edinburgh, 770
 Benedict's Concerto in E flat, 682, 698
 Bennett, Joseph, letters from Bayreuth, 543
 Bennett, Sterndale, Motet for eight voices and organ, 309
 Berlioz, Hector, 591, 733
 Bertini, Mdle Louise, Scribe and Boieldieu, 461
 Births, 216, 604, 684, 700, 865
 Birthdays of composers, 75, 123, 249, 351.
 Bishop, Mdme Anna, 42
 Blackmailing, 587, 743, 759
 Blackie, Professor (Edinburgh Courier), 400
 Blackie, Professor, versus Art, 375
 Blindness and Music (Pall Mall Gazette), 526
 Bohemian musician, 801
 Boieldieu's Dame Blanche, 637
 Boiss, Mdle, 769
 Boucicault, Dion, on Dramatic Pthisis, 720
 Boulan, (Benedict), funeral of Mdme Alice, 625
 Brahms' quartet in B flat (Standard), 136
 Brahms, a new work by Johannes (Examiner), 69
 Brahms' new Symphony at the Crystal Palace, (Times), 247; (Graphic), 268; (Daily Telegraph), 313
 Brandt, Mdle Marianne, 498
 Brass band contest, 243
 Brüll's Der Landfriede, 735
 Bülow, Dr Hans von, 688, 786
 Bülow, Dr Hans von (Music Trade Review), 106
 Bülow and Cherubino, 752, 768, 789
 Bülow, notes of Travel by Dr Hans von, 827, 859, 865
 Bunnett, Dr, and the Norwich Cathedral organ appointment, 634, 719, 763
 Bunsen, Mdle Victoria, at Uddevalla (Sweden), 92; at Copenhagen, 163; at Christiana (Norway), 164
 Burnand, Family Ties, 683
 Burnand on's Box, 752
 Cambridge musical festival, 192
 Cambridge University examination papers, 36, 60, 83, 361
 Cambridge University intelligence, 624
 Campanella's (Signor) autobiography, 673
 Carnarvon Eisteddfod, 571
 Caracciolo, Signora, 221
 Carrodus, Mr (Glasgow "Bailie") 106; (Manchester Examiner), 161
 Cervetti, Sig. the violoncellist, 318
 Channing, the late Mr William, 296

Chappell, Master, and youthful heroism, 251, 253
 Chavet, death of M. Eugene, 122
 Cherubini, 866
 Chevillard, death of M. Pierre, A. F., 866
 Chopin (Twickenham Teaser), 378; (Dwight), 620
 Clemow, dinner at West Bromwich to Mr W. H., 228
 Cock, sale of copyrights of Mr Lamborn, 143
 Coleridge, an unpublished letter from S. T., 154
 Compton, death of Mr Henry, 632
 Composers and Librettos, 620
 CONCERTS:—
 Agricultural Hall, 592. Aguilar, Emanuel, 57, 75, 282, 300, 319, 866. Alexandra Palace, 751. Albert Hall, "Boxing" Day, 866. Albert Hall. The Creation, 69; Verdi's Requiem, 142, 803; Gounod's Sacré cœur de Jesus, 229. Albrecht, Miss Lillie, 250. Allison, Horton, C., 250. Arditi, Signor, 415, 447, 717. Argyll Home, Oakley Crescent, 447. Athenæum (Camden Town), 90, 802. Austin's, a night w' Burns, 86. Austin's annual, 383. Bach Choir, The, 277. Bache, Walter, 151. Barnett, Miss Emma, 431. Beard, Miss Marion, 415. Belval, Mdme Marie, 159. Benedict, Sir Julius, 432. Bevan, W., 769, 786. Bishenden, C. J., 835. Bohrer, Herr Carl, 462. Bonetti, Signor, 319. Boosey's Mr John, London Ballad Concerts, 44, 59, 90, 202, 787, 799, 813, 831. Booth, Mr Otto, 299. Bow & Bromley Institute, 123, 787. Boy's Home, Regent's Park, 57. Breitner, Louia, 447. Brixton Choral Society, 150. Bunsen, Mdle Victoria, 447. Burnett, Alfred, 352. Carlton Hall Poor School's Fund, 123. Carrodus & Howell, 106, 116, 135, 173, 212. Chatterton, Frederick, 462. Chatterton, Miss Mary, 182. Chatham, 218. Cheltenham, 218. Cheshire, Mr and Mrs John, 250. Child, Master John, 366. City of London Hospital, 105. Cherer, Mdme Talbot, 834. Cole, J. Parry, 383. Covent Garden Promenade Concerts, (See Gatti). Coventry, Gerard, 511. Cross, John, 750. Crystal Palace, by Polkaw, 292. Crystal Palace, 103, 118, 156, 173, 228, 246, 247, 393; (Graphic), 681, 697, 717, 751, 844. Crystal Palace, Lenten, Oratorios, 161. Dolby, Mdme Sainton, 415. Durham, Ernest, 787. Edwards, Miss, 511. Ellis, W. A., 282. Elliston, Kathleen, 850. Ely, Mrs, 142, 201. Franke, Herr, 136, 787. Ganz, Wilhelm, 431. Garcia, Signor Gustave, 446. Gatti's, "Promenades," at Covent Garden, 554, 600, 619, 639, 655, 717, 802. Gear, George F., 217. German, Athenæum, 159. Gilbert, Mr and Mrs Alfred, 300, 352. Gladstone, Miss Julia, 734. Goddard, Mdme Arabella, 244, 279, 587. Græffenhagen, Mdme, 233. Guilmaut,

- M. Alexandre, 201. Hackney Choral Association, 136. Henry, Miss Ida, 352. Holmes, W. H., 23, 543. Holy Trinity Church Choir, (Cloudeley Square), 282. Horne, Miss Ellen, 319. Kennedy Family, The, 651, 667, 683, 699. Kilburn Gate Club, 801. Kuhe, Wilhelm, 415. Lehmyer, Herr S., 182, 415, 478. Leigh, Miss Alison, 265. Leslie, Henry, 181, 194, 220, 416, 462. Lewisham Choral Society, 105. Liebhart, Mdme, 592, 605, 623, 655. Liverpool, 218. London Glee and Madrigal Union, 277, 393. Loge, Henri, 160. London Academy of Music, 10, 835, 850, 867. London Conservatoire of Music, 478, 511, 717. Macfarren, Mrs John, 686, 850. Mackway, Richard, 734, 750. Mattei, Signor Tito, 383. May, Miss Florence, 160. Monday Popular, Retrospect of the, 102, 119, 155, 197, 213, 228, 763, 821. Monday Popular, 58, 101; (Times), 214; (Daily Telegraph), 229, 783, 867. Moore, G. W., 182. Mozart and Beethoven Society, 366. Musical Artists' Society, 282, 300, 867. National Hospital for Diseases of the Heart, 352. New Philharmonic, (Prospectus of), 277, 312, 330. Nilsson, Mdme Christine, 391. Normal College for the blind, 217. Narden and Peacock (Albert Hall), 252. Oberthur, Charles, 479, 495. Palmer, Miss, 318. Papini, Signor Guido, 834. Philharmonic, 152, 156, 230, 400. Summary of the season, 473. Pommereul, Mdle, 447. Popular, (See Saturday and Monday Popular). Pratt, Mr S. G., 495, 511. Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden, (See Gatti). Purdy, Miss, 299. 352. Querol, Mdme Anita, 511. Railway Benevolent Institute, 300. Riviere, M., 415. Royal Academy of Music, 134, 157, 211, 227, 295, 408, 427, 680, 698, 783, 830, 845. Royal Aquarium, 295. Rubini, Jervis, 750. Rubinstein, Anton, 309, (Times), 395. Russell, George, 23. St Saviour's Church, 415. Sacred Harmonic Society, Eli, 308. Judas Maccabeus, 845, 863. Last Judgment, 376. Solomon, 84. St Thomas's Square Chapel, 319. St Germaine, Mdle, 265. Saint Monica Institute, 142. Saint Clair, Mdle, 319. San Martinos, Mdle, 801. Sanders, Miss Florence, 478. Schubert Society, 182, 233, 282, 352, 430, 477. Schulz, Herr and Mdme, 250. Scotch Ballad, 613. Shinn, George, 336. Smith, Sydney, 750, 817. Tamplin, Augustus L., 75, 90, 105, 142, 511. Taylor, W. F., 834. Thomas, John, 446. Tinney, Charles E., 142. Victoria Hall, Bayswater, 734. Wagner, Herr Richard, 333, 348. Wallace, Welby, 478. Webbe, W. H., 23. Welch, J. B., 496. Welsh National, 409, 523. Westrop, Miss Kate, 398. Wynne, Miss Edith, 416. Zion College Choral Union, 61.
- Conductors of the Grand Opera, Paris, list of, 525
- Conradi, a reminiscence of August, by F. Gumbert, 410, 463
- Copyright in Songs, 202
- Corani, Mdle Ida, 94
- CORRESPONDENCE:—
- A complaint (J. P. Knight), 194. An English musician (An Amateur), 682. Bach's Matthew Passion at St Paul's (Poserdon), 246. Baffe's Mazeppa (R. P. Stewart), 432. Barrett's (Dr W. A.) lectures (D. Baptie), 177, 214. Barrett, W. A., 197. Barnett, John, and Barnett, M. J., on "God is everywhere," 586, 608. Boosey v. Fairlie (Boosey & Co.), 850. Buy a broom (Little Barges), 729; (G. A. C.), 753. Carissini and Stradella (D. Baptie), 368. Finished pupils (Jonathan Jones, jun.), 174. Flamingo on Rubinstein's conducting (A Country Professor), 328, 347. God save the King (C. P.), 586; William Chappell, 623; W. H. Cummings, 651. Handel Festival (M. Costa), 382. Horace misquoted (Smithers Goldfinch), 849. Liverpool, St George's Hall organ, (amateur), 819; Pan, 862. Mathews, Mr Charles (Charles Mathews), 229. Melbourne Quartette Society, 868. Music hall songs (Amateur), 246. Musical degeneration in England (O. L.), 641. Musical Critic (M. A. B.), 443. Musical Pitch (William Chappell), 553. Musical Scholarship for Wales (Brinley Richards), 176. My mother's song (W. Ganz), 213. Oh! Nanny, wilt thou gang with me (an answer wanted), D. Baptie, 665, 681, 687, 696. Oh! Nanny, wilt thou gang with me (an answer given), W. Chappell, 681; (G. A. C.), 687, 712; (R. P. Stewart), 696. Oxford's dramatic works (W. Guernsey), 197; (T. F. D. C.), 231. Ronconi (Michael Williams), 749. Rubinstein, Anton (an English musician), 397. Rubinstein, Anton, on England (an English musician), 575. Storace's music (D. Baptie), 539. The essay on Chopin (Ignace Gibsone), 391. Ware Wall (Wm. Spark), 362. Weber, Alfred (Wilhelm Ganz), 251. When to applaud (C. R. E.), 431. Coussemaker, sale in Brussels of the musical library of Ch. de, 235. Cricket matches. Her Majesty's Theatre v. Representatives of the Libraries, 635; Chappell & Co. v. Cramer & Co., 635. Crystal Palace, operas at the, 544. Cuzzani, Signora, 201.
- Dabadie, death of Mdme, 801
- Dall' Argine (Constantine), the composer, 202
- David, Félicien, 45, 75
- Davies, Dr Maurice, lecture, 118
- Dialogues (illustrated), every week
- Diary of my ride to Khiva, by F. C. Burnard (Punch), 292, 310, 329, 367, 377, 399, 426, 448, 464, 479, 490
- Dingelstedt, Mdme (Jenny Lutzer), death of, 719
- Dorrell, Mr William, 445
- Drury Lane Theatre, rent of, 590
- Engel, death of Herr David Hermann, 461
- English glee writers, 146
- English songs (Examiner), 640
- Epigram, by Welben Benwell, 69
- Errata (not our own, but requiring correction), 21
- Essipoff's (Mdme) farewell to America, 392, 592
- Exotic scenery (by T. Rogers), 537
- Faure in the French provinces, 107, 115, 123, 124, 132, 160, 232
- Faure, a Bordeaux critic on M., 177
- Ferrari, Marriage of Miss Sophie, 281, 283
- Fischer, death of Herr Carl Ludwig, 607
- FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE:—
- Berlin, 70, 87, 246, 458, 544, 606, 639, 789, 847. Boulogne-sur-mer, 70, 175, 197, 267, 293, 488, 513, 559, 592, 622, 639, 682, 735, 762, 818, 831. Brunn, 59. Brunswick, 706. Brussels, 687, 799, 820. Bülow's Letter to Herr Senff, 865. Cannes, 94. Cologne, 455. Copenhagen, 570. Dresden, 186, 481. Droydsden, 218. Franzensbad (Bohemia), 488. Graz (Austria) 529. Liege, 368, 432. Milan, 795. New York, 311. Paris (Polkaw), 761. Paris Scraps, 100, 263, 294, 336, 394. Rome, 805. St Petersburg, 648. Salzburg Musical Festival, 367. Smyrna, 781. Stuttgart, 683. Vienna, 497, 538, 634, 670, 681, 719, 772, 797, 814, 835, 836, 846, 862. Wagner, Richard, and his Music School, 668. Weimar, 635. Wiesbaden, 569, 772.
- Foreign Paragraphs (every week)
- Fossey, Death of M. Leon, 124
- Fra Giovanni, the new Roman tenor, 302
- Frezzolini, Mdme, 702
- Furtado, Death of Miss, 578
- Gabriel, Death of Miss Virginia (Mrs G. March), 542, 559
- Gadsby, Henry, 847
- Garcia, Presentation to Signor Mannel, 494
- Garcia, Signor Gustave, 94
- Gayarre, Signor (Mayfair), 276
- Gerster, Mdle Etelka, at Berlin, 283
- Gerster, Mdle Etelka (Mayfair), 520
- Gerster, Mdle Etelka, as Gilda, 570; as Elvira, 608
- Gloucester Festival, 569, 599, 615, 619
- Gloucester Festival Orchestra, 635
- Gluck, by M. Wekerlin, 201
- "God save the King" (A. W. Thayer in Dwight), 522; (C. P.), 586; (W. Chappell), 623; (W. H. Cummings), 651
- Goddard, Mdme Arabella, 750, 821
- Goddard, Mdme Arabella, and The Maid of Orleans, 201
- Goddard, Mdme Arabella, in Paris, 299
- Goddard, Mdme Arabella, a French critic on, 314
- Goddard, Mdme Arabella, return to England, 609
- Goldschmidt, Otto, report on the new music in Fitzwilliam library, Cambridge, 624
- Graun's Passion Music at St Gabriel's, Pimlico, 195
- Halliday, death of Mr Andrew (Theatre), 278
- Hauk, Miss Minnie, 347, 834
- Hauser, Miska, 734
- Hanslick, Dr, about Christine Nilsson, 55
- Hanslick, Dr, and Wagner's letters to his dressmaker, 557
- Handel Festival, 439, 456
- Handel, anecdote about, 685
- Haydon, F. W., across art, 705
- Heimendal, Edward, 154
- Heller, Stephen, 5, 36, 52
- Herbeck, death of Johann, 798, 813
- Hill, Mr Weist, and the Alexandra Palace orchestra, 642
- Hiller's, Dr Ferdinand, new symphony, 184
- Her Majesty's Theatre, sale of the lease of, 93
- Her Majesty's Theatre, history of, 295
- Her Majesty's Theatre (Daily Telegraph), 310
- Hersee, Mdme Rose, 699, 702
- Hiller, a letter from Ferdinand, 424
- Holmes, the late Mr Alfred, 42
- Holmes, Mr W. H., 685
- Holmes, Mr W. H., "Notes upon Notes," 441, 714, 730
- Hopffer, Bernard, death of, 603
- Hullah, John, on training colleges in Great Britain, 585, 606, 617
- ILLUSTRATIONS:—
- At the Monday Pops, pianist and critic, 11. Bumpus and Slim, 315. Burnand, F. C., 427. Cartoon (Wagner, Rubinstein, &c.), 444. Chappell, S. Arthur, 362. Edwards, Sutherland, 540. Fancelli, Sig., 493. Foli, Sig., 13. Fourleg, Professor, and Stump, Admiral, 349. Gayarre, Signor, 331. Graziani, Signor, 588. Grief, Dr, and Mr Sidey Ham, 462. Grunseisen, C. L., 445. Hueffer, Franz, 524.

ITALIAN OPERA IN MODERN COSTUME, BY CHARLES LYALL No. 1, Il Trovatore, 7, 40, 72, 88.

Jarrett, Henry C., 556. Jefferson, as Rip Van Winkle, 476. Lincoln, Henry C., 477. Liszt and Benedict, 17, 139. Long, Lord, and Short, T. Duff, 350. Night, Dr, and Day, Dr, 700. Neigh, Major, and Bray, Dr, 412. Mayhew, Augustus, 411. Pullit, Major, and Nose, Dr, 349. Rubinstein, Anton (Non Plus Ultra), 363. Rubinstein, Anton ("Look upon this picture and on this"), 428. Rubinstein, Anton ("They do leap out to meet him"), 766. Scaldi, Mdme, 334. Spark, Dr William, 817. Sullivan, Dr Arthur S., 298, 701. Tamberlik, Signor, 508. Taylor, Tom, 573. The birthplace of Christine Nilsson, 12. The civil service tenor, 784. Wagner, Richard, 364. Wieniawski, 14. Wilhelmj, 15. Wyld, Dr Henry, 460.

Incedon, anecdote of, 769
Incedon and Judge Nares, 159
Injunctions (Lord Long), 92
Irving, Henry, and the press, 797
Italian operas produced during the year (1876), 75
Ivory, death of Mr John, 125

Janin's library, sale of Jules, 143, 163
Joachim at Liege, 430
Joachim's Elegiac overture (Sunday Times), 230
Joachim, Dr (Mayfair), 193; (Graphic), 193
Joachim's Cambridge University degree, 141, 159
Joachim at Cambridge (Times), 191 (Examiner), 212
Joachim at Stuttgart, 55
Jordan, testimonial to Mr Warwick, 69
June, events in the month of, 414

Kelly, Michael, 769
Kennedy Family at St James's Hall, the, 667
Köchel, death of Ludwig Ritter von, 431
Krebs, Mdle Marie, 56, 86
Krebs, Herr Carl, 864
Kuhe's Musical Festival at Brighton, 137, 152

Lachner, death of Herr Theodor, 466
Lauterbach, accident to Herr, 491
LAW:—
Wade v. Corpe, 68. Keppel v. Royal Aquarium Company, 71. Sprake & Palmer v. Brandon, 202. Pointer v. Hengler, 230. Coote & Chappell v. Ingram, 230. De Caux v. De Caux, 543, 571, 593

LEADING ARTICLES:—
A letter from Jacques Rosenhain about Mendelssohn, 785. A retrospect of the Year, 41. Art versus Science at Cambridge University, 380, 396. Bach's Passion and Beethoven's Mount of Olives, 200. Black-mailing, 556, 573, 576. Chopin's letters from Paris, 620. Firstnightism, 767. Handel Festival, 429. Liszt, an hour past with, 848. Macfarren's Joseph, 833. Music at the University of Cambridge, 380, 396, 429. Musical festivals for London, 732. Musical Meanderings, by Flamingo, 296. Mynyddog (Dishley Peters), 541. National Training School for Music, 73. Nicolai's opera, Die lustigen Weiber von Windsor, 493, 833. Organ reform, 800. Pantomime no pantomime (J. V. B.), 21, 39. Parry, John (N. V. N.), 140. Patti, Adelina, 158, 348. Professor or music-teacher, 636. Rubinstein and an English Musician, 575, 588. The new national opera and Mr J. H. Mapleson, 540. There is nothing new under the sun, 653. Tietjens, Mdle Therese, 684. To Dr A. S. Silent (Simon Half), 21. Toujours Perdrix (an English musician), 89. Wagner, the coming of Richard, 216. Wagner, Mayfair on, 264. Wagner's concert at Albert Hall, 333, 365. Wagner and Weber (Globe), 413. Wagner Festival, Times on, 348. We shall see, 413

Llandysul Eisteddfod, 546
Leeds Musical Festival (Graphic), 92, 505; (Times), 631, 647; (Punch), 651; (Yorkshire Post), 652
Leeds Festival, Reminiscences of the (Graphic), 672; (Leeds Mercury), 695
Leeds Festival, balance of accounts, 703
Lip service (Globe), 71
Liszt (Mayfair), 227
Liszt at Rome, 751; at Weimar, 848
Lind, Jenny, and her baby, 587
Liszt, Abbate Franz, 61, 635
Lutzer, death of Mdle Jenny, 719

Macfarren's Joseph at Leeds (Yorkshire Post), 652
Macfarren's Lady of the Lake (Sunday Times), 737, 769, 771, 780
Mara, Life of Gertrude Elizabeth, 551, 568, 583, 601, 638, 649, 670, 713
Marchesi, Mdme, at Vienna, 292
Macfarren, the late George (G. A. M.), 25
Marriages, 281, 365, 542, 636, 732, 832, 865
Marchner, Monument to Heinrich, 378
Mary, Queen of Scots, 657
Mason's setting of "Lord of all power," by Dr Miller, 185
May, Miss Alice, at Belfast, 118
Meller, Miss, at Leipzig, 266
Mendelssohn's papers, 750
Mendelssohn's Antigone at the Royal Academy of Music, 196
Mendelssohn and English musicians, 524
Mendelssohn, a lecture on, by F. E. Edwards, 799
Men's voices in the church, 37
Monjauze, death of the tenor, M., 639
Monnier, the late M. Henri, 125
Moore and Burgess Minstrels, 70
Moesenthal the dramatic author, death of Dr, 165
Mozart, an unpublished mass by, 181
Mozart, an unpublished letter of, 524
Mozart, anecdote about, 558
Mozart, a humorous poem on, by August Müller, 569
Music critic or musical critic, 688, 768
Music in cathedrals, 268
Music and painting, 649
Music primers, 852
Music versus madness, 667
Music a science of numbers, by Wm. Chappell, 746, 762

MUSIC AT:—
Berlin, 246. Blackpool, 718. Brighton (See Kuhe's Festival), 687, 821. Birmingham, 135. Cambridge, 366. Dublin, 718. Dundee, 686. Edinburgh, 799. Glasgow, 765. Launceston (Tasmania), 714. Leeds, 8, 345, 407. Liverpool, 753, 773. Manchester, 67, 107, 133, 174, 252, 704, 752, 761, 803, 831, 852. Newcastle-on-Tyne, 704, 760, 781, 803. Sheffield, 670. Stafford, 481. The Antipodes, 43, 85, 218, 278, 411, 560, 602, 714, 861, 868.
Musical Association, 450
Musical contests, 686

Musical copyright (J. Clelland), 399
Musical critic, 443
Musical egotism (Punch), 555
Musical quacks (Tatler), 698
Musical criticism (Mayfair), 132
Musical events in July, 496; August, 559; October, 717; December, 846
Musical legends, 672, 731
Musical reminiscences, by H. Truhn, 472, 487
Musical scholarship for Wales, 176
Musicians who have died away (Paisiello and Méhul), 504; (J. Seiler), 535
Mynyddog, death of (Pencerdd Gwffyn) 567

National training school for Music, 61, 73
Naumann, Johann Gottlieb, 669
Neglected composers (Storace and Shield), D. Baptie, 521
New music establishment at Melbourne (Glen's), 61
New National Operahouse (J. H. Mapleson), 540; (F. Gye), 572; (J. H. Mapleson), 604; (Architect), 636; (F. Gye), 654
Nil Nisi (Scribbler), 92
Nilsson, Christine, what Hanalick says about, 55
Nilsson at Vienna, 74, 87
Nilsson at St Petersburg, 845
Nilsson, Mdme Christine, in America, 293, 369
Nilsson as Lucia di Lammermoor, 368
Nilsson as Violetta, 570
Norfolk and Norwich Festival (Norwich Argus), 175, 195, 234
Norwich Cathedral, appointment of organist to, 634

OBITUARY:—
Basquit, Heinrich, 684. Bewick, Thomas James, 179. Boulton, Mdme Alice, 604. Braham, Major Ward Soane, 179. Chappell, Mrs Emily, 73. Cramer, John Baptist, 832. Crotch, William Robert, 345. D'Alquen, Franz, 604. Desplaces, Henri, 104. Glimes, Mdle Aline de, 604. Goss, Rev. John, 668. Henshaw, William, 668. Hobbs, J. W., 56. Holbrooke, Miss Lillie M. H., 668. Hutchings, Charles Pope, 636. Kirkman, Joseph, 748. Lablache, Mdme Frederic, 653. Lonsdale, Christopher, 767. Lutgen, Herr Paul, 748. March, Mrs George (Virginia Gabriel), 542. Metzler, Mrs Elizabeth, 653. Neate, Charles, 248. Oxenford, John, 131. Osborne, Mrs George A., 542. Panormo, George Lewis, 104. Phipps, William Henry, 604. Pittman, Miss Charlotte N., 380. Pollitzer, Mrs Selina, 556. Pollitzer, George, 748. Purdy, Mrs Charles, 248. Pyne, George, 204. Rainforth, Miss E., 653. Reinagle, Alexander Robert, 264. Roberts, Mrs Thomas (Rebecca Isaacs) 314. Serle, Emma Clara, 684. Shore, William, 62. Smith, George Townshend, 542. Sparre, Countess Caroline de (Mdle Naldi), 61. Stockhausen, Mdme, 748. Sullivan, Frederic, 73. Suppus, Herr Caspar, 748. Svendsen, Maria, 684. Tietjens, Mdle Therese, 668. Tolhurst, George, 73.
Occasional notes (every week)
Opera in France and Germany in 1873, by Michael Williams, 728, 745, 769, 779, 795, 812, 829, 843, 861
Operas, first performances of, 253, 351, 495
Orchestra of the Royal Italian Opera, list of players in, 368
Orchestra of Her Majesty's Theatre, list of players in the, 368
Orchestra of the Philharmonic Society, 473
Orchestra of the Promenade Concerts (Arditi's), 569

ORGANS :—

Belhaven, U. P. Church, Glasgow, 715.
Chapel Town (Leeds) Wesleyan Chapel,
526. Manchester Town Hall, 513. St
Andrew's, Grimsby, 409. St John's Church, Margate, 635. St Peter's Cathedral, Adelaide, 376. Wesleyan chapel,
New North Road, 721.

ORGAN RECITALS :—

By W. T. Best at Liverpool (every week).
Mr W. T. Best on Mr Nathaniel Holmes' great organ, 233, 293, 318, 351, 383, 431.
Sir Herbert Oakeley, at Edinburgh, 247;
at Windsor Castle, 321. Dr C. G.
Verrinder at Albert Hall, 262. Mr
Lemmens, 478. Mr W. T. Best on the Manchester Town Hall, 513. Mr Abbott at Chapel Town, 526. Mr R. Sharpe, at All Saints', Southampton, 585. Mr Lott at St John's Church, Margate, 621. Mr
Best, at Belhaven U. P. Church, Glasgow,
715. Mr Frederic Archer at the Alexandra Palace, 715, 761. Mr E. H. Turpin,
721. Dr Spark at Harrogate, 850. Dr
Bunnnett at the Bow and Bromley Institute, 853.

Oxenford, death of Mr John, 131, 153

Oxenford, funeral of Mr John, 154

Oxenford, John, 161; (Yorick), 172; (Illustrated Dramatic News), 196; (Graphic), 203
Oxenford's (John) dramatic works (Era), 172,
197, 231

Oxenford, John, memorial to, 249, 301, 333

Panzeron, 733

Patey, M^{me}, 686

Patti, Adelina, "Taking the veil," 587

Patti, Adelina, 158, 159, 427, 558

Patti, Adelina, life of, 505

Patti, Adelina, as Dinorah, 344; as Juliet, 474; as Aida, 555; as Catarina, 570; as Margherita, 608; as Dinorah, 735

Patti, Adelina, at Milan, 780, 795

Pauer's (Ernst) lecture, 101

Petrella, Enrico, an appeal for, 234

Petrella, Signor, death of, 269, 285

Petrella, Signor, a list of his operas, 301

Philharmonic Society, election of new members, 790

Pitch (Mayfair), 425

Planté, M. Francis, 460, 475

POETRY :—

A Christmas carol (A Soldier's Daughter),
851. A ballad of Bayreuth (by our special
Cockney), 16. A Christmas letter (A Soldier's Daughter), 847. A child's song about rivers, &c., 592; about flowers, 624.
A study (Polkaw), 829. A stray thought (A Soldier's Daughter), 835. A tale of the days of old (Polkaw) 705. A wail
(Ophis), 478. Adieu plaisant pays de France (Mary Queen of Scots), 657. An exhortation, by Wellben, 26. An October night (Polkaw), 719, 735. An open face
(Reginald Barnett), 811. Angel's food
(Rita), 819. Annette Esapoff (Scribner's Old Cabinet), 71. April (S. P. Howell), 252. Au port d'Alger, 346. August (S.
P. Howell), 535. Beautiful breezes (Lewis
Novra), 773. Beauty that does not fade
(M. A. B.), 877. Bells (W. Guernsey),
837. Brass band contest (J. B.), 243.
Christmas times (W. Guernsey), 868.
Cloud visions (Rita), 745. Consolation (J.
C. B.), 143. December (S. P. Howell),
798. Evening clouds (Downhill Smith),
143. Faithless (Rita), 284. First favourites (Shaver Silver), 8. From the sun the earliest loveliest beam (Polkaw), 530.
God is everywhere (M. J. Barnett), 511;
(John Barnett), 520. Golden sunbeams
(L. Novra), 204. Good night (Rita), 108.

Happier days in store (Lewis Novra), 496.
Happier than a king (Louisa Gray), 440.
Hark! the hoarse whisper (H. Melville),
347. Harmony (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 490.
He never came (Rita), 10. I have loved thee so well (A Soldier's Daughter), 860.
I sing of Araminta (our Bayreuth madman), 586. In memory of James Mott (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 797. Joachim (Ben-well), 172. July (S. P. Howell), 458.
June (S. P. Howell), 384. La Dolorosa
(Reginald Barnett), 553. Last night I sang in a palace hall (M. A. W.), 353. Last words (Rita), 822. Let the shadows (W.
H.), 59. Little mistakes (Fun), 731.
March, (Rita), 184. May (S. P. Howell),
317. Memories (H. Melville), 234.
Musical World ballads, No. 4 (J. B.), 178;
No. 5, 280; No. 6, 332. My absent love
(Frederick A. Davison), 506. My little love (Louisa Gray), 177. November (S.
P. Howell), 730. Oceana, 383, 401.
October (S. P. Howell), 667. Only a gondolier, 689. Onwards we carelessly wend (Polkaw), 607. Raven Ringlets
(Wellington Guernsey), 9. Returned
(Hon. Mrs Norton), 622. Rhymes by a Lunatic, 393. Saint Valentine (S. P.
Howell), 101. September (S. P. Howell), 602
Seven years ago (Maria X. Hayes), 543.
Sonnet, "How sweet the calm,"
(R. F. C.), 433. Sonnet to John D., 398.
Sonnet, "Vous savez rire," (Julia Frédérique), 62. Sound the slogan (W. H.),
744. Stanza to an idiot, 395. Sunrise
(Wellington Guernsey), 124. Sunset (Wellington Guernsey), 176. Sweet be-thy stilly dreams (H. Melville), 313. The angels' call (S. P. Howell), 650. The dying swan (Polkaw), 457. The strain to phrensy led (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 291. The bird of passage (W. Guernsey), 235. The garden of roses (H. Melville), 194. The setting sun o'er the waving corn (Polkaw),
192, 545. The calm voyage (H. F. Spencer),
37. The consort (Orpheus Tterab), 9.
The flower of Erin (James Hipkins), 131.
The orphan's dream (Louisa Gray), 279.
The music of heaven (F. H. Dawson), 584. The maniac maiden's song (W.
Guernsey), 432. The London theatres
(Benwell), 157. The pilgrim (R. F. C.),
512. The primrose (P. G.), 202. The leafless tree (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 345.
The sky sonnambulist (Polkaw), 753.
The scarecrow (Polkaw), 759. The pine (Polkaw), 781. The hymn of the waters (A Soldier's Daughter), 804. The red cross knight, 828. Tietjens, a requiem for M^{lle} (A Soldier's Daughter), 680; Tietjens, a tribute to, 789. "In Memoriam," 685. Tiger's birthday (J. B.),
104. To a man of genius (Simon Half),
376. To Arthur Sullivan (Phitthill-the-Rig), 22. To Zaré Thalberg (Sir
Caper O'Corby), 8. To Mila Rodani, 795.
To the musical world (Wellben Benwell),
26. To Francis Hueffer ("Noun enveje fausse glori"), 91. To John Parry (Ben-well), 102. To my absent love (G. Hunt
Jackson), 164. To Mr and Mrs Holmes
(J. C. B.), 268. To an absent A. R. A.
(J. C. B.), 203. To Victor Hugo (Tenny-son), 384. Trust: a sacred song (H. F.
Spencer), 67. 'Twas not ever thus
(H. Melville), 269. Unchanging love
(Pencerdd Gwffyn), 462. Waltz (Pol-kaw), 674. We will rescue them or die (S. P. Howell), 800. What care I for the weather (M. A. Baines), 42. What is left (Rita), 219. When (Rita), 186.
When we met (A Soldier's Daughter), 844.

Polkaw in hysterics, 819

Pommereul, a graceful compliment to M^{lle},
665

Preger, Ferdinand, lecture on Wagner's
Tetralogy, 57

Prout, Mr Ebenezer, new symphony (Graphic), 868

PROVINCIAL :—

Aberdeen, 605. Alford, 283. Armagh,
702. Arundel, 802. Axminster, 265.
Banbury, 835. Bath, 23. Belfast, 91, 301,
702. Birkenhead, 850. Birmingham, 23,
301, 352, 637. Bishop Stortford, 850.
Blackheath, 301. Blackpool, 183. Blairgowrie, 233. Bradford, 250, 621.
Brighton, 201, 233, 265, 383, 637, 655,
718, 818, 835. Bristol, 835. Bromwich,
West, 142. Cambridge, 250. Cheltenham,
23, 183, 851. Colchester, 58. Croydon,
851. Dublin, 119, 142, 160, 218, 538, 621,
718. Dundee, 43, 91, 233, 251, 867.
Ealing, 58. Edinburgh, 43, 71, 119, 145,
183, 867. Exeter, 352. Glasgow, 43, 58,
142, 183, 319, 593, 637, 750. Greenock, 266.
Grimsby, 282. Guildford, 58. Harrogate,
850. Hastings, 637. Heckmondwike,
119. Kingston, 106. Leeds, 106, 201, 265,
594, 850. Leicester, 250. Leyton, 301.
Liverpool, 23, 183, 233, 251, 431, 702, 802.
Llanelli, 867. Londonderry, 336. Long
Melford, 818. Maidenhead, 23, 802.
Maidstone, 201, 867. Malvern, West,
142. Manchester, 283, 319. Margate,
621. Merthyr Tydvil, 282. New
Brompton, 160. Newcastle-on-Tyne, 803.
Norwich, 119, 182, 431, 818. Nottingham, 23, 201, 233, 850. Oxford, 119. Rama-gate, 543, 621. Reading, 282. Redhill,
867. Reigate, 142. Runcorn, 718.
Salisbury, 91. Sheffield, 670, Slough,
352. Southampton, 160, 319. Steeple
Ashton, 605. Stratford, 686. Swansea,
686. Torquay, 91. Torrington, 802.
Truro, 702. Uxbridge, 266. Waltham,
265. Weymouth, 867. Wimbledon, 183.
Winchester, 818. Windsor, 352.
Wokingham, 91. Worcester, 352.
Wrexham, 282

Punch on select (musical) committees, 497

Puffing a creed (Liverpool Porcupine), 378

Purcell's songs, 182

Raff, the Leipzig Signale on, 268

Rameau, 116, 133

Reeves, Sims, 686

Reeves, Sims, at Liverpool, 308; at Manchester, 308; at Dublin, 350; at the Handel Festival, 457; at Albert Hall,
522

Reed's, German, entertainment, 197, 802

Regimental bands, 283

Reid Festival at Edinburgh, 135

Reményi, Edouard, 414; (Examiner), 522

Reuling, death of Ludwig Wilhelm, 457

REVIEWS :—

Gibson, Louisa, 478. Lawson, M. L.,
640. Novello & Co.'s Musio Primers, 852.
Reynière, Grimoed de la, 736
Ricci, death of Federico, 868
Richards (Brinley) in Wales, 252
Richards (Brinley) on National Music, 627
Rihault, death of M. Guillaume, 125
Rietz, death of Dr Julius, 656
Rimbault, sale of the musical library of Dr, 539
Robinson, Anastasia, 159
Rodani, M^{lle} Mila, 105, 411
Ronconi, Signor, 749
Rosavella, M^{lle}, 433
Rossini and Wagner by Victor Wilder, 353
Royal Academy of Music, medal for de-clamatory singing, 233; Prize competitions,

495; Distribution of Prizes, 521; Scholarships, 850, 869
 Royal Society of Musicians' Festival, 283
 Rubinstein, Anton, 397, 588
 Rubinstein, Herr Josef, 84
 Rubinstein, Hauptman on, 268
 Rubinstein (Mayfair), 311, 408
 Rubinstein's Dramatic Symphony (Daily Telegraph), 393
 Rubinstein in England, 574

Sainte-Foy, death of M., 269
 Salla, Caroline, as Alice, 368
 Salzburg Musical Festival, 367, 376, 384, 409, 416, 445, 460, 477, 521, 523
 Salzburg Musical Festival, by W. S. B., 508
 Schirmacher, Miss Dora, 123, 747
 Schumann's letter, 22
 Sellier, M., 546
 September, events in the month of, 605
 Simon, John, 557
 Shadows of the past (H. W. Goodban), 851
 Smith, death of Mr Townshend, 538
 Smith, death of Mr E. T., 799
 Soldene, Mdle in America, 94
 Spohr, monument to, 285
 Spontini's letter to Louis XVIII., 182
 Spontini's Ferdinand Cortez, 105
 Stael, Mdne de, on music, 159
 Stern, Caroline, 866
Stille Nacht, German Christmas Hymn, 461
 Stradella and Carissimi, 368
 Strakosch's opera house in New York, 106
 Sullivan, the late Mr Frederick, 90

Tamberlik, Signor, 602
 Tamburini, the funeral service of Signor, 27
 Tedesca (Fernanda), 22, 576
 Thalberg, Zaré, as Zerlina, 570
 The Clifford Dramatic Club, 46, 266
 The decadence of musical journalism, 525
 The Egyptian shepherd's pipe, by W. Chappell, 27
The Shoulder Cold (Punch), 360
 The Stolen Symphony, 410
 The Telephone (Times), 537, 593, 666, 815
 The Welsh harp, by Brinley Richards, 10

THEATRES:—

Alhambra, 321. Crystal Palace, 544.
 Her Majesty's Theatre (operas in English):
The Châlet, 863. Rose and Marie (Ballet), 863. Opera Comique, The Sorcerer, 782, 796. Royalty, La Marjolaine, 704.

ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN:—
 Mr Gye's prospectus, 211, 227; (Echo), 232; (Times), 245. Aida, 423, 506, 555. Dinorah, 343, 344. Don Giovanni, 307, 327, 391. Don Pasquale, 262, 275. Faust e Margherita, 391, 506. Fra Diavolo, 261, 278, 391. Guillaume Tell, 262, 275. Hamlet, 506. I Puritani, 307. Il Barbiere di Siviglia, 276, 423. Il Trovatore, 391. Il Vascello Fantasma, 423. L'Etoile du Nord, 391, 401. La Figlia del Reggimento, 441. La Favorita, 261, 276. La Sonnambula, 307, 327. La Traviata, 506. Les Huguenots, 275. Le Viesse Comari di Windsor, 506, 507, 512. Lohengrin, 343. Lucia di Lammermoor, 343, 506. Martha, 327, 343. Rigoletto, 343. Santa Chiara, 458. Tannhäuser, 391. Un Ballo in Maschera, 244, 307.

ITALIAN OPERA, HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE:—

Mr Mapleson's programme, 262. Der Freischütz, 811. Don Giovanni, 830. Faust, 789, 830. I Puritani, 506. Il Barbiere di Siviglia, 423. Il Flauto Magico, 519. Il Trovatore, 308, 424, 519, 747. La Figlia del Reggimento, 343. La Sonnambula, 441, 506. La Traviata, 308, 327, 343. Le Nozze di Figaro, 764. Les Huguenots, 519. Lohengrin, 460. Lucia di Lammermoor, 764. Lucrezia Borgia, 343. Norma, 307. Otello, 424. Rigoletto, 424, 519. Robert le Diable, 394, 764. Ruy Blas, 811, 820. Un Ballo in Maschera, 308, 314, 327, 343, 423, 764.

Thiers, M., and Miaka Hauser, 734

Things musical and personal, by Ferdinand Hiller, 44

Thomasschule at Leipsic, the, 669

Tietjens and Sinico, 701

Tietjens, Mdle, at Cork, 45

Tietjens, Mdle, 384; (Standard), 392, 397; (Pall Mall Gazette), 684

Tietjens, illness of Mdle, 542, 558, 590, 605, 625

Tietjens, Mdle, and the Leeds Festival, 558

Tietjens, death of Mdle, 663, 670; a requiem for, 680

Tietjens, Mdle, funeral of, 679

Tietjens, Mdle, will of, 750

Tietjens, list of characters played by Mdle, 705

Tietjens, a memorial to Mdle, 772
 Tonic Sol-fa College, 60
 Tonometry (Athenæum), 117, 134
 Toole, Mr, and the Lord Mayor, 411

Unger, death of Caroline, 253

Verdi's Requiem (Echo), 161

Violins, sale of Mr Perera's collection of, 385

Wagner and Rossini (Victor Wilder), 353

Wagner Festival (Punch), 346; (Times), 348, 365; (Daily Telegraph), 657

Wagner's arrival in London, 313, 314

Wagner's Stage Festival Play (Dwight), 544, 552, 584, 591, 603, 622

Wagner Season in New York, a, 279

Wagner, Richard, across Beethoven's posthumous quartets, 235

Wagner's toilet at home, 459, 481, 488, 503

Wagner, Richard (Times' correspondent at Munich), 181

Wagner's Flying Dutchman (Mayfair), 449

Wagner, Richard, 61, 93, 158; (Daily Telegraph), 171; (Neue Berliner Musikzeitung), 172

Wagner, banquet to Herr Richard, 359

Wagner's Ring des Nibelungen, by Dr Hanslick, 5, 39, 53

Wagner's Ring des Nibelungen, by our special correspondent, 259

Wagner's Walkure at Vienna, 214

Wagner, Hauptmann on, 267

Wagner, portrait of, 364

Wagner and Norma at Riga, 591

Wagner at Weber's grave, 605

Wagner and the Emperor at Bayreuth, 637

Wagner and his music school, 668

Waifs (every week)

Ware Wall, 362

Weber, Carl Maria von, 605

Wilhelmj, Herr, at Mayence, 85; at Dublin, 162

Wilhelmj, the Wagner orchestra to, 366

Wilhelmj and Moltke, 729

Wilhelmj and the Crown Prince of Germany, 804

Worcester Festival, 669

Woodhull, Victoria Clafin, 851

Zummersetahire church zinging (Willum Sykes), 99

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 1.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—"SINDBAD THE SAILOR," grand Christmas Pantomime by the Brothers GRINN. Romantic and beautiful Scenery by Mr JULIAN HICKS, Mr EDOUARD, Mr F. FENTON, and Assistants. Gorgeous Mythological Transformation Scene, "Echo and Narcissus," by Mr CHARLES BREW. Characters by Miss Edith Bruce (by permission of Mr A. Henderson), Miss Lina Merville, Miss Bella Goodall, Mr Collier, Mr Hampson, Mr Ridley, the celebrated La Vite and Nina, Austin, Hess, and other artists. Ballet by Miss Barbara Morgan. Costumes by Auguste et Cie. Music (with original songs) by Mr Oscar H. Barrett. Pantomime invented by, and stage management entrusted to, Mr Augustus Harris. The whole produced under the direction of Mr Charles Wyndham. Daily next week at Three o'clock. Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d. (may be booked in advance), 1s. 6d., and One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The SHIP in PORT and at SEA. Great Scenes in "SINDBAD THE SAILOR," by Mr F. FENTON. "The sinking of the ship managed with startling reality of effect."—Telegraph. Daily at Three.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The VALLEY, MOUNTAIN, and RIVER. Grand Panorama Scenery in "SINDBAD THE SAILOR," by Mr JULIAN HICKS. "Great spectacular effect."—Morning Paper. Daily at Three.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—ECHO and NARCISSUS. Grand Mythological Transformation Scene, by Mr CHARLES BREW. "A triumph of the scene-painter's art."—Standard. Daily at Three.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—"SINDBAD THE SAILOR," great Christmas Pantomime, by the Brothers GRINN. "The most brilliant and best mounted piece yet produced at the Crystal Palace."—Daily News. Daily at Three.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SEASON TICKET ARRANGEMENTS.—The Directors having found it necessary to revert to the plan of making all the Annual Season Tickets terminate on the same day, the Season Ticket year will commence May 1 in each year, and terminate April 30 in the succeeding year. In order that those Season Ticket-holders whose tickets expire between Jan. 1 and May 1, 1877, shall not suffer any inconvenience, arrangements have been made for the renewal of their tickets on payment of a pro-rata charge of 1s. 6d. a month. Thus, a person taking a Season Ticket in January will pay £1 8s.; in February, £1 6s. 3d.; in March, £1 4s. 6d.; and in April, £1 2s. 6d. for a ticket available till the last day of April, 1878.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SEASON TICKETS.—The Season Ticket admits to the Palace and Aquarium whenever open to the public, and the ticket for 1877-8 will admit on all the days of the Handel Festival in June next.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—HALF-A-CROWN SATURDAYS.—During the forthcoming season the charge for admission on ordinary Saturdays will be Half-a-Crown, except during the months of July, August, and September.

MADAME SAINTON - DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY (Established 1872) for Amateur and Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms, and the instruction includes: Lessons in Singing, Harmony, Sight Singing (Solfege), English Elocution, Italian Language, and Choral Practice. The next Term begins on January 16, and New Students can be examined on Tuesdays, between Three and Four o'clock. Prospectuses and further Particulars can be obtained at 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park; of Mr VERT, 52, New Bond Street; also of Messrs CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond Street.

HERR HERMANN FRANKE'S SECOND SERIES of CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS will take place at the ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC (new Concert Room), 4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, on January 7, 16, 30, and February 13. To commence at Eight o'clock. Programme of the First Concert, Tuesday, January 16, 1877: Trio, in G major (MS.), first time (C. Villiers Stanford)—Mr Stanford, Herr Franke, and Herr Daubert; Gesang—Mlle Sophie Löwe; Quartet, in A minor (Schubert)—Herr Franke, Van Praag, Hollander, and Daubert; Gesang—Mlle Sophie Löwe; Solo, violin, Fantasiestück (MS.), first time (A. Wilhelm)—Herr Franke; Quartet, in E flat (Rheinberger)—Miss Richards, Herr Franke, Hollander, and Daubert. Conductor—Herr SAMSON. Herr Franke's Violin School, 1, Bentinck Street, Cavendish Square, London, W. Engagements for the Quartet Party of Herr Franke, Van Praag, Hollander, and Daubert, may be made on application to Herr FRANKE.

WANTED, SINGERS and MUSICIANS, for MINSTREL COMPANY. Any Music or Voice. Amateurs not objected to. Address A. MAYNARD, Crown Hotel, Lavender Hill, S.W.

DUFF & STEWART'S New & Popular Dance Music.

MÜLLER'S

GELIEBT UND VERLOREN ("LOVED AND LOST").

Waltzer... 4 0

The most enchanting and fascinating Waltz that has been published for many years. See the story of "Little Blue Bell," in the Christmas Number of the Illustrated London News, 1876.

GEORGES LAMOTHE'S

CELEBRATED WALTZES.

RÊVE D'AMOUR... 4 0

FONTAINEBLEAU... 4 0

JULIETTE... 4 0

These Waltzes are being played by every orchestra in the United Kingdom, and are the greatest successes of the above popular Composer.

CHARLES COOTE'S

CALEDONIANS... 4 0

DON QUIXOTE QUADRILLES... 4 0

DON QUIXOTE WALTZES... 4 0

DON QUIXOTE GALOP... 4 0

THE TALISMAN LANCERS. On Favourite Melodies from M. W. BALFE's last Opera... 4 0

CHARLES GODFREY'S

INIMITABLE JUVENILE QUADRILLE.

"UNDER THE MISTLETOE." Solo or Duet. On Popular Melodies... 4 0

C. H. R. MARRIOTT'S

TWO IN THE MORNING QUADRILLE. Solo or Duet. On Popular Melodies... 4 0

SEVENTEENTH LANCERS. Solo or Duet. On Old English Melodies... 4 0

CROQUET SCHOTTISCHE... 3 0

NEW EDITION OF

FRANÇOIS BERNARD'S

BREAK OF DAY SCHOTTISCHE... 3 0

The most Popular Schottische ever composed.

All the above are sold at Half Price, and may be had of every Music-seller in Great Britain and the Colonies.

DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street, London, W.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 1.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—"SINDBAD THE SAILOR," grand Christmas Pantomime by the Brothers GRINN. Romantic and beautiful Scenery by Mr JULIAN HICKS, Mr EDOUARD, Mr F. FENTON, and Assistants. Gorgeous Mythological Transformation Scene, "Echo and Narcissus," by Mr CHARLES BREW. Characters by Miss Edith Bruce (by permission of Mr A. Henderson), Miss Lina Merville, Miss Bella Goodall, Mr Collier, Mr Hampson, Mr Ridley, the celebrated Le Vite and Nina, Austin, Hess, and other artists. Ballet by Miss Barbara Morgan. Costumes by Auguste et Cie. Music (with original songs) by Mr Oscar H. Barrett. Pantomime invented by, and stage management entrusted to, Mr Augustus Harris. The whole produced under the direction of Mr Charles Wyndham. Daily next week at Three o'clock. Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d. (may be booked in advance), 1s. 6d., and One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The SHIP in PORT and at SEA. Great Scenes in "SINDBAD THE SAILOR," by Mr F. FENTON. "The sinking of the ship managed with startling reality of effect."—Telegraph, Daily at Three.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The VALLEY, MOUNTAIN, and RIVER. Grand Panorama Scenery in "SINDBAD THE SAILOR," by Mr JULIAN HICKS. "Great spectacular effect."—Morning Paper. Daily at Three.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—ECHO and NARCISSUS. Grand Mythological Transformation Scene, by Mr CHARLES BREW. "A triumph of the scene-painter's art."—Standard. Daily at Three.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—"SINDBAD THE SAILOR," great Christmas Pantomime, by the Brothers GRINN. "The most brilliant and best mounted piece yet produced at the Crystal Palace."—Daily News. Daily at Three.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SEASON TICKET ARRANGEMENTS.—The Directors having found it necessary to revert to the plan of making all the Annual Season Tickets terminate on the same day, the Season Ticket year will commence May 1 in each year, and terminate April 30 in the succeeding year. In order that those Season Ticket-holders whose tickets expire between Jan. 1 and May 1, 1877, shall not suffer any inconvenience, arrangements have been made for the renewal of their tickets on payment of a pro-rata charge of 1s. 9d. a month. Thus, a person taking a Season Ticket in January will pay £1 8s.; in February, £1 6s. 3d.; in March, £1 4s. 6d.; and in April, £1 2s. 9d. for a ticket available till the last day of April, 1878.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SEASON TICKETS.—The Season Ticket admits to the Palace and Aquarium whenever open to the public, and the ticket for 1877-8 will admit on all the days of the Handel Festival in June next.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—HALF-A-CROWN SATURDAYS.—During the forthcoming season the charge for admission on ordinary Saturdays will be Half-a-Crown, except during the months of July, August, and September.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY (Established 1873) for Amateur and Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms, and the Instruction includes: Lessons in Singing, Harmony, Sight Singing (Solfege), English Elocution, Italian Language, and Choral Practice. The next Term begins on January 16, and New Students can be examined on Tuesdays, between Three and Four o'clock. Prospectuses and further Particulars can be obtained at 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park; or of Mr VERT, 53, New Bond Street; also of Messrs CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond Street.

HERR HERMANN FRANK'S SECOND SERIES OF CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS will take place at the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC (new Concert Room), 4, Tottenham Street, Hanover Square, on January 7, 16, 30, and February 13. To commence at Eight o'clock. Programme of the First Concert, Tuesday, January 16, 1877: Trio, in G major (M.S.), first time (O. Villiers Stanford)—Mr Stanford, Herr Franke, and Herr Daubert; Geang—Middle Sophie Löwe; Quartet, in A minor (Schubert)—Herr Franke, Van Praag, Hollander, and Daubert; Geang—Middle Sophie Löwe; Solo, violin, Fantasiestück (M.S.), first time (A. Wilhelm)—Herr Franke; Quartet, in E flat (Rheinberger)—Miss Richards, Herr Franke, Hollander, and Daubert. Conductor—Herr SAMSON. Herr Franke's Violin School, 1, Bentinck Street, Cavendish Square, London, W. Engagements for the Quartet Party of Herr Franke, Van Praag, Hollander, and Daubert, may be made on application to Herr FRANK.

WANTED, SINGERS and MUSICIANS, for MINSTREL COMPANY. Any Music or Voice. Amateurs not objected to. Address A. MAYNARD, Crown Hotel, Lavender Hill, S.W.

DUFF & STEWART'S New & Popular Dance Music.

MÜLLER'S s. d.
GELIEBT UND VERLOREN ("LOVED AND LOST").
Waltzer 4 0

The most enchanting and fascinating Waltz that has been published for many years. See the story of "Little Blue Bell," in the Christmas Number of the Illustrated London News, 1876.

GEORGES LAMOTHE'S
CELEBRATED WALTZES.
RÊVE D'AMOUR 4 0
FONTAINEBLEAU 4 0
JULIETTE 4 0

These Waltzes are being played by every orchestra in the United Kingdom, and are the greatest successes of the above popular Composer.

CHARLES COOTE'S
CALEDONIANS 4 0
DON QUIXOTE QUADRILLES 4 0
DON QUIXOTE WALTZES 4 0
DON QUIXOTE GALOP 4 0
THE TALISMAN LANCERS. On Favourite Melodies from M. W. BALFE's last Opera 4 0

CHARLES GODFREY'S
INIMITABLE JUVENILE QUADRILLE.
"UNDER THE MISTLETOE." Solo or Duet. On Popular Melodies 4 0

C. H. R. MARRIOTT'S
TWO IN THE MORNING QUADRILLE. Solo or Duet. On Popular Melodies 4 0
SEVENTEENTH LANCERS. Solo or Duet. On Old English Melodies 4 0
CROQUET SCHOTTISCHE 3 0

NEW EDITION OF
FRANÇOIS BERNARD'S
BREAK OF DAY SCHOTTISCHE 3 0
The most Popular Schottische ever composed.

All the above are sold at Half Price, and may be had of every Music-seller in Great Britain and the Colonies.

DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street, London, W.

LANGHAM HALL, 43, GREAT PORTLAND STREET.—In Aid of Mrs Weldon's Orphanage, MONDAY EVENING, April 9, 1877, at Eight p.m. Mr Charles K. Salaman in the Chair. MRS WELDON'S THIRTY-SECOND SOCIAL EVENING. "The Two Paths; or, Conservation and Restoration." Mr Charles Lunn will deliver a Lecture on the above, illustrated by the Children from Mrs Weldon's Orphanage. Reserved seats, 5s.; unreserved, 2s. 6d. Admission, One Shilling.

* This Essay, of which Mr Charles Lunn has presented the Copyright to the Orphanage, will be published, with additional remarks and an account of the Soirée by the MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, 39, Great Marlborough Street, Regent Street, London. Price One Shilling.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1829. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MAOFARREN, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

The LENT TERM will commence on MONDAY, Jan. 15, 1877, and terminate on Saturday, April 21.

Candidates for admission (bringing music they can perform) will be Examined at the Institution on Thursday, Jan. 11, at Eleven o'clock.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.
Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street,
Hanover Square, London.

THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC, St GEORGE'S HALL.

Established 1861.

Principal—Prof. WYLDE, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

Professors—Sir Julius Benedict, Examiner; Signori Garcia, Schira, Lablache, Herren Ganz, Henseler, and H. Loge, Signori Traventi, Scuderi, Tartaglione; Messrs O. K. Salaman and J. P. Barnett; Herren Lehmayr, Mann, Barth, and Mariols; Messrs J. Barnett, Handel Gear, Beavan; M.M. Oberthür and Wright; Herren Pollitzer and Ludwig; Signor Pezzo.

The Academy is for Amateur as well as Professional Students. The year is divided into three terms. The fee, five guineas per term, includes instruction in three branches of musical education. Students can select their principal teachers from the above list. Those residing at a distance can receive all their lessons on one day in the week.

The NEXT TERM commences Jan. 15, 1877. The Examination and Entrance days are Wednesday, Jan. 10, and Friday, Jan. 12, 1877, between the hours of Eleven and Four.

Prospectuses at the Office, St George's Hall, Langham Place.

THE BRITISH MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC INSTITUTE,

Established for the Study, Practice, and Encouragement of Music and the Drama in Great Britain. Founded A.D. 1873.—BIPON HOUSE, 1, Woburn Place, Russell Square. Drama Principal—Mr CHARLES SLINGER. Music Principal—Herr SCHUBERT. The next Term will commence on the 10th January, 1877. Prospectus and full Particulars on application to the SECRETARY at the above address.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY, BREITHOVEN ROOMS, 27, HARLEY STREET, W.

President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERT. Eleventh Season, 1877. The Prospectus will be ready early next month. The Society's Concerts afford excellent opportunities for young rising Artists to make their debut in public, and for Composers to have their works introduced. Further Particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec.

"WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA."

MISS RACHEL GRAY and MR FREDERIC PENNA will sing HENRY SMART's popular Duet, "WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA," at Shrewsbury, on Jan. 16, 1877; Jan. 17, at Bridgnorth: on Friday, Jan. 19, at Leamington.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his immensely popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," during this month at Stroud, Cirencester, Taunton, Exeter, Plymouth, Torquay, Worcester, Chesham, Hereford, Swansea, Newport, and Southampton.

"WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA."

MADAME THADDEUS WELLS and MR ORLANDO CHRISTIAN will sing H. SMART's Duet, "WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA," at Banbury on Jan. 2nd; Chesterfield, Jan. 5th; Liverpool, Jan. 6th and 8th; and Naptwich, Jan. 22nd.

"WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA."

MISS CATHERINE PENNA and MR FREDERIC PENNA will sing HENRY SMART's celebrated Duet, "WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA," at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, on Jan. 30.

SIGNOR BONETTI, during his Provincial Tour, requests that all communications be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME ENRIQUEZ begs that all communications be addressed to her at No. 5, OAKLEY SQUARE, N.W.

MR WILFORD MORGAN requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to his residence, 18, Surrey Street, W.C.

MIDDLE VICTORIA BUNSEN will Return to London at the end of January, having concluded her Continental Engagements. All Letters to be directed, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

GERARD COVENTRY (Tenor), having returned to Town from his Provincial Tour, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Concerts. Address—Care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MISS PURDY begs to announce that she will Return from Italy on March 5. All communications to be addressed to 35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MR BARTON MCGUCKIN (Tenor) begs to announce that he has Returned from Milan, and wishes that all Communications be addressed to 33, Shardeloe Road, New Cross, London, S.E.

MR SHAKESPEARE requests that all Communications concerning ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., be addressed—6, Howick Place, Victoria Street, S.W.

MR HOLLINS (Tenor).

MR HOLLINS begs to announce that he will be prepared to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Concerts, on the termination of Messames Sherrington and Patey's Tour, on Dec. 2. Address—E. C. BOOSER, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MIDDLE EMILIA KOENIG (Soprano), daughter of the late celebrated Herr Koenig (Cornet & Piston), having terminated her Engagements at the Concerts, Covent Garden Theatre, is now ready to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Town or Provinces. Address—7, Caroline Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

RIVIERE & HAWKES' ALBUM OF FASHIONABLE

DANCE MUSIC contains:—

- | | |
|--|--|
| 1. "Prince Imperial Quadrille" (Strauss) | 7. "Nilfuthen Valse" (Strauss) |
| 2. "Les Roses Valse" (O. Métra) | 8. "La Pergola Polka" (Marie) |
| 3. "Cuckoo and Cricket Polka" (Herzog) | 9. "Vision Masurka" (Strauss) |
| 4. "Tandele Masurka" (Strauss) | 10. "Romantic Schottische" (Bouillon) |
| 5. "Champagne Galop" (Lumbye) | 11. "Express Galop" (Kalkbrenner) |
| 6. "Diable Rose Quadrilles" (O. Métra) | 12. "St David's Day Lancers" (Bonnie-sean) |

The above pieces being arranged for Pianoforte, Violin, or Cornet, can be obtained and used separately or together. Post free, 18 stamps for each Book.

RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

RIVIERE AND HAWKES,

Music Publishers and Instrument Makers,
28, LEICESTER SQUARE.

Eight various Monthly Journals, for Reed and Brass Bands, Fife and Drum Bands, Bugle Bands, String Orchestra, Piano, &c.

A large Assortment of Violins, Violas, Violoncellos, and Contrabasses, by the best makers. French and Italian Strings.

Five different classes of Brass Instruments.

Trade mark of the very best Instruments, "EXCELSIOR."

Accordeons, Concertinas, and Harmoniums.

American, French, and English Pianofortes.

Melodeons, Harmoniums, American Organs, &c.

The largest assortment and the cheapest house in England.

Complete and Illustrated Catalogue gratis on application.

Third Edition.

A FIRST BOOK ON THE

THEORY OF MUSIC.

BY LOUISA GIBSON.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE, MARCHIONESS OF LORNE.

Adopted in the South London Musical Training College, and in various High Schools in London and the Provinces.

LONDON:

WEEKES & CO.; NOVELLO & CO.; WHITTAKER & CO.

AND OF THE AUTHOR, LEATON TERRACE, PLYMOUTH.

Price, boards, 3s.; stiff paper, 2s.; postage, 2d.

SABBATH HAPPINESS. Sacred Song. Words and

Music by FRANK JAMES AMOR. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"Poetry and music are here alike simple, fresh, and engaging. The melody, for contralto or low mezzo-soprano, is flowing and graceful to the singer; the accompaniment simplicity itself, but with full of musicianly traits; and the words are not only above the average, but highly suggestive and lyrical. An excellent song for teaching."—The Queen.

NEW WORK FOR SINGING CLASSES.

Chappell's Penny Operatic Part-Songs

(FOR SOPRANO, ALTO, TENOR, AND BASS).

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

1. Hymn of the Fisherman's Children. Adapted to a melody from Hérold's Zampa.
2. Fays and Elves ("In mia fe"). From Flotow's Marta.
3. Spring's bright glances ("In Elvezia non v'ha"). From Bellini's La Sonnambula.
4. From yonder vale and hill ("D'immenso giubilo"). From Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor.
5. Here we rest ("Qui la Selva"). From Bellini's La Sonnambula.
6. Onward to battle ("Squilli echeggi"). From Verdi's Travatore.
7. Rataplan ("Rataplan"). From Donizetti's La Figlia del Reggimento.
8. The Gipsy's Star ("Vedi le fosche"). From Verdi's Il Trovatore.
9. War Song of the Druids ("Dell' aura tua profetica"). From Bellini's Norma.
10. In mercy, hear us! ("Cielo clemente"). From Donizetti's La Figlia del Reggimento.
11. Come to the fair! ("Accorete, giovinette"). From Flotow's Marta.
12. Friendship ("Per te d'immenso giubilo"). From Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor.
13. Away, the morning freshly breaking (The Chorus of Fishermen). From Auber's Masaniello.
14. Pretty Village Maiden (Peasants' Serenade Chorus). From Gounod's Faust.
15. The soft winds around us (The Gipsy Chorus). From Weber's Preciosa.
16. See how lightly on the blue sea ("Senti la danza invitaci"). From Donizetti's Lucrezia Borgia.
17. See the moonlight beam ("Non far motto"). From Donizetti's Lucrezia Borgia.
18. On yonder rock reclining. From Auber's Fra Diavolo.
19. Happy and light. From Balfe's Bohemian Girl.
20. Come, come away ("Ah! que de moias"). From Donizetti's La Favorita.
21. Hymen's Torch ("Il destin"). From Meyerbeer's Huguenots.
22. Come, old comrade (The celebrated Chorus of Old Men). From Gounod's Faust.
23. 'Gainst the Powers of Evil (The Chorale of the Cross). From Gounod's Faust.
24. O balmy night ("Com è gentil"). From Donizetti's Don Pasquale.
25. Haste o'er the hills. Introductory Chorus, from Rossini's Guglielmo Tell.
26. Come, sing the song. Opening Chorus, from Meyerbeer's Robert le Diable.
27. With fair Ceres. The March Chorus, from Bellini's Norma.
28. The Tuneful Song of Robin's Horn. Tyrolese Chorus, from Rossini's Guglielmo Tell.
29. The Chorus of Huntsmen, from Weber's Der Freischütz.
30. Hark! the distant hills. Hunting Chorus, from Flotow's Marta.
31. Hence! away with care. From Meyerbeer's Gli Ugonotti.
32. Hail to the Bride. From Wagner's Lohengrin.
33. Hark! Music swelling! (Subject from Overture). From Rossini's Semiramide.
34. A bridal wreath we twine. (Chorus of Bridesmaids.) From Weber's Der Freischütz.
35. Behold, how brightly breaks the morning! The Barcarolle from Auber's Masaniello.
36. From hill to hill resounding. (Subject from Overture.) From Auber's Fra Diavolo.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	- 3 0
RINK GALOP	- 4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	- 4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	- 4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	- 3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	- 4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	- 4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	- 4 0
WEST-END POLKA	- 3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	- 3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	- 3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	- 3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	- 3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	- 3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ.

AU REVOIR VALSE.

PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.	s. d.
CHANTS DE L'AUBE	- 4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	- 4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS.

MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	- 3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	- 4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	- 3 0
HARMONIUM	- 3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	- 3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	- 4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2s. 6d. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET.

MUSIC ASSISTANT WANTED.

WANTED, at a Music Publisher's, an experienced Young Man to attend to the Counter Trade, one who plays the piano preferred. Address EXOCH & SONS, 19, Holles Street, W.

TUNER WANTED.

WANTED, an Experienced PIANOFORTE TUNER. Apply, between Eleven and Four, to J. and J. HOPKINSON, 235, Regent Street, W.

SIMPSON & CO.'S

IMPROVED HARMONIUMS.

FROM £5. 5s. Five Octaves. Best make. Warranted. Nothing BETTER OR CHEAPER made. Lists post free. Trade supplied.

TO COMPOSERS wishing to PUBLISH.—Music Engraved, Printed, and Published in the best style at unusually low prices. Estimates free on receipt of MS. SIMPSON & Co., 33, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

THE "MUSICAL TIMES."

Published Monthly.

Increased to 48 Pages. Price 3d.; post free, 4d. Annual Subscription (including postage), 4s.

LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

THE "MUSICAL TIMES" for JANUARY

CONTAINS

To our Readers—Purcell, by W. H. Cummings—A Haydn Memorial (continuation)—Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte—Occasional Notes—The late Henry Phillips—Edward Land—G. F. Anderson—Crystal Palace and Gadsby's Alceste—Concerts, Reviews, &c.—A new Anthem, entitled, "I will sing of Thy power," composed expressly for The Musical Times by Arthur Sullivan, Mus. D.—Foreign Notes—Correspondence—Brief Summary of Country News—Organ Appointments, &c., &c.

Subscriptions will be received by all Book and Musicsellers (not including postage), 3s.

THE MONTHLY MUSICAL RECORD.—The cheapest

High-class Paper on Music. Yearly Subscription, 2s. 6d. post-free. Years 1871 to 1876 (vols. 1 to 6) bound, each net 3s. "Intelligible and dispassionate criticisms and reviews, analyses of interesting compositions, and a like determination to discountenance the fictitious either in art or its practice: these are the qualifications of the paper."—Morning Post. AUGENER & Co., 86, Newgate Street, and 31, Regent Street.

The "Choir."A NEW VOLUME OF THE "CHOIR"

Will commence with the Number for

JANUARY the 6th, 1877.

(N.B.—Each Number will contain a Supplement of Four Pages of Music by an Eminent Composer.)

Subscribers are requested to forward their Subscriptions to

MESSRS. METZLER & CO.,37, GREAT MARLBOROUGH ST.;

And New Subscribers are invited to forward their names and addresses with cheque or P.O.O. (payable at Vere Street Office).

Subscription to the "Choir," including postage:

FOR ONE YEAR	10s. 6d.
FOR SIX MONTHS	5s. 6d.

The "Choir."

Communications for the Editor, with Books and Music for Review, should be addressed to—

The Editor of the "Choir," 20, Charing Cross, S. W.

Subscriptions, Orders for Copies, and all Business Communications should be addressed to—

Messrs METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough St., W.VERNON RIGBY'S NEW TENOR SONG.*SHE'S GONE.

In F and D. The melody in itself is charming, and is greatly enhanced by the effective and easy modulations of the accompaniment. Post free 24 stamps.

THE LIGHT OF HOPE.

Exquisite Ballad in G for Baritone, and B flat for Tenor. Post free 18 Stamps.

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS.

Music by BALFE. Words by ALFRED BUNN, Esq. Post free 18 Stamps.

EVER NEAR.

Ballad.

Poetry by J. E. CARPENTER. Music by STEPHEN GLOVER. Post free 18 Stamps.

NEARER AND DEARER.

A delightful Ballad.

By J. E. CARPENTER. Music by CHARLES GLOVER. Post free 18 Stamps.

THE HOLLY-BERRY WATZES.By EMIL WALDIMIER.

The frontispiece resembles an Oleograph, and would do no discredit to the walls of any dwelling, if hung as a picture, while the Waltzes themselves claim equal credit in their composition, being effective and easy, and the melodies smooth and graceful. Post free 24 Stamps.

HERE WE ARE AGAIN SCHOTTISCHE.By GRIMALDI. Illustrated.

The melody is light and catching; the time, well marked for dancing, presents no difficulties, and will be found most useful for teaching and schools. Post free 18 Stamps.

FANCY YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE.Words by E. V. PAGE. Music by VINCENT DAVIES.

Sung with the greatest success by H. P. MATTHEWS. Post free 18 Stamps.

KEEP THE POT A-BOILING.Words by E. V. PAGE. Music by VINCENT DAVIES.

Sung by HERBERT CAMPBELL. Post free 18 Stamps.

HARRY RAND'S MOST POPULAR SONGS.

As sung by him with the greatest success. Each Post free 18 Stamps.

SHE MUST BE HANDSOME.SHE'S ALWAYS THE FIRST IN MY DREAMS.*BE JOLLY TO-NIGHT.

The last is specially adapted for Entertainments, and has an unusually spirited chorus. The melody is very catching.

SILVER THREADS AMONG THE GOLD.

This popular and beautiful melody transcribed and brilliantly arranged without difficulty for the Pianoforte, by EMIL WALDIMIER. Frontispiece superbly illuminated. Post free 18 Stamps.

Also an easy Arrangement for beginners, by L. WILLIAMS.

Solo, Post free 6 Stamps; Duet, 12 Stamps.

CHRISTMAS BELLS.

Pianoforte Piece, by BOSCOVITCH. Post free 18 Stamps.

CHANSON DES VILLAGEOISES BOHEMIENNES.

By BOSCOVITCH. Post free 24 Stamps.

CHANSON DES LANSQUENETS.

By CHARLES FRADEL. Post free 18 Stamps.

B. WILLIAMS, 19, Paternoster Row, London.

N.B.—Authors' Works engraved and printed in the best style upon advantageous terms. (Speciality.)

STEPHEN HELLER.*

I am fond of picturing to myself Stephen Heller—and those who are well acquainted with him as a man and an artist will recognise the resemblance—seated before an Érard's piano, in an apartment, elegant, quiet, and sober in appearance, looking out upon a park, with tufted trees rising close to the windows of the house. In such an apartment, so favourable for meditation, a few persons are assembled, with delicately organised minds and ears; persons who know how to listen; to lose nothing; not to ask more, and especially not to ask too much, from the composer or virtuoso, who says only what he ought to say. Heller begins playing! What tender and touching reminiscences, what varied impressions arise from out the distant Past! How picture follows picture in the mirage of the imagination!

Behold Spring, with her song of hope, with the sap of youth gushing up in the blade of green grass, in the flower which offers its calice to the breeze, and in the harmonious rustling of the reeds. Behold Autumn, with the aërial plaint of the ocean-wind in the fibres of the Sicilian pines. One fugitive piece evokes thoughts of love, light as air, and full of caprice and carelessness; another, of love profound and passionate; several remind us of calm tenderness, the basis of family life; at one and the same time, a merit and a reward; a drowsy ideal which is the charm and the honour of English Laksam. One melody lends to premature death the cheerfulness and the joyous smile of a morning farewell; another lulls to sleep an infant, beaming in his cradle, like a little Messiah; yet another appears traversed by the apparitions which Dante saw, floating in the cold pale dawn, on the limits between Heaven and Hell. From the mysterious hour of twilight we pass to night, to night which charms us with its nightingales, its thickets, its lovers, and its serenades, or looms forbiddingly, with its owls, its tempests, its old forests, and its gloom. A ray from the Spain of the author of Rolla, lights up a bolero; a breath from Chateaubriand's Italy permeates a canticle. I hear on the moor the burden sung by the peasants of Pustza, fresh from indulging in libations of the burning wine of Somlyo; I hear, too, the roundelay of the Hungarian maidens, as ardent as their wines. It was, doubtless, the picturesque and motley poetry of a nomad life which inspired this scherzo. I cannot say why that study should recall to my mind the exquisite and monumental statuary of the Renaissance, statuary conceived by, but not troubling the senses, like, for example, Jean Goujon's Diana, as full of movement as physical vigour itself, yet calm as intellectual power. Will anyone explain to me by what magic of colour and of style this improvisation, breaking into the domain of the purely abstract, absolutely paints forgetfulness, resolution, affirmation, incertitude, nay, even the ideal sentiment of friendship and of inner life? Such, however, are, with a thousand others, the sensations which Heller's music possesses the power of awakening, and the effects which it excels in producing, when this "pianist and composer for his own instrument," as he is ingeniously described in the biographical dictionaries, executes that music himself, or when it is executed by those who are acquainted with its traditions.

From Stephen Heller's calm and studious life, which has been written several times, I select only as much as explains his works. He was born at one of the most violently-agitated epochs of the century—1814—in Hungary, in the native land of the Sandor Pontofi's, the Worosmartys and the Alleardo Allcardis, of all those poets who, thanks to the national genius, combine with a peculiarly Germanic concentration and profundity of thought the vigorous splendour of form distinguishing the South. He was in turn virtuoso, professor, and composer; he possesses, therefore, all the means for embodying his thoughts brilliantly and logically. The friend of Mendelssohn, Robert Schumann, Schubert, and Ernst, he has never ceased to believe, with them and like them, that a work of art should express only what elevates and nobly delights the soul—nothing more; to this solely has his sentiment been directed; all the rest is for him false. He alone gave himself his own musical education, assisted only by a few slight occasional hints; it was by writing that he determined to learn how to write. Stephen Heller possesses a quality or merit which is rare in a musician: he is literary. For many years—to his thinking, too short—he has lived on intimate terms with illustrious writers, both in verse and prose. Poetry has the power of piercing him through and through, and of completely carrying him away. In poetry he has found a fertile source of inspiration and renewed power; thanks to poetry, he has preserved a seductive freshness in the midst of incessant labour. Long unappreciated, he has pursued his course, armed with the courage and the perseverance of the strong, reaching by meditation and the heart the plenitude of his talent, and never reacting against his natural melancholy, but taking even a pleasure in the pungent flavour of sadness which purifies, and raises us above the regions of the vulgar, and tempers proud and believing intellect. He lives alone, in calmness and study, though without misanthropy, arrogance, or roughness. All Heller is comprised in his love of solitude, of reading, and of work; in his disdain for what is common and for easy success; in an extraordinary faculty of inward concentration, which increases tenfold in his case the range and the penetrating power of thought; in a respect for art and those who cultivate it; in a faith in himself; and in elevation of character and simplicity of life.

Shall I add that his tender and elegant poetic nature was calculated to find favour with distinguished women, and to feel at ease in the free enjoyment of their delicate society? Speaking of the noble lady who was Stephen Heller's first patroness, M. Fétié, in an outburst of enthusiasm too unusual with him not to be sincere, exclaims: "Happy the young artist who meets with such a woman at the outset of his career!" This is very true, but the notice taken by a superior woman of any man is a mark of distinction nearly always deserved.

(To be continued.)

Wagner's "Ring des Nibelungen."

By DR HANSLICK.*

The August of this year may be called without more ado the Wagner Month. What has already appeared in the way of preliminary pamphlets, books, and newspaper articles, concerning the Nibelungenring, constitutes a small library, which will, probably, after the performances, swell into a very large one. For many readers this will be too much, while for others it will not be enough. It is an indisputable fact that we are on the eve of a theatrical event, which, in plan and dimensions, is grand and altogether extraordinary. Nay, more; this music-drama playing for four evenings, the erection of a theatre especially for it, and the thousand-headed pilgrimage from half Europe to a remote and semi-extinct little town, the name of which will now live imperishably in the annals of art, form a remarkable fact in the history of civilisation itself. Whether the work itself satisfies more or less the expectations of the Bayreuth pilgrims, or whether it does not, they will all agree in one thing, namely: admiration of the extraordinary ability, energy, power of work, and power of agitation, possessed by the man who by his own unaided self called the event into existence, and carried it through.

Der Ring des Nibelungen is the work of nearly five-and-twenty years, a work to which, after every interruption (Tristan and the Meistersinger), Wagner returned with redoubled love. At first the patriotic enthusiasm of 1848 impelled him to awake the Emperor Barbarossa from his sleep at Kyffhäuser. The studies he undertook with a view to the dramatic treatment of that saga led him deeper and deeper into the legendary lore of Germany. In the course of his reading, he was so captivated by the heroic form of the young dragon-slayer, Siegfried, that the old Red-Beard had to yield before it. In the same year, 1848, Wagner sketched the design of a Nibelung drama, and shortly afterwards began working out Siegfried's Tod. The success of Lohengrin at Weimar stimulating his courage, and urging him to fresh exertion, he again buried himself in the Nibelungen Saga. In the year 1858 he completed his poem, which consisted of four independent dramas, and, during the same year, he commenced setting it to music. Two-and-twenty years later, in the summer of 1875, he directed the first rehearsals at Bayreuth. It is from this place that we shall very shortly publish our opinion of the work under the immediate impression produced by its performance; before we do so, however, some guiding and prefatory remarks on the poem, apart from the music, may be not unwelcome to our readers.*

* Translated by J. V. Bridgeman, expressly for the Musical World.

* From the Neue Freie Presse, of August 13th, 1876.

The poetical subject, then, chosen by R. Wagner is the Nibelungen Saga. This is more easily said than understood. The Saga, or collection of Sagas, in question has, at different times, and in different countries, widely separated from each other, assumed various shapes, and now exists in greatly differing versions. It has often been a subject of complaint, and we have been reproached, even to an unjust extent, with the fact, that we Germans are more familiar with the Greek and Roman than with the old Germanic mythology. The laudable efforts of philologists, historians, and poets, during the last few decenniums, have only been able to remedy this state of things in a gradual and partial manner. The great mass of the public have, however, grown better acquainted with the Nibelungen Saga, more especially through three plays: Raupach's Nibelungenhort, Geibel's Brünnhilde, and Hebbel's Nibelungen. Anyone presuming that he shall find the same story in Wagner's Festival-Stage-Play begins by making a mistake. Even the designation "Nibelungen" means with Wagner something different to what it means with the others. In the German epic the name of "Nibelungen" is not restricted to the dwarfs ("Niflungen"); it is given to the Burgundians as well, and only the latter are meant when mention is made of Nibelungenlied, Nibelungennoth, and Der Nibelungen Rache. It is in this sense that our modern authors use the term. Wagner, on the contrary, restricts it to the race of dwarfs residing in the crevices of the earth at Nibelheim. His poem knows nothing of Burgundians; in fact, it has ignored any thing historical, and treats every circumstance as legendary and fabulous, without regard to the date. There is nothing in Wagner referring to the spread of Christianity, which permeates our mediæval epic like a new universal history and which is so cleverly employed in Hebbel's tragedy. Nearly all we find in Wagner are a few names, and even these are not the same. Chriemhild, for instance, is with him, according to the Northern tradition, Gutrune. This character, Gunther, and Hagen, do not appear until the fourth drama, and then almost as subordinate personages. While our modern dramatists have worked out the purely human element of the German epic, an element valid and touching in every age, the true love of Siegfried for his wife, Chriemhild, the stubborn vassal-like fidelity of Hagen, and, finally, Chriemhild's vengeance, we see, in Wagner's work, man and everything human purposely thrust back, while gods, giants, and dwarfs are brought, as the personages of the drama, into the foreground. Brünnhilde does not appear as the much be-courted queen of Isenland, but as a superhuman Walkyre, and the favourite daughter of the god, Wotan; Chriemhild (Gutrune) is not represented as an avenger, nor Hagen as an unselfish, faithful serf. In every instance, Wagner adheres to the older, harsher, repellant story of the Edda, a story with which we have nothing in common, and which must affect us in an unexpected and disagreeable manner. In the first three dramas (Rheingold, Die Walküre, and Siegfried), the full light is turned upon the beings of the upper and the lower world, the personified powers of nature. When we afterwards come to speak of the music, we shall see that this view of the subject favours Wagner's brilliant musical speciality, the representation of the Wonderful by means of the most highly refined tone-painting—though certainly at the expense of the drama, in which we want to see human beings under human conditions, and to share their joys and sufferings. It is not till the fourth evening that we meet the familiar human beings from the German epic; and it is exceedingly significant that Wagner should now have bestowed the name of Götterdämmerung upon this drama, which he originally entitled Siegfried's Tod, thus laying, here, too, from the outset, the greatest importance not upon the fate of the human agents in the drama, but on that of the gods.

If we would epitomise the fundamental idea of the entire Wagnerian cyclas, we should do so by saying it is the curse of gold which paves the way for the destruction of the gods and men who engage in its pursuit. Having first put on one side all accessory matter, let us see how this idea is embodied in the continuous action of the four dramas. The first drama, or the Prelude, Das Rheingold, contains the preliminary story, and introduces no human beings, but only gods, giants, and dwarfs upon the stage. As god Wotan himself subsequently informs us in his conversation with the dwarf Mime, these are the three races which dispute with each other the possession of the earth; each race—the gods high enthroned in the golden Walhalla, the wild giants living upon the lofty rocks, and the dwarfs busily digging and forging inside the earth—endeavours by force or cunning to subject the other two. The first scene of the Prelude takes place in the depths of the Rhine. The Daughters of the Rhine are circling round the "Rheingold," the treasure confided to their care; the hideous dwarf Alberich, while following them about with lustful amorousness, perceives the treasure, snatches it forcibly from the rock where it is kept, and disappears with it. The Daughters of the Rhine state the distress in which they are plunged to the god Loge (the diplomatic Mephisto at the court of the Northern Divinities), and solicits the aid of Wotan, the Allgod. The latter resolves to take the gold from Alberich, and—keep it for himself. Accompanied by Loge, he descends into Alberich's cave, binds Alberich, and seizes on the ring into which the precious metal has been transformed. But the two giants, Fafner and Fasolt, threateningly demand it as ransom for the goddess Freia, who has been carried off by them. They at last obtain it, but fall out concerning it, for it "zur höchsten Macht verhilft;"* Fafner slays Fasolt and makes off with the ring. The gods proceed, over a rainbow, to their splendid stronghold.

* Anyone desiring more ample information on the subject will find it in the pamphlets by Otto Gumprecht, Ernst Koch, Gustav Dullo, &c.

(To be continued.)

Political.

(At the Fish and Volume.)

DR FOX.—I say, what about the news from Constantinople? I suppose Turkey interests you?

DR GOOSE.—Yes, because I'm a goose! That's what you mean?

DR FOX.—Well, take it as you like. But what do you say to the Sultan's Hatt?

DR GOOSE.—A shocking bad one.

DR FOX.—Don't you believe in the Constitution?

DR GOOSE.—No; do you?

DR FOX.—Certainly, and I'll tell you on what grounds. Port is an excellent thing for the Constitution; why, then, should not the Constitution be an excellent thing for Ports?

[Exit DR GOOSE.]

* "Leads to the attainment of the highest power."

Italian Opera in Modern Costume.

(By Charles Lyall.)

No. 2.—IL TROVATORE.

ACT 1st.

FERRANDO.—“Abbietta zingara, fosca vegliarda!”
 (“An inauspicious and ghastly woman.”—Manfredo Maggioni.)

MANRICO.—“Deserto sulla terra.”
 (“Upon the earth forlorn.”—Maggioni.)

MANRICO.—“Infida!”
 (“Unfaithful woman!”—Maggioni.)

DI LUNA.—“Seguimi.” MANRICO.—“Andiam.” . . .
 LEONORA.—“Che mai farò.”
 (“Let’s go.” . . . “Let’s go.” . . . “What can I do?”—Maggioni.)

(To be continued.)

SCENE—EDINBURGH CASTLE.

Panurge, who had taken a walk through Covent Garden and had returned to the hostelry via the Lowther Arcade, made a dead stop in the passage, and by violently beating on a small drum attracted a huge crowd—fifteen strong, at least—to the portion of the Strand immediately adjoining the doorway, declaring that any one dropping a penny into a hat, which he had placed on the ground, close to his ankles, might see the “pluckiest” sight ever witnessed. He then receded backwards into the coffee-room, followed by the surging throng, which had now increased to twenty, greatly annoying the customers at the bar, and called for John the Waiter. No sooner had John made his appearance, than Panurge, drawing forth a horse-pistol, fired it deliberately in his face. Down fell John on his back, stiff as a poker. Epistemon, who was largely imbibing whiskey-and-water by the fireplace, rushed to the corpse, and, pulling his little Horace out of his waistcoat pocket, began:—

“Quis desiderio sit pudor aut modus Tam cari capitis;”

and was proceeding—

“Præcipe lugubres”—

when Pantagruel, who sat in a remote dingy box, not taking the slightest notice of what had passed, said with a stern voice:—

“Shut up! A little of that is all very well; but shut up, I say.”

“What’s all this?” shouted a policeman, enticed to the room by the uproar of the mob.

“What’s all what?”—shouted John, leaping to his feet, and thus upsetting Epistemon, who was kneeling over him.

“Aye, what’s all what?”—snarled Panurge, whose temper was by no means sweetened by the fact that nothing had been flung into his hat.

“This nonsense”—gumbled Epistemon, as he returned to his whiskey-and-water—“this nonsense comes of being so near Wych Street. Don’t believe in it a bit. There’s no such thing as Si Slocum; there’s a Sly soak-’em—and that’s me.”

And having said:

“Sunt quos, curriculo pulverem Olympicum Collegisse juvat,” he went to sleep.

—0—
MUSIC IN LEEDS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The past month has, perhaps, afforded more opportunities for honest musical criticism in the capital of the West-Riding than has been the case for a very long time. The usual damning faint praise which is but too often accorded to much that is good and worthy of special notice, and the equally objectionable style which slurs over what should be justly condemned, have been characteristic of the criticisms in our local newspapers. The recent notices of the Messiah in the Town Hall, on Dec. 20th, seem at last to have roused the discriminating part of the musical people of Leeds to a sense of the namby-pamby style deemed, by the local critics, suitable for art; and, at last, a great number of those who were present have expressed themselves dissatisfied not only with the performance itself, but with the newspaper reports. I need give but little detailed criticism, but, in the interest of art, I may mention one or two points from which your readers may gather what sort of “First-class Subscription Concerts” Leeds amateurs are at present favoured with. You will, doubtless, remember the glorious rendering of Handel’s sacred masterpiece at the last Leeds Musical Festival, in 1874—a performance which you, Mr Editor, and others who, to use a racy Yorkshireism, “know what things belong,” gracefully admitted to have been one of the finest and most interesting ever recorded. To return. As to the chorus, it goes without saying that a Yorkshire chorus knows its way about, and, like the Great Duke’s Army, can “go anywhere and do anything.” In the present instance the chorus gave nearly all the numbers allotted to their share of the work with power and precision, though not with that care and grand effect generally expected and obtained in these parts. The members of the “scratch band,” in their endeavours to spoil many of the numbers, were most successful. They were an independent lot. Now and then an individual, or coterie, might be heard introducing marvellous effects, by playing in a different time to the remainder—very in-different time, indeed, many of the major chords in the recitatives being played minor, and vice versa! The wind (brass and wood) were anything but efficient; in fact, the whole corps seemed to be demoralised, and the vagaries of the flutes in “But who may abide” were worthy a burlesque. The big organ was now and again comically descriptive, notably in “For unto us a child is born,” when it groaned as if itself in labour. WONDERFUL!

The principals were Mme Sinico, Miss Enriquez, Mr Abercrombie, Signor Campobello, Mr George Hirst (organ), and Mr R. S. Burton (conductor). Everybody was pleased with Miss Enriquez’s singing. I must defer my remarks upon other local performances until another and, I hope, early occasion.

P.S.—Have you heard that there are two Josephs in the field—two new oratorios by Professor Macfarren and Sir Michael Costa? [Certainly. We told our correspondent so, long since.—T. QUERR.]

December 30, 1876.

FIRST FAVOURITES.

THERESA TIETJENS.

Lucrezia, Norma, only Leonora,—
Who, when she sings, can fail to cry “Aurora!”
Her Anna, in Don Juan, is divine,
And she is Meyerbeer’s own Valentine.

ADELINA PATTI.

Rosina, Gilda, also as Zerlina,
Who, in such parts, can equal Adelina?
For “Una voce,” “Caro nome,” “Batti, Batti, o bel Masetto,” give me Patti.

CHRISTINE NILSSON.

Christine of Sweden was not such a queen
As this our operatic Queen Christine.
Long may she wear the laurel-wreath’d corona,
As Violetta, Mignon, Desdemona!

EMMA ALBANI.

Elsa, Elvira, (in I Puritani),
Elizabeth, Lucia—that’s Albani.
Were she my Emma, shouldn’t I decline
To grant a share in such an Emma mine!

SHAVER SILVER.

To Kate Thälberg.

ACROSTIC.

Zard! if I were twenty-five,
And I had coin on which to thrive,
Rather than any other girl,
E’en though esteemed a priceless pearl,
’Tis thee I’d like to make an earl.

(Pause.)

Ha! yet I tremble in my shoes—
An obstacle arrests my muse!

(Pause.)

Lov’d child! thou’rt short of twenty-four
By five years, while I’m sixty over;
Ere you are sixty years and more,
Rot it! I shall be full five score!
Go, then, and choose a younger lover.

(Weeps.)

Caper D’Corby, Bart.

Castle and Crown, New Year’s Day.

* Sir Caper evidently means countess; as an Irishman, moreover, he may be pardoned for forgetting he is not an earl, but only a baronet.—D. P.

COLOGNE.—A performance of Kiel’s Christus has been given under the direction of Ferdinand Hiller.

THE CONSART.

BY ORPHEUS TERRAR.

Our Mall and me tha i - ther day went off to Tru-row hir - in'.

Our Mall and me tha ither day
Went off to Trurow hirin',
To get the usual trade and things
The Christmas time requirin'.
We boft our things, we seed our friends,
And back to "Bull" did hasten;
For they make cups o' comfort there,
Which I delight in tastun'.

I lit my pipe, our Mall went off
To pack the things—a good'un—
We'd plums and curran's, almonds, spice,
To make our figgy pudden'.
She soon comes back—a goodly wench,
The picter of her mother,

Who's dead and gone, poor saw! her likes
I'll never see another.

I looked at Mall drn clouds o' smoke,
That I from pipe was blawin',
"And bless her heart," I thinks to me,
"How fine a maid she's grawin'!"
Her standth so straight as any larch,
So plump as any chicken;
No better heart than hers, I'll swear,
You'd anywhere be pickun'.

She'd got a paper in her fist
That she had bin a raydin',
And when her eyes did light on mine,
They had a look o' playdin'.
"What's now, my gal," says I, as she
The purnted paper shaw'd me,
"Why, blaw my buttons, what's this yer?"
I thoft you'd better know'd me."

(My sight bain't good, my raydin's small.)
"Come, tell us what is on it."
With that her pluck'd and fidgetted
The tyestrings of her bonnet.
"This yer's a bill," says she, "about
A martin musically;
A consart 'tes," says she, "and I
Should like to go," says Mally.

Then, in a purty tremlin' vice,
Her rade some furrin' lingo,
The most o' which was Greak to me,
Or French, it was, by jingo.
Such crackjaw names she rattled out,
My head was fairly bodder'd,
'Bout Senier Smith, Herr Jones, Miss Brown,
An' Arrybeller Goddard.

Says she, "They're going to sing and play
Such music as 'I'll glad 'ee;
So take some teckuts for we two,
And let us year 'un, daddy.
A reglar consart 'tes to be—
The teckuts are a shellan';
And I should like to year it all,
An' if so be you're wellun'."

Now, I had ne'er seed a consart,
And curis bein' my natur',
I thought at first a succus 'twas,
Or travellin' theayter.
I says, "Tes rubbish;" then again
Says I, "I'm only jokin'."
(For I seed the tears come in her eyes);
"I'll come, when I done smokin'."

Wi' that, she ups and kesses me,
And gently pats my shoulder;
And, dang my buttons, say her nay?
I'll wait till I graws bolder.
I tell'd John Thring, that keeps the Bull,
My old and friendly crony,
We'd stop and drink a dish o' tay,
Before we'd need the pony.

Then off to consart place us goes,
And ped and took our teckuts,
Which us has took'd away from us
By two chaps at the weekuts.
They tored 'em both a two, and part
They gived a man, who beckon'd
We to follow'n which us did,
And was settled in a second.

The place was fuller nor a church,
Or angry cutcher maytin's,
And chaps like pernoes in disgayse,
The comp'ny show'd to saytin's.
Some laugh'd, some joked, and some shook hands,
And some did spy dru goggles;
And from some stairs at tap come sounds
Which gi'd me colly woggles.

There was fiddlers there, and fifers too,
Some scrapin', and some strummin',
And big bassoons, the like o' which
I'd heerd in church a bummin'.
And there 'pin tap a shick'ry stool,
So high I thought he'd tumble,
Was Uncle Zacky Trevithick
A playin' on a grumble.

One chap he wanged on two large drums,
Med out o' biling coppers;
Some others blaw'd down brazen spouts,
Of which there were two woppers.
Such teramaloo there was, until
A chap perch'd on a dicky,
He threshed a buk, as I'd thresh carn,
Weth a liddle wand or sticky.

Then off they goed and play'd a tune,
Now lower, and now higher;
And they as blaw'd the brassy things
Did graw so rud as fire.
The sweat pour'd off the fiddlers' brows,
They jigged till nigh they breasted;
And when they'd a saw'd tell they was tired,
They stud quite still, and rested.

Some marms comed out and sing'd like men,
Some men they squawk'd like misses;
Thinks I, my notion of the thing,
'Twas deferent to what this is.
I wouldn't have'n in my place—
But some folks likes and has'm—
Just then a chap comed out, and smirk'd
As though he'd got a spasm.

He comed and clutch'd hold o' the led
Of a long box there was standin',
And which before I had a seed
But didn't understand 'un.
The thing it stood 'pin tap tree legs,
Just like a stool for spinnin';
And in the front there was a raw
O' gashly tayth a grinnin'.

I gurtly wonder'd what 'un dud there,
But fear'd to show bad breedin'
By axin' what they us'd 'un for.
Thick spasmy chap came leadin'
One o' the puttiest, fairest maids
My eyes had ever sot on,
And dressed so fine in silks an' trade
As put to shame Mall's cotton.

She bobbed to right, she bobbed to left,
So grand as any Dutchees,
And presses to her pretty breast
The bowpot as she clutches;
Then down in front the gashly thing,
Which was enough to fright 'un,
She sot, and gently strok'd the tayth
That look'd just like to bite 'un.

We staid and sung "God save the Queen,"
And back to humwards hiein',
Our Mall so happy as a bee,
At what she'd a bin enjoyin'.
The consart wadn't much to me,
But rather warsey wisey.
It wadn't so fine as a wild beast show,
Tho' 'twas pratty near as noisy.

She laid her pocket hankercher
Upon a kind o' griddle,
Of which one was on ayther side,
Another in the middle.
She then took off a pair o' gloves,
And rubb'd her hands delightin',
And pulled her bracelets up her arm,
As tho' prepared for fightin'.

"Here, dang my wig," says I to Mall,
"The thing 'ull p'raps spit fire."
"Hush! hush!" says Mall; and then the gal
Did draw her settle nigher.
And as she touch'd 'un with her left,
The bayst begin'd to growl,
But she hit 'un a scat athurt the chops,
And lor! how 'un did yowl.

"Twill taych you better manners thus
To grissle without rayson."
Now all this time the plucky maid
His grumpses was appaysin';
She made 'un play a pratty tune,
So had she tamed his riot;
And though he growl'd just now and then,
In main he was made quiet.

When she left off the people all
Got up and clapped and shouted;
They seemed quite glad to find that she
The gashly thing had routed.
And so was I, and Mall were pleased
At what she call'd the playin'.
A turrible piece o' work, thought I,
The gashly monster slayin'.

RAVEN RINGLETS.

SONG.

Raven ringlets floating free,
Smiles, as smiles should ever be,
Lit with thought yet warm'd with glee.
Oh! that they but glow'd for me!
Though her cheek disclaim the rose,
In her dark eyes fond repose.
There's the charm of feeling deep,
Burning though it seems to sleep.
Raven ringlets floating free,
Smiles, as smiles should ever be,
Lit with thought yet warm'd with glee,
Oh! that they but glow'd for me!

Where the fitful tear would start
Nobler pity weeps in heart,
Melts in soul, and helps unseen,
Such hath still young Laura been.
But amid the festive throng,
Soul of dance and queen of song;
E'en her steps seem whispering,
Through which love alone could sing.
Raven ringlets floating free,
Smiles, as smiles should ever be,
Lit with thought yet warm'd with glee,
Oh! that they but glow'd for me.

WELLINGTON GUERNSEY.

* Copyright.

STRASSBURG.—Herr E. Kretschmer's opera, Die Folkunger, has been performed at the Stadttheater.

LIEGE.—A new three-act comic opera, La Comtesse d'Albany, words by M. Hirsch, music by M. J. B. Rougé, is in rehearsal.

ROME.—A performance of Mendelssohn's St Paul has been given, under the direction of Signor Finelli, at the Teatro Argentina,

The Welsh Harp.

We are informed by historians that harps of some kind were common to most nations. The "difficulty" is to know what the name really signified, as the term "harp" was used in reference to all kinds of instruments, many of them totally unlike our own, except that the sounds were produced by "strings" either of silk, gut, or wire. If it be true that the Welsh, Scotch, and Irish all descend from one Celtic origin, it may account for the fact that the harp was familiar to each nation. Welsh writers state that the harp was invented by Idris Gawer; but, as he lived as early as the fourth century, this can hardly be correct. In the "Welsh Triads" it is written that "Idris the Champion invented the harp," and that "the three imperial performers were King Arthur, Brave Grey (with the powerful grasp), and Crella (bard of the harp to Prince Gruffydd ab Cynan)." There surely must be some mistake here. King Arthur died in 542, and Prince Gruffydd did not exist until centuries later. Irish historians, however, assert that "Wales was indebted to their country for instruments and music;" and, according to others, that "Scotland excelled even Ireland." Into such disputes want of space now forbids me to enter.

Harps in Wales, like those in Ireland and Scotland, were of various sizes, to which they gave different names. The best model of the Welsh harp of the present age is the one made by Basset Jones, of Cardiff, under the superintendence of the late Rev. T. Price, of Cwmdu, one of the best authorities in Wales. It was afterwards lent by Lady Llanover to the Duke of Edinburgh for his collection of musical instruments. Lady Llanover, to whom the subject has always been of great interest, has kindly sent me a drawing of this harp. The front pillar is six feet three inches in height, and the body about four. These proportions, singularly enough, are similar to those of the Egyptian harps described by Bruce. There is, however, one great distinction between the Celtic and Egyptian instruments. The latter had no "front" pillar, and it is difficult—notwithstanding what historians relate—to imagine that a harp without a pillar could produce much tone. The harps in Wales and in Ireland were sometimes made with two rows of strings, but about the end of the fourteenth century the Welsh added a third row, and since that time the "triple-stringed harp" has generally been considered the national instrument of the Principality. The word "national" is, however, a wide term if it be supposed to imply that an instrument is indigenous, or belongs to one particular country. If so, I question whether any instruments in Europe can strictly lay claim to such a title, since most of them are of Eastern origin. But, considering how closely the harp has been associated with Welsh history, for at least seventeen centuries, I think we may with great propriety claim it as our own "national instrument." Whatever we may think of Irish writers, it is nevertheless a fact that, as regards antiquity, Wales must yield to Ireland, where there is still to be seen, in Trinity College, Dublin, the most ancient harp in Europe, if not in the world. It is said to have belonged to King Brian Boromh in the tenth century. This, however, is not quite correct. It most probably was the instrument of the O'Neils, an illustrious family in the fourteenth century, so that it is at least five hundred years old, and remarkable for its elaborate workmanship. One strong reason for rejecting the statement "that Wales is indebted for its music to Ireland" is the different mode of "playing." The Irish harpers generally played the strings (made of wire) with their long finger-nails, but the Welsh have always "pulled the strings" (hair and gut) as in the present day. Indeed, it was the custom in Scotland and Ireland, when a harper misconducted himself, to punish him by cutting down his finger-nails, without which he was unable to play. The mode of "playing with the finger-nails" was not limited to Ireland, and is mentioned in the poem of "The Horn-child," a son of King Olla of Sweden, in the time of the first Crusade—"And to play on the harp with his nails sharp." There is now, probably, no model of greater interest to antiquarians and Welshmen, with exception of the harp in Trinity College, Dublin, than the one which Lady Llanover has presented to the South Kensington Museum. As to the claims of Ireland and Wales to the "invention" of the harp, both are equally incorrect. All "string" instruments may be traced to the East. If we desire to seek the most ancient kind of harp, we find it in the warrior's bow; and it is very probable that the sound emitted when he "pull'd" the string first suggested the idea of a "stringed instrument." But if we are to be guided by what certain historians inform us, it is quite evident that warriors were not the only persons who "pull'd a long bow."

Brintley Richards.

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The professional students of the London Academy of Music gave their annual Christmas concert at St George's Hall, on Friday afternoon, December 29th, under the direction of Dr Wyld. The programme was long, but it could hardly be otherwise, owing to the number of students who were naturally anxious to be heard. There were ten pianists (Misses Royle, Erica, Kate Griffiths, Chaplin, Oakey, Adam, Louis, Kate Rawlings; Messrs C. Trew, and G. F. Gear). Three violinists (Misses Perkins, Laxton, and Master Cortie). One violoncellist (Mr Gough). Eight solo vocalists (Misses Bidwell, Landore, E. Webster, M. Smith, E. Villiers, Geater, Ashton, and Mr Noyes). Besides a large number who assisted in part-songs composed by S. Scuderi ("Le Montanino") and E. Philp ("Spring"). Among the pianists to whom special attention may be drawn were Miss Kate Griffiths, who played an "Allegro" by H. Behrens, and a Tarantella, by Liszt; Miss Chaplin, who gave a Nocturne by Chopin, and a Mazurka by Rubinstein, and Mr G. F. Gear, whose performance of Chopin's Andante Spianato and Polonaise in E flat, deserves the highest praise. Among the vocalists, Miss E. Webster may be congratulated on her success in the "Inflammatus," from Rossini's Stabat Mater; and Miss Landore for her rendering of "Tacea la notte" (Il Trovatore). Among those who assisted Dr Wyld were M.M. Marlois (accompanist), Pollitzer and Ludwig (violinists), and Jansen (flautist).

"HE NEVER CAME!"*

(For Music.)

All in the glow of the sunset's splendour,
Calm as the peace of the dying day,
She waits for the joy the hour will send her,
Watches and waits till he comes that way.
Surely her heart must have told its secret;
Yes, for the wild-flowers know it too!
And the wind comes up from the South to listen,
The brooklet murmurs, "Ah, happy you!"
Over the brook he will come—her lover—
Over the bridge to the garden gate;
Ah, joy! for the watching will then be over,
And never again will she have to wait!
"Only a year since we both have parted!
"Only a year!" she murmurs low;
"Only a year," the flower-bells whisper;
Was ever a year so loth to go?
Why are the shadows so swiftly falling?
Why has the night-wind grown so chill?
Why does the name her lips are calling
Echo and die in the silence still?

The brooklet murmurs from morn till even,
Singing, "I care not for doubt or pain;"
But the light has died in the far-off heaven;
The wild-flowers whisper: "He never came!"

* Copyright.

RITA.

MILAN.—The season was inaugurated at the Scala by Les Huguenots. Signora Fossa, as Valentine, Signore Gayarre and Merly, as Raoul and Marcel, were applauded. The orchestra, under Signor Faccio, and the chorus, were excellent.

AMSTERDAM.—At the first of the Musical Performances for Ladies, founded by M. Henri Coenen, the great attraction was Herr Joachim, who performed, alone, a Barcarolle by Spohr, and the "Ungarische Weisen" by Brahms, besides taking part in Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 47, and Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins and quartet. He was rapturously applauded. Three days later he played at the Felix Meritis Society's Concert, and again excited enthusiasm.

At the Monday "Pops."

PIANIST.

PIANIST (thinking aloud).—O Gemini! Here's Acadēmus! I must mind my pedals, as well as my P's and Q's.

CRITIC.

(Looking at Pianist's right pedal foot)—Now, we shall hear.

[A pause.]

PIANIST (inwardly reflecting).—Voici, il me semble, le beau de la chose. I must play for Acadēmus, sans pedal.

Dolce e molto legato.

PIANIST (inwardly).—I don't want pedal for my effects. Blow pedal! (puts down pedal). Essipoff keeps down pedal all through "Waldstein" (takes off pedal). Blow pedal!

Sempre pianissimo e legato.

(Puts down both pedals.—Great applause.)

ACADEMUS (makes signal to "Greater Cape").—If Eng^h could play like that.

GREATER CAPE (signals).—They have no accent.

ACADEMUS (signals).—What wrong octaves they play!

GREATER CAPE (misunderstanding signal).—If they would use the pedal, like Rubinstein.

ACADEMUS (signals).—Now you can hear what's meant, without pedals.

GREATER CAPE (misunderstanding signal).—He knows how to use both pedals.

ACADEMUS (signals).—Doesn't he mind his Q's?

GREATER CAPE (zu fuss).—Ah! and his P's!

[Exit GREATER CAPE,

Tempora Mutantur.Tout est pour le mieux dans ce meilleur des mondes possibles.

"Why do the nations so furiously rage together; and why do the people imagine a vain thing?"

Returned from Bayreuth.
No. 6.

Hotel de Russie, Frankfort.

DR CHEESE.—I said you would never again move away from here.
ALDERMAN DOUBLEBODY.—Well, the Drexels are such good fellows, and I'm a heavy traveller.

DR CHEESE.—But how did you get back from Bayreuth?

ALDERMAN DOUBLEBODY. I walked. I was hungry, and wanted more flesh on my bones. I rested at Wurzburg and Bamberg, eating on the road.

DR CHEESE.—You have doubled yourself.

ALDERMAN DOUBLEBODY.—I can't help that. I'm a heavy traveller.

DR CHEESE.—Wagner, no doubt, asked you treble price for admission?

ALDERMAN DOUBLEBODY.—I found room, paid £135, and applauded Tetralogy.

DR CHEESE.—But why do the nations so furiously rage together?

ALDERMAN DOUBLEBODY.—And why do the people imagine a vain thing?

DR CHEESE.—Qui sait? We have outlived it.

ALDERMAN DOUBLEBODY.—Who knows? Embrace me, Cheese!

The Mental Strain.

BY DR AUTHOR OF

(Repeated by desire.)

I often wonder what I am,
And what I yet may be;
An elephant, an ape, a ram,
A buzzard, or a flea?
My aching heart, my puzzled brain,
Cannot support this mental strain.

And yet were I to choose my lot,
And say I'd be an eel,
Would that be happiness or not?
Should I contented feel?
My aching heart, my puzzled brain,
Cannot support this mental strain.

Dancypylin.

* The names are too long for insertion unless charged as an advertisement.

Modern Paganini the Elder at the Promenades.

MODERN PAGANINI THE ELDER.—Modern Paganini the Younger plays with his bow-arm too far from the body. His bow is too long, and he buttons up his coat.

Modern Paganini the Younger at the Promenades.

MODERN PAGANINI THE YOUNGER.—Modern Paganini the Elder plays with his bow-arm too near the body. His bow is too short, and he can't button up his coat.

Musical World Ballads.

(By our Special Cockney.)

A Ballad ob Bayroot,

(Rote on Chrissmus Heev.)

The Prolog.

Ho! 'ark'n, gents and ladies hall,
 Let me yer heers delite,
 Vith both a trew an' pretty tale,
 Yes' sooted for to-nite.

I haint a goin' 2 sing 2 u,
 Ov turkees an' rost beef;
 Nor yet ov "drains" an' "goes," as brings
 So menny chaps 2 greef.

My mews it his a cut abuv
 That werry low affair,
 An' has 2 do vith peece on herth,
 Vich haingels sung in hair.

Ho! peece on herth is werry nice,
 So's char-e-t likewise;
 And brutherly luv—it makes me lift
 My wision 2 the skies.

Then 'ark'n, gents and ladies hall,
 I vill yer heers delite,
 Vith both a trew an' pretty tale,
 Yes' sooted for to-nite.

The Ballad.

It was a Sur Nite Benny Dick
 Oo 2 Bayroot did go;
 But vere that his, and vy 'e vent,
 This poet do not no.

'E starts for Bayroot, hany 'ow,
 An' 2 hisself ses 'e,
 "My deer old chum, the Habby List,
 i sartenly shall c."

Vich gratefully did rejice the sole
 Ov this 'ere good Sur Nite,
 Oo'd rayther kiss a 100 chaps
 Than wollop vun in file.

"O Habby List, O Habby List,"
 So on the rode 'e mews'd,
 "A menny 'ear agone it his
 Since u and hi wos yew's'd

"2 brekfust, dine and sup (hi pade)
 In deer old Lundun town;
 An' werry fond u wos o' me,
 An' kost me menny a krown.

"But that's not neethur 'ere nor there;
 i luv'd u like a bruther,
 An' wot wos mine wos yourn, as tho'
 The heach 'e vos the huther.

"So, ven i meats u at Bayroot,
 Wot's yourn it vill be mine,
 An' glasses not a fu we'll drink
 Ov rale hold Farmun wine."

This Nite 2 Bayroot gits at lenth—
 "Ho! veer is Habby List?"
 'e hasked ov a long 'air'd cove
 Vith big books hin 'is fist.

The cove 'e fust took hoff 'is 'at
 Then sollumly did say,
 "In Wagginer's 'ouse that 'ere grate man
 I've seed this blessed day."

2 Wagginer's 'ouse vithhout a-doo
 Nite Benny Dick did start,
 An' hat the frunt dore boldly nock'd
 Altho' vith flutfrin' art.

The 'ousemaid hup the hairy cums,
 "Oo did u vant?" ast she.
 "The Habby List," says Benny Dick;
 "Ho! sho 'im hunto me."

That nice young maid made for 2 speak,
 But there wos not no need,
 'Cos Habby List 'e 'erd the woice,
 An' 'asted hout vith speed.

"My Benny Dick! my Benny Dick!
 Ho! fall upon this brest."
 Then heach unto the huther run
 (The pictur tells the rest).

An' 'ere i must lay down my pen
 To vipe away a tear,
 (The 'ousemaid shooldn't veepe alone,
 The pretty little deer;

Vich she did cry most copenuslee
 All hat the tutching site,
 Nor hon the pictur can u look Vithout a blub downrite.)

Ow these 'ere gents they 'ob-a-nobb'd,
 Is heasy 2 suphose;
 And it wos preshus late afore,
 From Wagginer's wine they rose.

But ore sich things, in frendship's name,
 I'm bound 2 dror a wail,
 Espeshly has they don't consarn
 The moral ov my tail.

Vich moral hevrybody nose
 As vell as 'is own bruther—
 The chap as does vun jolly turn,
 Desarves 2 git another.

Now long liv Sur Nite Benny Dick,
 Likewise the good Habby;
 And ven they nex do meet and kiss,
 May hi b there 2 c.

The Deppplog.

(2 b Red hafter Chrissmus.)

The c's-on ov good will bein' past,
 i don't mind tellin' u,
 That sum chaps vont beleave my tail,
 But ses it his a "doo."

"The pretty 'ousemaid did'n't veepe,
 Nor did the waters flow
 Ov Benny Dick and Habby List,
 As u 'ave tride to show.

"Instid ov that the good Habby,
 In axents werry cold,
 Sed honly to 'is frend, ' Sur Nite,
 U're gitting to look hold."

But hi the crammer vont take hin,
 The hopposite, i no it;
 And kif u vont beleave i'm rite,
 The picter's 'ere to sho it.

J. B.

Origin of abobe Jap.

[The touching meeting between Abbé Liszt and Sir Julius Benedict at Bayreuth took away attention, for a time, even from the Tetralogy itself. If the Tagblatt (Daily Blague) may be credited, Liszt, on perceiving Benedict, fell upon his (Benedict's) neck, and wept, like Joseph at the sight of his brethren, who came to Egypt for bread and got it, whereas Sir Julius (and many others) got neither bread nor wine in the city of the Margraves. But then the "reciprocity" must have consoled Benedict (and many others).—D. Peters.]

The Meeting of the Waters.

(Touching Episode at Bayreuth, August 12, 1876.)

"Tears, idle tears" (Tennyson).

Mazzeppa (a tear).—Orestes!

St Peter.—Pylades!

Mazzeppa (two or three tears).—Damon!

St Peter (a tear).—Pythias!

Mazzeppa (many tears).—Nisus!

St Peter (one tear more).—Euryalus!

Mazzeppa (a pool of tears).—My Abel!

St Peter (no more tears to spare).—My—Cain!

[Exeunt severally—much affected.]

In the next column will be found a letter from Mazzeppa to St Peter, explaining the nature of an interview the interest attached to which (Siegfried being postponed) arrested attention for an entire midsummer's day from the Tetralogy. Nothing else was talked about at Ackermann's. One hundred barrels of beer were quaffed; and at 3 o'clock A.M. there was scarcely a dry eye, Hanslick and Wolf weeping copiously. More beer was demanded, but no more was to be had.

Autograph Letter from Franz Mazzeppa to St Peter.

J' ai pu venir probablement par un petit aigle d.
 ou un des Benedict mais je n'en ai vu des ceux du pasteur Louis.
 Je suis sensible à l'émotion que vous m'avez fait par votre lettre que je ferai ce qui dépendra de moi pour ne pas trahir l'âme en retour avec une dignité d'ami grand et un bon bon sentira j'espère que l'occasion se présentera bientôt et il pourra y avoir un peu de réconciliation des nos rapports,
 Rappelé vers lui affectueux
 au 10 avril d. J. Mazzeppa

Benedict et vous m'avez bien fait à vous d'arrêter

F. Mazzeppa
 Veuille m'en dire.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,
ST JAMES'S HALL.
NINETEENTH SEASON, 1876-7.
DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE THIRTEENTH CONCERT.
MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 8, 1877.
To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.

DIVERTIMENTO, in B flat, for two violins, viola, two horns, and violoncello—MM. STRAUS, L. RIES, ZERBINI, WENDTLAND, STANDEN, and PIATTI Mozart.

SONG, "Willst du dein Herz mir schenken"—Mlle THEKLA FRIEDLANDER Bach.

SONATA APPASSIONATA, in F minor, Op. 57, for pianoforte alone—Mlle MARIE KREBS Beethoven.

PART II.

SONATA, in F major, Op. 5, No. 1, for pianoforte and violoncello—Mlle MARIE KREBS and Signor PIATTI Beethoven.

SONGS { "Der Jüngling an die Quelle" Schubert.
"Marienwärdchen" Schumann.

Mlle THEKLA FRIEDLANDER.

QUARTET, in C major, Op. 50, No. 2, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (first time)—MM. STRAUS, L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI Haydn.

Conductor Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 13, 1877.
To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET, in G minor, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—Mlle MARIE KREBS, MM. STRAUS, ZERBINI, and PIATTI Mozart.

AIR, "Adelaide"—Mr SIMS REEVES Beethoven.

SONATA PATHETIQUE, in C minor, Op. 13, for pianoforte alone—Mlle MARIE KREBS Beethoven.

SERENADE, "Awake, awake"—Mr SIMS REEVES (Violoncello obligato—Signor PIATTI) Piatti.

OCTET, in F, Op. 166, for two violins, viola, violoncello, double bass, clarinet, French horn, and bassoon (by desire)—MM. STRAUS, L. RIES, ZERBINI, LAZARUS, WENDTLAND, WINTERBOTTOM, REYNOLDS, and PIATTI Schubert.

Conductor Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

S. C. (Boulogne).—The verses received and admired. Have you received Stilton and admired? Not an inch to spare this week.

MR BAKER BUTCHER BAKER.—Mr Baker need be under no apprehension. While there are Groves and Menns (plural for Manns) at Sydenham, Ursa Minor will be just as well looked to as Ursa Major, Cape Horn as Cape Goodhope, Mr Baker Butcher Baker as Mr Butcher Baker Butcher. If not, let our correspondent address Mr Wilkinson, one of the most courteous and agreeable of managers.

PHENICOPTER.—Inquire of Mr and Mrs Allen, at the Queen's (most comfortable) Hotel, Leeds. The festival of 1877 will be an enormous success. Think only of that adorable Yorkshire chorus!

DR SNIPE.—If, in his Alceste, Mr Henry Gadsby has followed in the path laid down by Mendelssohn, he has shown that he knows how to tread it firmly.

SIDEY HAM.—No. The Winkians of North Malvern are not a branch of the Muttonians of the King and Beard. Their's is not an I O U club, but an I don't O U club. The chief members of the Committee are Admiral Wink (Chairman); Dr Silent Ward (Hon. Sec.); Mr John Harmony Bucephalus Evans (who sings a capital song); Mr Dally (always too late at the meetings); Mr Browning (not the poet); Mr Pidcock (pet of the Assizes); Mr Martin Luther Lucy (of the Outland Revenue); three mediums; three ghosts; and—a—Mr Alchemyst Mellor (of the Plains). Besides, Field Marshal Generalissimo Ap'Mutton, like Othello, cares not greatly for music that may be heard; while Admiral Wink, when not conversing with Rozinante Charley, in the paddock, looking at Saturn's Ring through the telescope, destroying hornets, killing red spiders (and grapes as well) in his conservatory, reading Tristram Shandy, or taking a glass with Farmers Point and Stiff at mine host Fuggle's, on market-day in Worcester, is perpetually playing the accordion, to the tune of "My old wife's a good old crittur," composed and sung by Dr. Sanders (much to the delight of Mama, Auntie, and Cinderella, who listen outside).

MARRIAGE.

On the 16th December, at St Mary Abbots, Kensington, by the Rev. E. F. N. Smith, EDWARD WILLIAM, son of E. Lance, Esq., of Balham, to PHEBE ELIZABETH, daughter of A. J. Phassey, of Her Majesty's private band.

DEATHS.

On December 18, at 16, Devonshire Street, Kensington, ROBERT GUYLOT, Professor of Music (composer of "The Rose will cease to blow," and other popular songs), aged eighty-two.

On January the 1st, at Burton's Court Lodge, SARAH WILLIAMS, organist of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea.

NOTICE.

* * The Index of the Contents of "The Musical World" for 1876 will be printed in the course of January next.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyl Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery. With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive sixteen pages extra.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1877.

Some time after Daybreak.

(At the "King and Beard.")

MR DISHLEY PETERS, SEN.—We must inquire into this.

MR DISHLEY PETERS, JUN.—The less said the better.

MR PETERS, SEN.—Why?

MR PETERS, JUN.—Ah! there's the point!

MR PETERS, SEN.—I thought so!

(A pause.)

MR PETERS, SEN.—Have you come across Sidey Ham lately?

MR PETERS, JUN.—No.

MR PETERS, SEN.—Or Baylis Boil?—or Purple Powis?

MR PETERS, JUN.—Not since Bayreuth.

MR PETERS, SEN.—I thought as much. This quest of the Niblung's Ring greatly resembles the quest of the Sancgreel, which left King Arthur with only his weary elbows on the Table Round!

MR PETERS, JUN.—There was the Queen.

MR PETERS, SEN.—Guenever! She was ever a thinking o' Launcelot. Not a soul now comes to the I O U Club, limited to non-liquidators. The hundred and fifty Muttonians are like the hundred and fifty knights of the Round Table—all dispersed!

MR PETERS, JUN.—Alas!

(A pause.)

MR PETERS, SEN.—I've done nothing but read Schopenhauer since they went in quest of the Ring.

MR PETERS, JUN.—With Francis Hueffer's glossary?

MR PETERS, SEN.—Well, yes.

(A pause.)

MR PETERS, JUN.—I suppose Dannreuther was Percival?
MR PETERS, SEN.—Yes, and "C. A. B." was Bors.
MR PETERS, JUN.—Both were tempted of devils, in the shape of fair women?

MR PETERS, SEN.—Yes; and both felt uneasy.
MR PETERS, JUN.—Who, then, was Galahad?
MR PETERS, SEN.—Why, Francis Hueffer, of course.
MR PETERS, JUN.—But what of Académus?
MR PETERS, SEN.—He was Hueffer's squire—Sancho to the Wagnerian Don Quixote, who worships R. W. (in his fancy), as Quixote de la Mancha (in his fancy) worshipped Dulcinea del Toboso.

(A Pause.)

MR PETERS, JUN.—I'd rather be Dramuziando, the Moor.
MR PETERS, SEN.—The dwarf? Give me Galaor, the brother of Amadis.

MR PETERS, JUN.—He was a lover of all ladies—like Gawaine, the nephew of King Arthur—

MR PETERS, SEN.—According to Walter Scott; but, according to Malory, Gawaine was chiefly a lover of apples.

MR PETERS, JUN.—I compare Gawaine with Coventry Fish, Wilhelmj with Siegfried, and Joseph Joachim with Launcelot of the Lake.

(A Pause.)

MR PETERS, SEN.—Any news about the reporter we sent to Bayreuth?

MR PETERS, JUN.—Thaddeus Egg?

MR PETERS, SEN.—He promised us a lay, in four fyttles, about the Tetralogy. But it has not turned up. No single line has come to the King and Beard.

(Enter Waiter with letter.)

MR PETERS, JUN.—What's this?—From Dr Wind. He has blown open the envelope.

MR PETERS, SEN.—As usual. (reads):—

The Legend of Bayreuth.

FYTTE I.

PROLOGUE.

Now listen hunto me, hall you
As likes a rummy start;
'Cos hi a werry curous tale
Hinten' for to himpart.
And 'taint a short'un neither, mind,
But, bless'ee, never fear,
Hi shan't break down while blokes like you
Stands fraely pots o' beer.

FYTTE II.

THE MISSION.

D'ye see, I've got two hedditors,
And vun's a merry chap,
Who juvs 'is joke, also 'is glass,
But do not pay a rap.
The hother cove 'e 'olds the purse,
And minds the "subs" an' "ads;"
But, ho! haint 'e a downy vun!
Ha, jist about, my lads.
Vell, these 'ere chaps they comes to me—
"Now, Speshul, hup an' go,"
Ses Number Vun, a takin' enuff,
"Hunto the Bayrooth Show."
Then Number Two he vinks at Vun—
"Ere's flimsy for ten pound—
Vick lib'ral 'tis—to pay yer vay
Hon that 'ere jolly round."
"Old 'ard," ses hi, "hi never buy
A pig wot's in a poke.
Vere is this Bayrooth? wot's the show?
I haint yet quite a make."

MR PETERS, JUN.—Well, go on.

MR PETERS, SEN.—That's all.

MR PETERS, JUN.—Why, he's never been. I always said you couldn't depend on Egg.

MR PETERS, SEN.—I gave you the ten pounds he agreed to go for.

MR PETERS, JUN.—'Twasn't enough to pay his railway, to say nothing of his bye-drinks.

MR PETERS, SEN.—Then, I suppose, he didn't go?

MR PETERS, JUN.—Not he. He "haint yet quite a make."

MR PETERS, SEN.—Then what's he done with the money?

MR PETERS, JUN.—He's spent it, of course, in his own way.

MR PETERS, SEN.—About Liszt and Benedict?

MR PETERS, JUN.—That's all right. T'other chap and Lyall the Limner went together.

Episodes on Change.

DR SHIPPING (hastily).—Define me E. D.
DR QUINCE (hastily).—Abgerhamtehueffe.
DR SHIPPING (hastily).—Define me "C. A. B."
DR QUINCE (hastily).—Abgerhamtedannreutherheuffe.
DR SHIPPING (hastily).—Define me Académus.
DR QUINCE (hastily).—Abgerhamtedannreutherercabhueffe.

SIR FLAMBOROUGH HEAD.

"My eyes! That begins promising!"

DR SHIPPING.—Heu cauda!

DR QUINCE.—Cave canem!

[Exeunt, with somersaults, precipitately to Keller.

AT KELLER.

DR SHIPPING.—"Saved!"—Define me Schuré.

DR QUINCE.—A squash. Cost me twenty-five francs. Knew less of Wagner than before. Give me Hueffer!

DR SHIPPING (aside).—Give me Hanslick!

(Orchestra hard by.)

DRS SHIPPING AND QUINCE.—Ohe! Haa! Whoop! Help! Toot-manyoso! Help! Schott-Wolf of the Volsungs!

DR SHIPPING.—O! By Abbs!

DR QUINCE.—O! By Adnung! [Rush off precipitately to Potsdam.

AT POTSDAM.

BOTH.—Saved!

(Orchestra at Potsdam.)

SIR PETIPACE OF WINCHELSFA.
"My hair! Here's a go!"

DRS SHIPPING AND QUINCE (in consternation).—To Italy! "Entrons par le Piémont!"

Pantomime, no Pantomime.

IN many respects, alas! in far too many, we may apply to ourselves the oft-quoted, well-worn, but still serviceable, line—

"Tempora mutantur nos et mutamur in illis."

As the rapid years rolled on, we have grown too sober and sedate for the tastes of our boyhood and youth, just as we have waxed too big for the skeleton suit in which our juvenile limbs were encased, what time knickerbockers were unknown, and young gentlemen's necks surrounded by a feeble and most irritating imitation of the Elizabethan ruff. We have long since ceased, when caught in the rain, to walk from preference, with a happy ignorance of rheumatism and a contempt for colds, through all the puddles we can find, a practice we once invariably adopted to the consternation of our nurse, whose powers of remonstrance were utterly insufficient to restrain us from revelling in our duck-like propensities. We no more yearn for snowballing, nor delight in cricket under a tropical sun, with the thermometer marking some abnormal number of degrees, and impressing on a celebrated firm of opticians the propriety of calling public attention to the fact by an advertisement headed—How hot it has been! The charms of snapdragon have paled before our repugnance for the sticky digital feeling which is the inevitable result of the pastime in question. We pass by sweetstuff shops with proud indifference to toffee and brandy-balls. We are callous to magic-lanterns, and prefer a seat in a hansom, or even an omnibus, to a ride on a donkey. This is fortunate for the donkey, considering that our whilom slim form has attained a bulk which turns the scale at—but why trouble the reader with superfluous figures? In one respect, however, we have remained unchanged. We are as fond of a Pantomime as we were on the never-to-be-forgotten dank, delightful, slushy, delicious, misty, drizzly, supremely happy night, when a rumbling, crazy hackney coach, redolent of damp straw, suggestive of decayed aristocratic grandeur, and driven by a huge great-coat, or wrap-rascal, with innumerable capes and a man somewhere inside them, conveyed us to the Theatre Royal Drury Lane that we might witness, for the first time, one of our favourite entertainments.

We can pardon a contempt for Pantomime in young gentlemen fresh from school, and engaged in battling through an apprenticeship of great bodily anguish while attempting to learn the noble art of smoking, or "men"—of eighteen or nineteen—at college, who consider it is the correct thing to fuddle their brains with vile, adulterated concoctions at wine parties, and create a disturbance in a Music Hall on the evening after a University Boat Race. But we have no respect for the pompous prigs of a more advanced age who express a dignified horror at the absurdity of Pantomime, and grandiloquently dilate upon its childishness. Poor dullards! They entirely ignore the truth of the saying, Dulce est desipere in loco, and think to earn a reputation for superior sense while most lamentably displaying their utter want of it. However, they are in a minority, and long may they remain so. Had Pantomime no other recommendation, we still should stand up for it, because it is able, for a short time at least, to bridge over the torrent of Time and take us back to those blissful days when Christmas was associated in our boyish minds only with visions of turkeys, plum-pudding, mince pies, Harlequin and Clown, undisturbed by the dread of indigestion, and unalloyed by the consciousness of impending Christmas bills.

But then a Pantomime should really be a Pantomime in the genuine sense of the word. It must not resemble Hamlet with the part of Hamlet omitted. Of late years this objectionable resemblance has been gradually becoming more and more unmistakable. Just as Captain Titus, under the pseudonym of William Allen, proved, to his own satisfaction, though to anything but that of his Highness, the Lord Protector, an original theory epitomised, as: Killing no Murder, it would not be very difficult now-a-days to establish another theory, to wit that of: Pantomime no Pantomime. Our cherished entertainment, with its present long and elaborate opening and its stunted harlequinade, reminds us each successive season more strikingly of that disagreeably natural, or, rather, unnatural, production, a hydrocephalous child, all head and no body. We have not a word to say against our scenic artists. On the contrary, we are proud of them. We yield to none in our admiration of the wondrous talent which has rendered the name of William Beverly famous; we gaze with delight upon the marvels due to the brushes of such men as Callcott, O'Connor, Brew, Hawes Craven, and others. But there is in all things a limit which it is unwise to overstep. The painter's brush, aided by coloured fires, Dutch metal, and elaborate machinery, has too great a share, to please us, in the composition of modern Pantomime. This was not so when Stanfield, Grieve, Marinari Roberts, and Telbin—no despicable limners, it must be allowed—first reigned supreme in the scene-room. We are sorry it should be so now. Let us, by all means, have good scenery—and with our eminent living painters good scenery is a matter of course—but do not let the Pantomime be forgotten amid the scenic splendour, like Jinks's Baby amid the enthusiasm of the meeting nominally convened in the poor little wretch's behalf. If, too, we are not mistaken, the public are beginning to have rather too much of Crystal Abodes of Fairy Bliss, Homes of the Mountain Sprite and the Sunlit Realms of Roseate Delight, Caverns of Magic Gems, and Corruscating Glades inhabited by Queens of the Rippling Streamlets, in all of which every object visible to the audiences slowly, and not always smoothly, unfolds, without the slightest rhyme or reason, into something else. Toujours perdrix is, in the long run, apt to make one desire a change of diet. The celebrated Pantomime of Mother Goose, produced on the 26th December, 1806, at the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, was played for ninety-two successive nights, a run almost equal, considering the difference between then and now, to the run of Our Boys at the Vaudeville. The performance on the eighty-second night, for the joint benefit of the Clown, Grimaldi—"Joe Grimaldi"—and the Harlequin, Bologna, brought in the sum of six hundred and seventy-nine pounds. Yet Mother Goose boasted of no splendid scenery or showy dresses. There was not even a spangle in it, with the exception of those which decked the harlequin's jacket, and even they were within an ace of not being sewn on. Might not a return be made to the old system? Why does not some manager venture on the experiment? We fancy that, if he did so, he would have no cause to mourn over the result.

We may be told that, to carry out this idea, we should have to begin by finding our Clown, as Mrs Glasse informed her patrons that a preliminary step to certain culinary operations was first to catch their hare, and that good Clowns are now almost as extinct as the dodo. We feel inclined to doubt this. We believe that the usual law of demand and supply holds even in the article of good Clowns. We do not expect soon to come across another Grimaldi, who was pronounced by John Philip Kemble the best low comedian of a period renowned for exceptionally clever and unctuous low comedians, and who seems to have possessed unlimited power over his audience. In one Pantomime he was introduced begging a pie from a pieman. The simple expression, "May I?" with the accompanying look and action, was inimitable, and one of the finest pieces of acting ever witnessed. Whether he had to rob a till or open an oyster, imitate a chimney sweep or ape a dandy, grasp a red-hot poker, take snuff, sneeze, make love, mimic a tragedian, cheat his master, pick a pocket, beat a watchman, or nurse a child, he did it in so admirably humorous and extravagantly natural a manner that the effect was irresistible. But, though we may, as already observed, not soon be blessed with a second Grimaldi, we may have successors in some degree worthy to wear the mantle of which we have heard so much. To do so, however, we must acknowledge the principle that something more than mere grimacing or tumbling is indispensable to constitute a good Clown. The Clown is the modern representative of the mediæval jester. He should not be an acrobat or a contortionist, but a satirist who takes advantage of his privileged position to shoot folly as it flies, and hold up cant and humbug to ridicule and contempt. Shakspeare says:

"This fellow's wise enough to play the fool,
And to do that well craves a kind of wit."

Clown, if deserving his name, is entitled to much higher rank in the aristocracy of the stage than that now assigned him.

We might say a great deal more on the subject, but our want of space warns us to conclude. Let managers think over, between this and next Christmas, the suggestion we have thrown out—for it is only a suggestion—and restore to Clown, with Columbine, Harlequin, and Pantaloon, the other members of the merry quartet, something of their former importance. Then, and not till then, shall we cease to lament the state of things summarised in the words: Pantomime no Pantomime. J. V. B.

To Dr Abraham Sadoke Silent.

RESPECTED MUTTONIAN,—Gone back a quarter of a century—thanks to "Higher Development" the "Three R's," Lenore, Mazeppa, &c., &c. Guiseppe Verdi's Aida was no go; Bach's Mass in B minor vainly endeavoured to stop the tide; and Rubinstein played, now like Jehu, furiously, now like Orpheus, with unheard-of softness. No go! One man alone can save us. That's Francis Huefer. But he wont. He's got theories. He is a Sepheopssenhimauisert, and talked the other night with the Sage of Southwark. No go! Tannhäuser showed up a doubtful troubadour and a doubtfuller pilgrim, who loved Venus better than he loved Elizabeth. No go! The Swan of Lohengrin came and went as it did last season. We all applauded its coming, and we all applauded its going, as we had already applauded its coming and its going in 18'5. Vianesi affected a liking for Wagner; Costa sat before his desk and beat with imperturbable placidity. Never mind. We have had the Resurrection, and hope that the Leeds people will refrain from singing, at their next festival, "Not for Joe!"—for Macfarren's Joseph is to come out. (Look to it, good Dr Spark!) Costa is preparing another Joseph for Birmingham. A triumph for them both—say I. We have many Potiphars, but very few Josephs (pace Handel, and Etienne Méhul). The more Josephs the better. Arabella Goddard, having been told that she was possessed of none of the "divine fire," plunged into the depths of the earth, and gazed beseechingly at the Southern Cross, hoping to catch a spark or two of the feu sacré. Four years later she returned, approaching the instrument with the unbridled "verve" of a Rubinstein—only not shaking wide her yellow hair, as is the custom of that Menad of the "Hammers" (Wagner). Then came Shiboob of the Lesser Cape, like a male ostrich, and stoutly declared she had no "divine fire"—not even that "feu sacré (as the French would say) to enlever an auditory." Henceforth (in consequence of Shiboob's disapproval), having flooded the country with Beethoven, &c., she will devote herself exclusively to Thalberg, &c., at John Boosey's Ballad Concerts; and whether Académus (we mean Shiboob, brother of Antar, destroyer of horsemen and horsewomen, hater of the pedal, and inspector of wrong octaves), detect "fire" in her, divine or the contrary, or no "fire," "sacré" or the contrary, will not matter a straw, one spark administered to which, under circumstances that give to some critics "the likeness of the appearance, as it were, of lamps," might blaze into a conflagration.

Let our singular good Académus return to Bayreuth, with his portheuffer, and tell us all about it—above everything "le beau de la chose." Ride on the wild horse of Mazeppa, fill thine ears with Liszt, state thine "absolute conviction," and rejoice—O! Académus mine!—the heart of thy prostrate gladiator, Simon Balf.

Half Moon Street.

Errata.

(Not our own, but requiring correction.)

CHAPTER I.

IN that excellent paper, The Monthly Musical Record—of which we have to thank Messrs Augener for Vol. VI. (1876), bound—we find the following (page 101):—

"On it being determined, thanks principally to the instigation of Mr Santley, to bring Der Fliegende Holländer to a hearing at Her Majesty's Opera, Drury Lane, in 1872," &c.

Mr Santley had no more to do with the bringing out of Der Fliegende Holländer than he had to do with the bringing out of Cherubini's Deux Journées at Mr Rosa's theatre. Quite the contrary. He played in them both. Voilà tout.

We have read on more than one occasion, in the musical articles of our pleasant contemporary, Figaro, that Sir Julius Benedict instituted the Monday Popular Concerts. Sir Julius Benedict had no more to do with the institution of the Monday Popular Concerts than "Cherubino" himself. On the contrary, Sir Julius declined to have anything to say to them—except as conductor, which post may he hold for years to come!

In other papers Mdlle Tietjens is credited with reviving Fidelio and introducing Cherubini's Medea at Her Majesty's Theatre. Mdlle Tietjens had nothing to do either with the revival of the one or the introduction of the other. On the contrary. She played in both. Voilà tout.

If particulars are required, we are able to give them circumstantially. A. S. Silent.

THE last Saturday "Popular Promenade Concert," given by the Glasgow Choral Union, is announced for to-day, as usual, under the direction of the eminent violinist, Mr J. T. Carrodus.

NEW YORK.—The papers speak of M. Maurice Strakosch's plan of erecting a new operahouse as likely to be really carried out.

FLORENCE.—A bust of the late Signor Luigi Scalaberni, the well-known manager, has been placed in the vestibule of the Teatro Pagliano. It is by Signor Auteri, a literary man and sculptor,

SCHUMANN'S LETTER.

The letter from which we present our readers (Page 12) with a photograph fac-simile of the conclusion was addressed by Schumann, on the 18th November, 1837, to a friend in Warsaw, requesting him to write for Schumann's periodical, Die Neue Zeitschrift für Musik. The conclusion runs thus:

"Hr. Ernemann flog wie ein Schmetterling durch; wir haben blutwenig zusammen gesprochen. Erinnern Sie ihn vielleicht an sein Versprechen, mir über Chopin's Jugendleben in Warschau einige genauere Notizen mitzuthellen Gerade dies würde sich gut in die ersten Nummern von 1838 schicken.

"Verlassen sie mich also nicht, mein verehrtester Herr und Freund, und geben sie mir bald ein Zeichen Ihres neuen Wohlwollens Ihrem ergebenen
"R. SCHUMANN."

[Translation.]

"Herr Ernemann flew through here like a butterfly; we had foundedly little conversation together. Perhaps you would take an opportunity to remind him of his promise of furnishing me with some detailed notices concerning Chopin's youthful days in Warsaw. They would be the very thing for the early numbers of 1838.

"Do not, then, abandon me, respected sir and friend, and give me soon a fresh mark of your goodwill towards "Your devoted

"R. SCHUMANN."

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—There were five exercises for Doctor's degree and twenty-two for Bachelor's in the recent Cambridge musical examination. Not one of the former was successful; but nine of the latter were accepted, the authors going up for "viva voce" and written tests on Friday in last week. The candidates recommended for the degree of Bachelor of Music were H. C. Allison, J. M. Bentley, C. J. Frost, W. Lawson, G. Oakey, and E. C. Such.

MDLLE FERNANDA TEDESCA, the wonderfully promising young violinist, who was but recently in London, is going to Paris, to pursue her studies under that eminent master, M. Vieuxtemps. The highest hopes are entertained of this young lady, hopes which her already largely developed talent fully justify.

A MEMBER of the first form in a German High School lately rendered the passage: "Natis in usum lætitiæ scyphis pugnare Thracum est," from Horace, Book I., Ode 27: "To fight amid the goblets formed for pleasure is a custom of the Thracians." On being requested to give a somewhat freer and more elegant version, he coolly said: "It is the habit of the Wagnerites to pitch into each other with pint pots." That member of the first form did not share with his fellow-students the next holiday granted them by the Principal.

THE great "Master" and his still greater wife lately ascended the Capitol at Rome—we are informed by the Berlin Echo—and thence contemplated the landscape, clothed in the glowing rays of the evening sun. At last, Cosima, touched by the magnificent sight, boldly ventured to say: "Loved One, behold how splendidly the fiery solar orb darts its rays down on us!" Whereupon the Master, under the influence of sublimely presageful thoughts, rejoined, with a half-deprecating gesture: "O Wife of ecstatic bliss, the celestial spheroid darts its rays up on us!"

FRANCESCA DI RIMINI, the poetic figure immortalised by Dante, appears to exercise a more than ordinary power over composers. Leaving out of consideration the Françoise de Rimini, by M. Ambroise Thomas, with words by MM. Jules Barbier and Michel Carré, a work which will probably be the lyric event of the Paris season of 1877-78, and also passing over the opera of Hermann Goetz, which will now remain incomplete, in consequence of the composer's death, there are two other operas about to be produced on the same subject in Italy, one by Sig. Serpieri and the other by Sig. Impallomani. According to the Trovatore, a Francesca da Rimini, composer not named, was brought out in 1829, at Venice; another opera with the same title was performed at Naples, in 1831, the composer being Sig. Staffa; and a third by Fournier-Gorre was played at Leghorn, in 1832. In 1837, Sig. Borgatta produced one at Genoa; in 1841, Sig. Devasini did the same thing at Milan; and, in 1843, their example was followed by Sig. Canetti, at Vicenza. Finally, Sig. Brancaccio closes the list with a Francesca da Rimini, performed at Venice, in 1844.

AMONG the fair vocalists of the time of Swift, Bolingbroke, Gay, and Steele, there was a young girl, now known only as Clara, who attracted much attention by the sweetness and pathos with which she used to sing ballads. She was the original singer of "Black-eyed Susan," and one or two songs afterwards introduced into the Beggars' Opera. But she was more especially celebrated for having during many years been the object of Lord Bolingbroke's enthusiastic admiration. On one occasion she ran off with some person, and Bolingbroke saw nothing of her for a considerable period. It was after having met her again that he addressed her the lines beginning:—

"Dear, thoughtless Clara, to my verse attend; Believe for once the lover and the friend."

and concluding:—

"To virtue thus and to thyself restor'd,
By all admir'd, by one alone ador'd;
Be to thy Harry, dearest, kind and true,
And live for him who more than died for you."

Having entirely lost her voice, she afterwards subsisted by the sale of oranges in the Court of Requests.

HERR KERSCH, the secretary of the German Theatre in Prague, lately received a summons to make his appearance at the chief police office. He forthwith obeyed, under the impression that there was some question about a farce, or perhaps an operetta, which could not be allowed, because tending to endanger the safety of the State, or exercise a baneful influence as regards the position assumed by Austro-Hungary on the Eastern question. He is used to this sort of thing. A stern Official received him very solemnly. "You have upon your stage Misses who are really Missises," began the Official. "That is something we cannot permit any longer." The Secretary begged for an explanation of this strange and oracular utterance. "The fact is," continued the representative of authority, "I read in the bills: 'Miss' Rigol, whereas I know that this 'Miss' is a Mrs Tauber. This may lead to misunderstandings, the occasion for which must at once be abolished. Then, again, I find 'Miss' Trautmann, when there is no such person of that name in the theatre, but only the widow of Count Tattenbach, who illegally calls herself Miss Trautmann. What is the purpose of all this masquerading? I will not mention any other cases." In vain did the Secretary call attention to many popular and celebrated actresses at Vienna and elsewhere who always figured in the bills under the epithet: "Miss," though it was well known that they had long been married. In vain the police ukase, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, knew no change; and in Prague if a lady belonging to the theatre is Mrs So-and-so, she is not suffered to call herself Miss Somebody-else.

To Arthur S. Sullivan, Esq.

"IF."

(Words for Music.)

If my love had smiled on me
With shining brow and flashing e'e,
I had ta'en her to my heart—
Vow'd for aye the lover's smart;
Praised her tiny, dainty hand;
Swore t' obey her least command!
Yes! this surely had been so
If she'd smiled on me below.

(But she didn't!)

If I lov'd as men have lov'd,
Surely then my fair had prov'd
Constant, tender, 'witching, fair—
In her beauty past compare.
If I bore such fire within,
She'd be all my kith and kin;
I'd do what my heart approv'd,
If I lov'd as men have lov'd.

(But I don't!)

PHITTHILL-THE-RIG.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

Mr W. H. WEBBE, a clever pianist, gave his "second social re-union" at St George's Hall, on Thursday evening last week, assisted by several well known vocalists. A feature in the concert was the capital singing of a new choir "got up" by Mr Webbe. After the concert Mr Webbe gave a ball, and the company dispersed at an early hour in the morning, well pleased with the entertainment their hospitable host had provided for them.

On the 11th Dec. Mr George Russell gave his annual evening concert at the Public Hall, Croydon, with a programme worthy himself and the repute in which he is held. Mr Russell was assisted in the instrumental department by Mr Henry Holmes (violin) and Herr Lütgen (violinello). Beethoven's Trio in D and Mendelssohn's in C minor were performed. The latter commenced the second part, when there was no interruption through late arrivals, and, consequently, being exceedingly well played, its beauties were thoroughly appreciated. In Schumann's Toccata (first time in Croydon), and Wagner's "Spinning Chorus," arranged by Spindler, Mr Russell was at his best, giving further proof of his musicianly styles and manipulative skill. Mr Henry Holmes, in an arioso of his own and a fugue by Tartini, was much applauded, as was also Herr Lütgen whose solo was a melody by Offenbach. Miss Catherine Penna, Miss Bolingbroke, and Mr Shakespeare were the vocalists. The chaste delivery of "Dah, vieni non tardar" by Miss Penna, whose bright soprano voice and genuine musical feeling are more and more estimated, gave general satisfaction. Two songs by Rubinstein, and Mr Russell's own song, "The Swan's Melody," were sung by this charming artist no less to the unanimous approval of the audience. Miss Bolingbroke, in songs by Meyerbeer and Wallace, displayed her fine contralto to advantage. Mr Shakespeare gave two Lieder by Schubert, and was encored in "I said we'll ne'er grow old" (his own composition). Mr H. Leslie's trio, "Memory," brought the entertainment to a close. Mr R. Beringer was the accompanist.

Mr W. H. HOLMES gave the second of his interesting "Pianoforte Concerts" on Saturday, December 30, at the Langham Hall, assisted by his professional pupils (including some of his class at the Royal Academy of Music, by permission of the Principal, Professor Macfarren, Mus. Doc.), and some eminent professors. We subjoin the programme:—Trio, in B minor, Op. 19, for pianoforte, violin, and violinello—Miss Jenkins, Mr Henry Holmes, and Herr Lütgen (Ch. M. Widor); Duo, pianoforte and violinello (MS.), "Summer Holidays, 1876," (first time of performance)—Mr W. H. Holmes and Herr Lütgen (W. H. Holmes); Quartet, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violinello—Miss Edith Collins, Mr Henry Holmes, Mr Hann, and Herr Lütgen (Friedrich Kiel); Duet, for two pianofortes—Miss Baglehole and Mr W. H. Holmes (Thalberg); New Song, "Forest Violet"—Mr Frank Holmes, accompanied by the Composer (C. Vaschetti); Trio, for pianoforte, violin, and violinello—Miss M. Harper, Mr Henry Holmes, and Herr Lütgen (Reinecke); Solo, pianoforte, "Song without words" (Mendelssohn); New Transcription (introducing "God Save the Queen") of the "Galatea Waltz"—Miss Florence Saunders (composed by His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh); Song, "Donald Gray"—Mr Frank Holmes, words by F. Saunders, Esq. (W. H. Holmes); Memento (G. W. Hammond); Motivo, from Edin of the Lake; Scottish Chimes and Chimes of England—Mr W. H. Holmes (W. H. Holmes). We are informed that it is Mr W. H. Holmes's intention to introduce at these concerts the following entire works (many new to this country), performed by his professional pupils (pianoforte), assisted by eminent artists:—Quintet (with wind instruments) by Spohr (to be played by Miss Baglehole, &c.); Trio, pianoforte, clarinet, and violinello, by Mozart (Miss Banks, &c.); 2nd Grand Trio, pianoforte, violin, and violinello, by Raff (Miss Chatterton, &c.); Quartet, by Kiel (Miss Collins, &c.); Trio, pianoforte, violin, and violinello, by Ad. Blomberg (Mlle Adèle Dufote, &c.); Trio, pianoforte, violin, and violinello, by Henselt (Mr Deas, &c.); Sonata, pianoforte and violin, by W. Taubert (Miss Field, &c.); Duet, pianoforte and violin, by Dussek (Miss Fleming, &c.); Duet, pianoforte and violin, by Gade (Miss Fitch, &c.); Trio, No. 5, by Haydn (Miss Gye, &c.); Trio by Lachner, Op. 45 (Miss Constance Harper, &c.); Trio by Reinecke (Miss M. Harper, &c.); Trio by C. M. Widor (Miss Jenkins, &c.); Trio by Beethoven (Miss McKay, &c.); Trio by Edward Bache (Mr Luton, &c.); Duet, pianoforte and violinello, by Reissiger, Op. 147 (Miss Linton, &c.); Quartette by Brahms (Miss Lindsay, &c.); 2nd Grand Trio by S. Jadaschon (Miss Martin, &c.); Quartet by Rubinstein (Miss Pollon, &c.); Trio by Max Bruch, Op. 5 (Miss Thurgood, &c.); Trio by Gernsheim, Op. 8 (Miss Florence Saunders, &c.); Quartet by Rheinberger (Miss Pamphillon, &c.); and Trio by R. Volkmann, Op. 5 (Mr Puddicombe, &c.)

PROVINCIAL.

MAIDENHEAD.—At a concert given on Wednesday, Dec. 28, for the benefit of the National School Rooms, Herr Rosenthal pleased everybody by his artistic performance of two violin solos: Léonard's "Souvenir d'Haydn" and Vieuxtemps' "Rêverie." The Maidenhead Advertiser says "Herr Rosenthal's performance was indeed a real treat to lovers of instrumental music."

BATH.—On Boxing-night, Lord Byron's Sardanapalus was produced at the Theatre Royal—the principal characters by Miss Helen Cresswell, Lamartine; Messrs Arthur Davley, Cartright, Lionel Hood, and David Honeysett. The incidental "ballet" is very effective, the chorus good, and the dresses and scenery are new and costly. The attendance, up to the present, has been good, and the management may be congratulated on having secured a great and legitimate success. S. W. J.

LIVERPOOL.—The Carl Rosa opera company, at the Amphitheatre, are meeting with deserved success. The Daily Post, in its notice of the Sonnambula, speaks highly of Mlle Ida Corani's Amina, in which part she made her début in Liverpool. The charming young vocalist did full justice to Bellini's heroine, and sang the music, especially the finale to the last act with finish and brilliancy. Mlle Corani was rewarded throughout her performance by enthusiastic applause. Mr J. W. Turner (Elvino) was called upon to repeat "Still so gently." The part of the Count was thoroughly well suited to Mr Celli. The entire performance gave satisfaction.

CHELTEMHAM.—Miss Bertha Griffiths, and Mr Ricardo Linter's second concert in the Assembly Room, in aid of the funds of the Fever Hospital, was almost as numerous, and quite as fashionably attended as the first on the previous evening, and proved as brilliant a success. Miss Bertha Griffiths sang "The Lord is Risen" in the first part of the programme, and "Quando a te lieta" in the second. Mr Ricardo Linter and Mr Holst played Moscheles' "Homage to Handel" on two pianofortes, with great effect. Mr Cummings sang "Waft her, Angels" and Ricardo Linter's "Bonnie wee Flowers" (encored). Mr Ricardo Linter's performance of a pianoforte solo, says The Looker-on, was a masterpiece of artistic execution; and the violinello performances of Mad. de Katow elicited enthusiastic applause. Such brilliant execution on the violinello by a lady had certainly never before been listened to in Cheltenham. The financial results of the two concerts corresponded with their musical success; the sum to be handed over to the funds of the charity for which they were undertaken being between seventy and eighty pounds.

NOTTINGHAM.—Mr Wm. Pyatt gave The Messiah at the new Albert Hall on Tuesday evening, Dec. 26, and there was another oratorio by a local society in the Mechanics' Hall. Nothing could show—says the Nottingham Journal—with greater force the rapid growth the town and neighbourhood is making in those arts of a more refined character than the existence of two such choruses as were gathered together yesterday. Unquestionably the most singular feature of Mr Pyatt's concert was the chorus, a body independent of any society, yet containing the foundations of a brilliant and effective association. The performance was in every way worthy Mr Pyatt's management, and the crowded hall testified to the public appreciation. Mr Pyatt has helped to "educate" his public, and they are grateful, and support him accordingly. Mad. Patey, Miss Edith Wynne, Signor Foli, and Mr E. Lloyd were the solo vocalists. The band was complete. Mr Val Nicholson officiated as leader, and among the instrumentalists were two or three ladies (violinists), including Mad. Brouail. Mr George Essex played the organ accompaniments with his usual ability.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Egbaston Amateur Musical Union gave their twenty-seventh concert at the Masonic Hall, on December 20th, under the conductorship of Mr C. J. Duchemin. There was a large and appreciative audience—says the Daily Gazette—and the performances generally were received with marks of approbation, and reflected credit upon the society's clever chief. The most important piece in the programme was a symphony in C major, by Mozart, never before played in Birmingham. It was the best performance of an orchestral work which the Union has yet given. The other orchestral pieces were the Andante in F (from Beethoven's first symphony), the overtures to Guillaume Tell and Les Diamans de la Couronne. The vocalists were Messrs W. E. Fisher and Ryder; the pianist was Mde Michelson, who played Weber's Concertstück and Raff's "Polka de la Reine." Mde Michelson possesses much mechanical power, and plays with intelligence. The steady improvement observable in the performances of the members of the Amateur Musical Union during the last few years shows that their labours are carried on with earnestness.

ANTWERP.—Le Pompon has been performed here,

THE LATE GEORGE MACFARREN.

MY DEAR EDITOR AND OLD FRIEND,—You ask me to write of my father, and my pride in the subject is equal to my diffidence of ability to treat it. Truly the space before me and the time to fill it are insufficient for justice to the memory of him to whom I owe, not life alone, but impetus to art, and the first and best guidance in its pursuit. Yet, however briefly, those who knew him may be pleased to be reminded of himself and his doings; those who knew him not may still accept some words of reverence and love for one not without influence beyond his immediate circle. From 1788 to 1843 his life was of almost ceaseless activity. In early childhood he showed a talent for versification, to which a far higher definition would not be misapplied; and some stanzas, dated on his thirteenth birthday, evince depth of thought and power of words betokening ripe years. While a schoolboy he wrote a tragedy, which was acted by his mates, with the assistance of young Edmund Kean, then known by the name of Carey, with the sanction of the afterwards famous actor, Liston, usher at that time in Archbishop Tennyson's school—the scene of the performance. My father played on bowed instruments so well as to sustain either of the parts in a violin quartet. He had some facility on the pianoforte, on which, and on the fiddle, he was my first instructor. Would he had had an apter pupil! He composed songs of merit, and many country-dance tunes that had great popularity. One of the latter, which may now sometimes be heard on street organs—"Off she goes"—has been claimed as a national Irish melody; and this says more for the merit of the tune than the acumen of the editor. Music would have been his profession had he not met with a fashionable teacher of dancing—Bishop by name—who offered to make him a "gentleman instead of a fiddler," and, accordingly, took him as an apprentice. Here was a disparity between name and nature, the calling and the called; and, I earnestly believe, here was a consequent loss to music. Quick in conception and sanguine in enterprise, he promptly formed the plan of a work or of an action, and eagerly pursued it. So, when eighteen, he quitted his parental home, rented a spacious room, and opened a school for dancing. The theatre was the natural home of his diverse talent and the chief arena of his varied exercise. His first public dramatic production was almost extemporised, and acted for the benefit of his then intimate friend, Harley in 1818, at the English Opera House. Many of his other pieces were also written at a sitting, of which perhaps the most remarkable instance was the Emblematical Tribute on the occasion of the Queen's marriage. He suggested the first idea of this to the management of Drury Lane Theatre on the Thursday night previous to the ceremony. The idea was applauded, but its accomplishment pronounced impossible. The pronunciation was confuted; for, by a strong power of magnetism, he infused his own ardour into every functionary of the establishment. The book was written, the music composed, the scenes were painted, the dresses stitched, the whole was rehearsed, and the masque presented to the public at the free performance on the royal wedding night, the Monday next following the primary conception. Then, as ever, the word impossible had no meaning for him; and, to all with whom he worked, his example made "will" and "can" identical. Those only may be named here among his dramatic pieces which made the strongest mark at the moment. The Horatii and Curiatii was written for the appearance at the Coburg Theatre—then (how times have changed!) a place of high esteem and elegant resort—of Booth, who had been a rival of Kean, and was the father of the future presidenticide. Sir Peter Pry, which had great success at the same theatre, has been accredited as the foundation of a more popular comedy, whose inquisitive hero is named after another apostle. If the Cap fit ye, wear it, had also good fortune, being acted throughout the country under the name of The Student, and reproduced at the Haymarket as Latin, Love, and War. Edward the Black Prince, and, soon afterwards, Guy Fawkes, were talks of the town and are still theatrical celebrities. Winning a Husband, a protean piece, was written for the favourite actress, Mrs W. Barrymore, and has had hundreds of representations by her and by others. My father's first acknowledged essay—he had contributed scenes or songs to many pieces by other authors—on the classic boards of Drury, was the ballad opera of Malvina, the merit of which raised it into an importance far above what was intended in the original commission. Then he wrote Oberon, which helped to familiarise the town with the incidents of Wieland's poem, the ground work of the opera by Weber, at that time in preparation at Covent Garden; and the task was undertaken within a month of the first representation. His version of Gil Blas, or rather of the first adventures of Le Sage's hero, long outlived its Drury Lane production. Elliston had acquired great confidence in my father's power during the last year of his Drury Lane experience, and, on abdicating the sovereignty which had been held by Garrick and Sheridan, sought his aid in his new enterprise at the Surrey. The facile author being prostrated by a premonition of the malady to which he succumbed sixteen years later, the veteran new manager was brought to his bed-side. "I open this day fortnight," said Elliston, "and must have a piece from you;" the piece was written and acted. The most notable of his productions at the Surrey was the March of Intellect, a protean piece for the display of the versatile talent of little Burke, the child prodigy who acted, and sang, and danced, and played on the violin, and spoke Irish with a "brogue so rich that you might cut it with a knife." I must hurry on to the works wherein I myself had the priceless advantage of his co-operation. There are three operas that have never seen the light, one of them having been accepted at three several theatres, all of which closed in bankruptcy before the intended representation. These, with his prompting of what to think, write, and avoid, made me an apprenticeship of which I, and none but I, can feel the inestimable value. There was the Devil's Opera, another case of warfare against time, waged in the bright glowing season of the Queen's Coronation, when my father used to work on his libretto till the first peep of those inspiring summer mornings, and then awaken the composer to travail on the music in the still hours before heat came into the day, bustle into the streets, and out-door occupation into the writer's necessities. Lastly, there was Don Quixote, of which but a portion of the music came to his knowledge. This was designed for several different productions, its cast of characters changed for every such purposed occasion, and its composition only completed nearly three years after his death, when it was really to be represented. It is now time to speak of his management of the theatre in Tottenham Street, to which, in honour of King William's consort, he gave the name of the Queen's Theatre. There he ruled from February, 1831, till June, 1832—or would have ruled, had not the despot, Fortune, governed him, distorted his designs, and frustrated his principles and plans. He began with Handel's Acis and Galatea, to which Cipriani Potter wrote additional orchestration for him, and its performance was indeed an event in musical London. "The legitimate drama," a term now of the past, was then unallowed in any but the "patent theatres," and thus the performances at the Queen's were restricted to plays written for the purpose. In the production of these, regard was first given to the naturalness of the scene, in respect to stage arrangements, grouping of persons and objects, furniture and other accessories, all, in fact, distinguishes the theatrical presentations of nowadays from the conventionalism of elder times, when a green baize covered the front of the stage, as if to put it in mourning, during tragedies, and when the most sumptuously decorated chamber had but as many chairs as the dramatic action demanded to be sat upon. Once, for the rising of the mist, the artifice of slaked lime, which of late has been re-appropriated with world renown, was employed with magical effect. Elliston, one of the latest representatives of the drama's so-called "palmy days," and himself at the time a rival manager, declared that such perfect pictures as he saw at the Queen's had never been put upon the stage. My father's aptitude for painting, of which some specimens are extant, doubtless helped him to conceive and to put in practice these effects. His musicianship materially enhanced his literary skill in the writing of words to music, one of the hardest tasks of authorship, one in which success is rare as it is difficult, and one in which he was almost singularly happy—witness the poem to Henry Smart's beautiful song of "Estelle," and some of those, such as "A Legend of the Avon," to some of the first of W. Chappell's reuscutations of Old English Ditties. The latest thing that occupied my father was the editorship of The Musical World journal, and you know who, at his death, succeeded him. You remember the kindly and encouraging feeling that characterised his administration, how he always sought for merit and did his utmost to bring it to the front, how he would screen defect, and how ill-will was in him an incapacity. You remember his keen perception of the beautiful, and the charming English in which this was set forth. His sunny temper was vexed by many a trouble, but never wholly darkened; and it had the power of light as well as warmth on all who came within its radiance, to draw out their brightest colours, as well as to nourish their minds and hearts. Such was George Macfarren.

G. A. M.

[We remember all this—and more. George Macfarren was one of those born to govern men, not by harsh despotism, but by courtesy and kindness. Even when, as it might happen at times, you were not entirely of his opinion, you generally found him right at the end. And then, his reasons were urged with a gentleness which more than his logical acumen and knowledge of human nature—both remarkable—went far to convince you even when most perverse and self-willed. We were all young then, and trust we are wiser now. It is only when our elders are gone that we are willing to confess how much we owe to them.—J. W. D.]

A PROFESSIONAL CAREER.*

"Ambition should be made of sterner stuff."—Shakspeare.

"How charming! How favourably you appear, sir, in these interesting operatic characters!" exclaimed the inquisitive young surgeon examining a row of photographs in which his host was discovered in the glories of dramatic costume; in the picturesque garb of the Count di Luna; the gorgeous dress of Lucrezia's tyrannical lord; the gaelic plaid worn by Lucia's wicked brother, and in the ponderous uniform of the heavy father of the Bohemian Girl. "So, so! you have smelt the footlights, and have been a devotee to the lyric drama—the frailest maiden—shall I say so, sir, of the art family!"

"They are souvenirs of the past, and painful reminders of youthful folly," replied Pipewell, wishing to evade the subject. But the curiosity of the surgeon was not so to be appeased. Everything connected with the stage had, for him, a strange fascination. To gain access to a "green room" was, he thought, to enter a paradise; and to hold sweet converse with a prima-donna the most enchanting of delights. Before him was seated one who had entered the charmed circle, and he resolved, therefore, to know which way he had taken to gain it. To accomplish this he spoke with earnestness and enthusiasm of the operatic art and its professors; of their genius, beauty, culture, and fascination; of their healthy, delightful, and lucrative occupation, their elevated social position, and the influences they exercised on society. "Surely, sir," he concluded, "you have partaken of these favours, for, if pictures speak truly, these photographs tell me you have revelled in success."

"They are false witnesses if they do," answered Pipewell. "I keep them as relics of failure and ruin; and place them before me for the same purpose as the ancients did skulls, to teach humility. They are the only things left me for years of toil, but they will not prove altogether valueless if they constantly impart to me a consciousness of the limits of my resources."

"I beg pardon," interrupted the young surgeon; "I find I have probed an old wound. Pray let it close again."

"I have suffered," said Pipewell, "but the anguish, I assure you, is passed. To have any little cancer of vanity cut out in private is painful; but to be publicly burned, decked in all the robes of pride, is martyrdom. I will tell you how it came to pass. I was vain enough to think I could extort admiration from the public; I proved only fit for jeers."

"I find, sir," broke in the young man, "you suffer from self-depreciation, an irritable sore very difficult to heal. Surely you must have stumbled on an unsympathetic public or a set of venomous critics."

"No, no!" continued Pipewell. "The truth is I miscalculated my powers. Music, from my earliest childhood, has held a wondrous spell over me. The drone of the lullaby sending me to sleep had charms other than soothing; feeble as it may have been, it was linked to the harmonies that now thrill me, and perhaps will be found united to, or absorbed in, those sublimer strains I hope to hear in heaven. In whatever form music may be expressed, or whatever may be the mode of its utterance, whether in the rustic ballad or mighty symphony, in the simple hymn or sublime oratorio, if the spark divine be present, my nature is moved within me, and my soul responds with joy to the glorious themes. That I have a musical nature cannot be doubted, but where I erred was in mistaking love for capacity and appreciation for power. I was merely a receptacle, and not a medium. I could feel acutely, yet was without the gift of making others feel. The floods of sweet sounds that fell upon me were absorbed; no grateful exhalations were returned. Musically, I was barren."

"Creative genius," said the young doctor, "I apprehend will be always rare. It cannot, in the Darwinian sense, be evolved, but must come direct and perfected from the great Creator. On the other hand, executive talent is never very rare; and I cannot but think you underrate your powers when you deny the possession of this capacity or acquirement."

"You share the opinion my friends held," said Pipewell, "they fancied I had a priceless treasure in my voice. In truth possessed some powerful notes, for which I was held in great request. Invitations to private concerts were numerous, and most evenings I left my office for assemblies, where music was sacrificed on the altar of vanity. Eventually I became a sort of high priest at those rites. Lady Di Vroth, who took the lead in our sphere of fashion, had by far the most splendid temple, where art paid its idolatrous homage to the god yclept 'Shoddy.' The lady was really good and generous, and took great and kind notice of my vocal efforts. She would often say, 'you sang that morceau delightfully, Mr. Pipewell; you should study in Italy, and soon you would have no peer upon the Italian stage; now Ronconi is failing, I know no one but you able to succeed him.' At first I took those flatteries only as well-meaning compliments, but gradually came to consider perhaps there was something in them. To confirm her opinion she sought the advice of Mr. Supple, her friend and musical prime minister, a gentleman held to be the highest authority on those matters in the country. She gave a little dinner at which the great man and myself were invited. The question as to my ability was most delicately and charmingly put by the lady to the oracle, who, after hearing me sing, declared most emphatically I had untold treasures in my throat. In saying these acceptable words he smiled again and again, thereby advertising his dentist from ear to ear; at the same time he kept soothing and caressing the back of his left hand as if it were as velvety as the paw of a leopard, whereas the sinewy cords and knots of old age were painfully visible. Those will-o'-the-wisps led me through many a miry swamp, and in the end plunged me, soiled and torn, in the slough of despond. I left my desk, where I had little to do and less to think of, for the merciless solfeggi. I started for Italy, took up my quarters in Milan, and engaged the best masters obtainable to superintend my labours on that weary treadmill, the scale, with its do, re, mi, fa. My first master, Signor Squerini, was above all things a candid man. My voice, once good, he said, was all but ruined by a bad method. I told him it was just as nature made it, when he loftily declared that nature, very well in its way, could not produce a singer; method, such as taught by him alone, could create an artist. His vaunted method consisted in little else than abuse. He abused everybody and everything—nature, composers, masters, pupils, authors, audiences, artists, and critics. One person alone he praised—himself. Every morning he placed me against the wall of his room, and commanded me to smile and shout. 'Smile, smile, will you?' he would say; 'louder, louder that note!' My throat soon became sore and my voice hoarse. My health gave way, and temper too, so I left him, to be abused as the stupidest and most ungrateful of pupils. My next master, Sig. Sapone, proved the reverse. He used oil instead of vinegar, and soaped well the steps of the solfeggi treadmill. It was not so unpleasant, perhaps, but I slipped down the scale as fast as I climbed up. After wasting time, money, and labour, I left him also, not one step advanced in the vocal art. Oil and vinegar both were useless."

* From Lavender Pipewell, Musical Amateur. By Pencerid Gwffyn.

"I am surprised to hear," exclaimed the doctor, "that Milan is so poor in singing masters. I thought it was the vocalist's headquarters, and was to young singers what our hospitals are to medical students. It has always been regarded by me as a place where vocal music is most assiduously practised, where the art is rendered most captivating, and life generally found thoroughly enjoyable."

"Life in Milan is most assuredly pleasant to the student," replied Pipewell. "Youth, fortunately, cares little for comforts—commodities scarce in Milanese lodgings. Café life is easily contracted, some knowledge of the Italian language can be gained in spite of the patois, and a taste for Bohemianism readily cultivated. What a charm there is in perfect freedom, when no restraint is felt, except that which lack of cash produces! In past years Italy was, as you say, the land of song and the dwelling-place of the muse; but the art is now more comprehensively represented in London during the season than in any Italian city, nay, than in all the cities and towns of Italy put together. The decay of the vocal art has followed the decline of the Rossinian opera. The prevailing style of the lyric drama requires force and little else. Violence is the chief characteristic—violence of story and plot, gesture and action, voice and register; and where violence is paramount, art in its true proportions cannot exist."

(To be continued.)

To the Musical World, 1877.

O World, of this our world the true reflex!
Where all find much to please, and more to vex,
Be it Wagnerian, waggish, waspish spite
Or rage, an angel might be pleased to write.

A record of all musical concerns,
Showing by smoke the sacred fire still burns;
Go on and prosper, till thy moons be full;
Be wise, be witty, anything but dull.

Pictorial art add to thy varied charms,
To set at rest competitive alarms;
Think of the great Beethoven's joyous choice,
And take for choir the genial public voice.

Jericho.

WILLBEN BENWELL.

The Egyptian Shepherd's Pipe.

The most ancient musical instruments in the world which preserve their original notes are the pipes which were deposited in the tombs of ancient Egypt about the times at which the pyramids were built. Given the length of the pipe and the distances of the holes, we can copy and reproduce the same sounds. But there is another interesting feature bound up with this deposit of musical pipes by the side of the dead. It is one of Egyptian mythology. The commonly received opinion of the doctrine of the transmigration of souls is that the dead man became either a bird or a beast, to be treated as he had deserved during life; to be thrashed like a donkey (and the pictures of heavy sticks in the hands of Egyptian donkey-drivers show how the animals were punished), or to soar aloft like a lark, without much danger from Egyptian bows and arrows. But the pipes deposited in the tombs had a fresh straw of full length laid beside each of them. The pipes are made of reed, and they were played upon by bits of straw. The straw was cut partly through to perhaps a fourth of its diameter, and then, by turning the blade of the knife flat, and passing it upwards towards the mouth end, they raised a strip of perhaps an inch in length, to serve as a reed to excite the tone of the pipe. This is precisely what boys do now, and what shepherds did in former ages. But why lay a clean straw of full length beside the pipe? It cannot have been for the use of lark or donkey, but is clearly in contemplation of the dead man resuming the human form. In some cases these extra straws have been preserved, as in the Salt collection at the British Museum, and in the Museum at Leyden. But generally they were thought too unimportant to be retained. And yet what curious mythological conclusions may thus be drawn from them! Some of the straw-reeds which the ancients had used in playing upon these pipes are still found within them, as in one of the pipes in the Museum at Turin and one in the British Museum.

Having now clear proof of the antiquity of the shepherds' pipes, a question which is of greater interest to musicians is: "What kind of music did the Egyptians play upon them? Was it Gregorian?"—for the president of the Gregorian Association had an inspiration that God spoke to Moses in Gregorian tones. Oh no! that series of musical blunders had its origin in the seventh century. The early Christians used Greek music, a minor scale with a minor seventh—our A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and its transpositions. But they used also a pentaphonic, or Scotch scale, both major and minor, which had neither a fourth nor a seventh in it. The major was the Greek chromatic, and the minor their enharmonic scale, which did not require a change of bass, and was therefore suitable for simple melodies without accompaniment. Curiously enough, one of those very ancient Egyptian pipes is upon the pentaphonic major, or Scotch scale, and it is of the exact pitch of the black keys upon a modern Alexandre harmonium—F sharp, G sharp, A sharp, C sharp, and D sharp. Had the Egyptians a Scottish ancestor who taught them this scale? Perhaps one of our Northern friends can enlighten us upon that point. The pipes have so few holes that no one of them has a complete octave, but one pipe runs up six notes of the major scale of E. It wants D sharp and E to complete the octave:

Stratford Lodge, Otlands Park, Surrey.

W. Chappell.

AN EXHORTATION. (?)

Advertise, advertise,
All you who would rise,
And become all the rage
In the musical page.
Good tenors so rare,
Sopranos so fair,
With sweet pretty faces;
Contraltos and basses;
Or how shall we know

When the French horn you blow,
Or fiddle is played,
By man or by maid?—
Quartet and septet
(Lazarus' clarinet)?—
Or even the big drum,
Which may, can, or should come?
Give, therefore, the cue
To the M. Double-u.

WILLBEN.

Bayreuth—opposite Wagner's Theatre.

WAIIFS.

Mad. Clara Schumann is engaged on a German tour.

Señor Sarasate has returned to Paris. He will shortly resume his tour through Austria and Germany.

Mdlle Albani will make her first appearance this evening at the Italian Opera, Paris, in the opera of Lucia.

M. Emile J. B. Bailliére, the music publisher, has been elected a member of the Chamber of Commerce, in Paris.

Tchaikowski, the Russian composer, will visit Paris this winter for the purpose of having some of his works performed there.

Miss Catherine Penna has been singing the principal soprano music in The Messiah, Elijah, Creation, &c., at Liverpool, York, Northampton, and other provincial towns with unvarying success.

On his road to Marseilles and Italy, M. J. Diaz de Soria, yielding to the solicitations of the Cercle des Beaux-Arts, of which he is an honorary member, sang at the club-house. He was supported by Mdlle Marimon and M. Albert Lavignac.

M. Gounod, after spending three weeks at Cannes, where he finished the composition of his new work, Cinq Mars, destined for the Opéra-Comique, has been stopping in Paris. He has still to score his work; for this purpose he will shortly return to the south of France. The principal female part, Marie de Gonzague, in the new opera is intended for Mad. Brunet-Lafleur.

A Leaf-Turner, that is, a machine for turning over the leaves of music by a movement of the performer's foot has been invented by Herr F. Sohl, telegraphic instrument-maker, Berlin. It can be fitted to music-stands as well as to pianos.

A private School of Music, Scuola Privata di Musica, has lately been established in Milan by Signor Giovanni Pontoglio. The programme includes instruction in every part of the art, from its first elements to the study of its abstruse principles.

Messrs Rudall Carte & Co. have issued their two annual publications, "The Musical Directory" and "The Professional Pocket Book." Both contain valuable information to all connected with music directly and indirectly, we therefore strongly recommend them to the attention of our readers.

The prize offered by the Imperial Musical Society of Russia for the best chamber composition has been awarded to M. Naprawnik, conductor at the Russian Operahouse, for a Pianoforte Trio. Honourable mention has been made of MM. Rimskikorsakoff and Afanassieff, each of whom had sent in a stringed quartet.

During a recent performance of Der Widerspenstigen Zähmung at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, Mad. Pauline Lucca was observed in the Intendant's box, engaged in conversation with Herr von Hülsen. So emphatic was she in her tones and gestures that she attracted general attention. She has since left for Moscow.

The French Government will supply the marble for the monument to be erected in memory of Félicien David. The Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, M. Waddington, has, moreover, contributed, in his private capacity, to the subscription started by La Liberté. The sum already amounts to 15,000 francs.

Herr Niemann has just been photographed as Siegmund, the character sustained by him in the Ring des Nibelungen. He did so at the particular request of the King of Bavaria, having previously steadily refused to follow the example set in this respect by all the other vocalists engaged in the Bayreuth performances.

The Italian papers announce the death, at Genoa, of the Nestor of Italian orchestral conductors, Giovanni Serra, Angelo Mariani's predecessor as maestro concertatore, at the Teatro Carlo, Felice. According to them, he was ninety-four at the time of his death, but, if Fétis is to be trusted, he was not more than eighty-nine.

It appears probable that a composition by Alfred Holmes, who died in Paris, last March, will be performed by the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire, on the occasion of the Lord Mayor's approaching visit to the French capital. M. Waddington, Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, has been in communication with the Society on the subject.

Mdme Sinico-Campobello, has declined the engagement offered to her for La Scala, at Milan. She leaves London on the 8th inst. for a tour in the provinces, accompanied by Mdme Rose Hérée, Mdme Demeric Lablache, Mr Wilford Morgan, and Signor Campobello. Signor Norrito (a clarinet player of repute in Italy) and Signor Romano (conductor) also join the party.

On Christmas Eve, a late special service was held in Chester Cathedral, when a part of The Messiah, which has not been heard in that church for nearly half a century, was given in an impressive manner. Nearly 5,000 persons were present. The service was intoned by the Rev. E. L. Y. Deacle, the singers (about 150 in number) were under the direction of Mr Cuzner (choirmaster), and Mr F. Gunton presided at the organ. A sermon was preached by the Dean of Chester.

"LES DANICHEFF."—Lord Newry's English version of this celebrated drama, which is attributed by some to a Russian gentleman named Kurukovski, by others to M. Alexandre Dumas, while the playbills of the Odéon assign it to an imaginary personage named "Pierre Nevski," is to be produced at the St James's Theatre with the following cast:—Countess Danicheff, Mrs John Wood; Count Vladimir Danicheff, Mr C. Warner; Osip, Mr Clayton; Anna, Miss Lydia Foote; Princess Lydia, Miss Caroline Hill; and Roger de Talde, Mr Herman Vezin.

The Sacred Harmonic Society's forty-fifth annual Christmas performance of the Messiah took place on the 22nd ult. Sir Michael Costa conducted. The vocalists were Mmes Nouver and Enriquez, Messrs Lloyd and Fox. It being Mdme Enriquez's début at Exeter Hall, in Handel's oratorio, we subjoin what Public Opinion says of the young vocalist:—"A special feature to notice was the singing of Mdme Enriquez, to whom the contralto music was entrusted. This young and conscientious artist's deep voice of bell-like purity, her clear enunciation, and perfect execution, combined to make this performance, so far as her part of it was concerned, one of the finest that has been given of late years in this hall, where so many vocalists have won their triumphs.

The principal character in M. Camille Saint-Saëns' Timbre d'Argent, now in rehearsal at the Théâtre-Lyrique, will be sustained not by M. Eyraud, as at first intended, but by M. Blum, who was a member of the company when the Lyrique was in the Place du Châtelet. La Poupée de Nuremberg will be produced very shortly.

M. Davioud, one of the architects of the International Exhibition, has announced his intention of delivering before the Society of Composers a lecture, in which he will explain the idea, due to himself and M. Bourdais, of a theatre to form part of the Exhibition building, and capable of accommodating seven thousand spectators.

The funeral service for Tamburini was celebrated with great pomp at the Madeleine, Paris. The entire church was hung with black cloth, ornamented with silver palms, and shields with the initials of the Deceased. In the middle of the nave towered an immense catafalque, surrounded by wax-tapers and lampadaries. The musical part of the ceremony was unusually fine. After the organ had played the funeral march from La Gazza Ladra, and the bass air from the Stabat, in which Tamburini used to be especially good, it gave a "Kyrie" by Handel; a "Pie Jesu," by Alary; another, by Niedermeyer; a "Sanctus," by Th. Dubois; and a "Libera," by the same composer. The solos were sung by MM. Miguel and Lauwers; the choir and orchestra were under the direction of M. Th. Dubois, chapelmaster of the Madeleine. At the conclusion of the service, M. C. Saint-Saëns performed Chopin's "Funeral March" upon the organ. Among the persons present were General Cialdini, Italian ambassador; all the Lablache family; Strauss, and a fine looking man with a full patriarchal white beard. The last-named person was no other than the Duke of Candia, more famous as Sig. Mario, the former colleague of Tamburini. A funeral car drawn by four horses afterwards conveyed the body to Montretout, where it was finally deposited in a family vault.

DRESDEN.—Verdi's Aida has been performed at the Royal Operahouse.

MARSEILLES.—Kosiki has met with a favourable reception at the Théâtre des Bouffes.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Miss Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 56, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 873 and 1423. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grief, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.—All the new and beautiful Songs, Ballads, &c., sung by this distinguished company of Vocalists are now published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess, from whom they may be obtained by the Music-trade and the public. Permission to sing any of the Songs contained in Messrs Moore and Burgess's repertoire is always freely accorded on application to the Manager. It is not necessary to obtain a licence to sing these songs at private meetings and soirées.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SONGS and BALLADS of the day are those sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS at ST JAMES'S HALL. The words of all these songs are written by the most eminent authors, and the music composed by the most celebrated musicians of the age, including Henry S. Leigh, E. L. Blanchard, Frank Vizetelly, Charles Dunphie, J. E. Thomas, W. Meyer Lutz, John Hobson, &c.

MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.
The following new and charming Songs and Ballads are just published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess:—

Riding in a Pullman car.
Alone.
Come where the tangled beeches grow.
My Darling's Last Smile.
Sad sounds the harp now.
Friendship, Love, and Wine.
Let each speak of the world as he finds it.
Sing me the songs that I loved long ago.
The Piquet.

The Wild, White Rose.
A boatman's life for me.
My Lily.
Sing, dearest, sing.
Many weary years ago.
Return of the Exile.
Glory of the Grave.
The Alpine Hunter.
Heavenly Voices.
Gentle Flowers.
The Buckles on her Shoes.
The Flight of the Birds.

May be ordered through any Music-seller, or obtained direct from the Publishers, St James's Hall, post free, One and Sixpence.

Post free, One and Sixpence.

SING ME THE SONGS THAT I LOVED LONG AGO.
Composed by W. MEYER LUTZ. One of the most beautiful and tuneful Ballads introduced by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS for some time past. Now being sung with immense success at ST JAMES'S HALL. Can be ordered through any Music-seller; or obtained from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FLIGHT OF THE BIRDS.—An entirely new and charming Ballad. Words written by HENRY S. LEIGH, Esq. Suitable for Alto, Tenor, or Soprano voices. Now being sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS, at ST JAMES'S HALL, with extraordinary success. Can be ordered of all Music-sellers; or obtained direct from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FOLLOWING NEW and BEAUTIFUL SONGS are being sung at ST JAMES'S HALL with marked success:—"Sing me the songs that I loved long ago," "The Flight of the Birds," "The Piquet," and "Sing, dearest, sing." The greatest successes ever achieved by the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. Can be ordered through all Music-sellers; and of the Publishers, Messrs Moore and Burgess, St James's Hall. Post free, 1s. 6d.

THE PIANIST'S ROYAL ROAD. KUHE. The most complete Course of Study and perfect collection of high-class Pianoforte Music yet presented to the public. Each Book, containing not less than 16 Pages, Full size, from Engraved Plates, is Edited, Fingered, and has remarks on the contents and their performance, by KUHE. Price 1s. Post free. Prospectus on application. CUNNINGHAM BOOSEY & Co., 2, Little Argyl Street, Regent Street, W.

MISS MARIA XIMENA HAYES, in reply to numerous letters of inquiry, begs to announce that her literary and musical avocations only permit of her receiving a very limited number of Pupils (Ladies) who may wish to study Singing. Her Lessons are in accordance with the purest Italian method acquired by her in Italy. For prospectuses and terms apply, by letter, at first, to Miss HAYES, 20, Edwards Square, Kensington, W.

LANSDOWNE COTTELL'S COMPOSITIONS.

MESSRS MOUTRIE & SON have the pleasure of announcing arrangements with Mr COTTELL, enabling them to publish a New Composition, Monthly (Vocal or Instrumental). The success of his new "Wedding March" has encouraged them in requesting Mr COTTELL to arrange it as a Pianoforte Duet. They anticipate a greater demand than ever for his last Compositions. Pianoforte and Music Saloons, 55, Baker Street, W. Catalogues post free.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL"

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 6s., post-free.

No. 8, ST ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

LONSDALE'S CHOIR CLASS BOOK. 8vo.

- | | |
|--|-----|
| No. 1. BISHOP'S "NOTOCARAN CAMPANAS" | 4d. |
| " 2. " "ALLA TRINITA BEATA" | 1d. |
| " 3. GAUNTLETT'S "HYMN OF THE CRUSADEERS" | 2d. |
| " 4. VIARESI'S "AH! GENTLE FAIR" | 1d. |
| " 5. CALLCOTT'S "GOD SAVE THE QUEEN" (in G) | 4d. |
| " 6. LODER'S "ALDIBIRONTIPHOSIOPHORNO" | 1d. |

C. LONSDALE,

MUSICAL CIRCULATING LIBRARY,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Dedicated to the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music.

SIX STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

BY

IGNACE GIBSONE.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-------------------------------|
| No. 1. "THE SWALLOW." | No. 4. "WHITHER SHALL I FLY?" |
| " 2. "THE FOUNTAIN." | " 5. "ROCKED TO SLEEP." |
| " 3. "SPINNLED." | " 6. "THE RESTLESS SEA." |

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

"VOLE MON OISEAU."

PENSÉE FUGITIVE POUR PIANO.

Par IGNACE GIBSONE.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

ROBERT COCKS & CO'S NEW MUSIC.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' NEW COMPOSITIONS for the PIANOFORTE. Post-free, at half-price, in stamps.

- | | |
|--------------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| Titania. Valse de Concert. 4s. | God Bless the Prince of Wales. 4s. |
| The Child's Dream. 3s. | Duet, 4s. |
| Sevilla. Morceau de Salon. 3s. | Albert Edward March. 3s. Duet, 4s. |
| Let the Hills Resound. 4s. Duet, 4s. | |

THE LAND OF LOVE. New Song. Written by the Rev. E. DUDLEY JACKSON. Music by CROO PINSTUTI. 3s. "Very sweet and impressive."—Liverpool Journal. "The melody is one which lingers on the ear."—Norwich Mercury. "Charming music."—Orchestra.

AT EVENING TIME. By FRANZ ABT. "This song will become as great a favourite as are most of the airs of this very prolific composer. The words convey a touching reminiscence of girlhood's happy hours."—Edinburgh Courant. 3s.

MY LADDIE FAR AWAY. By Miss LINDSAY. "Is an exceedingly pathetic Scotch song, in the lovely key of E flat, for a contralto; also in G, soprano. Miss Saxby's verses feelingly describe a mother's love for her soldier boy."—Edinburgh Courant. 4s. each.

LOVE NEVER DIES. By A. SCOTT GATTY. "Is a simple, catching melody for a contralto voice. The final cadence lingers on the ear long after the strain has ceased to be heard."—Edinburgh Courant. 4s. Mr Maybrick has selected this song for his coming concert. London: ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street, and of all Booksellers. N.B.—All post-free at half-price.

Just Published, in 8vo, price 6s.

MUSICAL INTERVALS and TEMPERAMENT: An Elementary Treatise. With an Account of an Enharmonic Harmonium exhibited in the Loan Collection of Scientific Instruments, South Kensington, 1876; also of an Enharmonic Organ exhibited to the Musical Association of London, May, 1876. By R. H. M. BOEQUET, Fellow of St John's College, Oxford. London: MACMILLAN & Co.

WORKS BY SIR F. A. GORE OUSELEY, BART., MUS. DOG.,

PROFESSOR OF MUSIC IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

HARMONY. Second Edition., 4to., 10s.

COUNTERPOINT, CANON, and FUGUE, based upon that of CHERUBINI. 4to., 16s.

FORM IN MUSIC and GENERAL COMPOSITION. 4to., 12s.

"This book supplies a want long felt both by teachers and students. We heartily recommend it as the best text-book in our language on the subject of which it treats."—Academy.

A MUSIC PRIMER for SCHOOLS. By J. TROUBECK, M.A., Music Master in Westminster School, and R. F. DALE, M.A., Mus. Bac., Assistant Master in Westminster School. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d. Oxford: Printed at the CLarendon Press, and published by MACMILLAN & Co., London, publishers to the University.

NEW SONG, WITH CHORUS,

THE CLANSMEN'S SONG. Words and Music by Wm. HENDERSON. Sung with great success by Mr DAVID KENNEDY and Chorus. Price 3s. London: WEEKES & Co., 16, Hanover Street, W.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIECES.

“CHANT DE BERCEAU.”

PLAYED BY THE COMPOSER AT HIS LAST RECITAL WITH GREAT SUCCESS.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

“HOME, SWEET HOME.”

PLAYED BY THE COMPOSER AT HIS LAST RECITAL WITH GREAT SUCCESS.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

“MENDELSSOHN’S TWO-PART SONGS.”

REMINISCENCE.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

“ERNANI.”

GRAND FANTASIA ON THE OPERA OF VERDI.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

Sydney Smith's New Piano Duets.

ADELAIDE DE BEETHOVEN.	Transcription	s. D. 5 0
CHANSON RUSSE	5 0
EN ROUTE. Marche brillante	5 0
FEU DE JOIE. Morceau de salon	5 0
LA FILLE DU REGIMENT. Fantaisie brillante	6 0
MENDELSSOHN'S THIRD SYMPHONY (the Scotch).	Paraphrase	6 0
WEBER'S CONCERTSTÜCK.	Paraphrase	6 0

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Boosey & Co.'s New Publications.

PAULINE.

OPERA.

By F. H. COWEN.

Performed by the Carl Rosa Company. Price 7s. 6d.

THE FLYING DUTCHMAN.

With German and English Words, as Performed by the Carl Rosa Company. Price 3s. 6d., paper covers; 5s., cloth gilt.

THE FLYING DUTCHMAN.

For PIANOFORTE SOLO. Price 2s.

THE CORSAIR.

DRAMATIC CANTATA.

By F. H. COWEN.

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, 1876. Price 3s. 6d.

THE LILY OF KILLARNEY.

Music and Words complete. Price 3s. 6d., paper; 5s., cloth, gilt edges.

THE WATER CARRIER.

By CHERUBINI.

With German, French, and English Words complete. Price 2s. 6d., paper; 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

SATANELLA.

BALFE'S Popular Opera. Cheap and Complete Edition. Price 3s. 6d., paper; 5s. cloth, gilt edges.

BEETHOVEN'S SONGS.

A New and Complete Edition of BEETHOVEN'S 76 SONGS. With German and English Words (the latter by JOHN OXFORD). Price 2s. 6d., paper; 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

THE LAND OF PROMISE.

ORATORIO.

By FRANCIS HOWELL.

New and Enlarged Edition. Price 2s. 6d.

LOGIER'S SYSTEM OF MUSIC.

New and Enlarged Edition. 12s. 6d.

BOOSEY & CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

MODERN INSTRUCTION BOOKS.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S TUTOR FOR ENGLISH SINGERS. LADIES' VOICES.

In Three Parts. Price 5s. each ; or complete, 12s. 6d. in cloth boards.

From "The Times."

"An artist who, like Madame Sainton-Dolby, has attained eminence by the most legitimate means, possesses a double claim to consideration when laying before the world the secret of her art, and pointing out the way by which others may follow in her steps. Such teaching has a special value, and, therefore, all lovers of music must welcome the volume in which one of the most accomplished English singers imparts the result of her experience.

"Her Manual is divided into three parts. The first part sets forth the elements of vocalisation in a manner at once clear and succinct, and is enforced by examples in the shape of carefully graduated lessons with pianoforte accompaniment. The second section contains valuable hints on expression, style, and taste, and those higher qualities which distinguish the genuine artist from the ordinary singer.

"In the third part of her work, which to many may prove the most attractive, Madame Sainton gives suggestions as to the manner in which many of the best known airs from various authors should be vocally delivered. The selection is varied and excellent, and the suggestions are invaluable. If every vocal aspirant could not only understand them, but make practical use of them, we should have a great deal more legitimate singing than we can boast of now. We need add no more than that Madame Sainton's Tutor for English Singers is a real boon to those for whose instruction it is especially intended."

PANSEON'S METHOD FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO VOICES.

Adopted by the Paris Conservatoire. A New Edition of this celebrated Method, with an English text, is published for the benefit of the Composer's widow.

Price 8s. in cloth boards.

NAVA'S METHOD OF INSTRUCTION FOR BARITONE VOICES ;

Containing a Complete System of Solfeggi, Vocalises, and Exercises, with General Rules on the Art of Singing. 200 pages. By GAETANO NAVA, 40 years Professor at the Conservatoire at Milan. Edited and Translated by his Pupil, CHARLES SANTLEY.

Price 10s. 6d., cloth boards.

The Athenæum says :—"If amateur baritones do not make themselves rivals of Mr Santley, it can only be from lack of voice and intelligence, for the system of Signor Nava is admirable in every respect. The exercises and solfeggi are eminently calculated to develop the attributes of sensibility and of agility, the two essential elements of good singing."

VACCAJ'S PRACTICAL METHOD OF ITALIAN SINGING WITHOUT THE USE OF SOLFEGGI, AND WITH ENGLISH AND ITALIAN TEXT.

New Edition. Price 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

DR. SPARK'S HANDY-BOOK FOR THE ORGAN ;

Containing Complete Instructions for the Use of the Manuals and Pedals, with 150 various Examples by the best Composers for the Organ.

Price 7s. 6d., cloth.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Dr Spark has supplied a real want. He has compiled an excellent Manual of Instruction for the Organ, by the use of which, many of the faults of other bad systems may be avoided. Young organists can have no better tutor than Dr Spark."—Nottingham Guardian.

"Dr Spark is the well-known Organist of Leeds, and his name alone is sufficient guarantee of the worth of the book."—Figaro.

"A more thorough and complete Organ Tutor than this we have never seen. Every point of difficulty in the study of the instrument is fully elucidated, and the treatment of all parts and peculiarities is exhaustively dealt with. Let every one who would learn to play the Organ well obtain and study Dr Spark's Handy-Book. We can thoroughly and heartily recommend it."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

ELLIOTT'S HANDY-BOOK FOR THE HARMONIUM ;

Containing Complete Instructions for Playing the Instrument, Thirty Progressive Studies, Twelve Pieces for the use of the Harmonium with one stop, in addition to a large selection of music for Instruments of various sizes.

Price 5s., cloth.

London : BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street, W.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.		Price.
OVERTURE - - - - -	3 0	No. 11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day" - - -	3 0	of my Country" - - - - -	3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away" -	3 0	12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met" -	3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0	12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill" - - - - -	2 0	13. DUET, "See him glaring" - - - - -	4 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever" - - -	4 0	14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you" - - -	3 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly" -	3 0	14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee" - - - - -	4 0	15. FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink		Wine" - - - - -	4 0
with me" - - - - -	3 0	16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be" - - - - -	3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0	16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron" - - -	3 0	17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing" -	4 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE		17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night" - - - - -	3 0	18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand" -	3 0

THE MUSIC ADAPTED, AND PARTLY COMPOSED FOR THE ALHAMBRA THEATRE, BY

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the ALHAMBRA THEATRE, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE. Price 5s.

The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE. Price 2s. 6d.

The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO. Price 4s.

LONDON :

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET, REGENT STREET, W.

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE, 10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at 73 and 74, Marylebone Lane Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVIDSON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Jan. 6, 1877.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORLD OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 2.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL,
at Eight o'clock. Artists—Mme Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, and Mme Antonette Sterling; Mr Sims Reeves, Mr Wadmore, and Mr Edward Lloyd. Pianoforte—Mme Arabella Goddard. The London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr Fred. Walker. Conductor—MR SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 4s. and 2s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets of Austin, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

HERR HERMANN FRANKES SECOND SERIES of CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS will take place at the ROYAL ACADEMY of Music (new Concert Room), 4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, on January 16, 30, and February 13. To commence at Eight o'clock. Programme of the First Concert, Tuesday, January 16, 1877: Trio, in G major (MS.), first time (C. Villiers Stanford)—Mr Stanford, Herr Franke, and Herr Daubert; Gesang—Mlle Sophie Löwe; Quartet, in A minor (Schubert)—Herr Franke, Van Praag, Hollander, and Daubert; Gesang—Mlle Sophie Löwe; Solo, violin, Fantasietück (MS.), first time (A. Wilhelm)—Herr Franke; Quartet, in E flat (Rheinberger)—Miss Richards, Herr Franke, Hollander, and Daubert. Conductor—Herr SAMSON. Herr Franke's Violin School, 1, Bentinck Street, Cavendish Square, London, W. Engagements for the Quartet Party of Herr Franke, Van Praag, Hollander, and Daubert, may be made on application to Herr FRANK.

THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ST GEORGE'S HALL.

Established 1861.

Principal—Prof. WYLDE, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

Professors—Sir Julius Benedict, Examiner; Signori Garcia, Schira, Lablache, Herren Ganz, Henseler, and H. Loge, Signori Traventi, Scuderi, Tartaglione; Messrs O. K. Salaman and J. F. Barnett; Herren Lehmeier, Mann, Barth, and Marials; Messrs J. Barnett, Handel Gear, Beavan; MM. Oberthür and Wright; Herren Pollitzer and Ludwig; Signor Pezze.

The Academy is for Amateur as well as Professional Students. The year is divided into three terms. The fee, five guineas per term, includes instruction in three branches of musical education. Students can select their principal teachers from the above list. Those residing at a distance can receive all their lessons on one day in the week.

The NEXT TERM commences Jan. 15, 1877. The Examination and Entrance days are Wednesday, Jan. 10, and Friday, Jan. 12, 1877, between the hours of Eleven and Four.

Prospectuses at the Office, St George's Hall, Langham Place.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, 27, HARLEY STREET, W.—THIRD Session, 1876-7. THIRD MONTHLY MEETING, on MONDAY, Feb. 5. At Five p.m. precisely, a Paper will be read by JAMES HIGGS, Esq., Mus. Bacc., Oxon., on John Sebastian Bach's "Art of Fugue."

CHARLES K. SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.

24, Sutherland Gardens, W.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY (Established 1872) for Amateur and Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms, and the Instruction includes: Lessons in Singing, Harmony, Sight Singing (Solfege), English Elocution, Italian Language, and Choral Practice. The next Term begins on January 16, and New Students can be examined on Tuesdays, between Three and Four o'clock. Prospectuses and further Particulars can be obtained at 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park; of Mr VERT, 52, New Bond Street; also of Messrs CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond Street.

SIMPSON & CO.'S

IMPROVED HARMONIUMS.

FROM £5 5s. Five Octaves. Best make. Warranted. Nothing BETTER OR CHEAPER made. Lists post free. Trade supplied.

COMPOSERS wishing to PUBLISH.—Music Engraved, Printed, and Published in the best style at unusually low prices. Estimates on receipt of MS. SIMPSON & Co., 33, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

PRACTICE FOR SALE.

A LADY (R.A.M.) in the West of England, teaching Piano-forte and Singing, is desirous of DISPOSING of her PRACTICE to an efficient party. A first-class connection. For terms apply to "R. A." 14, Park Avenue, Manchester.

"A CHARM."

MISS JOSE SHERRINGTON will sing "A CHARM," by JULIA WOOLF, at Brighton, on the 25th inst.; and Southsea, Feb. 6. Published by Cramer & Co., Regent Street.

"WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA."

MISS RACHEL GRAY and MR FREDERIC PENNA will sing HENRY SMART's popular Duet, "WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA," at Shrewsbury, on Jan. 16, 1877; Jan. 17, at Bridgnorth; on Friday, Jan. 19, at Leamington.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his immensely popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," during this month at Stroud, Cirencester, Taunton, Exeter, Plymouth, Torquay, Worcester, Chepstow, Hereford, Swansea, Newport, and Southport.

"WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA."

MADAME THADDEUS WELLS and MR ORLANDO CHRISTIAN will sing H. SMART's Duet, "WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA," at Nantwich, Jan. 22nd.

"WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA."

MISS CATHERINE PENNA and MR FREDERIC PENNA will sing HENRY SMART's celebrated Duet, "WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA," at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, on Jan. 30.

SIGNOR BONETTI, during his Provincial Tour, requests that all communications be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME ENRIQUEZ begs that all communications be addressed to her at No. 5, OAKLEY SQUARE, N.W.

MR WILFORD MORGAN requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to his residence, 18, Surrey Street, W.O.

MDLLE VICTORIA BUNSEN will Return to London at the end of January, having concluded her Continental Engagements. All Letters to be directed, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

MR GERARD COVENTRY (Tenor), having returned to Town from his Provincial Tour, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Concerts. Address—Care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MISS PURDY begs to announce that she will Return from Italy on March 5. All communications to be addressed to 35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MR SHAKESPEARE requests that all Communications concerning ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., be addressed —6, Howick Place, Victoria Street, S.W.

MDLLE EMILIA KOENIG (Soprano), daughter of the late celebrated Herr Koenig (Cornet & Piston), having terminated her Engagements at the Concerts, Covent Garden Theatre, is now ready to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Town or Provinces. Address—7, Caroline Street, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION,

RIVIERE & HAWKES' ALBUM OF FASHIONABLE

DANCE MUSIC contains:—

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. "Prince Imperial Quadrille" (Strauss) | 7. "Nilfuthen Valse" (Strauss) |
| 2. "Les Roses Valse" (O. Métra) | 8. "Le Pergola Polka" (Marie) |
| 3. "Cuckoo and Cricket Polka" (Herzog) | 9. "Vielon Mazurka" (Strauss) |
| 4. "Tandelel Mazurka" (Strauss) | 10. "Romantic Schottische" (Bouillon) |
| 5. "Champagne Galop" (Lumbye) | 11. "Express Galop" (Kalkbrenner) |
| 6. "Diable Rose Quadrilles" (O. Métra) | 12. "St David's Day (Welsh) Lancers" (Bonnissieu) |

The above pieces being arranged for Pianoforte, Violin, or Cornet, can be obtained and used separately or together. Post free, 13 stamps for each Book.

RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

RIVIERE & HAWKES' PIANOFORTE, ORGAN, and HARMONIUM GALLERY, 28, LEICESTER SQUARE.

Sole Agents in Great Britain for Decker Brothers' American Pianos, and Prince & Co.'s American Organs. These instruments have proved themselves to be the finest and cheapest ever brought before the public.

Pianos, Organs, or Harmoniums on the Three Years' System of Purchase, from 1s. per month. Illustrated catalogues sent free on application.

Fourth Edition, Revised, Fcap. 8vo., 5s.

MUSIC.

BY H. C. BANISTER,

Professor of Harmony and Composition at the Royal Academy of Music.

This manual, written to supply the want long felt of a good text-book of theoretical music, will, by means of the copious Index and Glossary attached to it, be found also to answer to a great extent the purposes of a Dictionary of Music. Not only those who systematically pursue the study, but also more general readers, whether performers or only lovers of music, will find it a convenient and useful book of reference. It contains chapters on Notation, Harmony, and Counterpoint, Modulation and Rhythm, Canon, Fugue, Voices and Instruments, together with Exercises on Harmony, and an Appendix of Examination Papers. London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York Street, Covent Garden.

Just Published, in 8vo, price 6s.

MUSICAL INTERVALS and TEMPERAMENT: An Elementary Treatise. With an Account of an Enharmonic Harmonium exhibited in the Loan Collection of Scientific Instruments, South Kensington, 1875; also of an Enharmonic Organ exhibited to the Musical Association of London, May, 1875. By R. H. M. BOSANQUET, Fellow of St John's College, Oxford. London: MACMILLAN & CO.

WORKS BY SIR F. A. GORE OUSELEY, BART., MUS. DOC.,

PROFESSOR OF MUSIC IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

HARMONY. Second Edition., 4to., 10s.

COUNTERPOINT, CANON, and FUGUE, based upon that of CHERUBINI. 4to., 10s.

FORM IN MUSIC and GENERAL COMPOSITION. 4to., 12s.

"This book supplies a want long felt both by teachers and students. We heartily recommend it as the best text-book in our language on the subject of which it treats."—Academy.

A MUSIC PRIMER for SCHOOLS. By J. TROUTBECK, M.A., Music Master in Westminster School, and R. F. DALE, M.A., Mus. Bac., Assistant Master in Westminster School. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d. Oxford: Printed at the CLarendon Press, and published by MACMILLAN & Co., London, publishers to the University.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL."

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, ST ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

Dedicated to the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music.

SIX STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

BY
IGNACE GIBSONE.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-------------------------------|
| No. 1. "THE SWALLOW." | No. 4. "WHITHER SHALL I FLY?" |
| "2. "THE FOUNTAIN." | "5. "ROOKED TO SLEEP." |
| "3. "SPINNLED." | "6. "THE RESTLESS SEA." |

STANLY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

NEW SONG, WITH CHORUS,

THE CLANSMEN'S SONG. Words and Music by Wm. HENDERSON. Sung with great success by Mr DAVID KENNEDY and Chorus. Price 3s. London: WILKES & Co., 16, Hanover Street, W.

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.—All the new and beautiful Songs, Ballads, &c., sung by this distinguished company of Vocalists are now published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess, from whom they may be obtained by the Music-trade and the public. Permission to sing any of the Songs contained in Messrs Moore and Burgess's repertoire is always freely accorded on application to the Manager. It is not necessary to obtain a licence to sing these songs at private meetings and soirées.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SONGS and BALLADS of the day are those sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS at ST JAMES'S HALL. The words of all these songs are written by the most eminent authors, and the music composed by the most celebrated musicians of the age, including Henry S. Leigh, E. L. Blanchard, Frank Vizetelly, Charles Dunphie, J. R. Thomas, W. Meyer Lutz, John Hobson, &c.

MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.

The following new and charming Songs and Ballads are just published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess:—

Riding in a Pullman car.
Alone.
Come where the tangled beeches grow.
My Darling's Last Smile.
Sad sounds the harp now.
Friendship, Love, and Wine.
Let each speak of the world as he finds it.
Sing me the songs that I loved long ago.
The Piquet.

The Wild, White Rose.
A boatman's life for me.
My Lily.
Sing, dearest, sing.
Many weary years ago.
Return of the Exile.
Glory or the Grave.
The Alpine Hunter.
Heavenly Voices.
Gentle Flowers.
The Buckles on her Shoes.
The Flight of the Birds.

May be ordered through any Music-seller, or obtained direct from the Publishers, St James's Hall, post free, One and Sixpence.

Post free, One and Sixpence.

SING ME THE SONGS THAT I LOVED LONG AGO.

Composed by W. MEYER LUTZ. One of the most beautiful and tuneful Ballads introduced by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS for some time past. Now being sung with immense success at ST JAMES'S HALL. Can be ordered through any Music-seller; or obtained from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FLIGHT OF THE BIRDS.—An entirely new and charming Ballad. Words written by HENRY S. LEIGH, Esq. Suitable for Alto, Tenor, or Soprano voices. Now being sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS, at ST JAMES'S HALL, with extraordinary success. Can be ordered of all Music-sellers; or obtained direct from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FOLLOWING NEW and BEAUTIFUL SONGS are being sung at ST JAMES'S HALL with marked success:—"Sing me the songs that I loved long ago," "The Flight of the Birds," "The Piquet," and "Sing, dearest, sing." The greatest successes ever achieved by the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. Can be ordered through all Music-sellers; and of the Publishers, Messrs Moore and Burgess, St James's Hall. Post free, 1s. 6d.

THE PIANIST'S ROYAL ROAD. KUHE. The most complete Course of Study and perfect collection of high-class Pianoforte Music yet presented to the public. Each Book, containing not less than 16 Pages, Full size, from Engraved Plates, is Edited, Fingered, and has remarks on the contents and their performance, by KUHE. Price 1s. Post free. Prospectus on application. CUNNINGHAM BOOSEY & Co., 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

LANDSDOWNE COTTELL'S COMPOSITIONS.

MESSRS MOUTRIE & SON have the pleasure of announcing arrangements with Mr COTTELL, enabling them to publish a New Composition, Monthly (Vocal or Instrumental). The success of his new "Wedding March" has encouraged them in requesting Mr COTTELL to arrange it as a Piano-forte Duet. They anticipate a greater demand than ever for his last Compositions. Pianoforte and Music Saloons, 55, Baker Street, W. Catalogues post free.

MISS MARIA XIMENA HAYES, in reply to numerous letters of inquiry, begs to announce that her literary and musical avocations only permit of her receiving a very limited number of Pupils (Ladies) who may wish to study Singing. Her Lessons are in accordance with the purest Italian method acquired by her in Italy. For prospectuses and terms apply, by letter, at first, to Miss HAYES, 20, Edwards Square, Kensington, W.

ARDITI'S New Ballad, "TRUE." The Poetry by MARIA

X. HAYES. Sung by Mdle HELENE ARMIT, at the Promenade Concerts, Royal Italian Opera. Composed by LUIGI ARDITI. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, composed by Signor ARDITI:—

- | | |
|---|---------|
| THE PAGE'S SONG, sung by Mdle Bianchi, Mdle Alwina Valleria, and Mdle José Sherrington. (Poetry by Maria X. Hayes.) | ... 4s. |
| L'INCONTRO VALSE, sung by Mdme Adelina Patti | ... 4s. |
| A KISS FOR YOUR THOUGHT, sung by Mdle Valleria | ... 4s. |

GAVOTTE (in G). For the Pianoforte. By W. H.

MONTGOMERY. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TWO SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

- | | |
|---------------------------------------|---------|
| "THE TEST." Words by ADA | ... 4s. |
| "A GENTLE WORD." Words by S. CHAMPION | ... 4s. |

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

Examination for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 29TH, 1876. 11 A.M. TO 1 P.M.

*. In figuring the bass, the figures must denote what would be the complete chords were the harmony amplified, and not merely the written intervals. There should be no figure for the common chord in its direct form, except where needful to contradict previous figuring on the same bass note. Passing-notes should not be figured; but, when in the bass, a line should be drawn over or under them from the preceding harmony notes.

1. Find the answer of this perpetual canon for 2 in 1, free as to intervals. Write the whole in score, marking the repeat at the bar whence this begins, and at the bar at which it ends. Figure the bass.

2. Write counterpoint for soprano (not treble) and tenor, each in its proper clef, both of the second species, above this subject. Figure the bass.

3. State when the seventh of the dominant should rise to the fifth of the tonic. Write, in four parts, an example of the same in the key of B.

4. Write this chord varieties. State what is with each of the three of the three in the minor major key, of which the prefixing the key-signatures. These to be of the discord being the pianoforte score.

with two enharmonic the root of the chord notations. Resolve each key, and also in the root is the dominant, ture to each of the six in four parts, the root duplicated note, and in

5. Write answers to these fugal subjects. State whether each be real or tonal, and, if the latter, whether authentic or plagal.

6. Write counterpoint of the fourth species, in the soprano clef, above this subject, and counterpoint of the third species, in the bass clef, below it—the two counterpoints and the subject to be played together. Figure the bass.

7. Write parts for two sopranos, alto, and tenor above this figured bass, introducing passing notes, in any one or other of the parts, when convenient.

8. Write a double counterpoint in the eighth upon this strain. Place the counterpoint above as well as below the given part, and figure the bass of each. It is desirable that the counterpoint have shorter notes against the longer, and longer notes against the shorter, of the given part.

(To be continued.)

THE DESCRIPTION OF COLONOS.

A PARAPHRASE.

(From the Greek.)

The noblest spot of all the earth
Like thee is none beside,
That chief among thy wealth dost boast,
The steed thy dearest pride.

Thy hills are purple with the vine,
Thy olive groves are green,
And sings the nightingale divine
'Mid laurels thick unseen.

There doth the sweet narcissus pale
Its clust'ring orbs unfold,
And there the crocus in the vale
Displays its cup of gold.

The sleepless streams of Cephissus
For ever softly flow,
And o'er the richly fruitful plains
Shed blessings as they go.

And mighty Zeus looketh down
Benignant from on high;
Poseidon and Athene fair
Keep watch with loving eye.

MARIA XIMENA HAYES.

Dec. 21, 1876.

VIENNA.—Mad. Christine Nilsson commenced on the 4th inst. a series of four performances at the Imperial Operahouse, as Ophelia in M. Ambroise Thomas's Hamlet. Her other three characters were Margarethe in Faust, Marguerite de Valois in Les Huguenots, and Elsa in Lohengrin.—Johann Strauss's buffo opera, Methusalem, is in rehearsal at the Karltheater. The management appear to reckon upon a long run, having had the principal parts under-studied, and sparing no expense for the mise-en-scène.

A PROFESSIONAL CAREER.*

"Ambition should be made of sterner stuff."—Shakspeare.

(Continued from page 26.)

"To continue my story. After two years of study I procured an engagement to sing in Il Trovatore, at one of the minor theatres. I did fairly well, for I had the force and strength of youth. Sometimes the audience hissed, and sometimes cheered; they were ready for both on the slightest provocation. The journals were complimentary, especially those who had shared my purse. A few were bitter, for my pockets were somewhat light, markedly one who saw true genius in the bass who took the less important part. This gentleman was my rival in many things. He was the rejected candidate for the rôle of Il conte di Luna, and I had also the misfortune to be his victorious rival in the love of the prima donna. The good lady must perforce love some one, and upon principle fixed her affections upon me, the baritone, the tenor being too old and ugly, and the heavy bass held merely in reserve and resorted to only as the very last resource. My deep voiced rival, however, was blinded by the bright soprano star, and hated me bitterly for eclipsing him. Yet I did not reciprocate the tender passion of the lady, who seemed to my poor perceptions only remarkable for the loudness of her voice, and the bigness of her mustachios. She elected, however, to take me under her favour and patronage, in spite of my indifference and the scowls of the basso profondo."

"Ah! ah! I fancied you had been a lady-killer" laughed out the surgeon. "I hope you got well out of the hands of the basso profondo, for the possessors of that voice are nearly all murderers—at least, they are represented as such on the stage."

"The English and American students," resumed Pipewell, "were in the habit of resorting to a café in the Corso, where mischief, not always of an innocent or delicate character was practised. Knowing that unfriendly relations existed between Mr Ivey, the bass, and myself, they brewed a cup of malicious fun for their delight at our cost. A Mr Grice, now a popular Baptist preacher in London, was the leader in the plot. Topics of dispute between Ivey and myself were always pushed to the fore. Comparisons were made of our voices, merits, masters, and, above all, our progress in the affections of the prima donna. My rival was easily excited. I passed over many of his provocations to quarrel, but one night he insulted me in such a gross and offensive manner that I could restrain my anger no longer, and I threw the contents of my wine glass in his face. This was just what they wanted. They all declared the outrage deep and diabolical, and only to be washed out by blood; a duel, and a duel only, could ensue. They took upon themselves to arrange a meeting for the next morning. Pistols were the weapons chosen. I certainly felt no thirst for Ivey's blood, and would willingly have apologised for my hasty temper; but Grice, who had elected himself my second, would not hear of it. He was the presiding genius of the affair; he selected the place, appointed the hour, and undertook to provide suitable weapons for our mutual destruction. Sad at heart I went to my lodgings, arranged my papers, and wrote a letter to my friends, to be posted in case I should fall, or have to fly the country for killing my man. At six o'clock in the morning we were to be placed face to face on a common some miles out of the town, and at daybreak I started on the wretched expedition with remorse, but with less dread than I had felt in my first appearance on the stage. To some shyness gives greater pain than fear. On arriving at the spot I found most of the resident English and American students present, with several others, amongst whom I discerned the bilious face of my old singing master twinking with delight. My second, the embryo preacher, measured the paces, and brought forth the loaded pistols, which I observed were somewhat of an antique pattern. We were placed in position, and at a given signal I fired. The results were most unexpected. My pistol had burst and wounded my arm; whilst my antagonist was pulling away at his trigger like a madman—he could not discharge it. By the faces of our café friends I saw we had been hoaxed. The weapons were old theatrical properties, and loaded with nothing more harmful than powder. I could not refrain from joining in the general laugh; but my opponent, wild with rage, throwing the old pistol at the crowd, ran after Grice, and gave him such a pummelling a l'inglese that he will never forget should he live to be an octagenarian preacher of the gospel. Going towards Ivey I held out my hand in reconciliation and amity, which he refused. Soon after, however, he gave it in marriage to the prima donna, and so worked his revenge on me."

"By Jove," ejaculated the doctor, "perhaps you were well out of it. A marriage certificate often proves more deadly than powder and ball. Proceed, my dear sir!"

"Milan became," resumed the host, "too hot for me after the affair was noised abroad, and I soon left for London. My cash was also getting short. True I was singing, but I was paying for the luxury. Money is not to be earned in Italy by English singers. 'Take all and give nothing' appears to be a favourite motto of the Italians. I re-crossed the Alps, resolved on the conquest of Britain with my newly acquired artistic powers. Soon after my arrival I tried their force upon my old friends, adding thereby a fresh interest to their musical gatherings, and kindling in the breast of my kind patroness, Lady Di Vroth, most enthusiastic admiration. 'My progress, nay,' she would say, 'my absolute proficiency was really wonderful.' She busied herself night and day on my behalf with the impresarios of the Italian Operas, by whose advice I transformed my name to Signor Lavendi Pipebene, as their audiences demanded that tribute should be paid to fashion. The season, however, passed, and the first appearance of the great baritone, since his return from Italy, never came off. In the autumn an operatic tour was arranged by Mr Easy, who offered me an engagement to appear in the Channel Islands. He assured me it would be but a mere holiday trip, in which I could gain experience for a more extended field of operations. In accepting it I little thought what its duties would entail. To my horror I found there was to be a change of opera every night for three weeks, and I had to cram my memory, never very capacious, with eighteen operas. In the attempt I choked up my brain with a wilderness of themes. My mind became a very chaos. At times I could not recognise the sayings of the heavy villain from the utterances of aged parents. Airs of Mozart glided imperceptibly into phrases of Bellini. Times, places, characters, dresses, positions, entries, exits, dialogue, and recitative, all became mixed and confused."

"Just as I felt" said the young surgeon, "when I crammed for my exam: they gave me enough for a whole university to learn."

(To be continued.)

THE CALM VOYAGE.*

(From the Italian.)

How gently o'er this tranquil summer deep
The light bark glides!
The full sail bears her through the waves that leap
Around her sides.
The spirits of a hundred flowers, that died
With dying day,
By evening breezes wafted o'er the tide,
Perfume our way.

Thus ever may'st thou float, with favouring gales,
Life's ocean o'er!
Thus, too, may Health and Hope, to fill thy sails,
Breathe from the shore!
And when the bloom that decks the flowers of youth
No more appears,
Thus may their odorous spirits come to soothe
Thy fading years!

H. F. SPENCER.

* Copyright.

CONSTANTINOPLE.—Sig. Parmigiani has been compelled to terminate abruptly the Italian operatic season which he inaugurated a short time since. Considering the state of matters here at the present moment, this result is far from surprising.

* From Lavender Pipewell, Musical Amateur. By Pencerdd Gwffyn.

STEPHEN HELLER.*

(Continued from page 5.)

Refined, delicate, feeling that his idea is superior to its realisation, and that his sentiments are more complete than the way in which they are rendered, the master whom I am endeavouring to sketch in a few rapid touches, writes at chosen moments, in fragments, and as he thinks, without going beyond himself. Is not this alone calculated to make a man think truly and feel profoundly? Heller conciliates, in a rare degree, picturesqueness and Atticism. There is a grand air about his style; its lines are open; and, though sometimes highly worked up, its design is always characterised by breadth. It is ever varied by unexpected and delicate gradations, intended and novel encounters, and effects peculiar to it. Uneasy and sometimes uncertain, Heller becomes grave and noble the moment he enters into his subject.

Heller's harmonic work is marked by the care and curiosity of new types, of forms unknown to the formulas of the schools. His talent is to be a great re-beginner; what he has missed on one occasion he recovers on another; he has never exhausted himself, and frequently repeats previous offences. He subtilises too much, perhaps; though, if the brain takes with him, at certain moments, the place of the heart, there is, at any rate, poetical fire mixed up with it. He has been classed in the ranks of fanciful originals—we are so fond at the present day of forming collections! His fancy is nothing more than a spontaneous conception of design, colour, and rhythm. As a poet he has often been in a position to perceive, from the quality itself, the insufficiency of pure fancy as a guide to the Beautiful—to learn how fancy succumbs and swerves when not supported by guides, invisible, perhaps, but certain. Hence, for him, the absolute necessity for rules, powerful auxiliaries, which restrain and direct a man amid different impulses, and assemble contrary things under the same law. "We do not show our grandeur by being at one extremity, but rather by touching both extremities at once, and filling the entire intervening space." The author of so many works essentially different cannot have disregarded this precept of Pascal's. Carried upwards in his flight he will, after soaring and towering high above us, re-descend to earth with virile grace, without effort and without apparent shock.

As to the originality which has justly been ascribed to Heller, it is neither extravagance, as some have asserted, nor the result of eccentric tendencies, as others would make us believe, but an entirely personal and exceedingly lively way of feeling and expressing things. Of a truth, such originality is of a nature to surprise and even to strike people with singular force, at an epoch when pasticcio, when indiscriminate and confused imitation of all anterior styles is so flourishing. But for a man to be himself, without uniformity, and with prismatic flashes irradiating all the currents of his work, is something grand and worthy of remark, is it not? Yes, but he is always "melancholy," I shall be told. How can we refuse to accept such predispositions of temperament, which, in the sphere of sensitiveness, dominate an artist's entire career and all his works?

Musical science has taken a vast amount of trouble to produce Treatises on Experience and the Beautiful, but Nature unaided furnishes the Treatises on Inspiration and Poetry. Stephen Heller relies wholly upon these last. Analysis would give us only a very imperfect idea of his rhythmical and harmonic way of going to work. Form! Aye, it is in form that a perusal of him is interesting and reductive. For shape and extent we may compare most of his pieces with the arch of the rainbow, vague and undecided at each end, elevated and radiant in the middle; then the bright colours grow fainter as the semicircle sinks, the luminous gradations die away, the sombre tints take their place, and everything is plunged into obscurity. In a few bars, Heller entrances you with his ideal, however elevated and far removed it may be from your own moral or intellectual disposition. When the brief symphony is concluded—for it really is one, and you have been under the influence of its charm—you require a certain respite to triumph over your emotion and return to reality.

I have now to consider Stephen Heller's works.

Heller's works comprise all styles. He has cast the pure and sonorous metal of his inspiration in the most opposite moulds of composition, marking all, however, with his own effigy.

In his Sonatas, Scherzos, and Nocturnes, he approaches, by the elevation and distinction of the melodic thought, the finest classical models. He reveals himself a master of the difficult art of writing for the piano in his "Études," his "Caprice caractéristique sur deux Thèmes de Mendelssohn," his "Allegro pastorale," his "Saltarello," and his most remarkable transcription of Schubert's melodies. In his "Études," moreover, he makes good, with incontestable brilliancy, his right to be considered a poet.

While the fantastic element claims the conflict of demons and angels dedicated to M. L. Wertheim, as well as "La Ballade," "Le Conte," and "La Rêverie du Gondolier," written for Vincent Adler, Fancy marks as her own the "Impromptus," the "Feuilles d'Album," the "Arabesques," and the "Préludes," delicious genre pictures painted with the most exquisite care, Florentine enamelling, specimens of the most delicious and effective chasing. Fifty bars at the utmost: a passing shadow, an azure vapour curling upwards, a will-o'-the-wisp, which dances, is extinguished, and then laughs mockingly further on. What exquisite and searching art! What enjoyment we derive from original thoughts interpreted with sober and luminous elegance. How opposed Heller is, on such occasions, to aught like solemnity; how gracefully simple he becomes!

In Les Nuits Blanches (four books, containing eighteen pieces), Heller allows his imagination to pursue a vagabond course and his pen to run on as it lists. Is not such music of a truth improvisation in its most natural shape? At whatever page you open the collection, you are sure to come upon some original sentiment, which will remain all the more deeply engraven on your memory, because it seems produced unconsciously. Do not, however, trust to appearances. Art is here dissimulated to such a point as to make you think that nature alone speaks.

(To be continued.)

MEN'S VOICES IN THE CHURCH.

For nearly two years past the music at one service in each week at St Paul's Cathedral has been sustained by men's voices only. Considering that the playground of the chorister boys consists of the limited area of the roof of the schoolhouse, this is certainly a wise arrangement, inasmuch as it gives the little fellows regularly once in each week an opportunity of getting a run in the country and a breath of fresh air. As our readers are aware, there is a goodly repertory of sacred music for men's voices, in which Mendelssohn's "Festgesang" and three Motets, Schubert's "Great is Jehovah" and Gounod's "Hail gladdening light," stand pre-eminent for beauty of melody. We were not a little surprised, therefore, to find a correspondent of the City Press who, after attending one of these services, was evidently under the impression that the short and easy method adopted by the musical authorities in order to get male voice music, was, to take ordinary services and anthems but omit the treble part throughout!! He actually writes to say—"the melody being unrepresented, the musical portion of the service was almost in dumb show." Moreover, he thought the efforts of the organist to play the omitted treble parts were a failure, for he says "the organ feebly endeavoured to make up the deficiency!" We condone with tenors and basses on this newly-discovered fact that melody is only to be found in the treble staff! But the malcontent correspondent of our contemporary surpasses himself when he says quite seriously and in good faith—"May I ask you, sir, or some of your more enlightened readers, whether this (service for men's voices) is any further Ritualistic development?" All we can say in reply to this is, to ask some of the more enlightened readers of the City Press whether, arguing from analogy, an organ stop of 16-feet pitch is, or is not, more Ritualistic than one of 8-feet! Some readers may have observed that among the officers of the Challenger scientific expedition there appeared the names of Nares, Aldrich, and Havergal. The first of these, it need hardly be said, is now Sir George Nares, who's name is on everyone's lips as leader of the Arctic Expedition; the second has been promoted to a Commander for his skill and gallantry in the same perilous voyage; the last is a Lieutenant, R.N. Musicians will be interested to know that Sir George Nares is a descendant of Dr Nares; that Commander Aldrich is one of the line of Dean Aldrich, of musical, architectural, and logical fame; and that Lieutenant Havergal is a son of Canon Havergal, the Church musician, whose beneficial influence on hymnody is now fully recognised.—The Musical Times, January 1st, 1877.

* Translated by J. V. Bridgeman, expressly for the Musical World.

Jäkderjantkillerren.

A Wagnerian Teatraylogy, or Art-poem-libretto, with a good deal of Cupan Sorcery in it, accompanied by some indication of the glorious Unconventional Music of the Future.

(From "Mr Punch's Pocket Book.")

PREFACE.

This Teatraylogy consists of three parts, and occupies about as many weeks in performance. Of course what is here given can be no more than an inadequate specimen of the whole composition of the All-poet-musician. Still we have no doubt but that it will be found quite enough for the present, without entering fully into the Music of the Future.

The First Part partakes of the character of a Preludian Prologue, and introduces the Hero, Jäk, and the chief characters, with what may be termed the basso-motivo of the Opera-Poem.

The Second Part shows how the Hero Jäk, determined to rescue his Lady-love, attacks the Jiant in their Castles.

The Third Part, which is subdivided, shows how Jäk, having still to find his Lady-love, Leetelred Ridinood, seeks the Storhausen of La Mere Hobbard, who lends him her learned Dog, Waggnar, to guide him on his travels. Waggnar is soon on the Wolf's trail, but unfortunately Jäk's object is defeated by the elevation of the Jiant Wolf's Castle on the rock, which is some 50,000,000 feet above the sea-level. This introduces the Slavonic Legend of the Beanstalk. Jäk goes out Beanstalking. And, as he climbs, the elements are set in commotion, the animal world goes mad, the astronomical system gets hopelessly muddled, and a hitherto inanimate object, suddenly becoming endued with life and motion, elopes with, as might have been expected, its own spooney one. All this offers a splendid scope for the genius of the All-Poet All-Musician Wagner.

The Orchestral Finale of this part is perhaps the finest thing that even this Great Master has ever written. It commences with a tonic description of the "Lofty Diddle-diddle," or "High Diddle-diddle" movement by all the stringed instruments in fugue. The diapason is kept on throughout, and the occasional insistance on the minor seventh produces a discord which is now startling, now plaintive, according to the variations on the Theme.

Then follows the most exquisite, the most perfect bit of animal painting ever known in harmonics, clearly portraying—if notes can ever portray anything, if there is, as indeed there is, a true Language in Notes, a genuine expression of undying Narrative in Music—the first appearance of the Cat. The legend takes her, in the hand of the All-Poet, thus far:—

"High Diddle, Diddle,
The Cat. . . ."

The first Diddle is carried as high as fingers which (were made before tuning-forks) will go on a violin, violoncello, or double-bass. But the second Diddle is taken as low as the first was high. Thus producing a striking contrast, and preparing the audience for what is immediately to follow.

Then comes the last solo (Der Katzkey), and here Herr Richard Wagner's Mews truly inspired him. Richard Wagner makes no secret of his descent from Richard Whittington, whose family were originally German, and who, had his parents but stayed in their own native land, would never have been Lord Mayor of London. But this by the way; the cries of the Cat are marvelously rendered, piercing and plaintive, fierce and ferocious. Then just at the most intense point of the symphony is heard the first strain of the soothing violin,

"High Diddle, Diddle,
The Cat, and the Fiddle."

The Fiddle remonstrates with the Cat. The Cat objects to the Fiddle speaking at all, when, thereupon, the Fiddle reminds the Cat of their relationship, and points out that both Fiddles and Cats owe their powers of music to the same cause. This leads to a disquisition on the relative value of Cats and Fiddles, and each discusses his and her own peculiarities in speeches (of course to touchingly and thrillingly descriptive music) of some 826 lines apiece. Finally the Cat and the Fiddle join in the nearest approach to what the "All-Poet" ever admits into his work as an Operatic Duet, which, however, is suddenly broken in upon by a Gigantic Discord, introducing a lovely pastorella. It is night, the moon is shining, the shepherds are slumbering, the flocks are sleeping, the heifers are in the paddock, the cows are in the cowhouse, all save one, which, overcome by the loss of its calf, is careering about the country refusing all consolation. Thus far have we now got in the legend which forms the finale of the first part of the third Act, or Divisional Poem of the Teatraylogy.

"High Diddle, Diddle,
The Cat, and the Fiddle:
The Cow. . . ."

Of course this maddening and exciting scene, musically expressed, brings us to the tableau pictured in the words

"Jumped over the Moon."

And here, of course, all the resources of a stage arranged for the greatest mechanical effects are brought into play. Of the remainder it would be difficult to speak briefly.

"The Little Dog laughed to see such fun."

The Laughing Chorus of Dogs, all assembled in the Isle of Dogs, is one of those marvellous compositions of which a Mendelssohn might be proud, a Mozart boast, and which would cause a Beethoven to be astonished at his own genius. The Big Newfoundland's Barkarole is a magnificent specimen of the Composer-Poet's art of expressing animal sorrow and fury. While brings this part to a satisfactory conclusion, amid the roar of the waves, the howling of the winds, the terror of the Man in the Moon at seeing his residence leapt over by a flying Cow, as Jäk places his foot on the first projection of the Beanstalk, and commences his perilous ascent. On this picture the curtain descends.

"The Dish ran away with the Spoon"

The Second Division of the Third Part, which is again subdivided (but only takes ten days in performance), shows how Jäk, having climbed the Beanstalk, attacks Jiant Wolf, rescues Leetelred Ridinood, and is joined by all the characters who have ever appeared, at any time, in the piece from its commencement. This affords an opportunity for one of the most effective finales, both musically and dramatically considered, in the whole of music.

The Finale alone lasts three days, and is divided into acts, deeds, and processions. All kinds of difficulties—expressed by a perpetually recurring chromatic scale, interwoven among a perfect network of chords, fugues, and symphonies—are placed in the way of Jäk's wedding, but he overcomes them one by one, passing from sharps, flats, double sharps, and incidentals, into the key of a calm C major. Then with one great discord, one Gigantic Bang on the Big Drum, the Art-Poem concludes.

(To be continued.)

1877.

MAKE UP YOUR MINDS.

(Written on the spur of the moment.)

If seven's a lucky number,
Two sevens must be luckier;
So, love, we cannot blunder—
If we get married this year.

To BENWELL, Esq.

Weissen.

Wagner's "Ring des Nibelungen."

BY DR. HANSLICK.*

(Continued from page 6.)

Wagner designates Das Rheingold a Prelude. The drama proper commences, therefore, on the second evening, with Die Walküre. Siegfried, the hero of the whole work, does not appear yet awhile. The drama of Die Walküre first develops the story of the race of the Walsungen before his birth. Walse, the founder of the race, is, according to Wagner's version, none but god Wotan himself. Siegmund and Sieglinde, brother and sister, who do not know each other, are the Walsungen introduced at the beginning of the piece. Siegmund, who is a fugitive, enters, during his flight, Hunding's dwelling; and Sieglinde, Hunding's young and beautiful wife, brings him refreshment. The two feel glowing love for each other, and do not make any effort to repress it after discovering that they are brother and sister. Sieglinde stupifies her husband with a sleeping draught, and passes the night with Siegmund in uninterrupted bliss. The next morning, Hunding and Siegmund engage in combat with each other, and both fall. Brünnhilde now takes part in the story. She is one of the nine Walkyres, who ride about battle-fields and carry the slain heroes to Walhalla. Brünnhilde (according to Wagner, the daughter of Wotan himself), has, contrary to her father's especial order, aided Siegmund in the fight. As a punishment, she is plunged into sleep by Wotan, and surrounded by a circle of fire (the "wabernde Loh").† No one but a man who "knows not fear" shall deliver and call her his own. With this "fire-charm" the piece closes. In Siegfried, the third drama, the action of which is supposed to take place some twenty years later than that of Die Walküre, a new hero, young Siegfried, the son of the brother and sister, Siegmund and Sieglinde, is brought upon the stage. He is presented to us as the ideal of robust strength and high spirits, forging the sword "Nothung," hunting a bear, killing the giant Fafner, who has been changed into a dragon, and slaying his foster father, Mime. By tasting the blood of the dragon, he becomes endowed with the power of understanding the language of the birds, who tell him all about the flame-encompassed Brünnhilde. He has despoiled Fafner of the Nibelungen-Ring and the Tarnkappe, or Cap of Darkness, which renders its wearer invisible, and now forces his way through the fire to the sleeping Brünnhilde, whom he awakens with a kiss. With the long love-scene between the two ("O hehrster Thaten thöriger Hort! Leuchtende Liebe, lachender Tod")‡ the act closes.

This is followed by the fourth and last drama: Götterdämmerung. We behold Siegfried setting forth in search of fresh exploits, after taking a tender farewell of Brünnhilde, and placing upon her finger the Nibelungen Ring as a pledge of fidelity. He rides off to the Rhine, where the proud race of the Gibichungen hold sway. King Gunther's lovely sister, Gutrune (the Chriemhild of the Nibelungenlied), immediately conceives a violent passion for him, and, at Hagen's suggestion, gives him a magic potion, which renders him entirely forgetful of Brünnhilde. He desires and obtains Gutrune as his wife, promising in return to win Brünnhilde—who can be subdued by him alone—for Gunther. Changed by the agency of the Tarnhelm into the semblance of Gunther, he forces Brünnhilde into the bridal-chamber, and tears from her the ring as a token of the marriage. Hagen (according to R. Wagner, a son of Alberich's) desires to obtain possession of the ring himself, and, therefore, resolves to compass Siegfried's destruction. Brünnhilde recognises her ring on Siegfried's finger, and consequently the falseness of him she so dearly loved. She demands that he shall be killed, and Hagen stabs him in a dastardly manner, while they are out hunting. Immediately before Siegfried's end, however, Hagen gives the young hero another magic potion, which neutralises the effects of the first one. Siegfried suddenly remembers Brünnhilde, and dies with a message to her on his lips. Gutrune, without more ado, cedes her place by the side of the murdered man to Brünnhilde, who disputes it with her, and who then flings herself upon the blazing funeral pile prepared for Siegfried's corpse. The waters of the Rhine overflow into the hall; the Daughters of the Rhine swim in, drag down Hagen, who endeavours to gain possession of the ring, and hold it up exultingly. At the same time there appears in the sky a red glow the reflection of the conflagration which consumes the stronghold of the Gods and all its splendour.

(To be continued.)

PANTOMIME NO PANTOMIME.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—J. V. B., in his article, "Pantomime no Pantomime," will find many to sympathise with his views. Some fourteen years ago I wrote a satirical pamphlet, which the members of a rather serious family thought amusing. I subjoin an extract as pertaining to this season, and bearing reference to pantomime. The subject was The Iron Times v. The Good Old Days:—

"Another circumstance peculiar to the age that is past deserving condemnation was the absurdly social manner in which the season of Christmas was kept—the season of plum pudding and pantomime—mince pies and misletoe, champagne and charades, figs and fun, snap-dragon and Sir Roger de Coverley, rum punch and revelry, wassail bowl and what-you-like. The observance of Christmas in the olden time was altogether different from the simple, every-day-matter-of-fact sort of manner in which we now keep it. But, of course, when the 'good old customs' disappeared, Christmas, the monarch of the winter was dethroned, and his laurel crown thrown behind the fire. No longer vaulted ceilings ring in his presence. This once merry king is now a staid old gentleman. He has lost his rubicund face, and looks as if dosed with camomile pills or addicted to Banting.* Formerly his annual visits were expected by old and young, by squire and peasant. He did not come alone, but with a jovial train of spirits. But his train has now been run off the line. In his time there were wassail bowls galore and yule logs burning cheerily. There was waste! The day was not long enough for the fun; the night was robbed of hours, and the larceny went unpunished. The revelry was kept up unceasingly; sleep was banished, in spite of Sancho Panza, who said 'blessed is he that invented sleep; while Mirth, with 'dimpled cheek,' and Laughter, 'holding both his sides,' supplied his place. But now wassail bowls are bowled out, or perhaps used as washing bowls; and yule logs, you'll logically infer, are used for railway purposes. Christmas boxes are being packed up to be sent away with the rest of the baggage. Soon we shall have nothing characteristic of those days. Lord Mayor's Show is among the few things left, though the men in armour, which were the chief part of its glory, have melted under their metallic responsibility.† Plum pudding, a conservative institution of old Christmas, is coming to be regarded as something vulgar. So long in partnership with roast beef, it is time that a dissolution should take place, and a company, limited, be formed out of it. The Christmas pantomime, too, once anxiously looked forward to by old and young, has almost entirely changed its character. Many a life has been prolonged by pantomime. Laughter made the lean grow fat, and brought health to the sickly. I should like to know what business had Laughter to interfere with the practice of doctors of medicine? He is not one of the faculty, but a quack, and his patent medicine should pay a tax to the Government. The burlesque before a pantomime now is everything, the harlequinade of no moment. The first part used to be a short preamble to the second, when the fun was wont to begin, when the chuckles of infants used to make the theatre ring again, especially when clown began to feel the effect of the red-hot poker. Pantomime is becoming simply a medium for scenic display, Clown and Pantaloon existing merely in name. Clown will henceforth never be known to posterity, like Joey Grimaldi. He and Pantaloon must alter their natures and pursuits. Pantaloon must turn tailor, and make articles of apparel which his name has immortalised. Clown, instead of whitening his face, would do well to blacken it, and join a troop of Virginian minstrels."

F. P.

GENOA.—The Carlo Felice opened with the Huguenots.

* Neue Freie Presse, August 13, 1876.—Translated expressly for the Musical World by J. V. Bridgeman.

† "The flickering blaze."

‡ "O foolish refuge of most sublime deeds! dazzling love, laughing death!"

* This was all written fourteen years ago.

† The present Lord Mayor has re-introduced them.

Italian Opera in Modern Costume.

(By Charles Lyall.)

No. 2.—IL TROVATORE.

ACT 2ND.

AZUCENA.—“Stride la vampa!”
 (“The flames arise.”—Manfredo Maggioni.)

AZUCENA.—“Ferma! son io che parla a te.”
 (“Stop! 'Tis I who speaks to thee.”—Maggioni.)

[DI LUNA (irrompendo ad un tratto).—“No, giammai!”
 (Suddenly issuing from the wood).—“Ah, never!”—Maggioni.]

LEONORA.—“Oh!” MANRICO.—“T'arresta!” . . .
 DI LUNA.—“Ho le furie nel cor!”
 (“Alas!” . . . “Withdraw!” . . . “I am mad with rage!” Maggioni.)

(To be continued.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL. NINETEENTH SEASON, 1876-7.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE FIFTEENTH CONCERT,
MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 15, 1877.

To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.

QUARTET, in E flat, Op. 12, for two violins, viola, and violoncello —MM. HENRY HOLMES, L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI ... Mendelssohn.
LIEBESLIEDER-WÄLZER, Op. 62 ... Brahms.
Mdlles SOPHIE LOWE and REDEKER, MM. SHAKESPEARE and PYATT.
Pianoforte—Mdlle MARIE KREBS and Miss AGNES ZIMMERMANN.

PART II.

RONDO, in C major, Op. 73, for two pianofortes (first time)—
Miss AGNES ZIMMERMANN and Mdlle MARIE KREBS ... Chopin.
QUARTETS { "Es ist verrathen" } ... Schumann.
{ "Ich bin geliebt" }
Mdlles SOPHIE LOWE and REDEKER, MM. SHAKESPEARE and PYATT.
TRIO, in G major, Op. 1, No. 2, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mdlle MARIE KREBS, MM. HENRY HOLMES and PIATTI ... Beethoven.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 13, 1877.

To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET, in G minor, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—Mdlle MARIE KREBS, MM. HENRY HOLMES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI ... Mozart.
AIR, "Adelaide"—Mr SIMS REEVES ... Beethoven.
SONATA PATHETIQUE, in C minor, Op. 13, for pianoforte alone
—Mdlle MARIE KREBS ... Beethoven.
SERENADE, "Awake, awake"—Mr SIMS REEVES (Violoncello obbligato—Signor PIATTI) ... Piatti.
OCTET, in F, Op. 166, for two violins, viola, violoncello, double bass, clarinet, French horn, and bassoon (by desire)—MM. HENRY HOLMES, L. RIES, ZERBINI, LAZARUS, WENDTLAND, WINTERBOTTOM, REYNOLDS, and PIATTI ... Schubert.
Conductor ... Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR GROKER ROORES.—A prettier melody of its kind than "Sally in our alley" could hardly be desired; but the words are silly and pointless. We are glad to hear once again of a correspondent of such long standing as Mr Roores, and at the same time recommend him, until he has more seriously entered into the spirit of the Ring des Nibelungen, to direct his attention to other studies. Let him consult the writings of Francis Hueffer on the "Music of the Future" and Wagner in connection with it; and if he wants to get up a magazine article, he may crib from them, as others have done. The book of Schuré is a veritable wind-bag. Wagner himself could hardly read with satisfaction such inflated bombast.

DEATH.

On January 9, at 2, Beaumont Street, Mrs J. BALSIR CHATTERTON, widow of the late Balsir Chatterton, professor of the harp, aged 70.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1877.

IN the absence of other subjects for immediate consideration, we can hardly do better than quote an article which has recently appeared in the musical column of a weekly contemporary, relating to a tendency of our day which has on several occasions been discussed and questioned in the pages of the Musical World. Under the heading of A Retrospect, the Graphic makes the following observations:—

"A glance back at the doings of the year just past, though a good deal for the advantage of music has been effected in several quarters, is not altogether reassuring. Too much stress has been laid upon what is somewhat vaguely termed 'progress.' Now the word 'progress' sounds right enough when there is a given point from which to start. To ordinary thinkers that point would seem to be the last point on the road to perfection at which we had previously arrived. To travel onwards from this, in the same direction, would be 'progress' in the legitimate sense of the term. But before travelling beyond, we must have reached it. That, however, is by no means the case with the actual (so-called) 'party of progress' among musicians. Without having thoroughly mastered the rudiments of their art, there exists a large number of young and middle-aged composers, German and French especially, who affect to take Beethoven's 'last word'—as revealed (or, to many, hidden) in the Missa Solennis and the 'Choral Symphony'—for their 'stand-point.' How few remember what years of anxious thought and weary labour it took Beethoven to get there! He did not neglect the early study of counterpoint, the disregard of which has proved the bane of numbers who, if not exactly men of genius, were, it must be admitted, gifted with natural talent, the precocity of which should have been turned to excellent purpose. Instead of this, we have extravagant pretension, and, in place of symmetrical form, what is little better than rambling incoherency. Even Schubert is occasionally open to protest on this account; but he, to cite the words of Joseph Joachim, was 'a heaven-born genius'; and we can quite understand the eloquent expression of Schumann—'himmlische Länge' (heavenly length)—in his delightful essay on Schubert's ninth symphony, which, had it the logical sequence and development of Beethoven's 'No. 9,' might fairly have claimed a place side by side with that imperishable masterpiece. But none of Schubert's successors—not Schumann himself (far from it)—were richly endowed like him. Even Mendelssohn, who did such genuine service to music by religiously adhering to the principles of those great old masters who (again to quote Schumann) 'look down upon us from among the stars,' cannot, for exhaustless variety of invention, be compared with Schubert. Yet Mendelssohn was the one who most successfully upheld the dignity of art during his brief career, and had he lived, would, as a sage, have commanded no less obsequious respect than, as a youth, full of brilliant promise, he won unanimous admiration. His death left a free field for the men whom Schumann, in his earlier time, might have enlisted in the 'Davidsbündlerschaft,' but whom, later on, it is more than probable he would have expelled as 'Philistines.' The musical record of last year has brought the works of these 'reformers,' who begin at the end without having mastered the beginning, too prominently forward. At the Crystal Palace Concerts, the Monday Popular Concerts, the concerts of the Philharmonic Societies, Old and New, and elsewhere, they have taken up time and attention which might have been more profitably bestowed. We do not object to hear and judge them occasionally, because it is always well to know what is going on abroad, in the musical art as in other arts; but we strongly object to that intolerance of criticism which causes their disciples in this country to attribute anything that assumes the shape of calm and impartial opinion to party prejudice and foregone conclusion. As it is quite out of our way to be personal, we object to citing names; but we cannot refrain from adding that much of the harm that has been done, and threatens to be done, is owing to the influence of a man of undoubted genius—viz., Richard Wagner, whose recent 'Festival-stage-play,' at Bayreuth, was a sort of heathen Oberammergau. The regardlessness of form and structure, of which this much-talked-of composer (far better dramatist, by the way, than musician) defiantly makes a boast, is hailed by some of his compatriots as oracular; and, without a tithe of his genius or one-hundredth part of his ability, they strive to follow in his footsteps; whereas they are but pigmies, burying themselves in the seven-leagued boots of a giant. We have broached this matter for the simple reason that the Wagner mania seems likely to influence not a few of our own musicians—which, as we are now advancing, would be a thing greatly to deplore. This recalls to us an anecdote told of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, who, when Principal of our Royal Academy of Music, being asked by a pupil, 'Do you know, sir, the fourth symphony of Schumann?' replied, 'Do you know, sir, the first symphony of Mozart?' Being answered in the negative, Bennett said, 'Go and make yourself acquainted with it, and then I will talk to you about Schumann.' Here was a plain example (on the pupil's side) of beginning at the wrong end. To those incidents which have more directly concerned our musical doings at home, during the past year, we may shortly refer; it was our present purpose merely to say a word or two about a new sign of the times, promising anything rather than good to the most popular, and, if wisely administered, refined and humanising of the arts. Why endeavour to make an unfathomable mystery of it? Music is 'Orphean' (tuneful), or it is nothing."

Of our hearty concurrence with the sentiments expressed in the foregoing our readers need not be reminded. D. p.

PROJECTED MONUMENT TO BEETHOVEN.

FOR the moment we must limit ourselves to reproducing the very appropriate and admirable address of the Committee for this patriotic, artistic, and glorious undertaking, together with the names of the musicians and literary men who compose it. That we shall return to a subject of such universal interest need scarcely be added.

"Cinquante années se sont écoulées depuis que l'âme de Beethoven s'est envolée vers les sphères célestes dont il a révélé au monde les divines mélodies. Les membres du comité, qui s'est constitué à Vienne dans le but d'élever un monument au plus éminent des maîtres, ont cru le moment opportun pour prier les admirateurs de Beethoven, qui sont répandus dans l'univers entier, de concourir au succès de leur entreprise par des concerts ou des représentations dramatiques. Vienne, qui a vu naître les chefs-d'œuvre impérissables de Beethoven, renferme les cendres de leur immortel auteur. Son monument doit donc être digne du génie dont il rappellera la gloire éternelle. Le projet, composé par le professeur Zumbusch, a été accueilli avec enthousiasme par les membres du comité artistique, et le modèle, en partie achevé, est prêt à être exécuté en bronze. Le concours de tous ceux qui gardent précieusement la mémoire du grand compositeur nous aidera à terminer l'œuvre dont, malgré l'insuffisance de nos ressources, nous avons pris hardiment l'initiative et nous espérons que la lyre de Beethoven, renouvelant le miracle d'Amphion, aura le don d'attirer les pierres du monument qui perpétuera à tout jamais la gloire du maître immortel.

"LES MEMBRES DU COMITÉ.—J. Brahms, O. Dessoff, F. Dingelstedt, N. Dumba (président), D. Guttman, F. Egger, Th. Hansen, E. Hanaliok, J. Hellmesberger, J. Herbeck (vice-président), F. Jauner, A. Koeh, E. Král, S. Mosenthal, J. Nordmann, G. Nottebohm, H. Richter, F. Schmidt, W. Wiener, L. A. Zellner (secrétaire).

"Vienne, décembre, 1876."

For Music.

What care I for the weather,
For rain, or snow, or hail,
When friends can meet together,
And genial thoughts prevail!

Some minds are tinged with sadness,
When clouds obscure the skies,
For them there is no gladness,
No sunbeams in kind eyes.
London Magazine.

But when the way is weary,
To trav'ler doomed to roam,
The path need not be dreary,
Made bright by thoughts of home.

Then let us take the weather,
Like life, as good for man,
The bright and dull together,
For that is Nature's plan.
M. A. BAINES.

M^DM^E ANNA BISHOP is once more in London, after again making almost the tour of the globe. Of one thing we are sure—every true amateur will be delighted to see, and, if possible, to hear her.

THE LATE MR ALFRED HOLMES.—We are informed that the Minister of Public Instruction and the Fine Arts has made an official request to the Conservatoire to perform one of the symphonies of the late Mr Alfred Holmes, in February, during the Lord Mayor of London's expected visit to the French capital; and, further, that the Lord Mayor has expressed to the widow of the defunct musician the pleasure he shall experience in being present at the performance.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—These admirable entertainments were resumed last Monday. The re-appearance of M^dlle Marie Krebs delighted all who can appreciate first-class pianoforte-playing. The accomplished lady chose for her solo the Sonata Appassionata of Beethoven, which she gave with splendid execution and in admirable taste. She also joined Signor Piatti in Beethoven's first violoncello sonata—a performance on both sides beyond criticism. We shall return to this concert.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

THE LONDON INSTITUTION.—On the evenings of January 18th and February 15th, Mr W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac., Oxon., joint author of Stainer and Barrett's Dictionary of Musical Terms, will give two lectures. His first lecture, on "English Madrigal Composers," will be illustrated by a choir of 20 voices, selected from the Chapel Royal, St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, Lincoln's Inn Chapel, &c., who will render eleven compositions by Edwardes, Byrde, Wilbye, Dowland, Morley, Bennett, Bateson, Gibbons, Linley, De Pearsall, and Walmisley. The second lecture is to be on "English Glee Composers."

THE celebrated French actor, Montfleury, considered his profession so honourable that, when his marriage articles were preparing, being desired, as a man of family, to describe in what manner he wished to be distinguished, he answered that it was not in the power of ancestors to confer talent, and that the most honourable title he desired to be known by was that of Comédien du Roi.

It is affirmed that the Wagner performances in the new theatre at Bayreuth will be repeated during the ensuing summer, commencing earlier than usual, that is on the 20th of July, instead of the 12th of August. There will be three performances of the entire Tetralogy in three successive weeks. Whether all the details will be precisely the same as before is not stated. The charges for admission, however, are to be very considerably reduced. The town and burgomasters of the city of the Margraves will probably do something to help the undertaking.

In his Table Talk, Hazlitt speaks as follows on the subject of the remuneration of artists:—

"It has been usual to raise a very unjust clamour against the enormous salaries of public singers, actors, and so on. This matter seems reducible to a moral equation. They are paid out of money raised by voluntary contributions in the strictest sense; and, if they did not bring certain sums into the treasury, the managers would not engage them. The sums are exactly in proportion to the number of individuals to whom their performance gives an extraordinary degree of pleasure. The talents of a singer, actor, &c., are, therefore, worth just as much as they will fetch."

THE practice of managers acting as their own trumpeters and writing their own criticisms is not confined to the latter half of the 19th century. See an extract from a Covent Garden bill of 1821:—

"The new opera, called Don John, was received with roars of laughter and shouts of applause, and the acting of Mr C. Kemble, Mr Liston, Mr Jones, Mr Abbott, &c., was hardly surpassed even in the days of Garrick! The music absolutely enchanted and electrified the audience—almost every piece being encored—and, whilst Miss Stephens, in the Second Violetta, so exceeded all her former successful efforts, as to add another laurel even to her high reputation, Miss Halland, in the First Violetta, made as triumphant a debut as was ever made by any singer on the English stage."

Few pieces of note have been produced in the Paris theatres since the season of 1876-77 began last September. M. Parodi's Rome Vaincue, at the Théâtre Français, contained some striking passages, and, considering that the author is Italian, it is to his credit that he writes French verse so well. The interpretation was excellent, and M^dlle Sarah Bernhardt's impersonation of the blind grandmother of the erring vestal whose faithlessness brings about the triumph of the Carthaginians, raised her at once to the rank of a great actress. It is difficult, however, to believe that Rome Vaincue will find a lasting place in the repertory of the Comédie Française; and the same may be said of M^M. Ereckmann-Chatrian's L'Ami Fritz, which would scarcely have got through ten representations if "patriotic" journals had not given it the best advertisement by protesting beforehand against the reception of a piece written by men who had exalted Germany at the expense of France. To this unjust accusation and to the manner in which the piece has been put upon the stage—to the "real" bisque soup and "real" cherries plucked from a "real" tree—it owes nearly all its success, there being nothing in the plot to excite interest, while the dialogue is not brilliant. The National Opera still lives upon its staircase; while at the Opéra-Comique the only novelty is a fresh director, Mignon, Lalla Roukh, and the Pré aux Clercs being the staple pieces. Italian opera at the Théâtre Ventadour is in better case, Mdlle Albani made a brilliant début. The musical novelties of the season have been Victor Massé's Paul et Virginie at the Théâtre Lyrique (formerly the Théâtre de la Gaité) and Lecocq's Kosiké, a Japanese opéra-bouffe, at the Théâtre de la Renaissance. MM. Alexandre Dumas and Gustave Fould have produced the Comtesse Romani at the Gymnase, a comedy of somewhat repulsive character, though a study of scenes in contemporary society. The Sept Châteaux du Diable is just the piece for the Châtelet, the stage of which is so large that the director moves on horseback while superintending rehearsals. The Porte St. Martin has revived the Reine Margot of Auguste Maquet, who assisted the elder Dumas in the manufacture of his romances. M. Sardou has a piece in rehearsal at the Vaudeville, and Mdlme Sardou is about to appear as a dramatic authoress; so that some lustre may yet be shed on a hitherto uneventful season.—S. S.

SHAKSPERE was accustomed, when he had settled in London, to visit Stratford annually. In performing these journeys, he used to bait at the Crown Inn, Oxford, then kept by John Davenant, father of the dramatist. Davenant's wife was very beautiful, and the constant visits of the great poet gave rise to scandalous reports. Among other things, it was stated that Davenant's son (afterwards Sir William Davenant), who was so fond of Shakspeare that he would run from school to see him whenever he heard of his arrival, was once observed by an old neighbour speeding homeward almost out of breath. On being asked whither he was going in such a hurry, he answered: "To see his god-father, Shakspeare." "That's a good boy," replied his neighbour, "but have a care you do not take God's name in vain."

A NEW weekly journal, price one shilling, is about to be published by Messrs Provost & Co., of Henrietta Street, under the title of The Portrait. It is intended to "illustrate the time we live in" by means of large photographs and elaborate memoirs of "those who adorn or disgrace it." Writers of ability, "and of known modesty," are to be invited to supply their own memoirs, "which"—says the prospectus—"will not be charged for as advertisements. Portraits of the Earl of Beaconsfield, General Tcherniaeff (with a memoir by Mr Archibald Forbes), Mr William Black (with a memoir by Mr Black himself), M. Dourguéneff (with a memoir by Mr W. R. S. Ralston), Mr Algernon Swinburne, and Mr Woolner, R.A., are to appear in the first numbers. Naturally our great composers will not be forgotten; and we are further informed that "women of surpassing beauty will be entitled to a place in our collection, by reason of their good looks."

PROVINCIAL.

DUNDEE.—The Dundee Choral Union's second concert, owing no doubt to the inclemency of the weather, was not so numerously attended as its merits deserved. There were many fine pieces in the programme, including Bach's "God's time is best;" Spohr's "God, Thou art great;" and Gade's Zion. About the performance of these works the Dundee Courier remarks that the excellencies exhibited by the chorus may be summed up as vigour in the broad forte passages, good quality of tone, and, as a rule, correct intonation. The solo vocalists were Mrs Osgood, who possesses a fine voice directed by intelligence and feeling; Miss Fairman and Mr Wadmore, both excellent artists; and Mr William Shakespeare, who, the same journal says, can declaim "Deeper and deeper still" with dramatic truth and intensity.

EDINBURGH.—The Messiah, on Friday evening, the 29th ult., drew a large audience to the ordinary seats in the Music Hall, but the "reserved" were only half full. The chorus was that of the Edinburgh Choral Union, the orchestra the same which has been playing at the subscription concerts, led by Mr Carrodus. The solo singers were Mrs Osgood, Miss Alice Fairman, Mr William Shakespeare, and Mr J. L. Wadmore. Mr Hartley was organist and Mr Adam Hamilton conductor. Mrs Osgood made a favourable impression. Miss Fairman sang "O Thou that tellest" remarkably well, but hardly let us realise the pathos of "He was despised." The tenor solos were taken by Mr William Shakespeare, one of the more cultivated and refined of the young generation of tenors, and a Royal Academy pupil, who, though he made an unfortunate start in "Comfort ye," immediately recovered himself, and gave a refined and artistic version of his part, throwing considerable expression into the Passion music, and energy into "Thou shalt break them." Mr Wadmore in the bass music quite realised the high expectations raised by his excellent singing a few weeks ago in The Creation. The choruses were sung with the most satisfactory steadiness, the organist acquitted himself well, and the performance was, as a whole, one of great general excellence.

GLASGOW.—The final Saturday evening concert at the Botanic Gardens was one of the most attractive of the series. The selection included the overture to Tannhäuser, the introduction to the third act of Lohengrin, and Weber's famous overture, The Ruler of the Spirits. The two instrumental preludes by Herr Wagner shed a fresh light upon the capabilities of Mr Carrodus as a conductor. Neither work is child's play, and both a clear head and a steady hand are needed to bring out their peculiar beauties. It is no small credit to Mr Carrodus, therefore, that he should have succeeded so well. A selection from Bellini's Puritani brought out several members of the orchestra as soloists, and M. Castagnier contributed his fantasia upon German airs which was so much admired on a previous occasion. Mdlme Tonnelier sang "I dreamt that I dwelt," "Comin' through the rye," and Guglielmi's "Gratias agimus tibi," (clarinet obbligato, Mr Tyler). The vocal contingent from the Choral Union gave Calcott's "Peace to the souls of the heroes;" "The Lass of Richmond Hill," arranged for male voices; and a vocal polka by Schäfer. The concert was over about six, and the majority of the orchestra left for London by the 9.10 train. A large crowd assembled to speed the parting guests, who have made many friends during their two months' residence; and the train moved on amid hearty cheers from committee, subscribers, and guarantors, who were all represented in strong force upon the platform.

MUSIC AT THE ANTIPODES.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

The Academy of Music in Bourke Street, a principal thoroughfare of the city, is now nearly completed, and the opening night is fixed for the 6th inst. The building comprises an arcade of shops running from Bourke Street into Little Collins Street, and a theatre overhead. It is a neat little place, the entire floor of which is set apart for stalls. The dress circle, at the back, is raised above them, but there is no space underneath. There is a family circle over the "dress" boxes, and an "amphitheatre" above. The proprietor of the Academy and "Victoria Arcade" is Mr Alderman Joseph Arons; and the lessee is Mr G. W. B. Lewis, well known in Australia and India as a theatrical manager. His wife (Miss Rose Edouin) was, some years ago, a favourite on the Australian stage, but since her marriage has seldom appeared in public. Mrs Lewis is, however, announced as directress of the Academy, and will be the leader of the dramatic company, which is to perform alternately with the musical. The admirers of Mrs Lewis must have received this announcement with pleasure. Mdlle Irma di Murska (Mrs John Hill) and her company, consisting of Susini, Rosenati, John Hill, and a pianist, are engaged to begin the season. Sir George Bowen, Governor of Victoria, Sir Hercules Robinson, Governor of New South Wales, and Sir Anthony Musgrave, Governor of South Australia, are expected to be present on the opening night.

Mr J. Summers, Mus. Bac., Oxon, is making great preparations for the appearance of Mr Sims Reeves in Australia. It is understood that the great English tenor will first sing in Melbourne in The Messiah; and, at present, only three other concerts are announced for the first series. Tickets at a guinea are selling.

Mdlle Jenny Claus, the violinist, has returned from San Francisco, and has given three farewell concerts in the Melbourne Town Hall, shortly after which she left for Honolulu, where she is to be married to Mons. Pernet, French Consul at that place.

Costa's Eti has been performed twice at the Town Hall, under the direction of Mr Julius Hertz, with great success.

J. T. L. F.

Melbourne, 1st November, 1876.

VENICE.—Meyerbeer's Huguenots was the opera chosen to inaugurate the season at the Fenice, but the performance was so unsatisfactory, that the theatre had to be closed till other artists could be found to supply their places. Ernani, at the Goldoni, was not much more successful. There was a fresh baritone at each of the first three performances, each an utter failure.

THINGS MUSICAL AND PERSONAL.

BY FERDINAND HILLER.*

"Musikalisches und Persönliches von Ferdinand Hiller. Leipzig: Breitkopf and Härtel." A number of short occasional articles, previously published in different papers and periodicals, are here collected in one volume of 288 pages. Among them we find a biographical sketch of Cherubini, some short obituary articles, analyses of various musical compositions, such, for instance, as Verdi's Requiem and Handel's Theodora, and musico-æsthetic essays of a more general nature, like the admirable article "Dramen als Opern" (Dramas as Operas)—in which the author treats of the relation existing between Gluck's Iphigenia in Aulis and Mozart's Figaro and the pieces by Racine and Beaumarchais respectively on which they are founded. In addition to the above, there are a number of descriptive articles having nothing in common with music. To this class belong the account of a visit paid in 1875 to Copenhagen and Stockholm, Reminiscences of Louis Napoleon and Mme Récamier, &c. Without the uniting bond of a specially captivating literary individuality, such a motley miscellany of odds and ends could scarcely have been launched into the world. It is the fact of our perceiving this individuality always glancing at us with a clear, pleased look which gives the book its peculiar value. The sketches, dealing with the musical life of the Past as well as of the Present, are little cabinet specimens of the musical feuilleton. We invariably feel interested and spell-bound by the author's intimate acquaintance with his subject; by the liveliness of his eminently appreciative fancy; and the natural elegance of his style. The most varied instruction is conveyed to us in lightly-flowing and pleasing language. Something of the specific charm of the art to which they are devoted has passed into the author's thoughts and words. Like all men with minds of normal growth, Hiller takes more delight in affirming than in denying. Yet, whenever anything requires it, the above circumstance is not allowed to blunt his censure. Of his delicacy of conception, as well as of the freshness and clearness of exposition by which he succeeds in rendering even more than usually difficult questions easy of comprehension to his readers, we will here give just one or two examples, taken from the chapter: "Dramen als Opern," already mentioned. In this we read, among other things: "To music alone is given the power of combining into one whole opposite individualities and multitudes excited for good or evil. A crowd of persons speaking at the same time will always have something coarse or constrained about it on the stage—different characters, desiring to express their feelings altogether in passionate words, would be unintelligible, or, if saying the same thing, would appear absurd—but, when grasped by the harmony of tone, their multifariousness is merged into a higher unity. Nothing can, therefore, be more absurd than the wish to banish the chorus and concerted pieces from dramatic music, on the pretext that they are not in keeping with nature. With ordinary nature neither music nor any other art has aught to do; the unnatural and presupposed conditions of their existence are a necessity for that existence; when any art encroaches too much upon these, it becomes something contrary to artistic nature, and this is as bad in art as it is in life." Further on, when the author, in reference to Mozart's Figaro, is speaking of the Italian recitativo secco, we read: "This, which, as it were, merely renders spoken dialogue in tones based upon lightly and naturally flowing harmonies, forms the true atmosphere of sprightly opera—it is, so to say, the blue ether out of which the musical gems shine like so many stars. The contrast between our German spoken dialogue and the musical pieces by which they are followed, especially when those pieces are by Mozart, is much too great; it necessitates our continually springing into an ideal world, and then falling back into one which is only too real." For this reason Don Juan and Figaro will never fit, without some pressure, in the framework of the German stage; for, in their case, we have always to choose between one of two evils. We must either force upon our language, so rich in consonants, the parlando which we have borrowed from the Italians, and which is always repugnant to our idiom, or, by returning, after each separate piece of music, to the speech of every-day actuality, interrupt in the most objectionable manner the musical continuity. The first is the plan long since adopted in our performances of Don Juan. In those performances we have to pay strict attention to the lofty ideal of the work and of its final tragic catastrophe. In Figaro, on the contrary, the spoken scenes have kept their ground up to the present day. In consequence of the far greater amount of spoken dialogue requisite for the explanation of the involved action, they cannot be avoided; but, on account of the more realistic stamp impressed upon all the characters, they are more easily endured.

(To be continued.)

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

(From the "Globe.")

The London Ballad Concerts at St James's Hall, under the direction of Mr John Boosey, have become one of our popular musical institutions. The first concert of this (the 11th) season was given on Saturday last; and St James's Hall was unable to accommodate all who applied for admission. The English ballad is sui generis, and retains a hold on popular affection far stronger than has ever been secured by the "chanson" of France, the Lied of Germany, the "jota" and "seguidilla" of Spain, or the "canzone" of Italy. In its most successful form it is associated with the stirring of emotional feeling through the medium of narrative. "Auld Robin Gray," "The Bay of Biscay," and "Tom Bowling" are instances in point, each having been popular for nearly a century. Among modern examples may be cited Weiss's setting of Longfellow's "Village Blacksmith" and Mr John Hullah's of Kingsley's "Three Fishers." Outside the comparatively limited circle of connoisseurs capable of appreciating the beauties of abstract art there is a crowd of genuine amateurs, partially or wholly unqualified to seek enjoyment in recalcitrant sources, yet enjoying with the keenest relish such music as they can comprehend. To these the English ballad, whether narrative in form or such an embodiment of simple sentiment as "Home, sweet home," presents a source of enjoyment which never palls or satiates; and after a hundred repetitions it awakens a fresher delight and sincerer enthusiasm than the most brilliant tours de force of Italian opera singers. Its popularity was attested on Saturday last by the delight no less than by the numbers of the audience which filled the stalls, balconies, and orchestra of St James's Hall, in spite of "Winter and rough weather." Mr John Boosey may be congratulated on the permanent success of his endeavour to provide music for the million.

The programme included no less than twenty-one vocal pieces, three of which were encored. These were "The Pilgrim of Love," sung by Mr Sims Reeves; "Salley in our alley," by Mr E. Lloyd; and Mr Hullah's "Three Fishers," by Mad. Sterling. Successes were also made by Mad. Sherrington, in Taubert's "Woodland Song;" Mr Lloyd, in Wekerlin's (new) ballad "I love her so;" Mr Wadmore, in Cowen's "One kind glance" (from Pauline); and Mad. Sterling, in Gatty's song, "The hay is in the mow." A new song by Pinsuti, "Smile, and bid me live," was admirably given by Mr Sims Reeves, and an encore was in vain demanded. Besides the artists already named, Miss Anna Williams, Mr Kenningham, and Mr Kempton rendered acceptable service; and four concerted pieces were well executed by the London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr F. Walker. The programme was enriched by two pianoforte solos, Thalberg's "Com à gentil," and De Sivrai's "Balmoral," both encored, and both exquisitely played by Mad. Arabella Goddard, who was enthusiastically applauded. Mr Sidney Naylor's performance of his arduous duties as sole accompanist greatly contributed to the success of the entertainment. The second concert is announced for Wednesday evening, January 17.

Moscow.—A fire broke out recently in the Tanejeff Theatre, and burned it to the ground. One person unfortunately was killed, and a great many were wounded while endeavouring to escape. The building was insured for 42,000 roubles.

MADRID.—Fra Diavolo has been performed at the Teatro Real. Signor Stagno produced anything but a favourable impression as the hero. Signora Rubini, on the contrary, was much applauded as Zerlina.—A first-class Italian operatic company will, it is said, perform at the Teatro del Principe Alfonso in the spring.

* From the National-Zeitung.

THERESE TIETJENS IN CORK.

The Cork Examiner writes as follows about a recent concert given under the name of this incomparable artist:—

"The large audience who assembled in the Operahouse to welcome Mlle Tietjens and the eminent artists by whom she was accompanied had every reason to be satisfied with the entertainment provided for them. A programme, in which there was much good music, and some not over familiar to the frequenters of concert-rooms, was executed in a style that left scarcely anything to be desired. The great attraction of the evening was, of course, the gifted prima donna, to whom an enthusiastic ovation was given. Two of the pieces set down for her in the programme were admirably adapted for the display of the finest qualities of her voice and style. In the magnificent scena from Oberon, 'Ocean, thou mighty monster,' the dramatic power in which she is still unapproachable was conspicuous; and the audience, forgetful in their enthusiasm of the heavy strain it imposed on the singer, all but insisted on an encore. The second piece was also Weber's, a delicious air from Euryanthe, 'Glocklein im Thale,' wholly different in style and structure from the first, and in this the gracious and finished vocalisation of the singer was admirable beyond all measure. Mlle Tietjens also sang 'Kathleen Mavourneen,' and, in response to the inevitable encore, the 'Minstrel Boy;' but as most of our readers must by this time be familiar with the fine expressive style in which she executes both melodies, it need only be said that her rendering of them last evening displayed all her wonted power. It was a pleasure to us to find that the ample and splendid voice which has been so long the glory of the lyric stage shows no trace of decay, and is still as rich and capable as ever."

None more than Irishmen can better appreciate and sympathise with what is really great and genuine in art.

FELICIEN DAVID.

All kinds of honours are now being paid to the memory of Félicien David by the Parisians, who, while that musician was living, took comparatively small interest in either him or his works. Now, his "Ode-Symphony," Le Désert, a composition, which, though not devoid of a certain Oriental character, is symphonically a very ordinary effort, has become quite the rage. David was never, to speak plainly, the man his surviving compatriots are endeavouring to make him out. At the best, a musician of secondary rank, as a composer of operas, his Perle de Brésil—produced at the then Théâtre-Lyrique in 1847—made slight impression; while in later years his Lalla Roukh can scarcely be said to have raised him much higher. In matters relating to music the French (or rather, the Parisians—the "provincials" counting for nothing) are a "peculiar people." It appears hardly credible that, since the opening of their great new Operahouse, while such a laboured, dreary concoction as La Juive of Halévy—not to name others of even slenderer legitimate pretensions—has found a place in the repertory, the greatest work of Auber, incomparably their most distinguished composer for the theatre, has been ignored. We allude, of course, to La Muette de Portici, which we, in England, have long known and admired as Masanello. This reminds us of an anecdote connected with Auber. The Désert of Félicien David, though it never made any strong impression in London or elsewhere out of France, created an undeniable sensation in Paris. After the Désert came Christophe Colomb, which was a comparative failure. On leaving the concert-room, at the end of the first performance, Adolphe Adam asked Auber's opinion of the new work. "Il est descendu de son chameau" ("He has got off his camel"), was the brief and witty reply—which, in six words, suggests an exhaustive criticism. The young, and we may add the middle-aged, French musicians, are at present, in a large measure, Wagnerites—which would have shocked Auber, and would by no means have been to the taste of David, realist as he was at bottom. We wonder why some Parisian entrepreneur does not revive one of the orchestra quintets, or symphonies, of Félicien David. True, they are as sketchy in design and as slight in development as the two symphonies (in G and D) of M. Gounod; they have merit, nevertheless.—Graphic.

TURIN.—After only two performances of Lucrezia Borgia, the manager, a certain Sig. Pompeo Grossi, brought the season at the Teatro Vittorio Emanuele to an unexpected close.

BRUSSELS.—Mme Fursch-Madier has appeared at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Robert le Diable, pending the production of Aida, for which she was more especially engaged.

MANTUA.—While conducting a performance of La Contessa d'Amalfi, Sig. Dall'Argine was taken so ill that it was necessary to convey him home. He now lies in a dangerous condition.

WAIFS.

A subscription has been started for a monument to Déjazet.

When women wore crinoline, they resembled this O. Now they are pinned back, they look like this I.

M. Maurin, professor of the violin at the Paris Conservatory, has been appointed an "Officier d'Académie."

M. Ch. Lecocq's Girofle-Girofla, translated into Dutch, has been performed at the Frascati-Theatre, Amsterdam.

Herr Wilhelmj, after fulfilling a series of engagements in the provinces, has left for his country seat, near Wiesbaden.

Herr Robert Eitner, of Berlin, has been created a corresponding member of the Geneva Institute of Science and Literature.

M. Edmond Hocmelle, organist of St Philippe du Roule and of the Luxembourg, Paris, has married Mlle Joséphine Goethe.

Miss José Sherrington was compelled to sing Sullivan's "Let me dream again" thrice, at Mr Webb's réunion at St George's Hall.

Mr Barton McGuckin has returned from a very successful tour with Mlle Edith Wynne, Miss D'Alton, and Signor Federici.

Mdles Lamare and Künzler, two premières danseuses, very popular in Italy and elsewhere, have abandoned the stage for matrimony.

A one-act comic opera, Le Chanteur Florentin, words by MM. Ryon and Legentil, music by M. Willent Bordogni, will shortly be put into rehearsal at the Théâtre-Lyrique.

A marble bust of Auber has been placed on his monument in Père-Lachaise. It will not be uncovered before the 29th, when the monument is to be formally inaugurated.

Herr Franke informs us that he has come into possession of a violin, by Joseph Guarnerius, one of the finest specimens extant by this great maker. It is valued at 300 guineas.

After Le Roi de Lahore is produced at the Grand-Opéra, M. Massenet will commence the score of a three-act libretto, La Fille de Jephthé, by M. Louis Gallet, for the Opéra-Comique.

The programme of the fifth Popular Concert at Brussels will consist of extracts from Herr R. Wagner's Tetralogical Trilogy; that of the fifth concert, of Charlotte Corday, by M. Peter Benoit.

According to the Musikalisches Wochenblatt, Herr R. Wagner has returned ere this to Bayreuth, and is busily engaged in preparing for the series of performances which are to take place in August.

M. Gustave Lafargue, a theatrical critic of the Paris Figaro and general secretary of the Opéra-Comique, has just succumbed to disease of the heart, from which he had suffered several years. He was barely forty-three.

Sig. Carlo Guasco, a once famous tenor, for whom Donizetti, Ricci, and Verdi wrote operas, has just died in his native place, Solero, near Alexandria, in Piedmont. He bequeathes 200,000 francs for the establishment of an orphanage at Solero.

A Springfield butcher was invited recently to attend a minstrel show, but positively declined, even when a free ticket was offered him. Pressed for his reason, he replied: "If I went I should see so many people who owe me for meat that it would spoil my fun."

At the Paris Opéra-Comique six operas, Cendrillon, Le Maçon, Les Dragons de Villars, Zampa, La Fête du Village voisin, and Le Toréador, were, a few days since, being rehearsed simultaneously. Le Maçon will be performed on the 29th inst., the day of the inauguration of the Auber Monument at Père-Lachaise.

Graun's Passion music, Der tod Jesu, will be given at the "special services" to be held at St Gabriel's, Warwick Square, Pimlico, on Ash Wednesday, February 14, at eight o'clock, p.m., and every Wednesday during Lent, under the direction of Mr Marcellus Higgs, the organist and director of the choir.

A Musical and Dramatic Morning Performance will be given at the Théâtre-Italien, on the 4th February, in aid of the Société de Secours Mutuels des Ex-Militaires. Mdmes Krauss, Singer, Reggiani, MM. Capoul, Bouhy, Bonnehée, Mayan, and several members of the Comédie Française have promised their services.

Prizes were carried off at the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition by Signor Gaetano Canedi and Giuseppe Elli, both of Milan, for the design for a theatre, and for seats best adapted for an audience. The first prize for musical instruments was awarded to the firm of C. Mahillon and Co., Brussels, who obtained the same distinction at the Exposition of Santiago, in Chili.

The following lines were written by a Saginaw (Michigan) poet while floating down Flint River in a dug-out:—

"Worst the Red Injuns here took their delights;
Fisht, fit, and bled;
Now most of the inhabitants is white,
With nary red."

Tagliafico de Retz has been singing with great success at Nice. A duet, "Saint-Janvier," which he sings with a fair pupil of his, Mdlle de L. . . , has become very popular.

The Northumberland Scholarship for Music, the competition for which took place on January 3rd, was gained by Miss Ella Hall, of the Edinburgh Educational Institution, pupil of our townsmen, Messrs Arthur Edmunds and W. Adlington. This scholarship enables the successful candidate to prosecute her music studies at the National Training School for Music for four years, the sum allowed being £75 per annum.—Edinburgh Courant.

In the second act of Guillaume Tell two horsewomen and two horsemen cross the back of the stage. During a recent performance at the Grand-Opéra, Paris, the horse ridden by Mad. Michaud slipped. In rising quickly he threw his rider, dragging her some distance along the ground. There was great commotion on the stage and in the front of the house, though the performance was not stopped. A medical man was in attendance, and in a short time Mad. Michaud was conveyed home. She sustained no serious injury, and in a few days will, probably, have quite recovered.

The grand organ in the Cathedral at Orleans is about to be thoroughly repaired and improved by the introduction of all the modern inventions. It was built in 1702, for the Church of the Benedictines, at Fleury-sur-Loire, inaugurated on Whit-Sunday, 1703, and removed to Orleans in 1826. It has long required repairs, owing to the injuries it sustained during the war of 1870. To carry them out properly, however, 60,000 francs would be needed, and the revenues of the Cathedral, together with private gifts and whatever could be raised from every other available source, would not suffice. When the organ of St Eustache's, Paris, was destroyed by fire, a lottery was got up, and the organ restored with the proceeds. Encouraged by this precedent, the Bishop of Orleans has accepted the offer made him of a concert in one of the best localities of Paris for the organ fund, under the patronage of Mad. de MacMahon.

Mark Twain has invented a patent self-pasting scrap-book, about which he writes to a friend: "I have invented and patented a scrap-book, not to make money out of it, but to economise the profanity of this country. You know that when the average man wants to put something in his scrap-book, he can't find his paste—then he swears. Or, if he finds it, it is dried so hard that it is only fit to eat—then he swears. If he uses mucilage, it mingles with the ink, and next year he can't read his scrap—the result is barrels and barrels of profanity. This can all be saved and devoted to other irritating things, where it will do more real and lasting good, simply by substituting my self-pasting scrap-book for the old-fashioned one. . . . One of the most refined and cultivated young ladies in Hartford (daughter of a clergyman) told me herself, with grateful tears standing in her eyes, that since she began to use my scrap-book she has not sworn a single oath."

The first of a series of Masked Balls will take place at the Grand-Opéra on the 13th inst. As our readers are aware, there will be two conductors, M. Olivier Métra and Herr Johann Strauss. The former gentleman will conduct the dance-music properly so-called; the latter will conduct some of his own compositions in the intervals between the dances. M. Olivier Métra occupies at the present day a high position as a writer of dance music in the French capital. Born about 1830, he began by playing the double-bass in various orchestras. While thus employed, he taught himself the piano. He was a pupil of M. Elwart's at the Paris Conservatoire, where he obtained a first prize for harmony somewhere about 1855. He then officiated as conductor at different balls, those of the Elysée-Montmartre being among the number, and began to make himself known by numerous charming waltzes, some of which, such as "La Vague," "Les Roses," &c., rapidly became popular. For three years M. Métra has been conductor at the Folies-Bergère, for which he has written the music of some twenty ballets. He conducted, a few years ago, at the balls of the Opéra-Comique.

THE CLIFFORD DRAMATIC CLUB.—The members of this club gave a performance on Saturday last, 6th inst., at St George's Hall, for the benefit of the Infirmary for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, 26, Margaret Street, Cavendish Square. Usually, amateurs, when playing in the cause of charity, find the full advantage of the fact that the virtue in question covereth, in the eyes of critics, a vast amount of bad acting. But the members of the Clifford Dramatic Club form an exception to the general rule. Their merit is far above the average, and that critic must be, indeed, difficult to please who does not speak favourably of their efforts. The pieces selected by them for performance on the 6th inst. were a pastoral, as we may term it, entitled The Rosebud of Stinging Nettle Farm, and the drama of Blow for Blow, the one and the other by that prolific and clever author, H. J. Byron. Both pieces were rendered with great spirit and an amount of ease and knowledge of the stage which many a professional might envy. The characters of John Drummond and of Charley Spraggs, in the drama, were excellently sustained by Mr W. E. Garstin and Mr Aubrey Garstin respectively. The former gentleman's portraiture of the villain Drummond was well conceived and as well carried out, while the vis comica displayed by Mr Aubrey Garstin gave the risible nerves of the audience plenty to do. Among the ladies we may more particularly mention Mrs Belmore, Miss Alice Nixon, and Miss Claire. Want of space prevents our going into detail. We must content ourselves, therefore, with stating that all concerned acquitted themselves well, and afforded great satisfaction to a very full house. We are glad to think that the performance must have brought in a respectable sum for the admirable institution on behalf of which it was given.

MARSEILLES.—The Cirque Cotrely has been destroyed by fire.

PAVIA.—The Salvator Rosa of Gomez has been successfully produced.

NAPLES.—The Teatro San Carlo opened on the 22nd December with La Forza del Destino.

BARCELONA.—Signora Pantaleoni and Signor Ciapini have been re-engaged at the Teatro del Liceo.

COLOGNE.—Herr Ignaz Brüll's comic opera, Das goldene Kreuz, has been well received at the Stadttheater.

ROME.—The Teatro Apollo opened with Verdi's Aida, the principal parts by Signore Mariani-Masi and Edelsberg, Signor de Sanctis, &c.

MODENA.—To the three previously existing theatres, the Municipale, the Aliprandi, and the Goldoni, a fourth, the Teatro del Patronato, has just been added.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

MOMENTS HEUREUX. Etude pour le Violon (sans Accompagnement) ou Piano seul, Composée, et dédiée à son Maître, Mons PROSPER SAINTON, par F. J. AMOR (de Salisbury, en Angleterre). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	- 3 0
RINK GALOP	- 4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	- 4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	- 4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	- 3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	- 4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	- 4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	- 4 0
WEST-END POLKA	- 3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	- 3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	- 3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	- 3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	- 3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	- 3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.	s. d.
CHANTS DE L'AUBE	- 4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	- 4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	- 3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	- 4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	- 3 0
HARMONIUM	- 3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	- 3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	- 4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2s. 6d. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CRAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
OVERTURE	- 3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	- 3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	- 3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	- 2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	- 4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	- 4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	- 3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron"	- 3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night"	- 3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	- 3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring"	- 4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	- 3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	- 4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	- 3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
...	5 0
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	...
...	2 6
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	...
...	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

MODERN INSTRUCTION BOOKS.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S TUTOR FOR ENGLISH SINGERS. LADIES' VOICES.

In Three Parts. Price 5s. each ; or complete, 12s. 6d. in cloth boards.

From "The Times."

"An artist who, like Madame Sainton-Dolby, has attained eminence by the most legitimate means, possesses a double claim to consideration when laying before the world the secret of her art, and pointing out the way by which others may follow in her steps. Such teaching has a special value, and, therefore, all lovers of music must welcome the volume in which one of the most accomplished English singers imparts the result of her experience.

"Her Manual is divided into three parts. The first part sets forth the elements of vocalisation in a manner at once clear and succinct, and is enforced by examples in the shape of carefully graduated lessons with pianoforte accompaniment. The second section contains valuable hints on expression, style, and taste, and those higher qualities which distinguish the genuine artist from the ordinary singer.

"In the third part of her work, which to many may prove the most attractive, Madame Sainton gives suggestions as to the manner in which many of the best known airs from various authors should be vocally delivered. The selection is varied and excellent, and the suggestions are invaluable. If every vocal aspirant could not only understand them, but make practical use of them, we should have a great deal more legitimate singing than we can boast of now. We need add no more than that Madame Sainton's Tutor for English Singers is a real boon to those for whose instruction it is especially intended."

PANSEON'S METHOD FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO VOICES.

Adopted by the Paris Conservatoire. A New Edition of this celebrated Method, with an English text, is published for the benefit of the Composer's widow.

Price 8s. in cloth boards.

NAVA'S METHOD OF INSTRUCTION FOR BARITONE VOICES;

Containing a Complete System of Solfeggi, Vocalises, and Exercises, with General Rules on the Art of Singing. 200 pages. By GAETANO NAVA, 40 years Professor at the Conservatoire at Milan. Edited and Translated by his Pupil, CHARLES SANTLEY.

Price 10s. 6d., cloth boards.

The Athenæum says :—"If amateur baritones do not make themselves rivals of Mr Santley, it can only be from lack of voice and intelligence, for the system of Signor Nava is admirable in every respect. The exercises and solfeggi are eminently calculated to develop the attributes of sensibility and of agility, the two essential elements of good singing."

VACCAJ'S PRACTICAL METHOD OF ITALIAN SINGING

WITHOUT THE USE OF SOLFEGGI, AND WITH ENGLISH AND ITALIAN TEXT.

New Edition. Price 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

DR. SPARK'S HANDY-BOOK FOR THE ORGAN;

Containing Complete Instructions for the Use of the Manuals and Pedals, with 150 various Examples by the best Composers for the Organ.

Price 7s. 6d., cloth.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Dr Spark has supplied a real want. He has compiled an excellent Manual of Instruction for the Organ, by the use of which, many of the faults of other bad systems may be avoided. Young organists can have no better tutor than Dr Spark."—Nottingham Guardian.

"Dr Spark is the well-known Organist of Leeds, and his name alone is sufficient guarantee of the worth of the book."—Figaro.
"A more thorough and complete Organ Tutor than this we have never seen. Every point of difficulty in the study of the instrument is fully elucidated, and the treatment of all parts and peculiarities is exhaustively dealt with. Let every one who would learn to play the Organ well obtain and study Dr Spark's Handy-Book. We can thoroughly and heartily recommend it."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

ELLIOTT'S HANDY-BOOK FOR THE HARMONIUM;

Containing Complete Instructions for Playing the Instrument, Thirty Progressive Studies, Twelve Pieces for the use of the Harmonium with one stop, in addition to a large selection of music for Instruments of various sizes.

Price 5s., cloth.

London: BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street, W.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 5.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
6d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—MENDELSSOHN'S BIRTHDAY,
FEBRUARY 3, 1869. In Commemoration of this Event the Programme of THIS DAY'S Concert will be drawn exclusively from MENDELSSOHN'S Works.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT and AFTERNOON PROMENADE. THIS DAY. In Commemoration of MENDELSSOHN'S BIRTHDAY. The Programme will include: Overture, "The Wedding of Camacho" (Mendelssohn); Concerto, for violin and orchestra (Mendelssohn); Adagio, in E flat, for strings, from an Unpublished Symphony (Mendelssohn); The Scotch Symphony (Mendelssohn). Vocalists—Mr Edward Lloyd; the Crystal Palace Choir. Solo Violin—Herr Joachim. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Reserved (numbered) Stalls, in Area and Gallery, Half-Crown; Area or Gallery Seats (unnumbered), One Shilling. Transferable Stall Tickets for the Series of Thirteen Concerts, One Guinea.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY.—President—SIR JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Eleventh Season, 1877. The Prospectus is now ready. The Concerts and Soirées of the Society afford an excellent opportunity for rising artists to make their début, and for composers to have their works introduced. Further particulars on application to H. G. HOPKIN, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON.

MR KUHE'S MUSICAL FESTIVAL will commence TUESDAY, Feb. 13. Principal Features:—Handel's Acis and Galatea, and Maria; Haydn's Creation; Verdi's Requiem; Gems from the Oratorios; Lalla Rookh; a new Cantata by Mr Frederic Clay (written expressly for Mr Kuhe's Festival); M^{rs} Salanton-Dolby's new Cantata, "The Legend of St Dorothy"; Mr J. F. Barnett's "The Ancient Mariner"; Mr A. Sullivan's Incidental Music to the Merchant of Venice; Sir Julius Benedict's Overture, "The Enchanted Forest"; Signor Ardit's new Grand Operatic Selections from Lohengrin, Tannhäuser, and Verdi's Aida; a Wagner Concert; and a Classical Morning Concert. Solo Pianoforte—M^{rs} Arabella Goddard. Sir Julius Benedict, M.M. Ardit, J. F. Barnett, F. Clay, and A. Sullivan will conduct their own works. For special railway facilities see the February time-table. Prospectuses containing full particulars at Messrs E. Porrs, 167, North Street.

LANGHAM HALL, 43, GREAT PORTLAND STREET.—In Aid of M^{rs} Weldon's Orphanage, MONDAY Evening, April 9, 1877, at Eight p.m. Mr Charles K. Salaman in the Chair. M^{rs} WELDON'S THIRTIETH ANNUAL SOCIAL EVENING. "The Two Paths; or, Conservation and Restoration." Mr Charles Lunn will deliver a Lecture on the above, illustrated by the Children from M^{rs} Weldon's Orphanage. Reserved seats, 5s.; unreserved, 2s. 6d. Admission, One Shilling.

* This Essay, of which Mr Charles Lunn has presented the Copyright to the Orphanage, will be published, with additional remarks and an account of the Soirée by the MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, 39, Great Marlborough Street, Regent Street, London. Price One Shilling.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY (Established 1872) for Amateur and Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms, and the Instruction includes: Lessons in Singing, Harmony, Sight Singing (Solfege), English Elocution, Italian Language, and Choral Practice. The present Term commenced on January 16, and New Students can be examined on Tuesdays, between Three and Four o'clock. Prospectuses and further Particulars can be obtained at 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park; of Mr VERT, 52, New Bond Street; also of Messrs CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond Street.

"MARINELLA."

MISS ROBERTSON will sing RANDEGGER's new Canzone, "MARINELLA," at the Liverpool Philharmonic Society's Concert, on Tuesday, Feb. 6.

"THE MESSAGE"

MR VERNON RIGBY will sing BLÜMENTHAL's admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at Southsea, Feb. 5 and 6; Brighton, Feb. 9; West Bromwich, Feb. 12; Birmingham, Feb. 13; and Cambridge, Feb. 22.

"KILLARNEY."

MISS CATHERINE PENNA will sing BALFE's popular Song, "KILLARNEY," at Mr Henry Nicholson's Concert, Leicester, on Tuesday, Feb. 27.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR ALFRED BAYLIS will sing the popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on March 1, at Birmingham; and Stratford-on-Avon, March 2.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL, at Eight o'clock. Notice.—In consequence of the great success of the Concert of Jan. 34, a Second Selection of OLD ENGLISH BALLADS will be given on Wednesday next, when the following will be sung: "I've been roaming" and "By the margin of fair Zurich's waters," M^{rs} Helen Sherrington; "Black-eyed Susan," M^{rs} Antoinette Sterling; "Balliff's daughter of Islington" and "Primrose deck the bank's green side," Miss Helen D'Alton; "Tom Bowling," Mr Sims Reeves; "The anchor's weighed" and "Under the greenwood tree," Mr Edward Lloyd; "The Leather Bottle" and "The Friar of Orders Gray," Mr Maybrick; "Drink to me only," Mr Beckett; "The Wolf," Mr de Lacy. M^{rs} Arabella Goddard will perform Thalberg's "Home, sweet Home" and Mendelssohn's "Songs without words." Old English Glee will be sung by the London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr Fred. Walker. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 4s. and 2s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets of Austin, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street.

TO AMATEUR FLAUTISTS AND OTHERS.

A GENTLEMAN (having no further use for them) wishes to dispose of a SILVER FLUTE, by RUDALL, CARTE & Co., "1867 Patent," with D and D sharp Shake Keys, also the key recommended by Mr Collard. The Flute, in case, complete, cost 52 Guineas. Also an 18-carat gold head, fitting the above Flute, which cost 30 Guineas. To be sold Bargains, either separately or together. Address—"A. P." 3, Promenade Terrace, Cheltenham.

SITUATION WANTED.

WANTED immediately, by a Young Lady, aged 17 years, a SITUATION in a Music Warehouse. Is a good Pianist, and can teach. Good references. Address "DALTA," Musical Warehouse, 18, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

THE MONTHLY MUSICAL RECORD.—The cheapest

High-class Paper on Music. Yearly Subscription, 2s. 6d. post-free. Years 1871 to 1876 (vols. 1 to 6) bound, each net 3s. "Intelligible and dispassionate criticisms and reviews, analyses of interesting compositions, and a like determination to discountenance the fictitious either in art or its practice; these are the qualifications of the paper."—Morning Post. AUGER & Co., 86, Newgate Street, and 31, Regent Street.

MISS EMMA BERTHOLD.

MISS EMMA BERTHOLD has Returned to Town, and can at once accept ENGAGEMENTS for the principal Soprano part in Oratorios (ancient and modern) and Cantatas. Also Miscellaneous Concerts, Soirées, &c. All communications to be addressed to her, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MISS JULIA WIGAN requests that all Communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park, W.; or to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street.

SIGNOR BONETTI has Returned to Town, and requests that all communications be addressed to him to the care of Messrs D. DAVISON & Co., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street.

MDME ENRIQUEZ begs that all communications be addressed to her at No. 5, OAKLEY SQUARE, N.W.

MR WILFORD MORGAN requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to his residence, 18, Surrey Street, W.C.

MR GERARD COVENTRY (Tenor), having returned to Town from his Provincial Tour, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Concerts. Address—Care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Among the least generally familiar of Handel's oratorios—we mean, of course, as a whole—none better deserves a periodical hearing than Solomon. Though written at the age of sixty-three, eleven years before his death (1759), not long before he was attacked by the gutta serena which eventually deprived him of sight, it is marked by astounding freshness and vigour, while it contains enough to show that had he flourished somewhat later he might have rivalled any of his contemporaries as a dramatic composer, with as much facility as he surpassed all others, J. S. Bach alone accepted, in the composition of sacred music. Though not remarkable as a literary production, the book of Solomon, whether supplied by Dr Morell or from any other source matters little, afforded Handel opportunities for varied colouring, of which he availed himself with his accustomed ingenuity. The three parts into which it is divided—the Dedication of the Temple, the Judgment, and the visit of the Queen of Sheba, respectively setting forth the Piety, Wisdom, and Splendour of Solomon—have each a special character. The first is devoted exclusively to praise and thanksgiving for the great work achieved in the building of the Temple, until the arrival of Pharaoh's daughter, the wife of Solomon, gives occasion for an episode about conjugal happiness, which the musician has turned to admirable account, as is shown in the exquisitely-melodious close, "May no rash intruder disturb their soft hours," familiarly, though on grounds by no means incontestable, styled the "Nightingale" chorus. The second part, chiefly taken up by the famous "Judgment," is a masterpiece of dramatic power. The contrast between the two women who assert their claims to the possession of the child could hardly be made more striking, the half-concealed levity of the false mother and the irrepressible anguish of the true, after sentence is pronounced, being depicted with equal felicity. The trio here, in which the women plead first alternately, then in combination, while the words of the King, who holds the balance of justice, are uttered ever and anon with grave solemnity, might even persuade Richard Wagner out of that most indefensible tenet in his theory, which would abolish concerted music for voices, and leave the entire expression of varied emotion to the orchestra. No imaginable orchestra could possibly impart such deep meaning as does the human voice to the pathetic air, "Can I see my infant gored?," allotted to the rightful mother, who prefers abandoning the child to her unscrupulous adversary rather than submit it to Solomon's terrible decrees. Handel's accompaniments are suggestive enough for all purposes, while they allow the vocal melody to follow out its rhythmical course to the end, and the singer to enunciate the words with all the more convincing eloquence. We may add here that hardly in our remembrance has this incomparable air been given with more impressive significance, from beginning to end, than by Mme Edith Wynne; it was simply perfect. The grand choruses in honour of the King, which form the introduction and peroration to the second part, constitute a splendid framework for this touching dramatic episode. The third part, setting out with a triumphal symphony, a sort of "feu de joie" for the orchestra, describes the visit made to Solomon by the Queen of Sheba, and, if only for what, not over intelligibly, has been denominated the "Passion choruses," would live for ever. Handel here puts forth his utmost strength, and the comparative insignificance of the words, beyond the mere point of their suggestiveness, is forgotten in the splendour of the music. One chorus especially, "Draw the tear from hopeless love," has scarcely a parallel in pathetic expression. Then, again, we have two magnificent double choruses, to bring the oratorio triumphantly to an end. Of course, in the performance of Solomon by the Sacred Harmonic Society very large curtailments are made. These are inevitable; and the only wonder is that at any time and under any circumstances the oratorio could at one sitting have been performed literally in accordance with existing authorised editions. We doubt, indeed, if it ever was so given. Some 20 recitatives, airs, &c., are left out; but, happily, all the choruses, double and single, are preserved. Such grand and masterly double choruses as "Your harps and cymbals," "With pious heart," "From the censor curling rise," and "Praise the Lord with harp and tongue," not to single out others, could ill be spared.

It is agreeable to compliment our long-standing representative Choral Society, which has helped to spread a taste for music of the highest class as perseveringly as any association of amateurs and professors that could be named, on a performance of Handel's oratorio in almost every respect entitled to high praise. The members of the chorus, allowing for occasional drawbacks—where are these not to be remarked?—performed their duties with equal spirit and intelligence. Not to speak of the grander choral movements, we were particularly satisfied with that elaborate piece of contrapuntal writing, "Throughout the land Jehovah's praise," and with "Draw the tear from hopeless love" (referred to above), which, although among the finest and most impressive numbers in Solomon, their high merit notwithstanding, ordinarily obtain scant recognition. The leading solo voice parts were entrusted to artists thoroughly competent. Since Mme Sinton-Dolby gave up singing in public, there has been no such representative of the music allotted to Solomon as our English contralto, Mme Patey, who has the art of declaiming recitative in a degree that few can boast. In the familiar air, "What though I trace," she exhibited equal artistic power, and created so strong an impression that the audience insisted upon its being repeated, and the accomplished singer had no alternative but to comply with the unanimous demand. In other passages Mme Patey was no less happy. Upon Mme Edith Wynne's faultless rendering of the music confided to the "First Woman," in the "Judgment" scene, we have dwelt in appropriate terms. She also undertook what is left of the music belonging to Solomon's Queen in the first part, including the air, "With thee the unshelter'd moor I tread." That appertaining to the Queen of Sheba (Part 3) and to the "Second Woman" (Part 2) devolved upon Miss Julia Wigan, pupil of Mad. Sinton-Dolby, a young lady fast rising in her profession, who, besides elsewhere winning deserved credit, gave such point and meaning to the characteristic air, "Thy sentence, great King, is prudent and wise," as to augur much for her future career. The tenor was Mr Henry Guy, another aspirant (from our Royal Academy of Music), with a telling voice and legitimate promise. Mr Guy is evidently earnest and painstaking, and this was especially proved by his ready execution of the music assigned to Zadok the priest, including the here and there florid, and (pace Handel) by no means very sacerdotal air, "See the tall palm" (Part 2), and, later on (Part 3), the hardly less secularly-toned "Golden columns." According to Handel's musical representation of him, Zadok must have been the most jovial and comfortable of priests. What little fell to the solo bass—namely, the Levite's air, "Praise ye the Lord"—was done so well by Mr Maybrick as to cause regret that no more could have been set down for him. The orchestra, allowing for the prevalent loudness of brass instruments, which now and then went far to drown the voices, was excellent throughout; and Sir Michael Costa (whose additional accompaniments were used) conducted in his accustomed masterly style. —Times.

Hence opera bouffe! quantum suf.
Of all such silly trashy stuff,
Your breakdown now is sure complete,
Go, hide your legs, and use your feet;
Of our applause show you're deserving,
And copy, if you can, P. J. B. B. B.
BENWELL.

VIENNA.—Herr Josef Rubinstein, the pianist, who took so active a share in the preparatory arrangements for the Bayreuth performances last summer, is at present in this capital, where he thinks of settling permanently.—By an Imperial decree, and as a mark of the satisfaction afforded in the highest quarters by his energy, judgment, and administrative talent, Herr Franz Jauner has now been definitively appointed manager of the Imperial Operahouse, a position he has hitherto really held upon approval only.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

Examination for the Degree of Bachelor of Music. FRIDAY, DECEMBER 29TH, 1876. 2 TO 4 P.M.(Concluded from page 60.)

17. Copy this extract with the real pitch of all the notes for the transposing instruments, employing the G (treble) and F (bass) clefs only. Prefix the time-signature, and state from what symphony it is taken.

Adagio molto e cantabile.

FLUTES

HAUTOBOYS

CLARIONETS in B \flat

BASSOONS

HORNS in B \flat

HORNS in E \flat

TRUMPETS in B \flat

DRUMS B \flat and F

VIOLINS 1st

VIOLINS 2nd

VIOLA

VIOLONCELLO

DOUBLE BASS

Adagio molto e cantabile.

espress.

Pizz.

Pizz.

"A NICHT WI' BURNS."

(From the "Sunday Times.")

According to general construction, "a nicht wi' Burns" is by no means the simple time of intellectual gratification which might be pre-supposed; on the contrary, the term has sometimes been considered as a synonym for late hours, an inordinate consumption of "whisky-toddy," and a headache. Under Mr Austin's guidance, however, the Scotch contingent of the inhabitants of an overgrown capital had a more agreeable and less pernicious way of spending an evening with Scotia's bard at St James's Hall, when the birthday of Robert Burns was commemorated by a festival of song. The British Isles are rich in legendary tradition, and with their ancient fictions (for who shall dare assert that history is correct?) music and poesy form no unimportant link. Their melodies are eminently characteristic of the different nationalities, and it must be a very uneducated ear that cannot distinguish the airs belonging to England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. The feature of English ballad is a bluff, homely, sturdy strain, generally cast in the major key, as substantial in its essential qualities as the people whence it originated. In the Welsh airs we find intense patriotism and poetic sympathy, also a nice appreciation of melodic form, whether minor or major be employed. The Scotch and Irish melodies are based upon imperfect modes (taking the diatonic scale as our standard), otherwise having few features in common. The close upon the dominant, as in "Scots wha hae," is seldom found in Irish airs; and, taken all in all, there is a prevalence of the major tone in Scotch music, whereas Irish traditional airs are generally found cast in the minor. None will deny, however, that the music of our Northern Isles is attractive and rich in quantity, or that national pride is called up through the influence of our native strains more readily than by any other.

Robert Burns, the poet, whose birthday was celebrated on Thursday the 25th, has a history which is familiar to all. The fact that he walked at the tail of the plough while composing some of his finest verses is known both to young and old; that he was a self-taught man—one who by sheer application raised himself to the elevation of Scotland's representative poet—is equally familiar. The story of the poet-ploughman is, nevertheless, a sad one. Spoiled by adulation, and weakened in his set purpose by the flattery of parasites, Burns never rose to the eminence his mental powers should have commanded; and after living upon a pittance of seventy pounds a year, derived from the Excise, while the kingdom was feasting in delight upon his works, he died at the early age of thirty-six years, comparatively friendless. It is a pitiful reflection, yet not so sad but that it has its counterpart in other directions. Take the case of Mozart, for instance, who died at the same age, and who was huddled into a common grave, uncared for and unattended. However, it is not immediate acknowledgment which establishes fame any more than it is position which gives notoriety; as Burns himself says,—"The rank is but the guinea's stamp, the man's the gowd for a' that." It is not here the place to estimate the merit of Burns as a poet or songwriter; he occupies in Scottish breasts a position somewhat akin to that which Dibdin and Tom Moore take in the sister-countries,—with this difference, however, that Burns, as a "son of the soil," has won a wider field of acknowledgment in Scotland than either of the writers with whom we have (perhaps somewhat inaptly) brought him into comparison in his. Take Burns' writings as we may, we can but admit that their influence is healthy, and that they possess—apart from their truly romantic and poetic feeling—an impulse and verve to be felt by all. We shall not pretend to criticise the strains which the poet has ennobled with his verse; there is no need to dwell upon the imperfection of the Scotch scale any more than there is necessity to condemn the bagpipes in a wholesale manner before those who swear that the pibroch is the sweetest of music. Enough to show how Burns' birthday was celebrated at St James's Hall.

Of vocalists there was good store, the names of Miss José Sherrington, Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Eileen Richardson, Mdme Antoinette Sterling, Mr Thurlay Beale, Mr Pearson, and Mr Sims Reeves being in the list. As an additional stimulus for Scottish appetites, two other singers—Miss Hunter and Mr Walker—were announced, with the tempting intimation that they were from Scotland. To vary the vocal selection, Mr J. P. Clarke's Scots Fusilier Guards' band was in attendance, their efforts being strictly regulated by the nature of the rest of the programme. The first part was devoted to the songs of Burns, as follows:—"My heart is sair" (Miss Annie Sinclair); "Scots wha hae" (Mr Thurlay Beale); "Afton Water" (Miss Eileen Richardson); "Highland Mary" (Mr Pearson); "Comin' thro' the rye" (Miss José Sherrington); "Ye banks and braes" (Mr Sims Reeves); "O' a' the airts" (Miss Hunter); "There was a lad was born in Kyle" (Mr Walker); "A man's a man for a' that" (Mdme A. Sterling); and "Auld Lang Syne" (Mr Sims Reeves). In the second part but one example of Burns was included—viz., "I am a son of Mars," entrusted to Mr Walker, a bass of considerable merit. How the above selection was rendered it boots us not to say, further than that Mr Reeves was in excellent voice, that Miss Richardson sang admirably, but would have done even better if not so nervous, and that the Scottish vocalists distinguished themselves unmistakably. Mdme Sterling made an effect, too. She possesses the gift of a clear, distinct enunciation. Miss Sherrington's "Comin' thro' the rye" pleased immensely. With encores we need not deal.

The audience was enthusiastic—who ever knew a number of Scotchmen get together without waxing strong in support of their country, their national melody, &c.? But this is as it should be. Notwithstanding the obvious delight the entire selection gave, there was sufficient common sense on the part of the audience to desist from applause when an artist declined to repeat a song.

MARIE KREBS AT MANCHESTER.

(From the "Manchester Courier," January 19th.)

It seems curious, though it is true, that Mdme Marie Krebs has not till last evening appeared at Mr Hallé's concerts. She is not, however, a stranger to Manchester, for both last season and its predecessor she played at the Gentlemen's Concerts. Her genuine merits were recognised by us on those occasions, and it is not necessary for us to repeat at length our praises. There may be some want of power in the execution of Mdme Krebs, but her clearness and varied grace of touch cannot be denied any more than her high manipulative ability. And with these excellencies she combines an intelligence in her phrasing, and a command of expression which render her performances sources of real enjoyment, as well as of mere wonderment and admiration. Mdme Marie Krebs played the Beethoven concerto (in G)—Beethoven is evidently her favourite—from memory, and with most laudable care and spirit. We have before suggested comparisons between her style and that of Mr. Charles Hallé. The transparency of her fingering and the rippling charm of her touch, added to her easy, unpretentious, but artistic manner, revived the suggestion. In the cadenza to the first movement, Mdme Krebs particularly delighted the audience by her bold and brilliant execution, as she did also by the dash and crispness of her style in the third movement—rondo vivace. She was warmly recalled after the concerto. The Chopin ballade, in G minor, served still further to display her great executive talents; and in the encore which followed she paid Mr Hallé a graceful compliment by selecting a piece with which his own name is pleasantly associated. The success of Mdme Marie Krebs was genuine and great, but not at all beyond her unostentatious merits.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of the Organ Recitals by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 1st:—

Fantasia (E minor, Op. 81)	Hesse.
Sérénade, "Sur le balcon"	Meyerbeer.
Organ Sonata (No. 5, D major)	Mendelssohn.
Allegretto (Pensées musicales, No 6)	Schubert.
Rhapsodie sur Cantiques Bretons	C. Saint-Saëns.
Overture, "La Cenerentola"	Rossini.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 3rd:—

Organ Sonata (No. 4, B flat major)	Mendelssohn.
Andante from the fourth Pianoforte Concerto	Beethoven.
Scherzo (A major, Posthumous work)	Schubert.
Passacaille and Fugue (E minor)	Handel.
Sabbath Song (Le Chant du Dimanche)	Meyerbeer.
March, "Fête de Jupiter" (Polyeucte)	Gounod.

MAGDEBURG.—Herr Taubert's opera of Macbeth will shortly be performed at the Stadttheater.

MAD. CHRISTINE NILSSON.

The Swedish diva will have good reason to remember her first visit to Austria; it has proved a continuous triumph from the very outset. After enlisting on the stage of the Imperial Opera-house the sympathies of all who heard her, she has now extended her successes to the concert-room. On the 23rd January, she sang in a concert given at the Carl-Theater for the benefit of the General Polyclinic Institution. The house was crammed to suffocation, the Imperial Box being occupied by the Crown Prince Rudolph, accompanied by the Grand-Dukes Carl Ludwig and Ludwig Victor. In the first box on the pit-tier, directly opposite, sat the Princess Pauline Metternich, under whose especial patronage the concert was given. Excited, apparently, by the distinguished and crowded audience whom the charm of her name had brought together—for the concert was expressly called in the announcements and bills the "Nilsson Concert"—the fair and celebrated vocalist excelled, if possible, herself. The able critic of the Neue Freie Presse says:—

"Madme Nilsson began with the first Leonora air from Il Trovatore. The marks of approbation were very animated, and rose to a storm of applause, when she gave a Serenade of Braga's with charming expression, marking by the nicest gradations of light and shade the varying passions portrayed by the composer. After repeated re-calls, she added Gounod's 'Ave, Maria.' Again were there repeated re-calls and wreath upon wreath. But the grand attractions of the evening were the Swedish songs. In these the singer seemed suddenly to soar beyond herself; her noble features lighted up with bright joy, her voice increased in power and volume, and her execution appeared no longer to know any limit, as the awakening spirits from her Northern home brought back to her the warm greetings of her youth, when, clad in the simple costume of a peasant girl, she first moved her hearers' hearts at the village dance, and allowed her blue eyes, so full of soul, to glance timidly over the listening crowd. When we now hear her with the perfect confidence felt by a popular artist, arrayed in a rich robe of white satin, adorned with sparkling diamonds, and with her breast covered with medals, singing the same old folk's-songs before a select audience, we are taking part in a real romance upon the stage; and while we are delighted at her finished execution, her maidenly fervour in the sorrowful, and her childlike exuberance of spirits in the joyous strophes, the fair singer is affording us a double pleasure of a rare and most entrancing kind. The public appeared perfectly spell-bound by this twofold impression, and, after the last folk's-song, which was, likewise, the last in the programme, quietly retained their seats as if entitled to something more, until the artist resolved to repeat one of the songs. Herz Benedix, the stage-manager of the Carl-Theater, then advanced, and in the name of the Polyclinic presented her with a handsome silver laurel wreath, pronouncing at the same time some few words of thanks for the kindly aid she had afforded in furthering the erection of a Polyclinic Hospital, of which she had that day raised the foundation walls."

The presentation of the wreath, on the silver bow of which a suitable inscription was engraved, and Herr Benedix's short speech were greeted with loud and long continued applause. The critic of the Tagblatt observes, among other things, in reference to the same concert—

"Upon the fair artist's appearing for the second time, she sang, with obligato violin accompaniment, a Serenade by Sig. Braga, the violoncellist, a composition calculated to produce an impression not so much by skill in execution as by a feeling delivery. Such an impression, achieved by the simplest resources of art, was unusually profound and overpowering, so that Mad. Nilsson and M. Wieniawski, who played the violin part with genuine artistic dignity and discretion, determined to add Bach-Gounod's 'Ave, Maria,' known under the name of the 'Méditation.'"

Mad. Nilsson was well supported by Mad. Auspitz-Kolar, who played several pianoforte pieces very elegantly; Mdlle Zamarra, who was loudly applauded and several times recalled for her performance on the harp; Herr Robert, who declaimed, with much fire and expression, a poem by Lenau; and M. Wieniawski, who executed various compositions for the violin, in addition to the obligato accompaniment of Sig. Braga's Serenade. M. de Swert, also, was to have appeared, but he declined taking part in a concert headed simply: "Nilsson Concert." Like Achilles to his tent, he retired in dudgeon to his hotel.

Mad. Nilsson has sung likewise at the Redouten-Saal, Pesth, before the Emperor and Empress, who were delighted with her. The next day there was a select dinner at Court, followed by a concert, at which Mad. Nilsson gave the Romance from M. Ambroise Thomas's Mignon and some of her Swedish Folk-songs. The Empress has presented her with a magnificent bracelet, and the Emperor bestowed on her the patent of K. K. Hofbängerin, or Vocalist to the Imperial and Royal Court.

—o—
To J. C. Burund, Esq.

MY SINGULAR GOOD QUIPPIST,—Apart from certain "brouillamini," Eugène Desseroy, according to "Zig Zag," of the Gazette du Midi, and Dusquaney (avocat), was a capital fellow. Also, according to M. Paul le Louche and the "Public Toulousain," M. Faure, on the stage, "à vengé, et réhabilité le baryton." If so, il a bien fait. Nevertheless, Blanc Dusquaney of the Nether Alp (brother to t'other) is of a different opinion, declaring that the barytone stood in no need of rehabilitation, having never quitted his legitimate habitat. (Ask Mr Santley.) Showing different opinions, MM. Tissot, of the Vosges, and Rozimond, together with the captain of the Greek brig (or "brick") M. Assenos (Qy. Assianos?), declare that, with regard to the Crous de Prouvenço (and especially Amoure Plour), Francis Hueffer and the several Abgerahmtehueffer tribe (each of whom went to Bayreuth with his portebueffer) can alone furnish exact details—their common motto being:—

"No ambicione fals gloria Ni l'or que despera afanya."

Tavan has divided his subject into two parts. But that is neither here nor there. "Tradu dou Catalan" is all very well, Joan B. Ferrier; but what, may I ask (if you are the respected, as you, unconsciously, are the suspected, author of Jäckerjantkillaren), has that to do with the Crous de Prouvenço? Moussu E. Roux, it is true, might explain; but as he gets his gurgital liquids from Pau, and the "Eaux Douces," which, I need hardly tell you, are not the "Eaux bonnes," I rely internally upon you for explanation. Thine in the spirit—Scotch, not Irish, Paul Poist.

P.S.—Poor Sir Grummor Gummorsom (of the Castle) is in straits!

Madme Christine Nilsson has been appointed chamber singer to the Imperial Court of Austria.

As followeth the lark to heaven
My soul; so would I even Make an attempt to clamber,
When Nilsson sings, into that chamber.

Meiffben.

MUSIC IN BERLIN.

(From a Correspondent.)

M. Anton Rubinstein's opera, Die Macabäer, recently attained its eighteenth performance at the Royal Operahouse, where it may be considered as having become a stock piece, a result due, in no small degree, to the excellence of Mdlle Marianne Brandt as Leah.

Herr Theodor Wachtel's engagement will commence in a few days. His first character will be that of Manrico, in Il Trovatore.

A strange fraud has just been detected in the music trade. The nature of it will appear from the following communication addressed by Herren C. A. Challier & Co. to the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung:—"Mad. Lucca, the musical publisher of Milan, wrote to us, under the date of the 8th January, saying that, as proprietress of the work, Dolores, by Manzocchi, she could not allow the pirated issue of the pezzi trascritti published by us, but must insist upon the destruction of all the materials and of the stock-in-hand. We hereupon wrote back by return of post that, as we were totally unacquainted both with Manzocchi's original work and our supposed pirated version, we should feel obliged by some clearer explanation. In consequence of this, we received from Mad. Lucca, by book post, on the 17th January, the copy of a work which we had never seen, and of the existence of which we had not the slightest notion. Its title runs thus: Dolores. Drama lirico in 4 parti di S. Auteri Manzocchi. Pezzi trascritti. Berlin: C. A. Challier & Co. We have not the least doubt, after examining the copy forwarded us, that the piratical swindler who has wrongfully taken the name of our firm must be sought, not in Germany, but in Italy. We have answered Mad. Lucca in this sense, begging her at the same time to do her best to discover the cheat by publishing the facts in the Italian class papers. We have undertaken to do so in the German papers, and request you, by inserting this letter, to aid our efforts."

Italian Opera in Modern Costume.

(By Charles Lyall.)

No. 3.—IL TROVATORE.

ACT 4TH.

SCENE 1.

RUIZ.—"Siam giunto." ("We have arrived."—MANFREDO MAGGIONI.)

LEONORA.—"D'amor sull' ali rosee, vanne, sospir dolente."
("On the rosy wings of love, fly to him, my mournful sighs."—MAGGIONI.)

SCENE 2.

LEONORA.—"Mira, di acerbe lagrime spargo al tuo piede un rio."
("Behold, and oh! let move thee of tears this bitter flood."—MAGGIONI.)

SCENE 3.

MANRICO.—"Madre?—non dormi!"
("Dost thou not sleep, dear mother?"—MAGGIONI.)

SCENE 4.

DI LUNA.—"Ah! velle me deludere, e per costui morir! Sia tratto al ceppo."
("Rather than be my bride for him she chose to die! Now drag him to the scaffold."—MAGGIONI.)

One Thousand Pounds Reward!

For the absolute signification of the plot of Il Trovatore. Happy thought.—Who and what are they all?—D. P.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,
ST JAMES'S HALL.
NINETEENTH SEASON, 1876-7.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE TWENTY-FIRST CONCERT.
MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 5, 1877.
To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.

QUARTET, in C major, Op. 59, No. 3 (dedicated to Count Rasoumowski), for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI Beethoven.
SONG, "The Quail"—Mr EDWARD LLOYD Beethoven.
SONATA, in C major, Op. 34, No. 1, for pianoforte alone—Mlle MARIE KREBS Clementi.

PART II.

CHACONNE, for violin alone—Herr JOACHIM Bach.
SONG, "When thou art nigh"—Mr EDWARD LLOYD Gounod.
QUARTET, in G major, Op. 64, No. 4, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Haydn.
Conductor Mr ZEBBINI.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 3, 1877.
To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

SEXTET, in C major, Op. 140, for two violins, two violas, and two violoncellos—MM. STRAUS, L. RIES, ZEBBINI, BURNETT, DAUBERT, and PIATTI Spohr.
SONG, "The Message"—Mr SIMS REEVES (Accompanied by the Composer) Blumenthal.
SONATA, in A flat, "Plus Ultra," for pianoforte alone—Mlle MARIE KREBS Dussek.
SARABANDE and GAVOTTES, with pianoforte accompaniment by Schumann—Signor PIATTI Bach.
SERENADE, "Awake, awake," violoncello obbligato, Signor Piatti—Mr SIMS REEVES Piatti.
TRIO, in C minor, Op. 1, No. 3, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mlle MARIE KREBS, MM. STRAUS and PIATTI ... Beethoven.
Conductor Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyl Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1877.

TOUJOURS PERDRIX.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Allow a correspondent of twenty years ago to say a word. Are we never to hear from our pianists anything but the concertos of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Schumann?—which, by the way, so very few of our current, or ambulant, pianists know how to play at all—without falling back upon such spasmodic rubbish as that of Liszt, or such effete passage-writing as the concerto of Henselt, not to name other things of the sort? How many concertos by "the divine Mozart," who composed 25, are played? Who ever, since Arabella Goddard took to "de" Sivrai, attempts Moscheles? Is there not a concerto in F by Hummel (his last) which no one is allowed to hear—in fact, which has never been heard in public? Are there not concertos of Dussek worth an occasional trial? Fé donc! Our foreign pianists, with the exception of two or three classical pieces they have got by rote, seem to know, the two wishy-washy concertos of Chopin excepted, little beyond the music of Rubinstein and such-like modern rhapsody. Heaven pardon them! They have endowments, and are therefore all the greater sinners. Look at their programmes when they give what are termed "Recitals." Take any "Recital," and what is it but a poor olla podrida, seasoned with a toccata by Schumann or a Gavotte by Bach, descending even to a transcription of a dance-piece from one of Gluck's operas? And yet our accommodating, and, to quote the late Mad. Pleyel, "Choucroute-bitten," public—as Alfred Wolf, of the Paris Figaro, would say—"gucule tout cela," while our young ladies leave the concert-room fanning themselves with ecstasy, as though heaven and earth had come together. May I ask you what Rubinstein played in 1876 that he had not already played in 1858, and whether there was any difference in his playing? What in the name of Art does all this hubbub signify? Are we all gone mad? I have been for the last few years, during winter and early spring, in London, and have attended the Popular Concerts and Hallé's Recitals. I have heard much that is good—nay, delightful. But I heard also Raff. Who's Raff? I heard Rheinberger. Who's Rheinberger? I heard Gernsheim. Who's Gernsheim? I heard Kiel. Who's Kiel? I neither know nor care, but their music makes no impression upon me. I was longing for something by Sterndale Bennett, for example. No chance; Hallé wont play, and Mad. Schumann wont play, his music (except "The Lake," easiest of his "Three Sketches"); and the others cannot. The last time I was in London I bought a sonata by Bennett, called The Maid of Orleans. I bought it for two reasons—first, because it was by him; secondly, because it was dedicated to an English pianist, who plays his music as no one else ever did or could. Hearing of her return from the Antipodes, after—like Jenny Lind, Grisi, &c.—taking her farewell of the English public, I went up to London. Why? For one reason only—to hear The Maid of Orleans played by a lady, of whom Sterndale Bennett used to say, "She is my Joan of Arc." What a Joan of Arc! With such a Joan of Arc France would have been in a nice predicament at a certain period of her history. I had previously heard the sonata tossed off with patronising equanimity by Dr Hans von Bülow, and have since heard it from the "Higher Development" fingers of Mr Franklin Taylor; but I have yet to know it as I inwardly imagine it, and suppose must wait a long time. I went, not long ago, to the Crystal Palace, and was treated to what was announced as a symphonic poem, entitled Maseppa. I had already listened to a burlesque upon Burger's Lenore, signed Joachim (fancy, Joachim!) Raff, and was so smitten with that, that at the very first chord of Maseppa—

I precipitately fled, like the late Mr Ayrton, of the late Harmonicon (price three shillings), when a new overture by a "British" composer was about to begin at one of the concerts of the Society of British Musicians, in 1834-5. Mr Ayrton used to call these concerts the three-and-sixpenny concerts. He was one of the seven directors before, under the sway of Mr, now Sir Michael Costa, they became the seven directed. Hinc illa lachryma. And, in revenge for his stigmatising the concerts of the Society of British Musicians, dear old Lovell Phillips called him the three-and-threepenny critic. We can now hear quartets for a shilling; but where are our British Musicians? D. V., I shall go to Leeds to hear Macfarren's Joseph.—Yours as of old, Clarendon Hotel, Birmingham. AN ENGLISH MUSICIAN.

M. FAURE'S operatic tour promises to be even more prosperous than the concert tour which preceded it. At Nice his success has been extraordinary. His next destination was to be Marseilles.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ, at his admirable concerts in the Manchester Free Trade Hall, is repeatedly producing examples of dry and uninteresting suites for orchestra from the pen of that dilapidated composer, Lachner. What, in the name of Helio-gabalus, can such a musician as Mr Hallé see in them? Even the commonplace utterances of Germany would seem to be preferred by our teacher to the most fresh and elegant thoughts of Englishmen. Proh pudor!

MR FREDERIC SULLIVAN, brother of Mr Arthur Sullivan, died last week, aged thirty-nine. It will be hard to meet with a worthy substitute for this gentleman as the Judge in Trial by Jury. Mr Sullivan, before he took to the stage, was by profession an architect. He is deeply regretted, not only by his family, but by the numerous friends attracted to him through his amiable manners and genial, charming disposition—as an actor, and, indeed, as a lyric artist, he was fast rising into eminence and popularity.

HANDEL wore an enormous white wig. When things went well at a performance the wig had a certain sort of nod, or vibration, indicative of pleasure. Without this manifestation, nice observers were certain that the composer was out of humour.

A CLERGYMAN once carried some observations he had written on Shakspeare to Sheridan, and requested his opinion. "Sir," said Sheridan, "I wonder people wont mind their own affairs; you may spoil your own Bible, but please leave ours alone."

MARIETTA ALBONI, the celebrated contralto (widow of the late Count Achille Pepoli), was married at Paris, on Monday, to Captain Ziegler, of the Republican Guards. No amateur can have forgotten the first appearance of Alboni, as Arsace, in Rossini's Semiramide, on the occasion of the opening of the Royal Italian Opera, at Covent Garden Theatre, with Grisi as Semiramide, and Tamburini as Assur (April 6, 1847).

A CELEBRATED vocalist, whose demeanour and acting were as awkward and ungainly as his voice was beautiful, said one day to Charles Bannister, "Do you know what made my voice so melodious?" "No," replied Bannister. "Why, then, when I was fifteen, I swallowed by accident some train oil." "I don't think," rejoined Bannister, "it would have done you any harm if, at the same time, you had swallowed a dancing-master."

THE Crystal Palace Concerts are to be resumed to-day. The date (Feb. 3) being the anniversary of Mendelssohn's birth, the whole programme is to be devoted to his music. Not the least attraction will be the first appearance of the emperor of violinists, Herr Joseph Joachim, who is to play the one concerto written by Mendelssohn for the fiddle. A movement from one of his early (unpublished) symphonies will also be introduced. Why not the whole symphony? "If no more"—as the interlocutor of King Arthur's ghost says, in Fielding's Tom Thumb—"why so much?" In all respects the occasion will be of uncommon interest.

HORSES are great lovers of music. Shakspeare says in The Merchant of Venice, Act V.:

"For do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetchng mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud,
Which is the hot condition of their blood;
If they but hear, perchance, a trumpet sound,
Or any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze
By the sweet power of music."

It is related by Nathan that while a lady of his acquaintance was playing the piano in her room, the window of which looked into a paddock, where several horses were grazing, the animals left their food, drew towards the window, and remained there apparently pleased, rubbing their heads against the paling. Occasionally they would stretch their necks over it, as if wishing to approach still nearer. When the music ceased, they gradually dispersed, and re-commenced grazing as before. The love of horses and mules for bells is well known.

THE Earl of Mornington—whose son was the Iron Duke—evinced his great love for music at a very early age. His father played well, for an amateur, on the violin. This always delighted the child, whilst in his nurse's arms and long before he could speak. Nor did his satisfaction proceed merely from a love, common to other children, of a sprightly noise, as will appear by the following anecdote. Dubourg, the celebrated violinist, happened to be at the family seat, but the child would not permit him to take the violin from his father till his little hands were held. After he had heard Dubourg the case was changed, and there was then much more difficulty to let Dubourg give the instrument back to the boy's father. Nor would the child-amateur ever after permit his father to play with Dubourg in the house.

AMONG the boy-actors of the Elizabethan era was S. Pary, whose special forte was the impersonation of old men, though he died at the age of thirteen. Ben Jonson wrote the following epitaph on him:—

"Yeeres he number'd scarce thirteen, when Fates turn'd cruell,
Yet three fill'd Zodiackes had he been the stage's jewell;
And did act (what we do mourn) old men so duely,
As sooth the Parcs thought him one, he played so truly.
So, by error, to his death they all consented,
But, viewing him since (alas, too late!), they have repented,
And have sought (to give new birth) in bathes to steepen him,
But, being much too good for earth, Heav'n vows to keepe him."

This celebrated boy originally performed in Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels and Poetaster in the years 1600 and 1601.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

WE subjoin the programme of the thirteenth "recital" given by Mr Augustus L. Tamplin on Thursday afternoon, February 1st, in the "Estey" Organ Rooms, Argyll Street:—Preludium; Etude de concert (A. Schmidt); Songs, "Gruss" (Ignaz Brüll), and "Frühlingslied" (Rubinstein)—Mdle Friedländer; Prelude and Fugue in C sharp major (J. S. Bach); Trio, "Ave Maria" (Ed. Ch. Essex)—Mdle Friedländer, Mdle Redeker, and Mr Frederick Wood; Berceuse and Barcarolle (Aug. L. Tamplin); Songs, "Frühlings-gruss" and "Es war ein Traum (Lassen)—Mdle Redeker; Fantasia, La Favorita (Donizetti).

The third Ballad Concert of the season received the vocal support of Mr Sims Reeves, Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Maybrick, Mr Kempton, Mr Thornton, Miss Josephine Yorke, Mdme Lemmens, Mdme Sterling, Mdme Arabella Goddard, and the London Vocal Union. The selection was chiefly confined to old ballads—concerning which, in their manner of interpretation, we say nothing—and further included such novelties, as the ballad, "From his mother's nest" (Pauline), sung by Miss Yorke, who, it will be remembered, was the original Widow Melnotte in the opera; a charming new song by Arthur Sullivan, called "Sometimes," entrusted to Mr Edward Lloyd, and enoored unanimously; and a song by Molloy, in the "Vagabond" style, entitled "The King's Highway," and rendered by Mr Maybrick. Mr Sims Reeves was grandly successful in "My Pretty Jane" and "Tom Bowling;" and Mdme Goddard played some of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte and a Fantasia on the "Vicar of Bray" in her unsurpassable style. The audience was one of the largest ever assembled at a Ballad Concert.

THE eleventh season of the concerts given at the Athenæum, Camden Town, commenced on Friday evening, the 26th January, under most favourable circumstances, the attendance being large and the artists good. The lady vocalists were Miss Singleton and Miss Jenny Pratt, who were "called" after each of their songs. Mr Carlos Florentine, in O. Barri's "Haul in the Bowline" was encoored. Mr Charles Lascelles gave "Robin Ruff" with much humour, and "One little Kiss." Both were encoored. Miss Lillie Albrecht, a great favourite at the Athenæum concerts, was the pianist, and by her excellent performance justified the reputation she has obtained. This clever young lady opened the concert with her brilliant arrangement of the "Blue Bells of Scotland," for which she received a unanimous "call." Miss Albrecht's second piece, on Airs from Guillaume Tell, well adapted to display her finished manipulation, won an "encore," to which she responded by her "Maiden's Tear," which drew down hearty applause. Miss De Solla gave two Readings—"The Curfew" and the "Heart's Charity." Miss De Solla enunciates with great distinctness, and was "called" to receive well-merited applause. Altogether the evening must have been satisfactory to the large audience. A. B.

PROVINCIAL.

BELFAST.—A "chamber concert" was given in the Music Hall, by Mr Henry Stiehl, on Friday, the 26th ult., at which two well-known artists from Dublin, Herren Carl Bergson and Elsner, assisted. On the 9th of January there was a concert in the Ulster Hall, with Mdles Tietjens and Valleria, Signors del Puente, Bentham, and M. Musin. The Messe Solennelle of Gounod was given by the Choral Society, under the direction of Mr Henry Stiehl.

TORQUAY.—An interesting concert was given on Tuesday evening, 23rd January, by a lady, a great patroness of the fine arts generally, and of music in particular. It consisted mainly of concerted vocal music, including a few English glees, rendered in a way that left nothing to be desired. The vocalists were Miss Banks, Mad. Osborne Williams, Mr George Perren, and Mr Frederic Penna. The director and accompanist was Mr Wilhem Ganz, who varied the programme with some pianoforte pieces, including his new and brilliant Grand Galop de Concert, "Allons vite."

WOKINGHAM.—Mr T. S. Brown gave an evening concert in the Town Hall on Jan. 29th. The violin playing of Mdle Bertha Brouil pleased greatly. Mad. Worrell-Duval was encored in "The Maid of Neidpath;" Mr Christian was obliged to repeat "Nancy Lee," and was heard to advantage in "I fear no foe;" Mr H. L. Bennett and Mr Hunt (of the St George's Chapel, Windsor) did justice to their songs; and among the trios, &c., "Maiden fair, a word I pray" (Bishop), and "The Hawthorn in the Glade" (Sir S. Bennett), were well rendered by Mad. Duval, Mr Hunt, and Mr O. Christian. Miss E. Brown gave excellent aid in the vocal quartet, "When evening twilight" (Hatton) and "Slumber sweetly" (Eisenhofer). Mr W. E. Rogers was an able accompanist.

SALISBURY.—A concert was given on the 17th of January, in Hamilton Hall, by Mr Henry Cross (of Salisbury Cathedral). Mr Cross displayed his barytone voice to advantage in Meyerbeer's "Sei vendicata" (Dinorah), and, with Mr T. W. Hanson, in the duet "Love and War." Mr Cross also gave, with Mdme Cross-Lavers, Miss Reimar, and Mr Hanson, Mendelssohn's "Hunting Song." Mdle B. Brouil (violinist), and Mr John Cheshire (harpist), assisted. Mdme Cross-Lavers sang "Robin Adair," and Bishop's "Should he upbraid," besides joining Miss Reimar in Mendelssohn's, "I would that my love." Mr T. W. Hanson sang "Deeper and deeper still," and "Tom Bowling." Mdle Brouil, Mr John Cheshire, and Mr G. Thorne gave Gounod's "Meditation." Mdle Brouil played De Beriot's 9th violin concerto, and Mr G. Thorne Mendelssohn's "Andante and rondo capriccioso." Mr John Cheshire gave his fantasia on Lucia di Lammermoor and Parish Alvars "Fairy Dance," being "encored" in both. Mr Cheshire also played, with Mdle Brouil, a romance for violin and harp by Mr J. Parry Cole. Mr G. Thorne presided at the pianoforte.

DUBLIN.—On Saturday afternoon, January 27, Messrs Cramer & Wood afforded an opportunity to a very distinguished audience of hearing, in their Bijou Concert-room, Mr Charles Oberthür. The Ladies Spencer Churchill honoured the concert with their presence; and the audience also included the Countess of Howth and other distinguished persons. The concert commenced with a trio, composed by Mr Oberthür, for harp, violin, and violoncello (Mr Levey and Herr Elsner). Each movement was applauded. Mr Oberthür's harp-playing was splendid, and worthy of his high reputation, especially in a serenade and a fantasia by Parish Alvars. Mr Oberthür's duet, "La Prière," with Herr Elsner, was also finely played. Miss Pauline Elsner played the piano part in a duet for harp and piano on themes from Lucrezia Borgia. Mrs Scott-Fennell sang Barnby's song, "When the tide comes in," and a romance, "I would I were," in which she had the advantage of a harp accompaniment from Mr Oberthür. Mr Walter Bapty sang songs by Mendelssohn and Gounod, and took part with Miss Bessy Herbert in Mendelssohn's duet, "Fond hours." Miss Herbert also sang Schubert's "Ave Maria," Mr Oberthür playing the accompaniment on the harp. The concert closed with a duet, "Erin go bragh," for harp (Mr Oberthür) and piano (Mdle Elsner).

AN OUTSIDER.

The race is won, Lord Beaconsfield
Send round about the fizzy,
Each noble crack, to you must yield
The field, the field is Dizzy.

B. B.

AUBER.

To-day the monument raised in the Cemetery of Père-la-Chaise to the memory of Auber was inaugurated in the presence of a large and sympathetic assembly, comprising many brilliant members of the artistic circles of Paris. Although the ceremony took place five years after the death of the great composer, and the weather was little propitious, the memory of Auber was well honoured. I described to you some time ago the circumstances under which the memorial just uncovered was erected. The author of La Muette de Portici died at the crisis of the civil war of 1871, just at the moment when the Commune was being driven from its entrenchments. At that time his remains were placed in the vaults of the Church of the Trinity. After having been conveyed to the Cemetery of Montmartre, the body was finally deposited in the more fitting resting-place prepared for it in the French Westminster Abbey. I have before indicated the character of the monument raised to the memory of Auber; but, since that time, a fine gilt cross has been placed on the summit of the pyramid, which relieves the somewhat heavy effect that the whole formerly produced. Underneath the bust of Auber, which is itself a fine work of art, executed by the late M. Perraud, there are these words: "Auber, Daniel François Désiré, né à Caen le 29 janvier, 1792 (Qy.—D.P.), mort à Paris le 12 mai, 1871." Besides the delegates who attended the ceremony on behalf of the Parisian corporations, there were several from foreign cities, including London, Vienna, and Rome. The religious services commenced with the benediction of the monument by the Chaplain of the Cemetery, during which the well-known tenor, M. Boesquin, sang the "Pie Jesu." The Garde Républicaine took part in the musical part of the programme, under the direction of M. Sellenick. After the prayers and the sacred music, addresses were delivered by the Marquis of Chennevières, Vicomte Henri Delaborde, Baron Taylor, M. Ambroise Thomas, in the name of the National Academy of Music; M. Carvalho, in that of the Opéra-Comique; and the Maire of Caen, as the representative of the native town of the deceased composer. Amongst those present in the cemetery were MM. Gounod, Reber, A. Dumas, Comte de Nieuwerkerke, Ch. Garnier, de Flotow, Michel Masson, Victor Massé, Bazin, Léo Délibes; Lefeuil, the architect of the monument; De Beauplan, Ernest Legouvé, Mathieu Dumas, Emile Rety, Duprato, Chouquet, Wekerlin-Reyer, Ch. Lecocq, Offenbach, Montaubry, Roger, Capoul, Ismael, Du Locle, Perrin, Villaret, Achard, Caron, Melchisedec, A. Pothey, Hippolyte, Lyonnet, &c. I also observed the following distinguished ladies: Mesdames Gueymard, Vandenheuvél Duprez, Mauduit, Sasa, Carvalho, Bloch, Belval, Broisat, and Baratta. Before the company left the cemetery the grave was covered with crowns of immortelles, one of which stood out prominently, bearing the inscription "From the Students of the Conservatory." At the Opéra, Théâtre-Lyrique, and Opéra-Comique, special performances were given in commemoration of the event, all numerously attended. —Correspondence of the "Daily Telegraph," January 30th.

TO FRANCIS HUEFFER, ESQ.

Noun enveja fausso glori,
Ni l'or qu'en fai gau:
Co que m'agrado es la bori
Quante flambo moun fougau:
Siéu countènt de ma bastido,
Lou noum de pagès me vai;
Ma caro espouso es ma vido;
Es mon bonur, moun travai.
Lou vespre, quand me retire
Susarènt, sus lou lindau
Elo ven em' un sourrire,
M'eissuga de soun fadau.
Oh! coume la luno es claro
Quand l'espinchin pèr ensèn!
Lou rai que balso sa caro
Me refresco e me fai bèn;
Mi plase soun suau quouro
Di siéu sènte la sabour:
Que soun douço aquélis ouro,
Aquélis ouro d'amour!
Dou monde m'enchaute gaire;
Dins aquest pichot cantoun,
Siéu riche emé moun araire.
Ma femo e moun bastidoun;
L'oumbro es ben mai agradio
Quand descend de noste frai;
Dins noste prat quand arrivo,

L'aigro fresquejo ben mai;
Gens de pensado erivejouso
Destrassouno moun repau;
Dis aurasso verinouso
Noun ause lou siblet rau,
Mai la pas libro e courouso
Demoro dins moun oustan.
Basto chasco matinado
Countèmples dins si belu,
Lou cèn de nosto encontrado
Que n' i en a gens de tant blu!
Basto passo mi vihadou
Contro moun fio 'n babihant!
Basto, moun obro acabado,
M'endorme au lie de mi grand,
E moun ouro estènt sounado,
Ieu m'envole en bon crestian!
Moun amigo douço e caro
Posque lis iue me barra!
Quec de moun trepas encaro
Li paure poscon ploura;
Sone mi clar, la campano
Que sonnè moun bateja!
L'auciprès de ma cabano
Vengrè moun cros ousmreja,
E me couchon dins l'andano
Ount mi reire son déjà!

Düsseldorf.—Herr Johannes Brahms is said to have declined the post of Town Musical Director offered him by the Corporation.

Injunctions.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—The committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society print the following injunctions in each of their programmes :—

"Numerous complaints having been made of the great inconvenience experienced by those desirous of listening to the performances until their close, from persons quitting their places shortly before the conclusion, it is earnestly requested that no person will leave the Hall (except during the interval between the parts) until the termination of the Concert.

"In consideration of the sacred nature of the performance, the audience is requested to allow it to proceed without interruption from applause or encores."

Who obeys them? Nobody. Director Arthur S. Chappell, of the Monday Popular Concerts, prints an injunction in every one of his programmes, to similar purport—besides allowing five minutes between the penultimate and ultimate piece. Who obeyed it? Nobody. Consequently the sagacious director has lately omitted it from every one of his programmes.

Mr John Boosey, director of the London Ballad Concerts, prints no injunctions in any of his programmes. Who obeys? Everybody.

MORAL.—The public wont be constrained at concerts, any more than at operas. They who want to hear the music come early. They who go for "fashion," or for "chat," come when they please. They pay their money and do as they please. It is no use occluding portals previously patulous, for however brief a period. Your obedient servant, Long.

[Lord Long may be right, or he may be the other thing. It is for him and the like of him to decide.—D. P.]

THE LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From the "Graphic.")

At a recent meeting of the general committee of this great Yorkshire festival, it was stated that the guarantee fund already amounts to £11,470—£4,000 in excess of that of 1874. Every amateur must regret to learn that circumstances will not allow of Mr Henry Smart's completing the secular cantata he had promised to write for the forthcoming occasion. In place of it the committee have accepted a work of similar character, composed by Mr Walter Austin, a native of Leeds, to words by Miss Hargreaves, also a native. The title of this new cantata is The Fire King. So far as arrangements are already made out, it is calculated that Wednesday morning will be devoted to Eljah; Wednesday evening to The Fire King, and a miscellaneous selection; Thursday morning to a secular concert, beginning with Mendelssohn's Walpurgis Night, and including a symphony, with other vocal and instrumental music; Friday morning to Professor Macfarren's oratorio, Joseph, composed expressly for the Leeds Festival; Friday evening to a miscellaneous concert, including a symphony; Saturday morning to a Magnificent and a Motet, by John Sebastian Bach, followed by Beethoven's Christus am Ölberge (Mount of Olives). This is, unquestionably, a programme to be commended; and Professor Macfarren has good cause to rejoice in the magnificent fresh voices which created an impression in the choruses of his John the Baptist, three years ago, still vividly remembered. Doubtless in Joseph he will give them enough to do—not too much, however, it may well be credited, for their endurance and ability. Meanwhile, have not the Leeds committee, in their general deliberations, overlooked the fact that a certain musician of renown was also a native of Yorkshire?—that the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, who conducted their festival in 1858, and composed for it his exquisitely melodious May Queen, was born at Sheffield (not so very far from Leeds), and that he is the author of one of the purest, most highly-finished, and beautiful works ever allied to Scriptural text? It is singular that, while his country thought enough of Bennett to give him a resting-place among the great masters at Westminster Abbey, his county has let two local festivals pass over without bestowing a thought upon The Woman of Samaria.

With kind regards to our printers, the straight tip,
Give old Atlas himself two worlds he might trip.—B. B.

TOURS.—A new organ, built by M. Merklin, was recently inaugurated in the Cathedral before a large number of amateurs and others. Several talented musicians, including M. Tournailon, organist of Orleans, the Abbé Ply, formerly organist at Soissons, M. Dreyer, Châtellerault, and M. Steenman, of St Eustache's, Paris, tested the capabilities of the instrument.

Charles Halleantowrubinsteinsocean.

(To the Editor of the "Liverpoolmusicalworldcourier.")

SIR,—Our public has had the opportunity of listening to the biggest, anyhow longest, symphony out (it lasted an hour), by the Muscovite virtuoso and composer, Anton Rubenstein, and as the work contains a great deal of sparkingly uncertain, suppositiously descriptive matter, I wonder whether many would agree with me in thinking that, if it were styled Troubled Waters, its different movements might separately be named as below :—

Allegro maestoso...	Khiva.
Adagio	Taschkend.
Allegro	Kischeneff.
Adagio	Constantinople Conference
Scherzo-Presto }	and "Packing up."
Adagio }	Political Dead March.
Allegro }	Reforms at home.

[We have no objection.—A. S. S.]

£100 Reward.

For the rhyme, reason, and rhythm of the two amphigouris subjoined—one hundred pounds reward.

Amphigouri No. 1.

In petticoats our men now walk about,
Not caring a pin for Miss Bloomer;
Miss Bloomer puts on the man's coat—
We shall all be alike the sooner.

Benwell.

Amphigouri No. 2.

When our young folks go out for a walk,
We can scarcely tell one from the other;
Alike in hat, ulster, and talk—
The difference is only a feather.

Wellben.

[One hundred pounds reward for the rhythm, reason, and rhyme of the foregoing.—A. S. S.]

Nil Nisi.

DEAR D. P.—It has often struck me that a good deal of amusement, if not also matter for reflection, and, therefore, instruction, might be derived from a list which could be made of Nisi Prius errors, including some of those which have gone forth to the world, but more especially those which the vigilance of the Judges in Banco have nipped in the bud. Will no one undertake the task? Here is a good beginning, just come to hand :—Writing about a recent performance of Beethoven's Sonata in F minor, Op. 57, I alluded to the fact that the title "Appassionata," by which it has come to be known, is due to the invention of one Cranz, a music publisher of Hamburg, and expressed approbation that a nomenclature of which Beethoven himself was incognisant should have been expunged from certain recent editions. In the first brief sent to me, "one Cranz, a music publisher of Hamburg" came out "our crazy and unwise publisher of Hamburg;" and in the second there was still an error almost as ludicrous and almost as pertinent—viz., "ONE CRAZY," &c. Is not this enough? Yours, &c.,

SCRIBBLER.

Grubb Street.

[Scribbler should have sued for a writ of error, though it was, doubtless, the fault of his handwriting, which his formerly briefless barrister could not decipher. It is a Nisi Prius case, or at least one of simony. This would account for the occlusion of portals previously patulous.—D. P.]

UDDEVALLA, SWEDEN.—January 9, 1877.—Last Sunday a very great ceremony took place in the parish of Bro, when a new-built, splendid church was inaugurated. The above church is in the county of Mdlle Victoria Bunsen's father, and in the same parish where she had made her first communion. Mdlle Bunsen, at the request of the Archbishop, sang on this solemn occasion the beautiful hymn "Hosanna," for solo and chorus, and the contralto air from the oratorio, Paulus. Her beautiful voice produced such effect in the large and vast edifice that many eyes filled with tears. The day after this ceremony Mdlle Bunsen was presented with a paper, signed by all the members of the committee, expressing their thanks.—(Extract from a private letter.)

WAIFS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The lease of the Operahouse in the Haymarket was put up to auction on Thursday afternoon, at the Mart. The first bid was £10,000, but the property ran up to £26,000, that being the closing offer. Before the hammer fell, Mr Archibald Nagle, who had made the last bid, withdrew it, pleading that he had fallen into a mistake. The auctioneer declined to accept his withdrawal, and declared that as there was no other offer, he would have to hold him to it. Mr Nagle refused to sign the contract, but nevertheless the auctioneer declared the sale closed. Further particulars in our next.

Mad. Marie-Roze Perkins has been recently in Paris.

The Grand Theatre at Christiana has succumbed to fire.

The world would be silent if we talked as little as we think.

Félicien David's Désert will shortly be performed at Brussels.

The operas composed by Lauro (Biorn) Rossi number twenty-nine.

What paper should music be printed on? Toned paper.—Q. E. D.

Marchetti's Gustavo Wasa, revised, will produced at the Pergola, Florence.

Count Gabrielli, author of ballets, has received the Commander's Cross of the Venezuelan Order of Bolivar.

A new journal of "representative art" (theatrical), entitled Carlo Goldoni, will shortly be started at Bologna.

The question of the tax for the Poor on the Paris theatres will again be brought before the French Chambers.

The first twenty-five performances of Paul et Virginie at the Théâtre-Lyrique, Paris, brought in 289,585 francs.

M. Sardou, intending to call his new comedy L'Espionne, being forbidden by the police, changed the name to Dora.

M. Massenet is putting the last touches to his oratorio, La Vierge, for which M. Ch. Grandmougin has supplied the text.

Sig. Ravera, now in Paris, is engaged on an opera, Gli Schiavi di Roma, of which Sig. Ghislanzoni has furnished the text.

The Sacred Harmonic Society announces for Friday, the 23rd inst., a miscellaneous selection from Handel, Mozart, &c.

M. Alexander Reichardt, the composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far," is now at Nice, enfant gâté of aristocratic salons.

M. C. P. H. Verdelle, known as M. Desplaces, stage-manager at the Royal Italian Opera, died, in Paris, on the 24th January.

Herr Johann Strauss has received an invitation to conduct ten concerts of the Madrid Society after his engagement at Paris.

The Kellogg English Opera Company began an engagement at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia (U.S.), on the 15th January.

Three new operas are to be produced in Italy: Ara, by Navarre; Metilda, by Scintino; and La Figlia del Diavolo, by D'Arienzo.

Señor Pablo de Sarasate, the violinist, recently passed through Berlin, on his road to Breslau, where he was to play at a concert.

The Teatro Dal Verme, Milan, will be sold by auction. The Secolo says it is mortgaged for 200,000, Pungolo states for 500,000 fr.

Signor Tamberlik, the Roman tenor at one time so popular here, is said to be engaged by Mr Mapleson for the approaching season at Her Majesty's Opera.

Handel's Solomon was performed on Friday night week by the Sacred Harmonic Society. Were not Solomon a very fine work, we should say, "Anything for a change."

Vivienne, a new three volume novel by our esteemed contributor, "Rita," published by Messrs Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, & Rivington, is going the round of the libraries.

Sig. Gomez has written Sig. Lauro Rossi, expressing his conviction that the failure of La Contessa di Mons, at the Scala, was due to an intrigue. This opinion is not shared by the public.

Mlle Victoria Bunsen and her sister Mlle Felicia Bunsen, the pianist are now giving concerts with great success at Christiana (Norway). They will return to London immediately.

The Rev. H. R. Haweis, author of Music and Morals, says of Joseph Jefferson's Rip van Winkle: "I venture to say that, among the temperance lecturers of the day, Mr Jefferson has been most eloquent."

Imitation Limberger cheese is now an article of trade. "The man capable of counterfeiting Limberger cheese," observes the Boston Courier, "would be base enough to desert his wife and elope with his mother-in-law."

Mad. Trebelli has been singing in Il Barbiere at Stockholm, Herr Behrens being Basilio, and M. Henri Westberg, the Swedish tenor, Almaviva. The last-named intends quitting the Swedish for the French or Italian lyric stage.

A little Chicago four-year-old created a ripple by remarking to the teacher of her Sunday School class: "Our dog's dead. I bet the angels was scared when they saw him coming up the walk. He is cross to strangers."

M. Sauvage Trudin, musical amateur, has died at Boulogne-sur-Mer, where he brought out two comic operas of his own composition, Les deux Cousines and Le Précepteur. The first was subsequently performed at the Renaissance, Paris.

On a recent first-night in Paris, a young actress wore an exquisite new costume. "That must have cost at least 3,000 francs," said a lady in the stalls. "No, 2,500," replied her husband. His wife's eye being fixed upon him, he was silent.

M. Ph. Miry has written the libretto of a Flemish opera, De Dichter en zijn Droombeeld, in which the personages are the Ideal, the World, Pleasure, Riches, Force, Love, Glory, and Drunkenness. The hero succumbs to the last-named, but is saved by Repentance.

Herr Heinrich de Ahna, having received most pressing invitations to visit Frankfurt-on-the-Maine and Bremen, has been playing in those towns, with eminent success, the Violin Concertos of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Max Bruch, Spohr's "Gesangscene," for the same instrument, and various other pieces.

Mr Gye has made arrangements, it is said, to produce M. Massé's new opera, Paul et Virginie, at Covent Garden during the forthcoming season, with Mme Adeline Patti as Virginie and M. Capoul (the original in Paris) as Paul. Signor Gayarre, the much disputed tenor, is positively engaged for the Royal Italian Opera.

During the four months of September, October, November, and December, there were at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, 95 performances of 38 operas by 22 different composers, including Gluck, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Meyerbeer, Wagner, Spohr, Rubinstein, Taubert, Nicolai, Cherubini, Auber, Halévy, Gounod, Thomas, Rossini, Donizetti, and Verdi.

The master stage-carpenter of days gone by gave place to the more dignified official who has figured in play-bills as "machinist." In consequence of the complicated nature of modern stage appliances, it seems probable that the machinist in his turn will soon have to yield to the "stage-engineer." The example has been given by the Theatre Royal, Munich, where a stage-engineer entered on his functions with the first day of the present year.

A dramatic performance was given at King's Cross Theatre on Saturday, December 30th, by the pupils of Mme Cécile. Byron's comedy, £100,000, was given. Several of the young actors did credit to their teacher. Between the parts "My Pretty Jane" and a comic song were introduced—an unnecessary torture. The performance concluded with the farce of Old and Young, in which Mlle Sophie, a little girl of ten (who looked quite fifteen), appeared.

—W. A. J.
MR AND MRS GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—The fairy sketch, entitled Our Doll's House, which was produced as a holiday attraction, will be withdrawn at the end of next week, and a novelty called A Night Surprise substituted on Monday, February 12th. Mr West Cromer is the author, and Mr German Reed composes the music. Matched and Mated, which is as attractive as ever, and Mr Corney Grain's new sketch, Spring's Delights, will retain their places in the programme.

M. Albert de Lasalle has just published an interesting book, entitled: Mémoires du Théâtre-Lyrique. It is an exhaustive history, told by the works produced, of this theatre for "young" composers, from its foundation down to 1870, under the successive managements of MM. Mirecour and Adolphe Adam, Seveste, Carvalho, Réty, and Pasdeloup. The total receipts of the theatre, dating from the first night, amount to 12,981,491 francs, 45 centimes; the number of performances was 5,670, the average nightly receipts were 2,239 francs; the 182 operas played (121 new and 61 old) give a total of 405 acts; and among the composers 138 were French; 18, German; 15, Italian; 9, Belgian; 1 Dutch, and 1 English.

Herr R. Wagner has issued an address to his adherents calling upon them to resuscitate the Wagnerian Societies, which worked so well for the Grand-National-Festival-Stage-Play-Performances last year at Bayreuth. He wishes the societies to be permanently organised with a view to assuring the continuation of performances of the above "model" description, by disposing of a thousand patronal cards at 100 marks, or about five pounds, a-piece, each card to admit the bearer to one series of performances. In addition to this, the Composer of the Future modestly calls upon the German Parliament to vote him an annual subvention of 100,000 marks, on the ground that, by granting this subvention, the Parliament would be simply fulfilling a sacred duty, when so many local enterprises of only second and third rate importance are liberally assisted out of the national funds.

The following are the ages of some Italian art journals: L'Omnibus, 43; Il Pirata, 44; Il Cosmoramo, 42; La Gazzetta dei Teatri, 39; La Fama, 36; La Gazzetta Musicale, 32; L'Arpa and Il Trovatore, 24; Il Monitore dei Teatri and Il Sistro, 17; La Frusta teatrale, 12; Il Mondo artistico, Il Teatro, and L'Arlecchino, 11; L'Arte drammatica, 8.

Despite the unsatisfactory state of his health, M. Victor Massé is not content to repose on the success achieved by Paul et Virginie. He is now completing La Nuit de Cléopâtre, the book by M. Jules Barbier. He is also re-modelling Les Saisons, which will prove more successful when it is revived than when it was first produced at the Opéra-Comique.

Mlle CORANI at the LIVERPOOL AMPHITHEATRE.—Mlle Corani, who has already won golden opinions by her brilliant and charming singing, and her no less delightful and intelligent acting, appeared to the greatest advantage as Giralda (in Adolphe Adam's opera, so-called), a part for which she is as eminently qualified, as its music is suited to her particular style. She was immensely successful, singing the extremely difficult and trying music with equal ease and precision. In the finale of the second act and the closing air of the opera, which contain passages of such difficulty and brilliancy as must prove a crucial test for any singer, this clever young lady was thoroughly satisfactory, her execution being faultless. Mlle Corani's acting throughout was most vivacious, and her by-play very clever. The encores were amply merited, but it is too bad that music so fatiguing and trying to the singer should be demanded.—Liverpool Daily Courier.

Speaking of the Soldene Opéra-bouffe company at Washington, the critic of the Capital says:—"The troupe is a museum of anatomy—no, no, we don't mean that—a museum of curiosities interesting to contemplate, instructive to behold. Soldene is a big thing of herself, as we heard one of the detailed firemen remark, and the little Dutch girl savours quite strongly of Aimée. If she were prettier, and could sing a little better, and her vivacity were a little more natural, she would be famous. There were a dozen or so of human, healthy, handsome girls, and a female who kicked in a style unparalleled in the annals of gymnastic experience. She can kick off her back hair every time, and seems never wearied of the diversion. It is truly marvellous that that girl hasn't broken her leg before now." The critic of the Sunday Herald appears to be of a more susceptible nature, for he exclaims: "Oh, such a chorus! Arms that would provide the despoiled Venus of Milo, grace that restored the Antinous to its true sex, bright eyes, features of the Saxon type, a bevy of English beauty, fit to make one take a higher view of the race, such as the pencil of Tenniel lingers over."

The full orchestral scores of two hundred Italian operas have just been added to the library of the Paris Conservatory. As it is not customary in Italy to publish the full scores of the works produced there, and as consequently there exist only a small number of copies, which the managers of the different theatres lend each other, it may easily be conceived that operas achieving only a doubtful success soon become rare. Among the twenty-two scores by Rossini which figure in the acquisition, it would probably be difficult to find now-a-days elsewhere La Cambiale di Matrimonio, L'Equivoco stravagante, L'Inganno felice, &c., which are "comic farces" written by the composer in his youth. There are, also, Armida, Adelaide, La Donna del Lago, Matilde di Shabran, Mosè rinnovato, &c. Donizetti is represented by seventeen operas: Gianni di Calais, Le Nozze in Villa, Olio e Pasquale, L'Esule di Roma, &c. Mercadante contributes eleven operas, of which the Conservatory previously possessed no copies: Anacreonte, Gabriella di Vergy, I Briganti, &c. There is, also, one opera by Meyerbeer, Romilda e Costanza, and one by Cherubini, Il Giuocatore. Among others whose works figure in the collection, are Abos, Ascoli, Bellini, Carafa, Coccia, Coppola, Farinelli, Fioravanti, Generali, Guglielmi, Della Maria, Morlacchi, Pacini, Paer, Pavesi, Ricci, Salieri, Zingarelli, &c. All the scores were purchased in Florence—thanks to M. Wekerlin.

STUTTGART.—The number of new students entered last autumn at the Conservatory of Music, which is under the direct patronage of the King of Wurtemberg, amounted to 190. The total number of students at present is 668, being 35 more than at the same time last year. Of these, 211 intend to become professional musicians. 367 belong to Stuttgart, and 36 to the rest of Wurtemberg. Baden sends 19; Bavaria, 8; Hesse, 3; Prussia, 19; Bremen, 2; the German Duchies and Principalities send 3; Austria sends 4; Switzerland, 29; France, 3; Great Britain, 31; Italy 1; Holland, 2; Russia, 13; Spain, 2; North America, 62; South America, 2; and India, 2. In the winter half-year, 840 lessons are given weekly by 32 masters, 7 assistant masters, and 3 mistresses.

WIESBADEN.—A new opera, Der Trompeter von Säckingen, by Herr Bernhard Scholz, has been produced at the Ducal Theatre.

MILAN.—La Contessa di Mons has been followed, at the Scala, by Donizetti's Anna Bolena, with Signore Fossa, Contarini, Barton, Signori Gyarre, and Merly in the leading characters. Mad. Sass has been engaged, and will appear in Lucrezia Borgia.

HAMBURG.—After conducting his Symphony, "Ländliche Hochzeit," at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, Herr Carl Goldmark will visit this city to superintend the rehearsals of his opera, Die Königin von Saba, shortly to be performed at the Stadttheater.

CANNES.—"La bonne ville de Cannes"—says the Paris Figaro—has the privilege of uniting in its society a number of most aristocratic members. Unfortunately, amusements are not very numerous in the town; but its traditional torpor was lately broken into by the arrival of MM. Gustave Garcia and Paul Viardot, who together gave a concert at the Cercle Nautique, which attracted the élite of the colony. The brilliant success these talented artists met with proved how able they were to preserve the traditions of an illustrious musical family. The fine voice and, above all, the perfect method of M. Garcia in the air from Galathée, "Tristes amours," as well as in "Eri tu" (Ballo in Maschera), was the theme of general praise, and he was rewarded with loud and unanimous applause after both. It is a pity so valuable an artist should have selected London instead of Paris for his residence. In the latter city his place among our greatest singers is marked out for him. M. Paul Viardot, in his execution of the "Hymne de Haydn," with variations by Léonard, revealed powers as a violinist of the highest order; and he afterwards played a Cavatina by Raff and the "Bohémienne," the composition of Mme Pauline Viardot. M. Viardot was unanimously "called" at the conclusion.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	- 3 0
RINK GALOP	- 4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	- 4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	- 4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	- 3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	- 4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	- 4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	- 4 0
WEST-END POLKA	- 3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	- 3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	- 3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	- 3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	- 3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	- 3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.	s. d.
CHANTS DE L'AUBE	- 4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	- 4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	- 3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	- 4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	- 3 0
HARMONIUM	- 3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	- 3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	- 4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2s. 6d. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
OVERTURE	- 3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	- 3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	- 3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	- 2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	- 4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	- 4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	- 3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron"	- 3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night"	- 3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	- 3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring"	- 4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	- 3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	- 4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	- 3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	5 0
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	2 6
	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 4.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The SATURDAY CONCERT will be RESUMED on FEBRUARY 2. Transferable Stall Tickets for the Second Series of Thirteen Concerts, One Guinea, may now be had at the Ticket Office.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The THIRTEENTH of the Series of SATURDAY CONCERTS and AFTERNOON PROMENADES will take place on SATURDAY, February 3, 1877. In Commemoration of MENDELSSOHN'S BIRTHDAY. The Programme will include: Overture, "The Wedding of Camacho" (Mendelssohn); Concerto, for violin and orchestra (Mendelssohn); The Scotch Symphony (Mendelssohn); Adagio, in E, for strings, from an unpublished Symphony (Mendelssohn); Overture, Ruy Blas (Mendelssohn). Vocalists—Mr Edward Lloyd; the Crystal Palace Chord. Solo Violin—Herr Joachim. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Reserved (numbered) Stalls, in Area and Gallery, Half-a-Crown; Area or Gallery Seats (unnumbered), One Shilling. Transferable Stall Tickets for the Series of Thirteen Concerts, One Guinea.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, St JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY next, Jan. 31, at Eight o'clock. One part of the programme will be devoted to the popular Songs of Ireland. Artists—Mme Sherrington, Mme Cave-Ashton, and Mme Antoinette Sterling; Mr Sims Reeves, Mr Maybrick, and Mr Edward Lloyd. Pianoforte—Mme Arabella Goddard. The London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr Fred. Walker. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 4s. and 2s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets of Austin, 81 James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of BOOSEY & Co., 255, Regent Street.

HERR HERMANN FRANK'S SECOND SERIES of CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS will take place at the ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC (new Concert Room), 4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, on January 30 and February 13. To commence at Eight o'clock. Programme: Sonata, F dur, Op. 8, for piano and violin (Edward Grieg), piano—Miss Henry, violin—Herr Franke; Songs, (a) "Es war einmal ein König" (Rubinstein), (b) "Der du von dem Himmel bist" (Liszt)—Miss Helene Arnim; Spinnerlied am dem Fliegender Holländer (Wagner—Liszt)—Miss Henry; Quartet, B dur, Op. 67 (Brahms), first time—violin—Herr Franke and Van Praag, viola—Herr Hollander, violoncello—Herr Daubert; Songs, (a) "Grüner Frühling kehre ein" (Esser), (b) "Love has eyes" (Bishop)—Mme Mathilde Zimmerli; Trio, B dur (Schubert), piano—Miss Richards, violin—Herr Franke, violoncello—Herr Daubert. Conductor—Herr SAMSON. Herr Franke's Violin School, 1, Bentinck Street, Cavendish Square, London, W. Engagements for the Quartet Party of Herren Franke, Van Praag, Hollander, and Daubert, may be made on application to Herr FRANK.

MR CARRODUS and MR EDWARD HOWELL'S THREE QUARTET CONCERTS, LANGHAM HALL, Feb. 6, 20, and March 6, at Eight. Messrs Carrodus, V. Nicholson, Boyle, Howell, Walter Bache, Dannreuther, Mme Rose Hersee, Miss Annie Butterworth, and Mr Edward Lloyd. Accompanist—Mr Henry Thomas. Subscription, 15s.; Stalls, 7s.; Reserved Area, 4s.; Balcony Stalls, 2s. 6d.; Balcony, 1s. Tickets of Mr CARRODUS, 47, St. Paul's Road, Camden Town; Mr Howell, 52, Gloucester Crescent, Regent's Park; Cramer & Co., Regent Street; and Austin, 81 James's Hall.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, 27, HARLEY STREET, W.—THIRD SESSION, 1876-7. THIRD MONTHLY MEETING, on MONDAY, Feb. 5. At Five p.m. precisely, a Paper will be read by JAMES HIGGS, Esq., Mus. Bac., Oxon., on John Sebastian Bach's "Art of Fugue."

CHARLES K. SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.

24, Sutherland Gardens, W.

WILHELMJ CONCERTS.—MR THEODOR HERR-MANN begs to announce that HERR WILHELMJ, the eminent Violinist, having just Returned from the Continent, will commence a GRAND CONCERT TOUR (under his direction) through England, Scotland, and Ireland, on FEBRUARY 7. All Letters, Communications, &c., to be addressed to

HODGE & ESSEX,

SOLE AGENTS IN THE UNITED KINGDOM FOR THE

"ESTET" AMERICAN ORGANS

AND

STEOK'S (NEW YORK) IRON GRAND PIANOFORTES.

6 & 7, ARGYLL STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

"MARINELLA."

MISS ROBERTSON will sing RANDEGGER'S new Canzone, "MARINELLA," at the Liverpool Philharmonic Society's Concert, on Tuesday, Feb. 6.

"THE LADY OF THE LEA."

MISS FANNY ROBERTSON will sing HENRY SMART'S popular Song, "THE LADY OF THE LEA," at Bedford, Jan. 29; Northampton, Jan. 30; Rochdale, Jan. 31; Stratford-on-Avon, Feb. 1; and Cambridge, Feb. 2.

"THE MARINERS."

MISS ROBERTSON, MR JAMES SAUVAGE, and MR HENRY POPE will sing RANDEGGER'S popular Trio, "THE MARINERS" ("I NAVIGANTI"), at Bedford, Jan. 29; Northampton, Jan. 30; Rochdale, Jan. 31; Stratford-on-Avon, Feb. 1; and Cambridge, Feb. 2.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR VERNON RIGBY will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at Southsea, Feb. 5 and 6; Brighton, Feb. 9; West Bromwich, Feb. 12; Birmingham, Feb. 13; and Cambridge, Feb. 22.

"KILLARNEY."

MISS CATHERINE PENNA will sing BALFE'S popular Song, "KILLARNEY," at Mr Henry Nicholson's Concert, Leicester, on Tuesday, Feb. 27.

"THE MARINERS."

MISS ADELA VERNON, MESSRS C. WADE and CHOLMELEY JONES will sing RANDEGGER'S popular Trio, "THE MARINERS" ("I NAVIGANTI"), at Oxford, Jan. 30.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR ARTHUR WADE will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at Oxford, on Jan. 30.

SIGNOR BONETTI has Returned to Town, and requests that all communications be addressed to him to the care of Messrs D. DAVISON & Co., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street.

TO THE MUSICAL PROFESSION.

MR E. W. DOYLE has Removed to 82, ALBANY STREET, Regent's Park, N.W., where he begs that all communications and ENGAGEMENTS may be sent.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR ALFRED BAYLIS will sing the popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on February 13, at the New Town Hall, Kilburn, and Every Evening during his forthcoming Tour.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his immensely popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," during this month at Stroud, Gloucester, Taunton, Exeter, Plymouth, Torquay, Worcester, Chepstow, Hereford, Swansea, Newport, and Southport.

"WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA."

MISS CATHERINE PENNA and MR FREDERIC PENNA will sing HENRY SMART'S celebrated Duet, "WHEN THE WIND BLOWS IN FROM THE SEA," at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, on Jan. 30.

WANTED, Church Engagement, by a BASS. The West End preferred. Pupil of a most eminent master.—"F." Royal Academy of Music.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY (Established 1872) for Amateur and Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms, and the Instruction includes: Lessons in Singing, Harmony, Sight Singing (Solfege), English Elocution, Italian Language, and Choral Practice. The present Term commenced on January 16, and New Students can be examined on Tuesdays, between Three and Four o'clock. Prospectuses and further Particulars can be obtained at 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park; of Mr VERT, 52, New Bond Street; also of Messrs CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond Street.

MR W. DORRELL begs to inform his Pupils and Friends that he has Returned to Town for the Season.—25, Lower Seymour Street, Portman Square.

MR ARTHUR SHELLEY (Primo Tenore) announces his Return to England after a five years' career as Operatic Singer in Italy (Milan, Turin, Bologna, &c.). For Concert, Opera, or Oratorio ENGAGEMENTS, or further particulars, address—14, Everett Street, Russell Square.

MDME ENRIQUEZ begs that all communications be addressed to her at No. 5, OAKLEY SQUARE, N.W.

MR WILFORD MORGAN requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to his residence, 18, Surrey Street, W.O.

MR GERARD COVENTRY (Tenor), having returned to Town from his Provincial Tour, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Concerts. Address—Care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant instrument, is in town for the Season. For Lessons and Concerts address—22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

SIMPSON & CO.'S

IMPROVED HARMONIUMS.

FROM £5 5s. Five Octaves. Best make. Warranted. Nothing BETTER OR CHEAPER made. Lists post free. Trade supplied.

TO COMPOSERS wishing to PUBLISH.—Music Engraved, Printed, and Published in the best style at unusually low prices. Estimates free on receipt of MS. SIMPSON & Co., 33, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

At all Booksellers. In crown 8vo, price 6s.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES OF CELEBRATED VIOLINISTS. Lull, Corelli, The Bannisters, Tartini, Viotti, Paganini, De Bériot, Ole Bull, Ernst, Joachim, &c. By Dr PHIPSON. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street.

NEW EDITION OF MACPARREN'S LECTURES ON HARMONY.

Now Ready, in 8vo, price 12s. cloth.

SIX LECTURES ON HARMONY. Delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. By G. A. MACPARREN. Second Edition, thoroughly revised, with numerous Engraved Musical Examples and Specimens. London: LONGMANS & Co.

Third Edition.

A FIRST BOOK ON THE

THEORY OF MUSIC.

BY LOUISA GIBSON.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE, MARCHIONESS OF LORNE.

Adopted in the South London Musical Training College, and in various High Schools in London and the Provinces.

LONDON:

WEEKES & CO.; NOVELLO & CO.; WHITTAKER & CO.
AND OF THE AUTHOR, LEATON TERRACE, PLYMOUTH.

Price, boards, 3s.; stiff paper, 2s.; postage, 2d.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL"

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, ST ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

LANEDOWNE COTTELL'S COMPOSITIONS.

MESSRS MOUTRIE & SON have the pleasure of announcing arrangements with Mr COTTELL, enabling them to publish a New Composition, Monthly (Vocal or Instrumental). The success of his new "Wedding March" has encouraged them in requesting Mr COTTELL to arrange it as a Pianoforte Duet. They anticipate a greater demand than ever for his last Compositions. Pianoforte and Music Saloons, 55, Baker Street, W. Catalogues post free.

SUNLIGHT. New Song for Children's Voices. Words by E. L. BLANCHARD. Music by J. RIVIERE. Sung nightly with great success by the Bijou Choir of Boys at Hengler's Circus. Post-free, 18 stamps. RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

FORGET ME NOT. Sung by Miss EMILIE GRATTAN in the Children's Pantomime at the Adelphi Theatre, and daily encored. Words and Music by ED. ELLIS. Post-free, 18 stamps. RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

COME WHERE GOOD NATURE LEADS THE WAY. Sung by Little Queen Mab in the Children's Pantomime at the Adelphi Theatre, and daily encored. Words by E. L. BLANCHARD. Music by ED. ELLIS. Post-free, 18 stamps. RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

HARMONICOR.—A new and pretty Instrument with Mouthpiece and Bell. The Notes (Ten Chromatic Octaves) are played by Valves, the fingering the same as the Piano, and the sound nearly that of the Oboe. It can be easily played by children or young ladies, as there is no pressure on the lips. Price £5 5s., including Case. RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.—All the new and beautiful Songs, Ballads, &c., sung by this distinguished company of Vocalists are now published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess, from whom they may be obtained by the Music-trade and the public. Permission to sing any of the Songs contained in Messrs Moore and Burgess's repertoire is always freely accorded on application to the Manager. It is not necessary to obtain a licence to sing these songs at private meetings and soirées.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SONGS and BALLADS of the day are those sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS at ST JAMES'S HALL. The words of all these songs are written by the most eminent authors, and the music composed by the most celebrated musicians of the age, including Henry S. Leigh, E. L. Blanchard, Frank Vizetelly, Charles Dunphie, J. E. Thomas, W. Meyer Lutz, John Hobson, &c.

MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS. The following new, and charming Songs and Ballads are just published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess:—

Riding in a Pullman car.
Alone.
Come where the tangled beeches grow.
My Darling's Last Smile.
Sad sounds the harp now.
Friendship, Love, and Wine.
Let each speak of the world as he finds it.
Sing me the songs that I loved long ago.
The Piquet.

The Wild, White Rose.
A boatman's life for me.
My Lily.
Sing, dearest, sing.
Many weary years ago.
Return of the Exile.
Glory or the Grave.
The Alpine Hunter.
Heavenly Voices.
Gentle Flowers.
The Buckles on her Shoes.
The Flight of the Birds.

May be ordered through any Music-seller, or obtained direct from the Publishers, St James's Hall, post free, One and Sixpence.

Post free, One and Sixpence.

SING ME THE SONGS THAT I LOVED LONG AGO.

Composed by W. MEYER LUTZ. One of the most beautiful and tuneful Ballads introduced by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS for some time past. Now being sung with immense success at ST JAMES'S HALL. Can be ordered through any Music-seller; or obtained from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FLIGHT OF THE BIRDS.—An entirely new and charming Ballad. Words written by HENRY S. LEIGH, Esq. Suitable for Alto, Tenor, or Soprano voices. Now being sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS, at ST JAMES'S HALL, with extraordinary success. Can be ordered of all Music-sellers; or obtained direct from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FOLLOWING NEW and BEAUTIFUL SONGS are being sung at ST JAMES'S HALL with marked success:—"Sing me the songs that I loved long ago," "The Flight of the Birds," "The Piquet," and "Sing, dearest, sing." The greatest successes ever achieved by the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. Can be ordered through all Music-sellers; and of the Publishers, Messrs Moore and Burgess, St James's Hall. Post free, 1s. 6d.

Dedicated to the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music.

SIX STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

BY
IGNACE GIBSONE.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-------------------------------|
| No. 1. "THE SWALLOW." | No. 4. "WHITHER SHALL I FLY?" |
| "2. "THE FOUNTAIN." | "5. "ROCKED TO SLEEP." |
| "3. "SPINNLED." | "6. "THE RESTLESS SEA." |

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

ARDITI'S New Ballad, "TRUE." The Poetry by MARIA X. HAYES. Sung by Mdle HELENE ARNIM, at the Promenade Concerts, Royal Italian Opera. Composed by LUIGI ARDITI. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, composed by Signor ARDITI:—

- | | |
|---|---------|
| THE PAGE'S SONG, sung by Mdle Bianchi, Mdle Alwina Valleria, and Mdle José Sherrington. (Poetry by Maria X. Hayes.) | ... 4s. |
| L'INCONTRO VALESE, sung by Mdle Adelina Patti | ... 4s. |
| A KISS FOR YOUR THOUGHT, sung by Mdle Valleria | ... 4s. |

ZUMMERZETSHIRE CHURCH ZINGING.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Zur,—Cumming out o' church last Zunday night I zaid to Till—you're hard I ta'k avore o' Till—"I'll write," zaid I, "to th' Lun'on editur about th' doings in thik church o' ourn." "Willum," zays Till, "do'e think yourself scholur enow vor th' geh'leman and his readurs?" "He be a man," zays I, "what doant care a straw about turning zo long as truth and right-veeling be thur. I've hurd'n zay that the depth o' zentimunt wur often vound wi'out th' froath o' wurds on th' top." "But do'e think," anzurd Till, "that religiun be a proper ta'k vor a musical paper?" "Aint music," zaid I warmly, "zum'et like religiun? Least ways I vind it zo when it cumes creeping an' a-stealing on my ears. Then I veel as if th' good spiruts wur a-ta'king to me, and lifting up the curtain that hides t'other world, showing me a zight o' a bit on't, and making me gasp vor th' pure air in't, zo that I might become vit vor you, Till, vor I be sure you belong to th' angial land. If music, my dear, baint religiun, it be sureluy hur survant, vor it wearuth heav'n's livery. Zing to me, Till! Zing do'e now this minute!" "Lawks, Willum!" broke in Till, "how beautivul you do ta'k and go on!
If the Lun'on volk cou'd on'y hear'e as I do they wou'd—" "
Well, what!" zaid I. But our ta'k wur stopped by a vunny noise like burds. "Twarnt th' zolemn zong o' th' nightingul, but a purty chirping, all th' world like bussing. I wont zay anothur ward more, vor vulgar courting can't intrest any readurs o' yourn.
I want to tell'e moastluy about th' zinging at church; but thur be things what lead up to 't. I zuppose all tales, like dumplings, must 'ave a' outside to cut drou avore th' vruit be got at. I promise'e my pasty sha'n't be thick or heavy.

The vicar now o' our parish cume a'ter a kind ould gen'leman what lived long wi' us very much beluv'd, and who died wi' th' notion he wur going to join his vlock, buried by him one a'ter anothur, in a sure and zertain hope ov a life to cume. Well, when th' new p'eson got hur, he zays everything wur gone wrong, yet thur wur more love then than now a good deal. He zaid a gurt many hard wurds—some on 'um I cou'dn't make out—and he begun to knock th' ould place about. He tore down th' gurt pews, aye, and th' squire's too; and he pull'd down the galluries—both the zide 'nes and th' zingurs', he cut off a bit o' th' pulpit to make 't lowur, and put it undur th' communion tabul to make 't highur, and had a' organ placed near 't; and got boys an' men dress'd up like his-self, wi' white gowns on, to zing an' bow an' scrape. At vurst th' volks gaped wi' thur mouths wide open at it; then they got to like 't, and zaid "light wur cume." But it turn'd out 'twar on'y a dim zort o' light, vor zome begun to zay th' vicar halted by th' wayzide. Then they started to build a new church, and a grand 'un they've got, sureluy! 'Twar open'd t'other day. Thur be a high towur, and such a peal o' bells in 't! I assure 'e you can't hear th' tinkling o' th' parish bells—at least, I cou'dn't Zunday when I went thur wi'
Till. But 'taint on'y bells, but ev'rything they've got to beat th' vicar, and drain th' parish church o' peopul. You'll zee sometimes at a vair that th' biggest show aint got th' best custom. A littul
'un alongzide, making a gurt noise, wi' plenty o' lights and picturs, an' th' showmen in smart toggs 'ull cut t'others out completeluy.
Well, our ould church be left nigh bare 'cause thur be more vinery at th' new 'un. The vicar on'y guve a taste, and not a veast.

When I an' Till got inzide last Zunday night we wur stunned.
The vust thing I look't at wur th' lights—fire o' any zort draws th' eyes, doant it? Well, on th' tabul they now call the altar wur a rare zight o' flowurs an' lights; littul and gurt canduls wur burning zo close together as to make one big vlame, an' th' altar to look all a-blaze. It guve enow light to zee ev'ry thing in th' church, and bring out the purty colours in th' marbul pillurs. You wou'dn't believe't, I didnt know Mr Simmonds, what keeps a doctur's shop, when he cume to show uz a zeat, vor he had on a black vrock as reach'd down to his heels, an' carried a long stick; and vinely he grizzled us when he puts Till in one pew and I in anothur, as if he wur avraid we should be a-courting instead of praying. Presuntly th' organ struck up, and I hurd zingers outzide that cume in two and two, zinging as loud as they cou'd a rattuling tune. And a gurt noise they made when they wur all inzide; I assure 'e it quite warm'd me, for music sturs the blood like wind do watur. The organ did roar an' rumbul as if it tried to swallur up th' zingurs;

but the people cume to hup'em, an' ev'rybody shouted like ranturs.
When I saw Bill Snookes cume in a-carrying a gurt flag, I a'most shouted "hoorray!" vor he look'd like Sam the blacksmith holdin' up the flag as the club walks o' Whit-Munday. In vact, it zeeded a zort o' club-walk, on'y instead of scarves and bows they wore white smock-vrocks wi' black petticuts. But what a vunny prank yung Jim Hodge wur a-doing. He drowed about clouds o' zome'ut vrom a thing like a gurt silver peppur box. I won't zay what antics they did all drou th' zarvice, vor they tell I they be symbuls o' things I doant un'erstand, but I do hope they will vind in 'em the gurt REALITY.

I thought I shou'd a-relished th' music, vor at vust it made my blood tingul wi' pleasure; but zomehow I got used to the noise and vound no music in 't. 'Twar like a cloud o' steam made o' boiling a morsel of vood. Thur wur a peck o' noise to a grain o' music. The zingers and peopul zang as loud as they cou'd th' air o' th' tune, and nothing else. Till zays—and she reads notes like a ha'penny book—this kind o' music be called unison. It may now and then be good, but if the zingurs can zing in parts, why make 'em, boys and girls, men and women, shout always the zame notes? It zounds coarse and commun. True it be, that when a'ter the diff' frunt voices 'ave been running about, in an' out, now mixing then falling away, now joining then parting, I veel it moighty grand to hear 'em all meet together an' zay th' zame words as wi' one voice.
But it mustn't be of'en or it zounds like bullying. Music in parts I vancy be like a happy vamily, o' which th' bass and trebul be rather and mothur, an' t'other parts the chil'ren. Aint it beautivul to hear 'em in worship answer one anothur zo lovingly, and then hug zo close together as if they were on'y one. On their diff'runt voices, diff'runt prayurs and hopes seem to go up a-vloating to heav'n like a cloud o' many colours. The zounds I hear in vields and woods b'aint in what's called unison. Ev'ry tree, as the wind blows drou't, pitches his tune in 's own key; and each zort o' burd in the branches zings his own kind o' zong. To make all zounds the zame wou'd be like painting sky an' earth one colour. Well, in this new church o' ourn they be trying to do zome'ut like it in zinging. All on 'em, bass, tenur, countur, an' trebul, zing the zame notes. But the organ player he plays in parts, an' how he does lash 'em wi' 'em. The parts seem to be separate thongs o' a gurt big whip wi' which he beats the zingers to make 'em cry out hardur and loudur.

I be, zur, yourn to cummand,

WILLUM SYKES.

February 6th, 1877.

ART IN HOSPITALS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—All who have any acquaintance with the interiors of our London hospitals must have been struck by the excessive dreariness of most of the wards. It is time that this should be remedied. A little energy on the part of a few philanthropists and artists, aided by subscriptions from the general public, would suffice to accomplish this improvement. I advocate the brightening of the wards and the cheering of their inmates by the addition of suitable pictures, plate, bronzes, carvings, bric-à-brac, old armour, china, sculpture, ornamental clocks, fancy glass, tasteful glazed tiles, and other art decorations of all sorts.

To promote this object I will give a hundred guineas, provided that a thousand other donors each subscribe an equal or a larger sum before the 1st of May, 1877. A responsible committee being formed, I believe that Messrs Roberts, Lubbock, & Co. will act as bankers to this fund. Soon I hope that some public place will be granted as a provisional storehouse of and exhibition for art contributions, previous to their distribution to the hospitals of London.
Intending donors, contributors, and subscribers are invited to communicate with

J. LAWRENCE-HAMILTON.

34, Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

[We invite especial attention to this benevolent and admirable idea.—D. P.]

PARIS SCRAPS.

(From our Parisian Scrapper.)

I have lately found myself in the position of those of our officers in the Crimean War who were called away from their duty by "urgent private affairs." However, I am now back again at my post, and, on the strength of the maxim: Better late than Never, will at once proceed to give you some account of the inauguration of Auber's Monument, the work of M. Lefuel, which has been erected by the composer's friends and admirers on the right hand side of the principal pathway in the Cemetery of Père-Lachaise, and at a spot not very far from the graves of Rossini, Lefébure-Wély, Alfred de Musset, Visconti, Arago, and other celebrated men connected with art. Within a gilt iron railing stands a black marble pyramidal pillar, the pedestal of which is ornamented with a lyre intertwined with laurel wreaths. On the top of the pillar is a cross. On the sides of the pyramidal pillar the names of all the deceased composer's works are engraved in gold letters. A little in advance of the pillar I have mentioned there is a smaller one surmounted by Auber's bust, copied from Dantan's original by M. Perraud, who died a short time ago. Below the bust is inscribed:

AUBER

DANIEL-FRANÇOIS-ESPRIT

Né à Caen

Le 29 Janvier

1782

Mort à Paris le 12 Mai

1871.

(Auber, Daniel-François-Esprit, Born at Caen, the 29th January, 1782; Died at Paris, the 12th May, 1871.) A long time previous to the hour fixed for the ceremony, a large crowd, including a great number of composers, singers, actors, and journalists, had collected to pay a last tribute of respect to him who so worthily represented French lyric art. At three o'clock precisely, a priest solemnly blessed the Monument. The band of the Republican Guard, under their bandmaster, M. Sellenick, then performed the overture to La Muette de Portici. This was followed by a "Pie, Jesu," the words of which were adapted to the canticle from Le Domino Noir, the singers being the Students of the Conservatory, under the direction of M. Jules Cohen. The solo portion found an admirable interpreter in M. Rosquin, of the Grand-Opéra.

One great feature in the proceedings were, of course, the speeches, for, as we all know, no burial of any importance would be considered complete in France without an oratorical display of some sort. First came M. Chénnevières, in the name of the Minister of Public Instruction, and M. François, in that of the Academy of Fine Arts. To them succeeded M. Berthault, a member of the Senate and the Mayor of Caen, who spoke in the name of Auber's birth place, and drew a felicitous comparison between Auber and Boieldieu, both of whom were natives of Normandy. The other speakers were M. Ambroise Thomas, as Chairman of the Monument Committee and Director of the Conservatory; M. Maquet, in the name of the Society of Dramatic Authors and Composers; Baron Taylor, as the head of the Association des Artistes Musiciens; M. Halanzier, as Manager of the Grand-Opéra; and M. Carvalho, as Manager of the Opéra-Comique. At the conclusion of the speeches, M. Vaucorbeil, in the name of the Society of Musical Composers, placed a large gold laurel wreath on the tomb; the Students of the Conservatory offered an immense crown of immortelles bearing the words "A Auber, les Elèves du Conservatoire;" and the band of the Republican Guard a crown of jet. The Students sang the Prayer from La Muette and the band played the overture to La Sirène. With this the ceremony terminated.

In the evening, performances in honour of Auber were given at the Grand-Opéra, the Opéra-Comique, and the Théâtre-Lyrique. At the first-named theatre, the programme included the overture and part of the second act of La Muette, fragments from Don Juan and Faust, the ballet from Gustave III., and the overture to Le Serment. During the act from La Muette the composer's bust was crowned by all the members of the company. Fra Diavolo was played at the Opéra-Comique. M^{me} Brunet-Laffeur also sang the canticle from Le Domino Noir, and all the artists defiled round the composer's bust, presented to M. Carvalho by Dantan's widow. At the Théâtre-Lyrique, M. Vizentini offered his patrons the overtures to La Muette and Les Diamants de la Couronne; the bolero from Le Domino Noir, sung by M^{me} Sallard; the air from Acton, sung by M^{lle} Marcus; the "Sleep" air from La Muette, sung by M. Michot; the duet "Amour sacré de la Patrie," sung by the same gentleman and M. Bouhy; and some verses entitled "Hommage à Auber," written by M. Armand Silvestre, and spoken by M. Lepers. Such were the honours rendered by Paris to Daniel-François-Esprit Auber on the 29th January, 1877.

The prophets who announced some time ago that M. Ch. Lecocq would never do anything equal to his earlier works appear to have been somewhat premature. Such is the opinion of very many and very competent judges who attended the first performance at the Théâtre de la Renaissance, on the 3rd inst., of La Marjolaine, which was enthusiastically received. Indeed, had not modern theatrical custom cast a slight suspicion on, and consecrated, so to speak, with a halo of doubt, first-night manifestations, I should feel sorely tempted to say that La Marjolaine will prove without exception as popular as anything its composer ever produced.

The libretto is by MM. Vanloo and Leterrier, who, provided they could supply M. Lecocq with something amusing, which would allow him full scope for the exercise of his musical faculty, appear to have been of opinion that the end sanctifies the means. In this, however they are simply following the example set them by MM. Meilhac and Halévy, et hoc genus omne. Here is a slight epitome of their plot, arranged for persons of delicate taste and timid susceptibilities. In the interests of society, the Municipality of Brussels, so we are told, once instituted an annual prize for the most virtuous member of the gentler sex within the limits of their jurisdiction. This prize, a medal, has been carried off for many years in succession by La Marjolaine, and, at the commencement of the piece, she is about to compete for it again, despite the fact that, for no inconsiderable period, she has been the wife of a wealthy gentleman, Baron Vanderbloom, and that married ladies are, by the fact of their marriage, generally precluded from entering the lists. But matrimony has not disqualified La Marjolaine, who is as innocent as ever. Indeed, she is such a model of purity that her husband boasts about it rather inconsiderately to Annibal, the president of a terrible society to which the Baron himself formerly belonged, and which is entitled the Société des gais Célébataires. The motto of the members is: War to Husbands. In consequence of certain insulting doubts expressed by Annibal, the Baron makes a wager of all he possesses that neither Annibal nor all the jolly bachelors who ever scoffed at virtue will be able, within a stated time, to triumph over La Marjolaine's scruples, and induce her to deceive her husband. La Marjolaine overhears the wager. Indignant with the Baron for putting such an affront upon her, she determines to punish him. She makes a secret agreement with Annibal, whom she allows to boast—falsely of course—that he has won his wager. Enraged at her supposed infidelity, the Baron turns her out of doors and forfeits all his property to Annibal, who kindly finds employment for him as a scullion. While the Baron is fulfilling the duties of a "gentleman help" in the beautiful country house which was once his own, La Marjolaine arrives with Frickel, a foster brother and clockmaker, who is madly in love with her, and with whom she has entered into partnership—commercially. She is still, however, as eligible as ever for the medal, though the Baron refuses to believe so, and, worked up to fury at the sight of one he thinks so perfidious, rushes off for a divorce to the Burgomaster. That civic dignity obliges him without more ado. But, when the Baron returns, Annibal, gained over by La Marjolaine's remonstrances, reveals the truth. The Baron is at first overjoyed. Very soon, however, he receives a rude shock. La Marjolaine, now free to choose whom she prefers, declares she scorns to return to one who has tested her so cruelly, and bestows her hand upon Frickel, whom she has loved from girlhood.

The music is exceedingly bright and sparkling, and, as before stated, is pronounced as good as, if not better than, anything we have yet had from the pen of M. Ch. Lecocq. Among the best numbers may be cited a chorus sung by the fair aspirants for the medal: "Baissons les yeux modestement," very pretty and very original; another chorus: "Voici la médaille, c'est un vrai soleil;" a ballad sung by Mlle Théo; the song:

"Il est bien gentil, quand on s'aime, De se promener dans les blés;"

a duet:

"C'était le soir,
Il faisait noir,"

and a second song:

"Monsieur, je vous en supplie,
Ne me regardez pas ainsi."

But, were I to name everything rapturously applauded in the course of the evening, I should occupy more space in your columns than you would care to afford me.

The cast was admirable. Mlle Granier had returned expressly from St Petersburg to play the part of the heroine, for M. Lecoq refused to allow his piece to be performed without her. The event proved he was right. Anything more elegant, more graceful, and more captivating generally than her impersonation it is difficult to conceive. Mlle Théo sustained the part of Aveline, a young lady who is not quite so solicitous as La Marjolaine for prize-medals awarded in the name of impregnable virtue. M. Berthelier as the Baron was inimitable. The other characters found able representatives in MM. Pujet, Hervier, Caliste, and Vauthier. The orchestra and chorus did their duty well. The scenery is enchanting. The dresses combine gorgeousness with good taste. Sum total: A big success.

MR ERNST PAUER'S LECTURES.

Yesterday afternoon, in the theatre of the South Kensington Museum, Mr Ernst Pauer began another course of the lectures to women which have for several years past done good service in spreading a knowledge of musical art. The present series has an object eminently useful, viz.—"To point out the most practical manner of teaching music; to indicate the readiest manner of recognising the requirements of the pupil, and of attaining an entirely satisfactory result." With this end in view, the six lectures comprising the course deal respectively with "Musical talent and its development;" "The art of teaching;" "The art of practising;" "The choice of pieces;" "The musical course;" and "The art of reading at sight and the development of memory." Having regard to the degree in which music is taught by ladies, the value and importance of such lessons from an eminent professor are great, and the expectation is reasonable that the opportunity will be eagerly seized. Mr Pauer's introductory lecture could hardly have been more full of admirable suggestions, drawn from his own large experience, as to the early treatment of pupils. Amongst other things, the need for accurately measuring the extent and character of a learner's powers was pointed out, as was the importance of a careful choice of music, and of special treatment in the case of students who are dull or slow. Briefly, the lecture, while unpretending and of short duration, could not fail to prove in a high degree beneficial to those whom it specially concerned. Mr Pauer's remarks were, as usual, relieved by the performance of a selection of pianoforte music—in itself a valuable lesson. The programme included Beethoven's Sonata in B flat (Op. 22), Chopin's Ballade in G minor, and several studies by Köhler, Taubert, &c., all of which were played with a skill that, seeing who was the performer, needs no assertion. The lectures will be continued weekly.—D. T., Feb. 7.

ST VALENTINE.*

This month the venturous crocus
Peeps from the snowy ground,
And often bending by his side
The snowdrop fair is found.
She watches him all tenderly,
While standing in the cold,
And he to her admiring eyes
Displays his cup of gold.
And so those first flow'rs of the spring
Their gentle lives entwine;
The crocus would not be alone,
So takes a Valentine.

We hear the chatter of the birds,
But know not what they say;
'Tis said they, too, make up their minds
On this auspicious day.
They know about St Valentine,
And sing aloud his fame;
And say to lovers, one and all,
Go thou and do the same.
Make haste, then, your epistles write,
Take them to post in time;
And, like the crocus and the birds,
Choose now your Valentine.

S. P. HOWELL.

* Copyright.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

Herr Joachim made his first appearance for the season on Monday last, and, as usual, was welcomed by a crowded and distinguished audience with all the enthusiasm the presence of a great artist is calculated to excite. We have so often enlarged upon the remarkable qualities of the Hungarian violinist that little indeed is left to say. And yet the subject can hardly be dismissed in few words, because Herr Joachim occupies a unique position. For example, he is well nigh the only man in the front rank of the musical profession who stands, so to speak, outside controversy. His claims none admit with more readiness than those nearest him in distinction, while he is everywhere accepted as an artist illustrious at once by unrivalled skill, lofty purpose, and the modesty which supplies the crowning grace of genius. The advent of such a man is no ordinary occurrence. Not alone is it the coming amongst us of a great executant, but of one whose unostentatious devotion to art supplies an example unhappily as rare as it is bright and attractive.

Beethoven's quartet in C major (Op. 59) headed the programme, and was played in a manner almost faultless by Herr Joachim and his colleagues, MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti. Again did the slow movement of this work hold as by a charm an audience familiar with every note. Well it might, for here, if anywhere, is the consummation of musical art—the union in just degree of all the qualities that make perfection. In this instance Beethoven both delights the mind and gratifies the passion for sensuous beauty. But he does more, by showing that the province of his art embraces the highest faculties of our complex nature. No one can hear this wonderful movement without being stirred to the depths, or without consciousness of a pure and exalting influence. And yet how simple are the means employed. There is no writing up, or down, to a "programme;" no stipulation that the listener shall put himself in this or that mental or emotional attitude; no parade or fuss of any kind; merely an unpretending piece of abstract music. Being what it is, and accomplishing what it does, the movement supplies a standard of highest art, and helps to preserve in a time of degeneration the level of public taste. The second quartet was Haydn's ever-welcome one in G major (Op. 64), best remembered by its pretty minuet and tuneful adagio, to which the singing quality of Herr Joachim's violin lent an almost vocal charm. But the great artist's triumph was obtained by his execution of Bach's Chaconne in D minor—a work indissolubly connected with his name. A more perfect performance even Herr Joachim has never given us, nor has the Monday Popular audience ever more lustily expressed the questionable approval which imposes a double task. The pianist was Miss Marie Krebs, who revived Clementi's Sonata in C major (Op. 34) after seventeen years of abeyance, it having been last played in St James's Hall by M^{de} Arabella Goddard during the season of 1860. Although not the best of the master's compositions for the pianoforte, this sonata is quite worthy of more frequent hearing, if only by reason of a slow movement remarkable—being Clementi's—for depth of sentiment. The full beauty of this part of the work was not brought out as it should have been, chiefly because the tempo was unduly hurried; but, in the opening and closing movements, Miss Krebs' agile fingers and neat execution did ample justice to her theme. Mr Lloyd sang Beethoven's "Quail," and Gounod's "When thou art nigh," in his best style, to the accompaniment of Sir Julius Benedict.—D. T., Feb. 7.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of the Organ Recitals by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 8th:—

Overture, Rosamunde	Schubert.
Sérénade, "Mira la bianca luna"	Rossini.
Organ Concerto (C minor)	Handel.
Prière, pour l'Orgue	A. Guilmant.
Sarabande, from the Violin Sonatas }	Bach.
Alla Breve for the Organ (D major) }	Beethoven.
March, Egmont

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 10th:—

Organ Concerto (F major)	Handel.
---------------------------------	---------

PRAGUE.—Die Königin von Saba is in rehearsal here.

LAIBACH.—The oldest musical society in Germany, the "Philharmoniker," celebrated its 150th anniversary on the 22nd ult.

SMYRNA.—An Italian opera company has been performing here. After the 14th March, a series of representations will be given by the French opera company now at Athens.

POPULAR CONCERTS FOR 1877.

(RETROSPECT.)

At Monday's Popular Concert, January 8th, first of the new year, Mr Arthur Chappell made his patrons an acceptable gift in the shape of another previously unheard quartet by Haydn—the C major, Op. 50 (No. 2). As fresh, ingenious, and charming as any of its companions, this quartet, finely played by MM. Straus, Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti, was heard with undiminished interest from one end to the other. No fitter antidote for much that has recently tended to corrupt the public taste could be found than the vigorous music of Haydn, the frequent recourse to which just now is a healthy and re-assuring symptom. "The more of Haydn the better" cannot be urged too often in the interests of genuine art. Mozart's Divertimento in B flat for stringed instruments, one of his early Salzburg productions, but not the less graceful and attractive on that account, was also in the programme. The pianist was Mdlle Marie Krebs, who gave weight and dignity to her first appearance by what was on the whole an admirable performance of Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata"—thus baptised by Cranz, the Hamburg publisher, though styled simply, "Sonata in F minor, Op. 57," by its composer. We thought that Mdlle Krebs made a little too much out of the unpretentious andante, as though to exhibit what Molière, in the Précieuses Ridicules, denominates "le beau de la chose;" but the first and third movements (the last taken at a prodigious pace) were beyond criticism. Mdlle Krebs also joined Signor Piatti in Beethoven's early sonata for pianoforte and violoncello (F major)—a performance in all respects excellent. The vocalist was Mdlle Thekla Friedländer, who gave songs by J. S. Bach, Schubert, and Schumann in a pure and expressive style, accompanied by Mr Zerbini.

An important new feature at the concert on Monday the 15th was the Liebeslieder-Walzer of Johannes Brahms. This consists of no fewer than eighteen numbers, arranged for two performers on the pianoforte, with a quartet of voices ad libitum. So long and uninterrupted a series of movements in three-four measure might threaten to become monotonous; but Herr Brahms has so cleverly varied their character and rhythmical structure, and so sympathetically caught the spirit of the verses (from the Polydora of Daumer) to which they are allied, that little or no sense of monotony is incurred. The idea is happy, if not quite new, Spohr, in his charming Lied, "Beneath the silver beams of Luna," and others of the kind, having anticipated it. The performance was excellent on all hands, the pianoforte part being very effectively played by Mdlle Marie Krebs and Miss Agnes Zimmermann, and the parts for voices admirably rendered by Mdlles Löwe and Redeker, Messrs Shakespeare and Pyatt. The audience were evidently pleased both with the composition and its rendering. Another novelty was Chopin's Rondo in C for two pianofortes, which, however brilliantly executed by the two ladies just named, did not impress us greatly. Far better than either Brahms or Chopin was Mendelssohn, represented by his early quartet in E flat (Op 12), which could hardly have been interpreted more conformably with the spirit of its composer than by Messrs Henry Holmes, Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti. The delicious canzonetta in G minor was, as usual, encored. This was the eighteenth performance of the same quartet at St James's Hall. Two of Schumann's charming "Spanisches Liederspiel" (to Geibel's poetry), for four voices and accompaniment for two performers, were also contributed. The concert, one of the most attractive of the series, ended with Beethoven's trio in G for pianoforte and stringed instruments, played by Mdlle Krebs, Mr Holmes, and Signor Piatti.

At the next Saturday afternoon's concert Signor Piatti introduced a somewhat dry sonata by Giorgio Antonioti, a Milanese virtuoso of the seventeenth century. Originally composed for that almost exploded instrument the viol da gamba, it suits the violoncello just as well; and Signor Piatti, accompanied by Sir Julius Benedict, played it to perfection. The pianist was Mdlle Marie Krebs, who gave Beethoven's sonata, Les Adieux, l'Absence, et le Retour, about which so many fantastic legends have been written, with great spirit and brilliancy. The concert began with Mendelssohn's quintet in B flat, always interesting as having been the first piece in the programme of the first Monday Popular Concert (Feb. 14, 1859). It was finely executed by MM. Straus, Ries, Zerbini, Burnett, and Piatti, two of whom by the way—the second and last mentioned—took part in the same quintet on the occasion to which we refer, eighteen years ago, when M. Wieniawski was principal violin and Mr Doyle viola. Monday's concert (Jan. 22) began with the first of the three quartets dedicated by Beethoven to Count Rasumowski (that in F), which, admirable as they are, is not excelled by either of its followers. It was in this quartet, as in his Sinfonia Eroica for the orchestra, that Beethoven declared his independence of all previous models, and invented a new art-world of his own. The Thirty-two Variations on an original theme in C minor, for pianoforte alone, which immediately succeeded the Rasumowski quartets, proclaim an equal independence. Only Beethoven could have imagined them. These were given with wonderful spirit by Mdlle Krebs, who also joined Signor Piatti in Mendelssohn's Tema con variazioni, for pianoforte and violoncello (originally composed for his brother Paul), and Herr Straus in one of the early violin sonatas (D) dedicated by Beethoven to his quasi-instructor, Antonio Salieri. At both these concerts the singers were German—Mdlle Redeker on Saturday, Mdlles Thekla Friedländer and Redeker on Monday; and at both we had exclusively German songs, in the German language. Surely there are some English, French, Italian, and even Spanish songs worth an occasional hearing. This perpetual adherence to the German Lied smacks a little too much of the "toujours perdrix." We don't object to Schumann and Brahms—far less to Schubert; but a change now and then would be agreeable to Mr Chappell's audience, even at the sacrifice of Lassen, Rubinstein, and others who could be named.

At the concert on Saturday (Jan. 27) a hitherto unknown quartet by Mozart was introduced. By "unknown" we mean to a large majority of the English musical public, few of whom are aware that, besides the familiar "ten," published in score, Mozart wrote two-and-twenty others. The one introduced by Mr Chappell on the present occasion was composed in 1773, nine years before the celebrated set of six dedicated to Haydn, by which Mozart, as a writer of quartets, is chiefly recognised. The key is D minor, and, though of quite independent construction, the period at which it appeared borne in mind, the quartet in D minor is a masterpiece. The finale, an elaborately developed fugue, will be less readily understood than what preceded it. The second movement, andante grazioso, full of the Orphean melody which invariably distinguishes the Salzburg musician, was encored, and the entire quartet warmly received. It is a welcome addition to a repertory already extensive without parallel. The Liebeslieder-Walzer, by Brahms, were repeated, with the same performers, vocal and instrumental; and so was the duet for two pianofortes by Chopin (played again by Misses Krebs and Zimmermann)—though hardly, we think, with equally good reason. Monday evening's concert (Jan. 29) began with Schumann's third quartet (A major), in some respects the most laboured and least engaging of the series of three dedicated to Mendelssohn. The finale, notwithstanding the several episodes, is intolerably monotonous. The sonata was Beethoven's No. 3 of the set inscribed to Haydn, played with great vigour and mechanical correctness by Miss Agnes Zimmermann. No. 5 of Spohr's last set of Salon-Stücke for violin, a somewhat cloying composition, was introduced by Mr Henry Holmes (one of Spohr's most valued pupils); and the concert ended with Schubert's interesting trio in B flat for piano, violin, and violoncello, about which, and its companion in E flat, Schumann, in his Gesammelte Schriften, indulges in such singular rhapsodies. Four vocal duets (all German, of course) were introduced by two German ladies (Mdlles Friedländer and Redeker), the last of which, Rubinstein's "Nachtlied," obtained an encore. Sir Julius Benedict was the accompanist. At the concert on Saturday (Feb. 3) Mdlle Marie Krebs played Dussek's magnificent sonata, the Plus Ultra. Better late than never. We may hope now to hear, occasionally, more from the extensive repertory of Mdlle Arabella Goddard.

(To be continued.)

TO JOHN PARRY.

Parry, we are loath to let you go;
For years we have been saying No,
Waiting till we could find another.
Where didst thou get the schooling
Of thy sweet, gentle fooling?
Hast thou no pupil left, or brother?
No! To the future and the past farewell!
None but thyself can be thy parallel.

Bennett.

BAYONNE.—Girofle-Girofla has been brought out with success.

CAEN.—A subscription has been set on foot by the Society of Fine Arts for the purpose of erecting a monument to Auber.

TOURNAI.—A comic opera, La fausse Alerte, words by M. Auguste Meedagh, music by M. Henri Blot, has been produced.

AMSTERDAM.—The Evenings of Classical Music at the Palais de l'Industrie are well attended, the audiences numbering from three to four thousand. The orchestra, directed by M. Coen, is good, while the selections furnish evidence of discrimination. One of the latest programmes was as follows:—Overture, "Meeresstille," Mendelssohn; Seventh Symphony, Beethoven; Overture, Der Freischütz, Weber; "Festouvertüre," Reinecke; Andante, Haydn; Capriccio, Niels Gade; Adagio and Minuetto, Beethoven.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The concert on Saturday afternoon was interesting for more reasons than one. It was the first of the new year; the programme was selected exclusively from the vocal and instrumental works of Mendelssohn; and the incomparable violinist, Herr Joseph Joachim, made his always welcome début for the season. These facts sufficiently account for the crowded attendance. The weather, moreover, being favourable, no inducement was wanting to tempt musical amateurs to Sydenham.

That Mendelssohn was born on the 3rd of February, 1809, all who, appreciating his music at its worth, rank him among the very greatest of composers, are aware; and it was no less fitting than graceful on the part of those in authority so to arrange their programme as to make it, to the best of their ability, commemorative of an event of such importance to art. Beethoven alone excepted, no one has helped more towards making the Crystal Palace Concerts, in their most legitimate features, attractive to the public than Mendelssohn. The programme of Saturday offers an excellent idea of the varied phases in the composer's many-sided talent, but might with greater advantage, we think, have been so devised as to represent his progress from early youth to maturity. It is, at any rate, well worth quoting:—

Overture, Ruy Blas; Part-song, "For the New Year"; Air, "Then shall the righteous" (Elijah); Concerto for violin and orchestra; Part-song, "The Wandering Minstrel"; Song, "The Garland"; Adagio in E flat, from an unpublished symphony, written for quintet of strings and solo violin (first time of performance); Part-song, "Remembrance"; The Scotch Symphony.

The adagio in E flat, from the early symphony—the "No. 12," in F—should certainly have come first, and doubtless would have headed the programme, but for the sake of Herr Joachim, who undertook the violin solos, and had also the more responsible task before him of playing the concerto. Beyond that, little mattered. First, or last, the unknown movement would have been welcome, and doubly so had the entire symphony been produced—an example of precocity for which scarcely a parallel could be cited. In his remarks upon this adagio, "G," the always well-informed annotator of the Crystal Palace programmes, furnishes his readers with a very interesting catalogue of the twelve early symphonies of Mendelssohn, now, with the remainder of his manuscript compositions, deposited in the Imperial Library at Berlin, where every amateur may obtain access to them. The specimen brought forward on Saturday can only have engendered a strong desire on the part of the audience to know the entire work, of which it forms the third in a series of five movements. Beautiful from beginning to end, it is not the less valuable on account of the manifest indications as to how the aspiring young musician was influenced by the example and attracted by the ideas of composers whom he naturally must have regarded with veneration. Scored for quintet of stringed instruments, with solo obbligato for violin as principal feature, the adagio has quite a solemn effect, and the studied carefulness of the execution brought all its merits conspicuously into light. Herr Joachim's interpretation of the solo part for leading violin was worthy himself and the master to whom in his early youth he owed so much, and who entertained for him so deep and lasting a regard. Let us hope that henceforth there may be no further obstacles to the musical world's becoming acquainted with all that, under any circumstances, may be presentable among these much-coveted relics of one who, though early taken away, crowned his life work with an inspiration so noble as the oratorio of Elijah. Given the dates of production, and whatever their respective merits, they can only be instructive, as landmarks in the career of one of the most remarkable geniuses to be named in the annals of the nineteenth century.

How Herr Joachim plays the violin concerto—the only one published, although we find another, in D. minor, among the manuscripts—is unnecessary to say. To render it more perfectly seems to us impossible. A peculiar interest must always be attached to this concerto when publicly introduced by the Hungarian violinist. The last concert to which Mendelssohn himself ever listened was held at the Leipsic Gewandhaus in 1847, a very short time before his death, when Joachim, still a boy, was the executant. Often as it has been heard in this country, where it was first brought forward at a Philharmonic concert, in 1846, by the Italian virtuoso, Camillo Sivori (shortly before the production of Elijah at Birmingham), it always sounds fresh and young, and on Saturday, as may be imagined, was more than ordinarily welcome. The warmth of his reception appeared at first somewhat to disturb the constitutional equanimity of Herr Joachim; but he was soon thoroughly master of his exceptional means, and played more magnificently than ever. His delivery of the exquisite andante in C major sounded almost like an elegiac tribute to the master whom he loved so much, and the irresistible finale given, in accordance with Mendelssohn's own idea, "as quick as possible," an essential condition of the Mendelssohnian family of scherzos, where rapidity and accuracy can be combined, both astonished and enraptured everybody, and the customary enthusiastic demonstration followed. About the Ruy Blas overture and the symphony in A minor ("Scotch") to write a single word that has not been written over and over again would be difficult; but to say that they have never in our remembrance, here or elsewhere, been more splendidly executed than on the present occasion, by the orchestra under the direction of Herr August Manna, is only a just tribute to the admirable conductor and the skilled professors who follow the indications of his bâton. The overture was, indeed, as impressive a beginning as the symphony was a triumphant climax. The two solo songs, both familiar, were given by Mr Edward Lloyd with the utmost care and artistic taste; and though the part-songs, here and there, would have fared the better for a little more delicate attention to light and shade, they were for the most part delivered by the choir with commendable earnestness and spirit. Altogether the concert was thoroughly enjoyable, and worthy the musical reputation the Crystal Palace has so honourably earned.—Times.

Verses for Music.

GOOD NIGHT.*

The day to silence passes
In passionless repose;
Amid the dew-steeped grasses
The daisy-petals close.
The balmy air is wasting
Its sighs in shadow-light;
Our hour of bliss is hast'ning—
Good night! Good night!

I linger in the shadows,
I watch the daylight die,
While o'er the dusky meadows
The breezes pause and sigh.
O'er copse and hazel-cover,
Sweeps on the dark-robed night;
Farewell; the day is over,
And our delight!

Beyond the rolling waters
The golden sun has fled,
And ev'ning's star-crowned daughters
Light earth and sky instead.
Yet waiting—still together
I whisper.—Wrong or right?
"Oh! that it were for ever!"
And no—Good night!"

"RITA."

* Copyright.

VENICE.—A Politeama is in course of erection on the Lido. PAVIA.—Signor Fraschini has presented the Corporation with 2,000 francs, towards repairing the theatre which bears his name.

HANOVER.—It was determined in 1872 to erect a monument to Heinrich Marschner. Since then the Committee, with Count Bennigsen as chairman, and Mdle Hartzel, of Berlin, the artist chosen to carry out the design, have laboured incessantly. If no obstacle should arise, the inauguration will take place on the 30th May, when a Marschner Concert will be given in the Theatre Royal. Herr Joachim will play, which, it is expected, will bring in the sum required, and even more.

"Tiger" Muses on his Birthday.

*Who nurs'd me in my infant days,
Put up with all my little ways,
And, if I marl'd, would sing my praise?*
Louisa.

*Who watch'd my slumbers night by night,
And, when I gasp'd, jump'd up in fright,
Or kiss'd me if I tried to bite?*
Louisa.

*Who call'd in doctors by the score,
Though only once she heard me more,
And vow'd I lay at Death's own door?*
Louisa.

*Who gave me many a nasty mess
(All for my good I must confess),
And risk'd my loving her the less?*
Louisa.

*Who wash'd and comb'd me, 'gainst my will,
And, more's the pity, does so still,
Although, being old, I take it ill?*
Louisa.

*Who thron'd me on his manly breast,
Where, like a king, I bark'd my 'heat,
And none dare treat it as a jest?*
My Harrett.

*Who took my part, no matter what
The deed of sin they caught me at,
While tid-bits from his plate I gat?*
My Harrett.

*Who thinks that I can do no wrong;
That, through the ages fam'd in song,
I ought to history belong?*
My Harrett.

*Who always, with protecting hand,
A smiling face and mien so bland,
Has help'd me to each ill withstand?*
Dear Duncan.

*Who, though he never fed me much,
Has given me many a loving touch
With fingers I have sought to clutch?*
Dear Duncan.

*Who on the table made me dance,
As though I were a dog of France,
With inborn tendencies to prance?*
Old Jimmy.

*Who, when I "begged" upon the floor
Till all my hinder parts were sore,
Said "Mister Tiger, there's the door"?*
Old Jimmy.

*Who, in his paper, laugh'd at me,
And tried his best to funny be,
With jokes the public couldn't see?*
Old Jimmy.

*Who when in t'other world we meet,
My teeth being sound, my legs being fleet,
Shall I in painful fashion greet?*
Old Jimmy.

*Who'll sing my dirge when I am dead;
Who for good rhymes will rack his head,
And, finding none, use bad instead?*
My Poet.

[Having, in consequence of grave indisposition, been unable to hold Court Plenary on the recent anniversary of his birthday, according to ancient custom, Major-General Tiger, under the weight of ten long years, well spent, retired to his private apartments, and, half sleeping (though wide-awake on emergency), mused as his faithful Post-Laureate ("J. B.") sets forth above.—D. P.]

I see to my mate, I see,
Them Turkeys is spirited chaps,
To throw up their Hatts and Midhats,
And pluckily stick to the Fex.
Bentwellwellben.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

NINETEENTH SEASON, 1876-7.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE TWENTY-THIRD CONCERT,
MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 12, 1877.

To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.
QUARTET, in E flat, No. 1, for two violins, viola, and violoncello —MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI... Cherubini.
SONGS { "Star vicino" ... Salvatore Rosa.
 "Suoi dar la vita all'or" ... Buononcini.
Mr MCGUCKIN.
THREE SKETCHES, "The Lake, the Millstream, and the Fountain," for pianoforte alone—Mdlle MARIE KREBS ... Sterndale Bennett.
PART II.
SONATA, in D minor, Op. 121, for pianoforte and violin—Mdlle
MARIE KREBS and Herr JOACHIM ... Schumann.
SONG, "The Garland" —Mr MCGUCKIN ... Mendelssohn.
QUARTET, in D major, Op. 64, No. 1, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI ... Haydn.
Conductor ... Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 10, 1877.

To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET, in B flat, Op. 18, No. 6, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI ... Beethoven.
SONG, "In a distant land"—Miss GOWA ... Taubert.
SONATA, in A minor, Op. 42, for pianoforte alone—Miss AGNES ZIMMERMANN ... Schubert.
SONATA, "Il Trillo del Diavolo," for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment—Herr JOACHIM ... Tartini.
SONGS { "Ich liebe dich" ... Beethoven.
 "Mein Schatz ist auf der Wanderschaft" ... Franz.
Miss GOWA.
QUARTET, in E flat, Op. 47, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—Miss AGNES ZIMMERMANN, MM. JOACHIM, ZERBINI, and PIATTI ... Schumann.
Conductor ... Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

DEATHS.

On the 25th Jan., at his residence, in Paris, HENRI DESPLACES, of the Royal Italian Opera, London, in his 54th year. Friends will kindly accept this intimation.

On February 6th, at 37, Whitfield Street, Tottenham Court Road, GEORGE LEWIS PANORMO, guitar maker, aged 62.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1877.

Episodes on Change.

DR SHIPPING.—I am informed that the New York Music Trade Review is about to become exclusively a trade journal, and to abandon criticism on music and musicians.

DR QUINCE.—It is wise in its generation. The two departments were never well fitted. [Exeunt severally.]

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

MR MAPLESON has engaged the charming young singer, Mdle Mila Rodani, for a tour in the provinces, to be followed by some performances at Her Majesty's Opera. There is a talk of Mr Mapleson again becoming director of Her Majesty's Theatre in the Haymarket, but we cannot vouch for the truth of the rumour.

MDLLE MINNIE HAUKE, the darling of the Berlin, as erewhile of the Viennese, operatic public, is likely to be heard in the summer season at one of our Italian Operahouses this year. She will be welcome back to England, none having forgotten the satisfaction she gave, when quite a young girl, at the late Her Majesty's Theatre, some time ago.

THE success of Mdle Albani at the Paris Italian Opera is enhanced by her appearance as the heroine of Bellini's Sonnambula. The young Canadian songstress has been an opportune acquisition to M. Léon Escudier. The recent ineffective performances, by a new company of Verdi's Aida went far to weaken the attraction of that much-vaunted opera.

ONE evening, as we gather from the same authority, the conversation turned at a party on the new thoroughfares opened round the Grand-Opéra. Great praise was awarded the Prefect of the Seine for bestowing on those nearest the theatre the names of authors recently deceased. "By the way," said one of those present, "you, too, M. Auber, have a street called after you, though you are still alive and well." "Oh!" replied the composer, "M. Hausmann has given me credit."

THE connection which existed between Auber and Scribe was the result of chance. A letter written by the latter to the former, as we learn from the Journal de Musique, was the means destined to bring together these two celebrated men, who ever after remained true to their old friendship. Scribe wrote to Auber, whom he had then never seen:

"Sir,—Will you allow me to place in a vaudeville I am now writing for the Théâtre de Madame your pretty rondo, so justly popular, of La Bergère Châtelaine? I will not disguise from you, Sir, the fact that I have guaranteed to my manager the success of the piece, and to enable me to keep my word I relied upon your charming music."

To this prose madrigal the composer replied by another madrigal, as follows:

"My rondo, Sir, is not worth much, and your wit does not stand in need of my feeble assistance. But if, with the permission you demand, and which you do not require, I could lend you M^{me} Boulanger's pretty voice and pretty face, I think we should both make a good thing of it."

Such was the starting point of a professional alliance of nearly forty years, and enrich the repertoires of two styles.

ONE more anecdote, also from the Journal de Musique, concerning the same master, and we have done—for this week. In 1867, a prize was offered in Paris for the best Cantata. A number of such compositions were sent in, and Auber was on the Committee appointed to decide who was entitled to the prize. One of the Cantatas was very fearful, but the Committee were undergoing it bravely, when suddenly the member who was at the piano stopped. "What's the matter?" inquired Auber. "The writer has not marked the tempo of this interlude, and I was just thinking how I should take it." "My dear sir, since he has not marked the tempo, profit by the fact, and take it as quickly as you can."

THE Neue Berliner Musikzeitung gives the following interesting particulars respecting Spontini's Ferdinand Cortez, which has just been brought out again, or revived, as it is termed, at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin: "Cortez, composed as far back as 1809, was produced in Berlin for the first time in 1814, on the 14th October, the birthday of the then Crown Prince, afterwards King Friedrich Wilhelm IV. On that occasion it was thus announced: 'Ferdinand Cortez, an Opera in 3 Acts, with Choruses and Dances.' At the very next performance, however, it was advertised as a 'grand opera;' but it was not till after the fifth representation that it was entitled Fernand Cortez. In the year 1818, Spontini introduced into it several alterations, and in 1824—he having been summoned, in 1820, to Berlin as Director-General of Music —subjected it to still further revision. The third act especially was much altered, and the entire opera put on the stage afresh, the end particularly becoming quite different to what it was before. The two principal characters, Cortez and Amazili, have been played by all kinds of artists, among them being some of the most popular. The part of the hero has been sustained most frequently in Berlin by Eunicke, who sang it nine times; Stümer, ten; Bader, eighty-seven; Pfister, seven; Hoffmann, twelve; Wo-worsky, six; and Niemann, ten. Herr Miller, Herr Kraus, and Herr Ditt played it, moreover, as 'guests,' as did also Herr Tichatschek in the year 1858. The character of Amazili, too, was sung most frequently by the lady who was the original representative in Berlin. This was Mad. Schulz, who sang it fifty-four times. She was followed by Mdle Eunicke, Mad. Grünbaum, Mdle Sabine Heinefetter, and Mdle von Schätzel two and three times each, as well as by Mad. Schröder-Devrient, twice during a starring engagement. Altogether, from 1814 to 1868 the opera was played in Berlin 146 times, the performances not being stopped even by the fact of the composer's having fallen into disgrace and been dismissed. His later works Nurmahal, Alcidor, and Agnes von Hohenstaufen, failed to please the public in an equal degree. The composer was accused of assigning too much importance to the masses and the instruments, and consequently of neglecting melody. This gave rise to differences between him and the public, so, having been legally proceeded against and condemned for speaking unbecomingly of the King, he turned his back on Berlin and went to Italy. He was pardoned in 1842."

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

MR AUGUSTUS L. TAMPLIN's fourteenth recital took place in the "Estey" Organ Rooms, on Thursday afternoon, February 8th. We subjoin the programme: Preludium; Gavotte (A. Fiori); Song, "On wings of music," (Mendelssohn), Mrs Sicklemore; Legende, (Th. Kullak); Duets, "The Angel" (Rubinstein), and "The Tempting Flower" (Schumann), Mrs Sicklemore and Mrs Bradshaw-McKay; Ave Maria (Arcadelt); Aria "God shall wipe away all tears" (Sullivan), Mrs Bradshaw-McKay; Fantasia, Lucia (Donizetti).

The Lewisham Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac., Oxon., gave their first concert on Saturday last. The programme comprised numerous classical works, among which was the first movement of Beethoven's Violin Concerto, played by Mr Alfred Burnett, leader of the society, and greatly applauded. Gounod's "La Colombe" was given and encored. Mr John Cheshire played Parish-Alvars' "Fairy's Dance" and his own Fantasia on airs from Lucia di Lammermoor, with both of which the audience were delighted. The vocalists were Mrs Harry Brett, Miss Matilda Roby, and Mr W. Webster, Jun. (amateurs). The gentleman reflected much credit on his instructor, Mr W. H. Cummings. His singing of Rossini's "Miei Rampoli" was so good that he was compelled to repeat it. The society deserves every encouragement.—(From a Correspondent.)

THE third annual concert in aid of the funds of the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest took place at the Shoreditch Town Hall on the 30th January. The director and conductor was Sir Julius Benedict, and it can hardly be a matter of surprise that an entertainment provided by a gentleman with so extensive an experience should have resulted in a financial and artistic success. By means of this concert, an institution, situated not in the wealthiest quarter of London, but which for the good that it effects deserves to be fostered by all whom Providence has blessed with health and riches, is likely, we are informed, to be benefited to the extent of about two hundred pounds. The artists responding to the call of Sir Julius Benedict (whose zeal for the charity, "without fee or reward," was gratefully acknowledged by one of the hon. secretaries—an announcement cheered to the echo by an audience which filled every part of the hall) won golden opinions. The vocalists were Misses Catherine Penna, Mary Davies, Lellie Bertie, Frances Brooke, Annie Butterworth, and Mad. Christiani; Messrs Shakespeare, Guy, Frederic Penna, and Maybrick. Miss Albert (Sir Julius Benedict's pupil) was the pianist. The merits of most of these being known, it is not requisite to make special reference to their artistic doings; but the progress Miss Albert is making deserves special notice. This young artist, who played a Fantasia by Liszt and a "Pasquinade" by Gottschalk, was called upon to repeat both. The other instrumentalist was Mr Card, who played the flute obbligato part to Sir Henry Bishop's "Echo Song," charmingly sung by Miss Catherine Penna. Sir Julius Benedict accompanied the vocal pieces (no less than twenty-four) with consummate ability.

PROVINCIAL.

KINGSTON.—Mr H. L. Winter gave a lecture on Friday week, on the "Rise and Growth of English Church Music," illustrated by anthems by the old English writers, sung by a choir of fifty from Albert Hall Choral Society; the solos by Miss Matilda Roby, Miss Kate Lerner, and Messrs Barnby, Frost, Monk, King, and Winter. Mr Edwin Bending presided at the organ.—F. A. J.

EDINBURGH.—The organ performances of the Professor of Music, which are to the University students a very pleasing feature of the winter Session, attract large audiences, and are listened to with rapt attention. The following selection was played by Sir Herbert Oakeley on January 25th:—Pastoral Chorus, "Questo è il cielo contenti (Alcina), Air, "Dove sei, amato bene?" (Rodelinda), Fugue, No. 6, C minor (Handel); Terzetto, "Most beautiful appear," Air and Chorus, "The marvellous work," Creation (Haydn); Andante, pianoforte Sonata in F (Mozart); Tempo di minueto, Sonata, pianoforte and violin, No. 3, Op. 30 (Beethoven); Prelude and Fugue, organ, No. 2, Op. 37 (Mendelssohn); Lied, "To Sunshine," No. 4, Op. 36, and Frühlingslied, No. 13, Op. 68 (Schumann); Two Gavottes (Corelli); March, Abraham (Molique).

LEEDS.—Mr Ramsden gave, at the last of his annual series of four grand concerts, at Victoria Hall, Mendelssohn's Elijah. St Paul, The Messiah, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony were given at the others. The hall was crowded. The instrumentalists were the members of Mr Charles Hallé's Manchester orchestra, conducted by himself; the solo singers being Mmes Edith Wynne and Enriquez, Messrs H. Guy and Archibald Ramsden. The Mercury of February 1, says:—"With regard to the allotment of solos, special interest was taken in the fact that Mr Archibald Ramsden had himself undertaken the principal part—that of the Prophet. Having gone rather out of practice as a public singer, it required no little courage to assume this trying rôle, but our townsman may fairly be complimented on the result. The requisites, which he had evidently not neglected, were a careful study of the part and an earnest endeavour to make the best of it. His voice is a baritone of good quality, and what it may have sometimes lacked in power—at least in the low register—was compensated by intelligent declamation. Elijah's challenge to Ahab and the idolatrous priests was admirably realised, as well as the scornful taunts of the Prophet, in the florid air, 'Is not his word like a fire?' Mr Ramsden's voice was sometimes rather over-weighted by the orchestra; but the air was deservedly applauded, while the pathetic and melodious 'It is enough,' was given with genuine refinement."

THE STRAKOSCH OPERAHOUSE.

(From the "New York World.")

The Strakosch Grand Operahouse project seems to be meeting with a more cordial support than its promoters had expected. It is proposed to locate the building up town, somewhere between Thirtieth and Fiftieth Streets, in the belief that the wealthy people in that neighbourhood will patronise a place of amusement near home, and in the expectation that such a place would be much used for the purposes of balls, receptions, and public meetings. The hotel-keepers, jewellers, store-keepers generally, and real-estate owners in the upper part of the city have made liberal offers of assistance. In fact, the enterprise has already taken such form that a board of directors has been appointed to carry the plans into execution, and it is claimed that they have received offers of more subscriptions than is needed. Among the directors is William H. Vanderbilt, who takes great interest in the undertaking, and promises material aid to it. There being thus every prospect of success, the directors are turning their attention to the question of selecting a suitable site for the building. They have been offered and will choose one of these three: the large open space opposite the Grand Central Depot, Gilmore's Garden, or Mrs Paron Steven's lot at the corner of Forty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue. The last is most likely to be selected as, owing to its central location in the best part of the city, it will be best adapted to the proposed building. It is stated on good authority that the new theatre is not to be devoted solely to Italian opera, but will be used for French, German, and English opera, for dramatic representations, and for spectacular performances. In a few days the board of directors will make public their plans and expectations. Meanwhile it may be said that Mr Arthur Gilman has been selected as the architect of the new building, and is now engaged in preparing and submitting designs. He proposes to embody in the new edifice the chief features of La Scala in Milan, the Covent Garden Theatre in London, and the San Carlo in Naples. It is to hold 4,000 people, and the leading lines of the auditorium are to be exact copies of those of La Scala, which is considered a perfect model of a lyric theatre. The contemplated ground dimensions are 200 feet in length by 180 feet in width. The distance from the curtain to the back of the boxes will be 105 feet, and from the footlights to the rear of the stage 70 feet. The width across the auditorium will be about 70 feet. There will be five tiers of boxes, all alike, and a gallery, but no proscenium boxes. The corridors and entrances will be unusually large, the foyer will be very spacious, and the doors will be made four times the usual size, so as to afford the greatest possible facility of exit. The parquet will be supported on strong cast-iron pillars, and so constructed that it can be at any time raised level with the stage, though it is some feet below it, thus affording a perfect dancing-floor when needed. The exterior will be in grand style and highly ornamental, of the same school of architectural decoration as the Covent Garden Theatre. Mr Gilman thinks that, when completed, it will be one of the handsomest buildings in the world, and a notable addition to the architectural features of the city. Letters have been received from well-known singers abroad, inquiring about the prospects of the new movement. Among professionals here it is thought that if the Strakosch Operahouse should be built it would cause a sudden and profitable revival in lyric drama, and give a new impetus to theatrical business generally.

QUARTET CONCERTS.

Moved, no doubt, by a desire to place themselves before the public as exponents of their art in its highest and most exacting form, Messrs Carrodus and Edward Howell, assisted by Mr Val Nicholson and Mr Doyle, gave the first of three quartet concerts last evening in the Langham Hall. They are to be commended for so doing according to the precise degree in which it is better for a man to help himself rather than to complain that he can get no assistance from others. We may regret the fact, but it is a fact nevertheless, that English instrumentalists have small chance of being heard outside the rank and file of an orchestra. In this position their duty is, as far as may be, to make their own opportunity, and to force the assertion of their talent where its display is not invited. The English artists now in question are men of whose ability their compatriots have no reason to be ashamed. Of some of them, indeed, we have long been proud; nor was this feeling lessened by last night's experience, which proved that all are adequate to the task undertaken, and prepared for the severe criticism challenged. The programme opened with Beethoven's favourite Quartet in G major (Op. 18)—one of the best known of the six dedicated to Haydn. Throughout the performance of this work the ensemble was excellent, the "lead" of Mr Carrodus wanting little of delicacy, and showing abundance of vigour, while the whole exhibited a unity of feeling by no means to be gained at haphazard. The "virtuosity" of the concert-givers had, however, a more complete demonstration in their respective solos, Mr Carrodus selecting the Chaconne played by Herr Joachim on the previous evening, and Mr Howell a sonata in G for violoncello by Boccherini. Each artist obtained an undoubted success. As regards the Chaconne, no comparison between the Hungarian executant and his English confrère is necessary. They give different readings of the work, but both, in the matter of executive skill, may claim the highest honours. Mr Carrodus, looking at the prodigious difficulty of his task, can expect no ampler or more emphatic praise than this. In the old Italian master's sonata Mr Edward Howell displayed to great advantage the beauty and even quality of his tone, the precision of his manipulation, and the still higher qualities which spring from true artistic taste. On the strength of this performance alone he is entitled to high rank, and, being still young, to the regard that anticipates yet greater success in the future. Both Mr Howell and Mr Carrodus were, it is needless to state, loudly applauded by an audience of connoisseurs. The vocalist was Mr Lloyd, who sang, charmingly, Loder's serenade, "Wake, my love," and Gounod's "Maid of Athens," accompanied with perfect taste and skill by Mr W. Henry Thomas, who also discharged a like duty, not less ably, in the case of Boccherini's sonata.—D. T., Feb. 7.

In ancient Rome, in days gone by,
All eyes looked where the Bust should lie;
So here, in finding Slade set free,
Lies, beyond doubt, the Palmyra. Wefflen.

COPENHAGEN.—On her return from Stockholm, Mme Trebelli will appear at the Theatre Royal.

FAURE IN THE FRENCH PROVINCES.

(Extract from a Letter.)

After having completed his most successful concert tour, Faure is now starting through the departments in some of his most famous characters on the lyric stage. Of course, there is but one opinion regarding his extraordinary merit, both as an actor and a singer. Every person is enraptured with him, and his journey is accompanied by a continuous pean, taken up by one set of enthusiastic admirers after another, as he proceeds from town to town. The various local papers teem with his praise; indeed, it would almost seem, to alter one word in Shakspeare's text,

"As though increase of eulogy had grown
By what it fed on."

To give all the favourable articles which have appeared on him would be a sheer impossibility, but here are two or three taken at hazard from a heap of others I have just read. La Côte d'Or, of Dijon, in its notice on the 18th January of the Grand Théâtre, says:—

"The performance yesterday with Faure in Hamlet was magnificent. The house was crammed from pit to gallery. Such an event remains in the history of a theatre, and it will not be one of the least meritorious acts of M. Défossez, who, by the way, has done so many, to have introduced this great, this unrivalled, and this marvellous artist on the Dijon stage.—What can be said of Faure that has not been said already and repeated a hundred times? He occupies in the domain of art so high a position, incontestable and uncontested, that any estimate of him becomes superfluous. We can understand the enthusiasm he excited in the South and the ovations paid him there. He was a king whom the public saluted as he passed. We have seen him in nearly all his characters, and it struck us that the character which suited him best was Mozart's Don Juan. Don Juan, in our opinion, was for him what Camille, in Les Horaces, was for the sublime Rachel—his finest and principal creation. But we no longer entertain this somewhat too exclusive opinion. When reaching the height it has reached in the present instance, art appropriates and ennobles all it touches. Faure is now decidedly as remarkable in Hamlet as he was and still is in Don Juan. Nay, more; when interpreted by him, Ambroise Thomas's work assumes fresh proportions. Nothing in it appears too long, while its defects and shortcomings vanish. We are not going to compare Faure with any of the great singers who have lent lustre to the French stage. Such comparisons always fail in various points. But there is one thing we may say: Never was any artist more assuredly so complete. He possesses a delicious organ, flexible and sonorous, lending itself to every sentiment and to every passion, and, in turn, charming and agitating the spectator to the inmost depths of his soul. He possesses an amount of musical science beyond which there is nothing, unless it be something superior to human perfection. Lastly, he possesses that knowledge of the stage which imparts such value to his intonation, his gestures, and the play of his features. A singer like Rubini, he is as dramatic as Frédéric Lemaitre. This association, this union, of two natures constitutes and realises the highest expression of art. The public yesterday understood this. The applause burst forth from all sides to re-commence immediately afterwards. From act to act, scene to scene, Hamlet was nothing but an ovation to the sovereign artist."

Le Bien public of the same date remarks:—

"The performance yesterday was a long triumph for the great artist, whose reputation no longer requires to be made. Faure is decidedly the most accomplished singer, and one of the finest actors of the day. The public, who were enthusiastic, overwhelmed him with applause and recalled him after every act. It is impossible to particularise the passages in which he was more admirable than in others. To our idea, he surpassed himself in the duet of the first act, and was inimitable in the third. The audience were in ecstasies. In the fourth he attained the highest expression of dramatic art. It is impossible to move an audience more. Faure's visit will mark an epoch in the annals of our theatre."

At Nice Faure selected Donizetti's Favorita for his first appearance. Le Phare du Littoral, of the 31st January, thus writes:—

"We may as well say at once the great artist's success was colossal. Faure is indisputably the first singer-actor of our epoch. His gestures are sober and remarkably appropriate; his physiognomy is most expressive; the way in which he emits his voice is charming; and his method is enchanting. He is not an artist to suit that section of the public who desire only exaggerated shouts and movements. No; he is a refined singer, and, in La Favorita, really a king. His 'Pour tant d'amour' would alone suffice to transport and satisfy those most difficult to please. The air was encored. We are happy to know that we shall hear this great artist in Faust."

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our Correspondent.)

Since my last letter we have had a remarkably fine performance of Verdi's Requiem under Mr Hallé's direction, with M^{me} Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Mr Lloyd, and Signor Foli as the principal singers. It would be a bold prediction to say that this Mass will ever rival Rossini's Stabat Mater in popular favour; and the absence of solos of the character of "Cujus animam" and "Pro peccatis" is probably one reason why it will not become such a people's work as Rossini's noble version of the old hymn; but the impression created by the second performance of Verdi's Requiem in Manchester was exceedingly favourable, and the work was judged on its merits, without the interest which attended the performance in London. Last week there was a miscellaneous programme at Mr Hallé's weekly concert. Rubinstein's "Ocean" Symphony was repeated, and Mr Hallé played in his own irreplicable manner Beethoven's Sonata in F sharp, Op. 78. The singers were M^{me} Sinico and Signor Campobello.

At the Concert Hall last week M^{lle} Marie Krebs, who is a great favourite here, played Mendelssohn's G minor Concerto to the great delight of a critical audience, and was no less successful in a barcarolle by Rubinstein and Liszt's "Rhapsodie Hongroise." Miss Julia Gaylord, a member of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, whose singing in opera is as much admired here as in London, made her début as a concert singer; and Mr Lloyd sang several songs, I need not say how. A fine performance of Gade's Symphony in A minor was one of the treats of the evening.

During last week there were two very agreeable concerts of classical chamber music, one under the direction of M. Hochstetter, who was assisted by Signor Risegari, M. Speelman, Herr Otto Bernhardt, and M. Vieuxtemps; the other by Mr F. Unger, who had the aid of Herr Bauerkeller and M. Vieuxtemps.

Mr De Jong was unfortunate at his last concert. M. Wieniawski's much-deplored illness prevented that great artist from fulfilling his engagement, and M^{me} Varley-Liebe, who had been secured as a substitute, was also unable to come. Happily the resources of the orchestra afforded ample compensation, Mr Van Biene's solo on the violoncello and Mr DeJong's on the flute being accepted without the slightest dissatisfaction. Mr J. F. Barnett's descriptive piece, The Lay of the Last Minstrel, was the most important orchestral feature of this concert. The singers were Miss Anna Williams and Miss Joyce Maas, who were both successful.

Herr Joachim will make his first appearance this week at Mr Hallé's concerts.

Next week Actis and Galatea is promised, with M^{me} Lemmens, Mr Lloyd, Mr Guy, and Signor Foli. Mr De Jong announces as the attraction of his last concert the most popular singer of the day—in other words—Mr Sims Reeves.

Feb. 7.

PRETTY INNOCENT.—Mamma, mamma! the Queen is going to open Parliament in person.

MAMMA.—Indeed? Are Beatrice and Arthur going to be married?
Benwell.

At a meeting of Welsh gentlemen held at 7, Queen Victoria Street, Mr John Thomas, of the Royal Academy of Music, read a statement containing the following remarks:—"The results of the Scholarship have been gratifying in every way, for not only has it been the means of affording the successful candidate, Miss Mary Davies, a superior musical education at the Royal Academy of Music for three years—which has already enabled her greatly to distinguish herself in her profession—but it has acted as a powerful incentive to other competitors, the competition revealing so much talent among them, and eliciting such high encomiums from the Board of Professors, that they were induced, one and all, to enter the Royal Academy of Music, and are already recognised among the most promising of the 300 students in the institution." It may further be stated that Miss Mary Davies, during the period of her scholarship, was awarded the bronze and silver medals of the Royal Academy and the Parepa-Rosa gold medal, "as the most accomplished vocalist in the institution." Mr Thomas proposes to collect the sum of £1,000 for founding a permanent scholarship in connection with Wales.

CARRODUS.

(From the Glasgow "Bailie.")

Interesting himself as he does mainly in the graver concerns of his native city, The Bailie yet makes it a duty, as well as finds it a pleasure, in common he believes with the wiser of his brethren on the bench, to take paternal note of the recreations of his fellow citizens, and his worship knows no purer or more elevating enjoyment than in listening to music of a high class, interpreted, as at present amongst us, by executants of skill, taste, and experience. The Bailie seldom misses a night at the choral or orchestral concerts, and he notices with gratification the increasing appreciation in which the instrumental music itself is being held; for a growing liking for that department of the art, which is illustrative for the most part of ideas in the abstract, argues a growing refinement of taste and an increasing apprehension of musical form and expression. Having been an enthusiastic fiddle-player in his young days, and occasionally yet solacing himself with a tune on the tenor when the cares of office press heavily, it is not to be wondered at that among all the instruments of the orchestra The Bailie feels the deepest interest in the violin; and it is therefore, also, with peculiar pleasure to himself, as well as in response to what must be the desire of his readers, that the principal violin of the Glasgow resident orchestra, or "leader," as he is technically called, Mr John T. Carrodus, is this week placed in his worship's portrait gallery. This distinguished player is a native of Keighley, a flourishing Yorkshire town, mainly engaged in worsted manufactures, and rather noted of late for its spirited but mistaken resistance to vaccination. Keighley, it may be remembered, is close to Haworth, the home of the Brontës. "The voice of the inhabitants," Mrs Gaskell observes in the description of that town in her Life of Charlotte Brontë, "are hard, and their tones discordant, promising little of the musical taste that distinguishes the district, and which has already furnished a Carrodus to the musical world." The rather Latin-like cognomen of our violinist, suggesting, indeed, to most people, naturally, the foreign rather than the native artist, is, it would seem, a corruption of Carruthers—a family of that name having migrated into Yorkshire some time during the last century from Dumfriesshire; which is another proof, by-the-bye, that a little genealogical study will decide every distinguished man to have been a Scotchman. The elder Carrodus, who was in business at Keighley, was the musical spirit of the town, a violin player, and the leader of its choral society; and his son showing a decided taste for the violin at an early age, it was resolved that he should follow as a profession the art his father was so devoted to. The future concerto-player studied eight and even ten hours a-day, making rapid progress. He made his first public appearance in his native town, when he played one of De Beriot's solos—at the time very popular; and, obtaining an introduction to Molique, he went to London—when only twelve years of age—for lessons from that famous German violinist and composer, who was temporarily resident there and in the zenith of his fame. Molique was at that time concert master at Stuttgart to the Duke of Wurtemberg, and was so pleased with the skill of his pupil (who could essay his own most difficult compositions), and the progress he was making, that, requiring to return to his home duties, the warm-hearted master offered to give the lad gratuitous lessons if he would accompany him to Germany, which our violinist did, being there during the eventful year 1848, and remaining till of the age of seventeen or eighteen, studying both the violin and musical composition. The first orchestral engagement he obtained on his return home was, it is interesting to know, in Glasgow, in the winter of 1851, under Julian Adams, then giving concerts somewhat à la Jullien. Mr Carrodus took further instruction from Molique, who had become permanently resident in London, and he was next engaged—a step higher—for the first Bradford Musical Festival, under the conductorship of Costa, when he played a solo by his musical mentor and favourite composer. Costa, not then knighted, marked his approval of the playing of Carrodus by at once engaging him for the orchestra of the Royal Italian Opera at Covent Garden, where he entered in the rear rank of the first violins, with many eminent players as his compeers, besides becoming a member of the principal societies in London. His first important appearance in the metropolis, as a soloist, was at one of the concerts of the once celebrated, but now defunct, "Musical Society of London," conducted by the late Alfred Mellon. It was a surprise to most people that there was one in the ranks of the orchestra capable of executing the difficult solo music performed, and it was not long ere the appointment was offered and accepted of leading violin at Her Majesty's Theatre under Signor Arditì. There at this historical house, so full of vicissitudes and odd experiences, Mr Carrodus remained a few years, and then transferred his services back to "the other house" (Covent Garden) as leader (in place of sixteenth when he entered), and that post Mr Carrodus now holds. The career of Mr Carrodus is a splendid example of talent, industry and determination. He has now attained a position among the masters of the violin, the first of instruments, which entitles him to a place in the long roll of distinguished players, Continental and British. It is no exaggeration to say that in John Carrodus we have probably the best and most valuable exponent of the English school of violin playing. Mr Carrodus was fortunate in his master, and, following that distinguished example, he has never at any time yielded to ad captandum "trick playing," but has continued to respect and to hold his place, not only as a soloist of the best class, but as a leader on whom the fullest dependence can be placed for orchestral steadiness, firmness, judgment, absence of mannerism and eccentricity.

Dr Hans von Bülow.

(From the "Music Trade Review.")

The advent of Mdme Annette Essipoff, the Russian pianist, brings to mind the appearance here, just one year ago, of Dr Hans von Bülow. The Doctor had been in New York only a day or two when he was one of the best-hated men in the city, and not only in the city, but in the country. The reason for this can be told easily. On the 16th of November, 1875, a Sun reporter called on Dr von Bülow, and the result of his conversation was published accurately in the Sun of the 17th. Few newspaper articles of the kind have been more widely disseminated or more powerful in their influence. The interview was copied—or portions of it at least—in most of the American journals, in most of the German-American papers, and garbled portions found their way across the sea, and were printed in English,* French, and German journals there. The cause of this is plain. Bad news travels quickly. Dr von Bülow, rising from a short nap, to keep his appointment with the writer of the article, feeling rather cross, a privilege of genius, poured forth in a voluble flood of broken English the story of his trials here in America—trials which he ascribed principally to the beer-drinking habits of his countrymen, the Germans, be-rating soundly both habit and people. His unfortunate misunderstanding with the late Mr Bergmann was told at length; and he went so far as to style certain very influential Germans in this city "no gentlemen." Then he attacked Mdme Arabella Goddard, the English pianist (what a pity!—D. P.). He only found words of praise for America and Americans, whom he lauded unreservedly (of course). The result was something quite unexpected to the doughty doctor of music, who, until then, had not fully appreciated the far-reaching power of the American press (!). His manager, the gentleman to whom we owe the pleasure of hearing most of the musical celebrities of the day, among them the great Rubinstein (!) and the charming Essipoff (Hear, hear!), tells an interesting story of the causes that led to Von Bülow's remarkable conversation and the results that followed the report of it in the Sun.

"Dr von Bülow," says this gentleman, "came to America with pleasant anticipations. He hoped to leave behind him for a time his sorrows and troubles, and add new laurels to his already great name as a musician. I went to Boston to meet him, and greeted him on shipboard. It was a lovely October day. The air was superb, and Von Bülow was exhilarated and delighted. We drove to his rooms, which were in a private house on Beacon Street, delightfully situated. Arriving there, we found that the good ladies of Boston (Ullmann, Esq.?) had decorated the rooms most lavishly with flowers and elegant tapestries. Here was a compliment and a silent welcome which the Doctor could and did appreciate. He was more than delighted. He seemed to be perfectly happy, and began to converse with me in a most charming manner. While thus engaged he noticed a German paper, published here in America, lying on the table among the flowers and objects of art. In his quick, nervous manner he picked it up, stuck his glasses on his nose, and read the heading of the first and most prominent article on the page. His eyes flashed, his face grew dark, and with an oath he threw the paper to the floor, and his joy and enthusiasm were gone. For the article which thus affected the pianist was a rough, heartless, scurrilous narration of the Doctor's domestic troubles, so well known, reflecting bitterly against him." "Yes," continued the manager strongly, "in a paper printed in the German language was this vile attack against the great German artist, and some enemy had taken the pains to place it where it would meet his eye as soon as he landed in America. American ladies (Ullmann, Esq.?) did him honour. A countryman sought to do him dishonour here. Thus came about his first impressions of Germans in America. To men like Bülow impressions are not easy to eradicate. Then came the Bergmann affair. Poor Bergmann is dead. I wish to say nothing against him. I but tell the facts in justice to Von Bülow. After securing Bergmann to conduct at the Bülow concerts, I went with him to Boston, drove him to the Parker House, gave him good apartments, ordered wine, and gave orders that all his wants should be supplied. Von Bülow in the most delicate manner, and with rare thoughtfulness, had said that he should be glad to meet Mr Bergmann the next morning, that they might go over the scores together, so that at the rehearsal he (Bülow) would not be obliged to give Mr Bergmann points in the presence of his orchestra. Von Bülow, a conductor himself, knew well how to treat a conductor. But the next day, Saturday, Bergmann did not appear. I learned that he had left the Parker House, taken a room at a third-class German hotel, and was enjoying himself with his friends. I found him, and he promised to come at seven in the evening. But he did not come. Nor on the next day. In short, Von Bülow did not see him until about fifteen minutes before the rehearsal. Consequently, he had to instruct him in the presence of the orchestra, much to Bergmann's ill-concealed displeasure. The breach was further widened when, at the first concert, Bergmann, after the overture, as Bülow was about to play the famous Bach fugues, said aloud, so that I and many others heard, 'Gentlemen, let's go and get a glass of beer.' Bülow could not forgive that insult. It brought about a quarrel with Bergmann, who resigned, and Mr Lang, an American, took his place. So here you have the primary causes that led Von Bülow to think lightly of Germans and beer-drinking."

* The entire interview (or "hinterview"—as our Special Cockney, in his inimitable lay, entitles it) was published in the Musical World. There was no "garbling"—with deference, of course, to the Music Trade Review.

"What he said on the subject you heard and reported correctly," continued the speaker. "The result you couldn't guess, and do not know. It was a large loss financially to us, and to Von Bülow of the goodwill of the thousands of Germans in America. The next morning after the interview was published the Doctor received a quantity of threatening letters, threatening not only his reputation, but his life. The attendance at the concerts immediately fell off, though we did not feel that as much here in New York. New York being so cosmopolitan in the character of its people, we were not so dependent on the Germans for patronage; but outside of New York, in the provincial cities, we felt the result of the Doctor's injudicious conversation. The article in the Sun preceded us everywhere, and small houses greeted us. In the West this was especially noticeable, where at least forty per cent. of the music-loving community are Germans. The German musical societies took action against the Doctor, and not only stayed away from his concerts, but used their influence against him. He was received coldly everywhere by his countrymen. How do I know that he would have drawn better than he did but for his unguarded remarks? By comparison with the Rubinstein business. Bülow began with a much larger business than did Rubinstein. Before the article in the Sun we were making 6,000 dollars a week with four concerts. After the article appeared we did a negative business, just about paying expenses, while with Rubinstein we made money on the same grounds. We had engaged Von Bülow for 172 concerts, but after 139 he begged to be released from his engagement, and we consented. But why did Bülow attack the Steinways? Simply because he was in bad humour, and because they are Germans; for no other reason in the world. (Qy.) He bitterly regretted it, as he did the whole conversation, but he never denied having said all that was ascribed to him. The Steinways were advised to reply to the attack, but they knew the nature of Bülow, and chose to overlook the little failings of the man in their admiration of the wonderful talents of the artist." "I was with the Doctor," continued the manager, "throughout the tour, and I found him a great-hearted man, a noble man, easily provoked and irritated, to be sure, troubled about trifles, speaking his mind plainly and unthinkingly, and then feeling hearty sorrow for his hastiness. He fully appreciated and heartily admired America and American institutions (!). He talked seriously of becoming naturalised, and I shall not be surprised should he return before many years and make his home here." "For one thing we may thank Von Bülow," said the manager in conclusion; "that is, for the presence of Mme Essipoff in New York. He continually talked of her wonderful playing, and urged me to bring her over here. I have succeeded, with what result you know." (We know.—D. P.)—New York Sun.

[We may have a word or two to say about the Bülow "Interview" by-and-by, now that the Doctor has happily recovered from his severe illness.—D. P.]

WAIFS.

Mme Trebelli has been singing at Stockholm.

Herr August Wilhelmj has gone on a tour in the provinces.

Signor Operti has composed a three-act opera on Dan'l Druce.

Mr W. Dorrell has arrived in town from his retreat in Sussex.

Herr Joseph Joachim played in a concert at Wolverhampton on Tuesday.

Mr A. Lawrence Fryer is appointed principal tenor at the Foundling Chapel.

The Swedish Lady Quartet have been very successful in the United States.

Mme Christine Nilsson has given a concert at Vienna with brilliant success.

Herr Wilhelmj has been engaged by Herr Ullmann for a series of concerts in America.

The receipts of the second Masked Ball at the Grand-Opéra amounted to 80,000 francs.

Mme Ilma di Murasa will begin a concert tour through the United States next month.

The Kellogg English Opera Company recently played for four evenings at the Academy of Music, New York.

It is probable that Mad. Marie Roze will shortly make her re-appearance at the Paris Opéra-Comique in Mignon.

He murmured: "I'm a man of quiet tastes;" then went behind the door, took flask from pocket, and tasted something.

Le Timbre d'Argent, by M. Camille Saint-Saëns, will be ready for production at the Théâtre-Lyrique in about a week.

The Messiah was performed at San Francisco in Christmas week by the Haydn and Handel and Oakland Harmonic Societies.

On the 26th January, Robert le Diable, performed at the Grand-Opéra for the six hundredth time, brought in 18,000 francs.

The Grand Theatre at Christiana has been almost entirely destroyed by fire. How few theatres escape this periodical visitation!

After having been translated into German, Dr Filippo Filippi's book, Musici e Musicisti, has appeared in a French dress.

During the series of concerts given by her in New York, Mad. Essipoff played from memory no fewer than ninety compositions.

Mdlle Haupt, who took part last summer in the performances at Bayreuth, has married Herr Siegfried Unger, and retired from the stage.

Herr Johann Strauss is arranging his opera, Die Fledermaus, for the Théâtre de la Renaissance. The French libretto is by MM. Delacour and Victor Wilder.

Mr Ch. J. Bishenden informs us that the directors of the Operahouse, Amsterdam, have now adopted the French musical pitch, at the desire of Mme Christine Nilsson.

The orchestral scores of two hundred Italian operas have been purchased in Florence, by M. Wekerlin, for the library of the Paris Conservatoire. Many of them are very rare.

Grann's Passion music, Der Tod Jesu, will be sung in the church of St Gabriel, Warwick Square, Pimlico, on the seven Wednesdays in Lent, commencing on Ash Wednesday, at 8 p.m.

Pope and Howard, managers of the Varieties Theatre, New Orleans, have brought an action against Miss Clara Louise Kellogg for breach of contract. Damages laid at 5,000 dollars.

A Brooklyn young lady who was inattentive at whist, has broken off her engagement with her lover, because he recommended her to "scoop her mind up in a peanut shell and fix it on the game."

We should like to hear Handel's Solomon, if only for once, with simply the organ part added to it by Mendelssohn, many years ago, for the Lower Rhenish Festival, held at Düsseldorf.—Graphic.

A deputation of Professors from the Paris Conservatory of Music, M. Thomas at their head, waited upon the Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, to thank him for augmenting salaries.

According to letters from Riga and Tilsit, great things are to be expected from Herr Hermann Genas, a pianist, hitherto known only in the above two towns, but who is about to visit the various capitals of Europe.

Anton Rubinstein's symphony, entitled "Ocean," has been performed at Mr Hallé's Liverpool Concerts. It was given as far back as 1858, under the composer's personal direction, in the Hanover Square Rooms.

M. Faure's first dramatic performance at Nice was in the Favorite of Donizetti. The Nice public seemed to share the opinion of the Paris public—that there is now but one Alphonse IX. on the operatic boards.

A pious father lately entered a New York saloon with a horsewhip and found his son playing euchre. He tanned the young man's jacket, sent him home, sat down and finished the game himself.

M Léon Gatayes, well known in the three-fold character of composer, harpist, and art-critic, died recently at Paris, aged seventy-two. Among the persons present at his funeral was his old and attached friend, Alphonse Karr.

The programme of Theodor Thomas's fourth Symphony Concert in New York, on the 3rd inst., comprised Suite No. 3, in D (J. S. Bach); Pastoral Symphony (Beethoven); Siegfried's Death, and the finale from Herr R. Wagner's Götterdämmerung.

Herr Franz Jauner, definitively appointed manager of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, receives a salary of £960 a year, in addition to 20 per cent. on the profits. He has free lodging, lighting, firing, and the use of a carriage from the Imperial stables. Besides managing the Opera, he conducts the Carl-Theater on his own account.

An impassioned Centennial orator asked: "Where are the men of '76!" A Western editor said he had not seen any old parties of that age since the last Can-Can troupe visited the town, but, on that evening, the orator might have found all the men from sixty-five and upwards, sitting in the water-melon patch, with smiles on their faces and latch-keys in their pockets.

I Puritani, with a new tenor, is to follow Linda di Chamouni at the Théâtre-Italien, Paris. Sig. Masini will make his first appearance on the 27th inst., the opera selected being Aida. He will afterwards sing in Un Ballo in Maschera and La Traviata. From the beginning of next month there will be four performances a week: two with Sig. Masini and two with Mdle Albani.

He casually remarked that the new servant-girl had an attractive mouth, but she said nothing. When he came home that night, and learned that the new servant had left during the day for California, and that the only person who could be found to take her place was a woman sixty years old, with two sets of false teeth, and a wen on her chin, he set himself to thinking.

Some months since, when she went to St Petersburg, Mdle Heilbron paid M. Vizentini a forfeit of 20,000 francs for non-fulfilment of her engagement with him at the Théâtre-Lyrique. On her return from Russia, she will sing at—the Théâtre-Lyrique. She will make her first appearance (as, also, Mdle Berthe Thibault, who leaves the Opéra-Comique), in Le Bruto, of M. Salvayre.

Dr Verrinder's lecture at the College of Organists on Tuesday last was one of the most successful of the series. Rev. I. Haydon, Dr Bridge, Mr A. Cooper, Mr Turpin, and other members of the college, took part in the discussion; and, on the motion of Dr Bridge, a vote of thanks was tendered to Dr Verrinder "for his eloquent and interesting paper on the Temple Service and Synagogue Music."

A negro woman belonging to a troupe of jubilee singers sang religious songs with so much sweetness and fervour that the citizens of Otis, Indiana, grew enthusiastic in their admiration. They gave her, as "a testimonial of approval of artistic merit and humble worth," a purse full of silver dollars. She got drunk with the money, and, when one of the admiring citizens helped a constable to arrest her, stabbed him with a knife.

Mdle Albani appeared last Saturday in Linda di Chamouni at the Italian Opera, Paris, and made a great "hit." The Canadian songstress was "called" for three times at the conclusion of the opera. Mdle Albani introduced, as a finale, Arditi's "Belles Viennoises" waltz, which met with great success at Messrs Gatti's Promenade Concerts last season. The waltz, in its vocal form, is christened, "L'Albani."

Three grand "Te Deums" will be sung in Rome this year, namely: those of Canossa, Venice, and Rome—as they are respectively called—the first to celebrate the eighth centenary of the submission of the Emperor Henry IV. to Gregory VII.; the second for the seventh centenary of the day when Frederick Barbarossa implored the forgiveness of Alexander III., and rendered homage to him at Venice; and the third for the fifth centenary of the re-establishment of the Papal See at Rome, after seventy years of exile at Avignon.

When a Chicago girl received a dispatch from Wisconsin announcing that her lover was going off with consumption, she telegraphed to his friend: "Has poor Jeffrey kept up his life insurance?" The friend telegraphed back: "Policy for 10,000 dollars in your favour is paid up to May 9, 1877. Poor Jeffrey cannot last after the first cold snap." The young lady wondering philosophically how she would look in black, telegraphed to Jeffrey: "Darling, I will be with you on Tuesday, never to quit you during life.—LURLINE." "Twill be a sad loss to you, my love," said her mother. "Yes, ma," sobbed the poor girl, "but it's covered by insurance."

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE"

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. &c. in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

MOMENTS HEUREUX. Etude pour le Violon (sans Accompagnement) ou Piano seul, Composée, et dédiée à son Maître, Mons. PROSPER SAINTON, par F. J. AMOR (de Salisbury, en Angleterre). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TWO SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

"THE TEST." Words by ADA 4s
"A GENTLE WORD." Words by S. CHAMPION 4s
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE HUNTER. Song. The Words by W. C. BRYANT. The Music by E. REYLOFF. (Sung with great success by Mr G. H. SNAZELLE.) Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Sung by Mr EDWARD LLOYD, and Just Published.

THE RINGLET. Song. Poetry by TENNYSON (by permission). Music by DESMOND L. RYAN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW EDITIONS.

"LA GAVOTTE DE VESTRIS." Arrangé pour piano... .. 3s
"LE RAJAH DE MYSORE." Fantaisie sur l'opéra de C. Lecocq 4s.

Par ALPHONSE LACOMBE.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GAVOTTE (in G). For the Pianoforte. By W. H. MONTGOMERY. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

ASSIS SUR LA VERTE COLLINE. ("THE WISH.") Paroles et Musique de M. WHITE. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer" - - - - -	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata - - - - -	4	0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE - - - - -	4	0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ - - - - -	4	0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA - - - - -	3	0
RINK GALOP - - - - -	4	0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE - - - - -	4	0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps - - - - -	4	0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP - - - - -	3	0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo" - - - - -	4	0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES - - - - -	4	0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES - - - - -	4	0
WEST-END POLKA - - - - -	3	0
SOLDIERS' POLKA - - - - -	3	0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA - - - - -	3	0
BIG BEN POLKA - - - - -	3	0
LILLIAN POLKA - - - - -	3	0
SULTAN'S POLKA - - - - -	3	0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE - - - - -	s. d.
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS - - - - -	4	0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO - - - - -	3	0
PIANOFORTE DUET - - - - -	4	0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obligato) - - - - -	3	0
HARMONIUM - - - - -	3	0
MARCHE MILITAIRE - - - - -	3	0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet - - - - -	4	0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2S. 6D. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
OVERTURE - - - - -	3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day" - - - - -	3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away" - - - - -	3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat - - - - -	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill" - - - - -	2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever" - - - - -	4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly" - - - - -	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee" - - - - -	4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me" - - - - -	3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F - - - - -	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron" - - - - -	3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE - - - - -
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night" - - - - -	3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country" - - - - -	3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met" - - - - -	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F - - - - -	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring" - - - - -	4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you" - - - - -	3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C - - - - -	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine" - - - - -	4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be" - - - - -	3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F - - - - -	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing" - - - - -	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F - - - - -	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand" - - - - -	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	5	0
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	2	6
	4	0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC.

PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

BOOSEY & CO.'S

NEW EDITION OF

The Passion

(ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW).

THE PROSE TAKEN LITERALLY FROM THE GOSPEL, AND THE VERSE TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN

BY

JOHN OXENFORD.

THE MUSIC EDITED BY

J. PITTMAN.

PRICE 1s. 6d. CLOTH, GILT EDGES, 3s.

ALSO, PUBLISHED SEPARATELY, THE MUSIC (IN FULL SCORE) OF

THE CORALES,

ACCOMPANIED BY THE WHOLE OF THE TEXT, FORMING A COMPLETE HANDY BOOK FOR THE USE
OF THE CONGREGATION.

PRICE 6d. IN PAPER. 1s. CLOTH GILT.

London: BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street, W.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 7.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT. THIS DAY. The Programme will include:—Overture, Medée (Oherubini); Symphony, in 4, "Ox-ford" (Haydn); Pianoforte Concerto in G (Beethoven); Overture, Saul (A. Bizini) first time in England. Vocalists—Miss Sophie Löwe, M^{me} Antoinette Sterling. Solo Pianoforte—Miss Marie Krebs. Conductor—MR AUGUST MANN. Numbered Stalls, in Area and Gallery, Half-a-Crown; Area or Gallery Seats (unnumbered), One Shilling.

FRIDAY NEXT.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL. Conductor—Sir MICHAEL COSTA. FRIDAY next, Feb. 23, at Half-past Seven, a Selection from the Works of HANDEL and MOZART. Principal Vocalists—M^{me} Sinoio, Miss Julia Elton; Mr Vernon Rigby and Mr Lewis Thomas. Tickets, 3s., 5s.; Area, reserved in rows, 7s.; Stalls, 10s. 6d.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL, at Eight o'clock. The programme for Wednesday will contain the following standard and popular songs:—"My heart is sair for somebody" (M^{me} Sherrington); "My mother bids me bind my hair" and "Come lasses and lads" (M^{me} Cave-Ashton); "Call'er Herrin'" (M^{me} Antoinette Sterling); "Good-bye, Sweetheart" and "My Pretty Jane" (Mr Sims Reeves); "Phyllis is my only joy" and "Sweethearts" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "The Vagabond," "Nancy Lee," and "Firm as Oak" (Mr Maybrick); "The Village Blacksmith" (Mr Kempton); "Phoebe Dearest" (Mr Thornton). M^{me} Arabella Goddard will perform Benedict's "Erin," Fantasia on Irish airs, and pieces by Thalberg, Kalkbrenner, and Liszt. The modern songs will include "Spinning," by Cowen (M^{me} Sherrington); "The Lost Chord," by Arthur Sullivan (M^{me} Antoinette Sterling); "A Letter," by Blumenthal (Mr Sims Reeves); "One Only," by Weckerlin (Mr Edward Lloyd). English Glees will be sung by the London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr Fred. Walker. Conductor—MR SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 4s. and 2s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets of Austin, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of BOOSEY & CO., 295, Regent Street.

RUBINSTEIN.

RUBINSTEIN.

ANTON RUBINSTEIN will give his FIRST PIANO-FORTE RECITAL this Season at ST JAMES'S HALL, on the 30th April, at Three o'clock.

RUBINSTEIN'S RECITALS.—Liverpool, March 3rd; Manchester, 6th; Hull, 7th; Bradford, 8th; Sheffield, 9th; Nottingham, 12th; Birmingham, 13th; Leeds, 15th; Newcastle-on-Tyne, 20th; Dundee, 22nd; Edinburgh, 24th; Glasgow, 26th; Dublin, April 2nd; Southsea, 13th; Brighton, 14th; Bristol, 17th.

MR CARRODUS and MR E. HOWELL'S SECOND QUARTET CONCERT, LANGHAM HALL, TUESDAY, Feb. 20, at Eight. Messrs Carrodus, V. Nicholson, Doyle, Howell, and Walter Bache. Vocalist—Miss Annie Butterworth. Accompanist—Mr Henry Thomas. Admission, 7s., 4s., 2s. 6d., and 1s. Tickets of Mr CARRODUS, 47, St Paul's Road, N.W.; Mr HOWELL, 52, Gloucester Crescent, Regent's Park; Austin's, St James's Hall; and at the Hall.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, 27, HARLEY STREET, W.—THIRD SESSION, 1877-8. FOURTH MONTHLY MEETING, on MONDAY, March 5, 1877. At Five p.m. precisely, a Paper will be read by Dr W. MOLE, F.R.S., Mus. Doc., Oxon., on "The Philosophy of Harmony." CHARLES K. SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.

24, Sutherland Gardens, W.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY (Established 1872) for Amateur and Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms, and the Instruction includes: Lessons in Singing, Harmony, Sight Singing (Solfege), English Elocution, Italian Language, and Choral Practice. The present Term commenced on January 16, and New Students can be examined on Tuesdays, between Three and Four o'clock. Prospectuses and further Particulars can be obtained at 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park; of Mr VERT, 52, New Bond Street; also of Messrs CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond Street.

MISS JULIA WIGAN requests that all Communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park, W.; or to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

The next STUDENTS' CONCERT, open to Subscribers, Members, and Associates, will take place at this INSTITUTION (in the New Concert-room), on SATURDAY Evening, the 24th inst., at Eight o'clock. Conductor—MR WALTER MACFARREN.

Tickets (which may be purchased at the door): Balcony, 2s. 6d.; and Stalls, 5s. each.

The HALF LENT TERM will commence on Thursday, March 1, and will terminate on Saturday, April 21.

Candidates for admission can be Examined at the Institution on Monday, the 26th inst., at Eleven o'clock.

By order,

JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street,
Hanover Square, London.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—

At the STUDENTS' EVENING CONCERT, on SATURDAY, Feb. 24, will be performed, for the First Time, a New Cantata for Female Voices, entitled "THE FISHERMAIDENS." Music by HENRY SMART. Reserved Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 2s. 6d.

BRIGHTON.

MR KUHE'S MUSICAL FESTIVAL, MONDAY, Feb. 19.

A Popular Concert. Vocalist—Miss Giulia Warwick. TUESDAY, Feb. 20, a Wagner Concert: Overture, Flying Dutchman; Prelude, Lohengrin; Funeral March on the Death of Siegfried. Signor Arditi will conduct his Grand Operatic Selection from Tannhäuser. Mr Arthur Sullivan will conduct his Symphony in E. Vocalist—M^{lle} Sophie Löwe. WEDNESDAY, Feb. 21, Overtures, Stern-dale Bennett's The Naxos and Mozart's Flauto Magico; Beethoven's Symphony in C minor; Mendelssohn's Concerto, G minor (M^{me} Arabella Goddard); David's Violin Concerto (M. Sain-ton); Wagner's Bridal Procession, Lohengrin; and Mr A. Sullivan's Incidental Music to The Merchant of Venice. Conductor—MR A. Sullivan. THURSDAY, Feb. 22, M^{me} Sain-ton-Dolby's Cantata, The Legend of St Dorothy (Conductor—M. Sain-ton), and Mr J. F. Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," conducted by the Composer. Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Patey, Messrs E. Lloyd and Thurlay Beale. The Festival will conclude on SATURDAY, Feb. 24, with Handel's Messiah. Mesdames Edith Wynne and Patey, Messrs Sims Reeves, Shakespeare, and Foll. Solo Trumpet—Mr T. Harper; Chorus—Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society; Conductor—MR KUHE.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—Conductor—Mr W. G.

CUBINS. FIRST CONCERT, Feb. 22, THURSDAY, ST JAMES'S HALL, at Half-past Eight. Beethoven's Symphony, O minor; Overture: Melusine (Mendelssohn), and Oberon (Weber); Greig's Concerto, for pianoforte—Mr Ed. Dannreuther; Spohr's Dramatic Concerto, for violin—Mr Henry Holmes. Vocalists—M^{me} Edith Wynne and Mr W. H. Cummings. Subscription for Ten Concerts: Stalls, 4s.; Balcony, Two Guineas and a-Half; Single Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s., 5s., and 2s. 6d. Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co.; Chappell's; usual Agents; and Austin's, St James's Hall.

MADAME MARIE BELVAL has the honour to announce that her FIRST CONCERT will take place on THURSDAY Evening, Feb. 22, at the LANGHAM HALL, to commence at Eight o'clock, when she will be assisted by the following distinguished artists:—Vocalists—M^{me} Liebhart, Miss Frances Brooke, Miss Lella Bertie, and Miss Annie Sinclair; Messrs George Perren and William Shakespeare. Instrumentalists:—Pianoforte—Mr Wilhelm Ganz; Violin—Herr Josef Ludwig; Violoncello—Signor Pezzo. Conductors—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT and Mr WILHELM GANZ. Numbered Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 3s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets to be obtained of Chappell & Co.; and of M^{me} MARIE BELVAL, 7, Cavendish Place, W.

MR SHAKESPEARE requests that all Communications concerning ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., be addressed —6, Howick Place, Victoria Street, S.W.

THE STOCK OF MUSIC PLATES AND VALUABLE COPYRIGHTS OF MR LAMBORN COCK, OF 63, NEW BOND STREET, W.

MESSRS PUTTICK and SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on TUESDAY, Feb. 20, and following day, the STOCK OF ENGRAVED MUSIC PLATES and valuable COPYRIGHTS of MR LAMBORN COCK, of 63, New Bond Street, London, together with various other Properties, including Sir Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen," sundry Compositions of Mr John Thomas, Mr Thorpe Pede, several Publications of Messrs Hamilton & Müller, of Edinburgh, &c. Specimens of the works may now be seen at the Auction Gallery, and Catalogues had.

NEW CANTATA, BY HENRY SMART.

FOR Female Voices. The Words by FREDK. E. WEATHERLY. Entitled "THE FISHERMAIDENS." Price, in paper cover, 4s. net. LAMBORN COCK, 63, New Bond Street.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY.—President—SIR JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—HERR SCHUBERTH. Eleventh Season, 1877. The Prospectus is now ready. The Concerts and Soirées of the Society afford an excellent opportunity for rising artists to make their début, and for composers to have their works introduced. Further particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT has the honour to announce that her FOURTH ANNUAL MATINEE will take place early in March, at LOWNDERS SQUARE, Belgravia, by kind permission of George Eyre, Esq. Further particulars will shortly be announced.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE PERRER will sing ASCHER's popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at Langham Hall, Feb. 23.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR VERNON RIGBY will sing BLUMENTHAL's admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at Cambridge, Feb. 22.

"KILLARNEY."

MISS CATHERINE PENNA will sing BALFE's popular Song, "KILLARNEY," at Mr Henry Nicholson's Concert, Leicester, on Tuesday, Feb. 27.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR ALFRED BAYLIS will sing the popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on March 1, at Birmingham; and Stoke, March 2.

SITUATION WANTED.

WANTED immediately, by a Young Lady, aged 17 years, a SITUATION in a Music Warehouse. Is a good Pianist, and can teach. Good references. Address "DALTA," Musical Warehouse, 18, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

TO VIOLINISTS.—WANTED, in a Seaside Town, a GOOD PLAYER (constant engagement). Good connection can be formed, there being no violinist in the town. Apply to "Y.," care of WILLING's Newspaper Advertising Offices, 301, Strand, W.C.

TO AMATEUR FLAUTISTS AND OTHERS.

A GENTLEMAN (having no further use for them) wishes to dispose of a SILVER FLUTE, by RUDALL, CARTE & Co., "1887 Patent," with D and D sharp Shake Keys, also the key recommended by Mr Collard. The Flute, in case, complete, cost 32 Guineas. Also an 18-carat gold head, fitting the above Flute, which cost 30 Guineas. To be sold Bargains, either separately or together. Address—"A. P." 3, Promenade Terrace, Cheltenham.

MR ARTHUR SHELLEY (Primo Tenore) announces his Return to England after a five years' career as Operatic Singer in Italy (Milan, Turin, Bologna, &c.). For Concert, Opera, or Oratorio ENGAGEMENTS, or further particulars, address—14, Everett Street, Russell Square.

MDME ENRIQUEZ begs that all communications be addressed to her at No. 5, OAKLEY SQUARE, N.W.

MR WILFORD MORGAN requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to his residence, 18, Surrey Street, W.C.

MR GERARD COVENTRY (Tenor), having returned to Town from his Provincial Tour, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Concerts. Address—Care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE MONTHLY MUSICAL RECORD.—The cheapest High-class Paper on Music. Yearly Subscription, 2s. 6d. post-free. Years 1871 to 1876 (vols. 1 to 6) bound, each net 3s. "Intelligible and dispassionate criticisms and reviews, analyses of interesting compositions, and a like determination to discountenance the fictitious either in art or its practice; these are the qualifications of the paper."—Morning Post. AUGENER & Co., 86, Newgate Street, and 31, Regent Street.

At all Booksellers. In crown 8vo, price 6s.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES OF CELEBRATED VIOLINISTS. Lulli, Corelli, The Bannisters, Tartini, Viotti, Paganini, De Beriot, Ole Bull, Ernst, Joachim, &c. By Dr PHIPSON. RICHARD BENTLEY & Son, New Burlington Street.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Dépôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists.

25, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.
Price List free on application.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 62, New Bond Street, W.

THE GUITAR.—Mdme SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant instrument, is in town for the Season. For Lessons and Concerts address—22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

SUNLIGHT. New Song for Children's Voices. Words by E. L. BLANCHARD. Music by J. RIVIERE. Sung nightly with great success by the Bijou Choir of Boys at Hengler's Circus. Post-free, 18 stamps. RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

FORGET ME NOT. Sung by Miss EMILIE GRATTAN in the Children's Pantomime at the Adelphi Theatre, and daily encored. Words and Music by ED. ELLIS. Post-free, 18 stamps. RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

COME WHERE GOOD NATURE LEADS THE WAY. Sung by Little Queen Mab in the Children's Pantomime at the Adelphi Theatre, and daily encored. Words by E. L. BLANCHARD. Music by ED. ELLIS. Post-free, 18 stamps. RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

HARMONICOR.—A new and pretty Instrument with Mouthpiece and Bell. The Notes (Ten Chromatic Octaves) are played by Valves, the fingering the same as the Piano, and the sound nearly that of the Oboe. It can be easily played by children or young ladies, as there is no pressure on the lips. Price 25 5s., including Case. RIVIERE & HAWKES, 28, Leicester Square, W.

SIMPSON & CO.'S

IMPROVED HARMONIUMS.

FROM £5 5s. Five Octaves. Best make. Warranted. Nothing BETTER OR CHEAPER made. Lists post free. Trade supplied.

TO COMPOSERS wishing to PUBLISH.—Music Engraved, Printed, and Published in the best style at unusually low prices. Estimates free on receipt of MS. SIMPSON & Co., 33, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

NEW EDITION OF MACFARREN'S LECTURES ON HARMONY.

Now Ready, in 8vo, price 12s. cloth.

SIX LECTURES ON HARMONY. Delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. By G. A. MACFARREN. Second Edition, thoroughly revised, with numerous Engraved Musical Examples and Specimens. London: LONGMANS & Co.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL."

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, ST ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

LANEDOWNE COTTELL'S COMPOSITIONS.

MESSRS MOUTRIE & SON have the pleasure of announcing arrangements with Mr COTTELL, enabling them to publish a New Composition, Monthly (Vocal or Instrumental). The success of his new "Wedding March" has encouraged them in requesting Mr COTTELL to arrange it as a Pianoforte Duet. They anticipate a greater demand than ever for his last Compositions. Pianoforte and Music Saloons, 55, Baker Street, W. Catalogues post free.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

FAURE'S PROGRESS IN THE FRENCH PROVINCES.

(From an Occasional Correspondent.)

The celebrated French barytone still continues his triumphal tour. The reputation by which he is preceded is, as we are all aware, very great, but everyone admits it to be more than justified, and wherever he goes those who never heard him before join the ranks of his old admirers. He was lately at Lyons, and the local critics of that city are as loud in their praise as any of their colleagues. The Lyons-Journal, of the 11th inst., says:—

"The performance yesterday evening, at the Grand-Théâtre, of La Favorite, with M. Faure, was one of the most brilliant events we have witnessed for a long time. At seven o'clock the house was crammed, the reserved seats being filled to overflowing with splendid and sumptuous toilets. At eight o'clock the officials refused to admit anyone else. The whole attraction was the co-operation of the eminent barytone. It was on him that the attention of the public was especially concentrated; it was he they had come to see, to hear, and to applaud. And, of a certainty, he found no want of the most flattering and well-merited applause. The instant he came on the stage, he was greeted with enthusiasm, and, in the different acts, was the object of frequent recalls, one of them being after the piece: 'Pour tant d'amour.' We will not now dwell at length on the qualities of this eminent artist. Our fellow-townsmen have enjoyed on several occasions the opportunity of appreciating them. We will merely state that, far from suffering decay, they are more brilliant than ever, and that the illustrious vocalist is in the full plenitude of his powers. In the second act, the piece: 'Pour tant d'amour' was a triumph. The air from Le Siège de Corinthe was another marked success."

Le Petit Lyonnais, of the same date, writes:—

"That illustrious singer, M. Faure, gave yesterday his first performance at the Grand-Théâtre. He achieved a wonderful success; applause, recalls, rapturous ovations, and all the other most striking evidences of really enthusiastic admiration were lavished upon him; and it was only just that they should be. The grand and sympathetic artist gave his great air, 'Pour tant d'amour,' with a suavity of expression and an impassioned tenderness which literally sent the audience into ecstasies. It was long since the inhabitants of Lyons had been present at such a treat, and every fresh appearance of the eminent vocalist was the occasion for another triumph. What, now, shall we say of the grand air from Le Siège de Corinthe? Faure sang it with a purity of style, a magisterial grandeur, and a vocal splendour which revealed him in all the fulness of his magnificent talent to those who had never before been fortunate enough to hear him. This interlude procured him the well-deserved honour of three successive recalls. Is it necessary to add that the house was all resplendent with magnificent toilettes, and that there was not a single place empty, from the stalls to the fourth galleries? Here is a prosaic but eloquent fact: the receipts amounted to 10,500 francs. We can only rejoice at the unparalleled reception of an artist who, by his generous conduct towards our unemployed operatives, has proved that his heart is equal to his talent."

Le Censeur ought to entitle itself L'Admirateur, thus discoursing of the artist whom France delights to honour:—

"The first of the performances to be given by that illustrious vocalist, M. Faure, at the Grand-Théâtre, took place yesterday, the 10th inst., before a densely crowded house. La Favorite was the opera selected by him for his first appearance before the Lyons public, who gave him a genuine ovation. Everything has been said about M. Faure's talent; everything may, however, be resumed in a single word: Perfection, Perfection! This great artist must be heard in the air and duet of the second act by any one who would know what the most consummate art can do when in the service of a marvellous organ. Into the romance of the third act, 'Pour tant d'amour . . . ' M. Faure threw an amount of despatch and irony which rendered the effect even more striking than it otherwise would have been. In the grand finale of the same act he imparted to the barytone portion, especially the phrase, 'Ah! l'indigne outrage . . . ' a degree of dramatic importance which, for the majority of the public, was a perfect revelation. Recalled after each act, this king of French singers evoked, finally, an outburst of indescribable enthusiasm."

In Le Progrès of the 12th inst. we read:—

"On Saturday M. Faure inaugurated at the Grand-Théâtre, with La Favorite, the series of performances which he proposes giving here. Despite the augmentation of the regular prices, the public flocked to this musical solemnity with an eagerness that does honour to their artistic taste. It was before a house crowded to the ceiling that the celebrated baritone sang the part of Alphonse in a manner thoroughly justifying the brilliant ovation of which he was the object. Every possible expression has been already employed for the purpose of characterising and praising Faure's talent; in the presence of perfection the most flattering epithets become commonplace. Only those persons who have heard the great artist in La Favorite can have any notion how much Donizetti's music gains in value and charm by such an interpreter. M. Faure is an exceptional singer, possessed of an admirable voice; he is also a first-rate actor. With what authority he sang the grand air of the second act, 'Palais de l'Alcazar'! What a striking expression of despatch and irony he infused into the romance of the third act, 'Pour tant d'amour . . . '! A genuine revelation for all those among the audience who had never before heard the illustrious baritone was afforded by the finale of the same third act, which he invests with the most powerful dramatic character. Recalled repeatedly after each act by the long-continued bravos of the whole house, M. Faure obtained a fresh triumph by his singing of Mahomet's grand air from Le Siège de Corinthe, in which he had been previously heard at the Alcazar Concert. The public of Lyons will crowd to the Grand-Théâtre, as they did on Saturday, every time the celebrated baritone sings. It was a festival for those who went to enjoy the noble pleasures afforded by art; it was also a festival for the unfortunate workmen cruelly tried at the present moment. M. Faure has handed over for the benefit of the poor victims of the crisis the whole of his share of the receipts—or, in other words, the sum of three thousand francs. Such an act proves that the illustrious singer possesses a generous heart, as well as the soul of an artist."

The Salut public writes as follows:—

"The first performance of La Favorite, in which M. Faure took part on Saturday, at the Grand-Théâtre, was a long ovation for the eminent artist, who continues so worthily the traditions of the grand school of singing. The special and select audience who, notwithstanding the considerable augmentation in the prices of admission, occupied every nook and corner of the house, gave him a reception which was worthy of him, and worthy, also, of an intelligent and well-bred assembly. . . . When M. Faure appeared, at the commencement of the second act, to declaim the famous recitative: 'Jardins de l'Alcazar,' the dignity of his singing and the maestria of his talent entirely subjugated the public from the very first words. They recognised a man who is a master of, and a master in, his art. Though the voice has nothing about it particularly remarkable, it is admirably managed; the method and the style are irreproachable and worthy the greatest masters; but there is no one particular quality which seduces us at the cost of all the rest; it is the perfection of the whole performance which exacts recognition as a finished model of the musical drama in the highest acceptance of the word. Instead of the incoherent series of airs and recitatives which our ordinary singers give us, the character is 'composed' from one end to the other; all the details, even the slightest, tend to one common end, and the mobile play of the artist's features is as striking as the inflections of his voice. In the delicious cavatina of the third act, which brought down the house, for instance, M. Faure sang all the first part: 'Pour tant d'amour ne soyez pas ingrate,' as if scoffingly and with painful mockery, as indicated by the general sense of the drama, but, on the repetition of the melody, the heartrending sadness of the admirable cavatina obtains the upper hand, and it is with tears in his voice that the singer entrusts to the woman who has deceived him the happiness of Fernand. We do not know whether we have made ourselves understood, but this bringing out the slightest details of the drama and of the musical situation so struck the audience that they requested, with enthusiastic plaudits, to hear the whole piece over again."

Thus—as Dogberry would say—all are of a tale.

HAMBURG.—Mad. Christine Nilsson has been singing at the Stadttheater with the success which everywhere accompanies her. Herr Pollini has secured Herr Joseph Gungl to conduct the Summer Concerts given by the band of the above theatre.

MILAN.—Lucrezia Borgia has been performed at the Scala, with Mad. Sass as Lucrezia, and M. Merly as the Duke, but neither the lady nor the gentleman achieved anything like a triumph. Sig. Gayerre, on the contrary, was admirable as Gennaro. Signora Braccialini looked well as Orsini, but her voice is hardly strong enough for so large a theatre. Sig. Sarria's opera, La Campana dell'Eremitaggio, has proved a hit at the Teatro Dal Verme, though the composer is Neapolitan.

ROME.—Sig. Ponchielli's Gioconda has been well received at the Teatro Apollo. The leading characters are sustained by Signore Mariani, Edelsberg, Signori Barbacini and Parboni.

RAMEAU.*

(Continued from page 867.)

Adam goes a little too far when he assures us that the success of this work closed the lips of Rameau's detractors. The fact is that these persons never ceased their hostility, and this is so true that not one of Rameau's operas was allowed to pass muster without a struggle and without opposition, its success, though really genuine, not being firmly established for several performances. The opera of Castor experienced the fate of all the rest, but its success eventually became a triumph. After having been played twenty-one times successively, as a novelty, and after having frequently re-appeared on the stage, it was revived, on the 11th January, 1754, with important alterations, which resuscitated public curiosity. But its greatest popularity, dates, perhaps, from the year following the composer's death. The reader may judge how far this was the case from the interesting details given on the subject by the Mercur of June, 1765, in an article referring to the Grand Opera: "Our provincial readers," says the above journal, "will, no doubt, have perceived with astonishment that, for some months, this article has contained nothing save the continuation of Castor et Pollux: they will be still more astonished to learn that at a season when people are fond of walking abroad, and when the weather is most favourable for their doing so, their walks are invariably sacrificed to this opera, the receipts of which, up to the present, have been as large as on the most successful nights during the winter. It is a singular and unique fact that the last performances of the opera of Castor were as eagerly attended as the first ones. The receipts for Friday, the 24th May, the thirtieth night of the revival, exceeded 4,500 livres. It is true that the care and attention which the managers, far from reposing upon their success, have devoted to perfecting the piece, have every day added some fresh ornaments to the magnificent picture. Having recently perceived that the act of carrying off Castor from the Elysian Fields to earth was susceptible of greater illusion, they had a machine made, the picturesque effect of which was so well conceived as to represent admirably the above act. It seems as though they will grow tired of having this opera performed sooner than the public will of flocking in crowds to applaud it; judging by the concourse of Frenchmen and foreigners, when the piece is given, and the admiration evinced by the latter, the trial between French music and Italian music appears definitively decided."

VI.

I will now draw up, as succinctly as possible, the list of Rameau's dramatic compositions which followed his earlier works.

Castor et Pollux was succeeded by Les Fêtes d'Hébé, ou Les Talens lyriques, a ballet-opera, in three acts and a prologue, by Mondorge, performed on the 21st May, 1739.† Dardanus, one of the composer's most important works was produced on the 19th November of the same year. The book, in five acts and a prologue, was written by La Bruyère, and twenty-six consecutive representations proved the success of the work. Some years later, however, the authors revised it, and introduced considerable modifications, with which a brilliant revival took place on the 22nd April, 1744. It was with reference to Dardanus that Jean-Baptiste Rousseau, who must be reckoned among the most bitter of Rameau's detractors, wrote to Racine the younger: "I have learnt the fate of Rameau's opera; his vocal music astounds me. Being in Paris, I thought I would strike up a piece of it, but, having failed miserably, I conceived the notion of writing a lyrico-comic ode. Here is a strophe of it.

"Distillateurs d'accords baroques,
Dont tant d'idiot sont fêrus,
Chez les Thraces et les Iroques
Portez vos opéras bourrus.
Malgré votre art hétérogène,
Lully, de la lyrique scène,
Est toujours l'unique soutien.
Fuyez, laissez-lui son partage,
Et n'écorchez pas davantage
Les oreilles des gens de bien."

As we see, the quarrel is in reality always the same: that of

* From the Ménestrel.

† The three acts were entitled: 1. La Poésie, ou Sappho; 2. La Musique, ou Tyrtée; and 3. La Danse, ou Eglé.

routine with progress, of immobilised tradition with the healthy and vigorous doctrine of liberty in art. But in the present instance, and on Rousseau's part, there was something even less estimable at work, as we learn from De Croix, who says: "What was Rameau's crime? His glory and the fact of his having selected an opera by M. de Voltaire wherewith to make his first essay in dramatic writing."

What occasioned the silence now preserved by Rameau for more than six years! I do not know, nor have I been able to find out. The reason cannot be the publication of his works, for, during this long space of time, he gave the public only a new collection of pieces for the harpsichord.† One thing, at any rate, is certain: during these six years he wrote nothing save the music of a short one-act piece by Piron: Les Jardins de l'Hymen, ou la Rose, performed at the Opéra-Comique, on the 5th March, 1744. At this period, if we can believe Mounet, then the manager, Rameau discharged the duties of chief of the orchestra at this theatre, of which Mounet obtained the patent in 1743. Mounet carefully re-organised the theatre, and says particularly in his Mémoires‡ that the orchestra was "under the direction of M. Rameau." It is, however, difficult to believe that, after producing five grand works at the Opéra, after having achieved there two such famous successes as those of Hippolyte et Aricie and Castor et Pollux, and after having become, we may say, the arbiter of French music, the great composer should have consented to direct the orchestra of a minor theatre.

What strikes me as more probable is the supposition that Mounet is not speaking of Rameau himself, but either of his brother, who might have then been in Paris, or even of his nephew, who, as we are aware, was a good musician. But, after all, this is a point which it is not easy to clear up.

(To be continued.)

CARRODUS AND HOWELL'S QUARTET CONCERTS.

(From the "Graphic," Feb. 10th.)

Our best English violinist, Mr Carrodus, and our best English violoncellist, Mr Edward Howell, have commenced a series of quartet concerts in the Langham Hall, which promise, and are worthy of, every success. The other members of the quartet party are V. Nicholson (second violin) and Doyle (viola). The quartets chosen at the first soirée were Beethoven in G, No. 2 of the six dedicated to Prince Lobkowitz, and Mendelssohn's in D (No. 1, Op. 44). Each was admirably rendered. Both Mr Carrodus and Mr Howell figured as soloists. Mr Carrodus selected the famous "Chaconne" of J. S. Bach, which he gave with such faultless execution and unexceptionable taste as to reflect the highest possible credit on the English school of violin playing. Mr Howell, our English Piatti—just as Mr Carrodus is our English Joachim—chose a quaint old sonata in G by the Italian Boccherini (famous for his manifold quintets), to which, quaint as it is, very considerable command of the instrument is required to impart due effect. This, however, Mr. Howell possesses, adding to it a fine tone and cultivated musical taste. The two solos, as they justly deserved, were received with unanimous applause. We are glad to find English musicians asserting their own legitimate claims at their own risk. Their almost persistent exclusion from our concert-rooms, where foreigners, often not their equals, occupy places to which they are justly entitled, is no credit to the musical pretensions affected by English amateurs. We have merely to add that the vocalist at this concert was Mr Edward Lloyd, who sang the late E. J. Loder's graceful serenade, "Wake, my love," and M. Gounod's by no means remarkable setting of Lord Byron's "Maid of Athens." At the next concert we are promised Sterndale Bennett's "Chamber Trio" and (rara avis!) a pianoforte quartet by Molique, Mr Carrodus's eminent master.

* L'Ami des Arts.

† "Pièces de clavecin en concert, avec un violon ou une flûte, et une viole ou un deuxième violon, par M. Rameau.—Paris, l'auteur, la veuve Boivin et Le Clair, 1741, in-f°.

‡ "Supplément au 'Roman Comique,' ou Mémoires pour servir à la vie de Jean Mounet."

TONOMETRY.

(Athenæum.)

The problem of tonometry is: given a sustained musical tone, to determine the number of vibrations made in one second of time by each particle of air conveying the undulation to which the sensation of sound is due. By a vibration in France is meant the motion from the extreme position on one side to the extreme on the other, like the single swing of a pendulum. In England, and now in Germany, by a vibration is meant the motion from the extreme position on one side to the return to the same position, like two swings on a pendulum. This will here be always understood by the term vibration, and the former will, when necessary, be distinguished as a simple vibration. Tones are simple when the motion of the air follows the law of a pendulum; and compound in other cases. Compound tones are heard as if a certain number of simple tones (called partials) were sounded simultaneously. In this case the pitch is the number of vibrations made in one second by the lowest partial.

The old attempts at tonometry were made by a monochord, horizontal, or, much better, vertical (Smith's Harmonics and General T. Perronet Thompson's Just Intonation), stretched by a weight mathematically determined by the transverse section and specific gravity of the string, and limited by a fixed bridge at one end and a movable bridge at the other. The pitch could then be calculated from the measured length of the string. More recently, the "Siren," in which a perforated plate was driven by a stream of air with increasing but constantly-measured velocity, producing a constantly higher note, has been extensively used. The pitch of the given note had to be determined by the estimation of the ear as to when the monochord or "Siren" gave a note identical with that under examination. All these methods are liable to numerous errors, and practically their results cannot be depended on to ten vibrations in one second. Other methods were still worse.

Tonometry was first placed on a scientific basis in a badly-written but extremely valuable little pamphlet of 80 pages and four lithographic plates, published at Essen, 1834, and entitled, "The Physical and Musical Tonometer (Tonmesser)," which proves by the pendulum, visibly to the eye, the absolute vibrations of tones, and of the principal genera of combinational tones, as well as the most definite exactness of equally-tempered and mathematical chords, invented and executed by Heinrich Scheibler, silk-ware manufacturer in Crefeld—a town of Rhenish Prussia, twelve miles north-west of Düsseldorf, celebrated for its silk factories. The principle upon which Scheibler proceeded was this. Tones which differ by a small amount "beat" together—a very familiar phenomenon—varying from a slow wave to a rapid rattle; and the number of beats in a second is precisely the same as the difference in the numbers of vibrations which the two tones make in a second. A tuning-fork will also beat with an imperfect octave above it, and then the number of beats is the difference between the number of vibrations of the upper tone and double the number of vibrations of the lower tone. Thus 258 and 259, or 256 and 253, beat 3 times in a second; and 256 and 515, or 256 and 509, also beat 3; that is, the beats do not show whether the upper note is too sharp or too flat. This has to be ascertained by flattening the upper tone (placing the upper tuning-fork under one's arm for a minute or two is sufficient). If then the beats diminish in number, the upper note is brought more in tune, and was too sharp; if the beats increase in number, the upper note is brought more out of tune, and was too flat. For compound tones other intervals can be selected, as shown below.* Then two forks being tuned roughly to (say) A on the first line on the bass staff, and the A above it, the upper A is flattened till it beats exactly 4 times in a second with the lower. (This is the easiest number to count. Generally either a very exact compensating metronome has to be used, or the beats must be counted through 10 to 100 seconds, and then the number of beats divided by the number of seconds. Less than 1 and more than 6 beats in a second are difficult to count with certainty, more than 8 almost impossible.) A third fork is now tuned 4 beats (in a second, as must be always understood) sharper, and will give the exact Octave of the lowest fork without any wave of error. Then, proceeding downwards by 4 beats at a time, we reach a fork which beats sharp 4, or less than 4, times with the original fork, and these beats are accurately counted. The sum of all the beats of all the forks, two and two, from the lowest to the highest, is necessarily the exact number of vibrations of the lowest, because these beats represent the number of vibrations to be added to the lowest, in order to produce its Octave, the highest, which has twice as many vibrations. Thus the absolute pitch is known of all the forks used, and forks can be tuned to any intermediate pitch by less than 4 beats in a second. The construction of such tonometers of forks, large in size, never touched by the hand, kept at a constant temperature, and anxiously observed and re-observed, is a matter of great difficulty. Scheibler's original tonometer had 52 forks, extending from A 219½ (that is, the note called A and making 219½ vibrations in a second) to A 439½, but proceeding by unequal numbers of beats. Koenig, of Paris, subsequently improved on this by making one of 65 forks, from C 258 to C 512, proceeding by 4 beats, and added two other forks, F 341½ and A 426½. This is priced in his catalogue of 1865 at 2,000 francs, or £80. Scheibler's own tonometer was made in 1834 by Kämmerling, in Crefeld (long since deceased), for sixty dollars, or £9, paid at time of ordering (Tonmesser, p. 80).

* Let the ratio of any perfect interval be $m : n$, n being the greater number. Let two compound tones, having the vibrations y and z , and audibly possessing the n th and m th partials respectively, form exactly this interval, then $m : n :: y : z$, or $mz = ny$, and no wave is heard. If they do not exactly form the interval, the difference of mz and ny gives the number of "beats of error," as distinguished from the "rattle of the beating partials," which always exists more or less distinctly in "reeby" tones.

25, Argyll Road, Kensington.

A. G. ELLIS.

(To be continued.)

ART IN HOSPITALS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—I saw in your columns, last week, a letter from Dr J. S. Hamilton, advocating the presentation to the hospitals of London of "suitable pictures, plate, bronzes, carvings, bric-a-brac, old armour, china, sculpture, ornamental clocks, fancy glass, tasteful (?) glazed tiles, and other decorations of all sorts."

In spite of the capping to this "benevolent and admirable idea," by D. P., permit me to suggest that if "amusement," instead of "art," were advocated something might be done to wile away the weary time a patient spends in one of our metropolitan hospitals. In the first place, the class of persons who apply for admission are not those who would, especially during an illness, appreciate looking at ornamental clocks, fancy glass, china, sculpture, old armour, &c. If suitable pictures could be constructed on metal, with sliding metal frames, so that all might be changed, say, once a week (for nothing tires a patient so much as always looking at the same object); the paper's pattern on the wall of his sick room conjures up in him all sorts of ideas. So be it! but would not a good library, plenty of games, dominoes, chess, &c., toys, and picture-books, be of much more use in general hospitals than art objects, which collect dust and engender disease. In support of the last few words I may state that some few years ago an analysis was made of the dust collected from the window frames and corners of the wards of a military hospital in Paris, and resulted in the finding of "Bacteria" and all sorts of animalculæ, in fact, germs of disease. What would happen if "suitable pictures" in the shape of engravings, executed as they are, on paper not unlike blotting paper, and possessing all its absorbent properties, were hung up in the wards? To make hospital life more agreeable, I would say, "Let windows in the wards be so constructed that patients should, even in bed, be able to see out of them—not, as in many I know of, ten feet from the ground—for an hospital is not a prison. Also let visiting days for friends of the patients be more often.—I am, sir, yours faithfully,

LE DR SIDNEY CHATER.

Boulogne-sur-Mer, Feb. 14, 1877.

BRUSSELS.—Mad. Galli-Marié has been giving a series of performances at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, where she has appeared in Carmen, Piccolino, and Les Dragons de Villars. Grisar's opera, Les Amours du Diable, has been performed at the Alhambra.—A society, entitled the Cercle des Instrumentistes, has been formed with the especial object of executing works written by the great masters, ancient and modern, for wind instruments, with obbligato piano.—At the first public exercise of the pupils of the Conservatory, the executants were the solfa, organ, and evening classes. The programme was devoted exclusively to sacred music: psalms, sonatas, and chorales, by Bach, Mendelssohn, and other composers. In future, there will be one such public performance every month.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

On Saturday, Feb. 3, the anniversary of Mendelssohn's birthday was worthily commemorated by a programme drawn entirely from his works. The selection was especially interesting, but all the more provoking because it included only one out of five movements from the twelfth and last of those early symphonies still allowed to remain in MS. This was an adagio in E flat, for quintet of stringed instruments, with solos for violin obbligato. Written at the age of fourteen, such an effort can only be regarded as phenomenal. It was admirably executed, and the manner in which Herr Joseph Joachim gave the solos showed not only that he felt sympathy with his task, but bore in mind that he was interpreting the thoughts of a master who looked upon him, even when a boy of twelve, as one of his "most gifted disciples and dearest friends." In such terms Mendelssohn expressed himself in a letter to Sterndale Bennett. The other orchestral pieces were the fiery overture to Ruy Blas (the work of a couple of days!), and the splendid symphony in A minor. How the orchestra which Mr August Manns directs so well performs these works needs no telling. The violin concerto—the only one to be named after that of Beethoven—was, as a matter of course, on such an occasion introduced. Played as it was by Herr Joachim, it riveted the attention of the audience from beginning to end. A more superb performance has rarely been heard, or a more truly enthusiastic recognition of its merits. Some part-songs, entrusted to the Crystal Palace Choir, agreeably varied the programme. To these were added an air from Eljah, and the somewhat too familiar song, "The Garland" (as if Mendelssohn had not written many other such things), which that excellent tenor, Mr Edward Lloyd, sang in his best manner—praise of itself.—Graphic, Feb. 10.

MISS ALICE MAY AT BELFAST.

(From a Correspondent.)

Miss Alice May's first visit to Ireland is another of her successes. A large house assembled last night at her benefit—notwithstanding the counter-attraction at the Ulster Hall, where the Choral Association produced Israel in Egypt—and her reception was enthusiastic. Between the acts of La belle Hélène, which Miss May selected for her benefit, she sang a new song, "Unrest," composed expressly for her by G. B. Allen, which was encored, and, subsequently gave "The Last Rose of Summer," "Katey's Letter," and "Comin' thro' the rye." During the evening the annexed verses, printed on white satin, with other anonymous souvenirs of her visit to Belfast, were handed to her:—

TO ALICE MAY

The dawn through the darkness breaks,
And a rush of musical wings
Winnows the air, and awakes
The music of things.

The groves are filled with delight,
And rejoice that the darkness is done,
And shake off the shadows of night,
And psalm to the sun.

Like music the sunlight breaks—
A sun-song of heavenly birth,
That bursts on the world, and awakes
The chorus of earth.

Belfast, Feb. 10.

So thou, O Queen-Star of Song!
'Mid thy satellite sisters of night,
Reign'st peerless, and lead'st them
With thy music and light. [along

Our souls, at the light of thy face,
As at sunlight, awake and rejoice;
And our spirits are filled with the grace
Of thy heavenly voice.

Immortal, serene over death, [dwells,
In our souls, where thy loveliness
Thou art crowned — Song-Queen — with a wreath
Of love's immortelles.

S. K. O. (A—N S—E.)

COMPTON'S BENEFIT.

Gratitude for many a laugh that's due,
Pity for ills that all are subject to;
Respect for honest, manly, private worth
Is by this brimming bumper here set forth.

Bentwell.

GOOD NEWS FOR HARPISTS.—Mr John Cheshire has been giving "Harp Recitals" in the provinces with great success. The Malvern News and Leeds Journal are enraptured "at the thrilling sweetness of his fantasias on old Irish, Welsh, and English airs."

ARE WE A MUSICAL PEOPLE?

We read with satisfaction the subjoined remarks in the columns of The Echo:—

"To refute error and vindicate truth is no less a duty in matters musical than in the greater affairs of life; and, although from a utilitarian point of view long-cherished fallacies in the domain of Art are of little account, it would not be difficult to show that these are often as prejudicial to the material interests of a country as they are to its artistic renown. At all events, it is right to combat them on every fitting occasion. There is no greater fallacy than that which stigmatises the English nation as unmusical, and there are no statements more mendacious than those which accuse English musicians with being less instructed, and English performers with being less artistic, than those of other countries. Now, so long as foreign musicians, with no finer talents than their English confrères, are more esteemed, and so long as foreign artists of second rate ability are more patronised and better paid than English artists of the same standing, excuses for Continental superciliousness must be admitted; but the assertion that the English people are unmusical—i.e., inappreciative of the noblest thoughts expressed in music by the great composers—is perfectly indefensible, and can be refuted, not only by arguments, but by facts, 'which blaze with too great an evidence to be denied.' In no other city beside London are concerts like those directed by Mr Arthur Chappell, and known as the 'Monday Popular,' given so frequently, so continuously, and so free from ad captandum appeals to public favour. Yet the Monday Popular Concerts are always fully attended, and never lack support. This fact, combined with the interest taken in our Philharmonic Societies, our Sacred Harmonic institutions, and the Classical Concerts at the Crystal Palace, shows forcibly what are the musical proclivities of the country, and relegates the idea of our being unmusical to the category of 'vulgar errors.' In fact, the only accusation that can be sustained against English audiences is that of favouring foreign talent at the expense of that which is native."

DR MAURICE DAVIES' LECTURE ON THE POETS OF THE LAST FIFTY YEARS.

The fourth of these pleasant and instructive afternoons took place on Ash Wednesday, at 4, Holland Park Terrace (by kind permission of J. C. Townley, Esq.), and was, as usual, appreciated by a full audience. In accordance with the day, the lecture was devoted to sacred poetry. Commencing with a short historical review of religion, threaded up to the present day through the Jews and the Greek and Latin Churches, Dr Davies gave readings from the works of George Herbert, Newman, Keble, Heber, &c., and a clever biographical sketch of Keble. The lecture was agreeably varied by the artistic singing of Miss Katharine Poyntz, whose rendering of "Lead, kindly Light," "There is a green hill," "Lord, whom my inmost soul adoreth," &c., left nothing to desire.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of Organ Recitals by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 15th:—

War March, Gideon	C. E. Horsley.
Air, "Mi restano le lagrime," Alcina	Handel.
Prelude and Fugue (D minor)	Mendelssohn.
Andante con Variazioni (Septuor)	Beethoven.
Offertoire (F major, Op. 34)	Lebègue Wely.
Overture for the Organ	G. Morandi.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 17th:—

Grand March. Composed for the Coronation of the King of Prussia	Meyerbeer.
Romanza, "Quando a te lieta"	Gounod.
Prelude and Fugue (D major)	Bach.
Allegretto (B minor)	A. Gailmant.
Air, "Subtle Love, with fancy viewing"	Handel.
Chorus, "Hymen, fair Urania's son"	Handel.
Overture, Guillaume Tell	Rossini.

MR BRINLEY RICHARDS, who—says the Western Daily News—has made the subject of national music peculiarly his own, has accepted an engagement to give a series of lectures on music, ancient and national, in South Wales. His tour will commence at Easter.

Popular Concerts.

(RETROSPECT.)

(Continued from page 102.)

The first appearance of Herr Joseph Joachim has for very many years been the looked-for event of the early musical season. Among all the great violinists who from time to time have appeared at the Popular Concerts, or elsewhere among us, Herr Joachim is indisputably the greatest. There are no differences of opinion about him; and in this respect, indeed, he may be said to stand alone. Amateurs and musicians are here alike agreed. With reference to his technical proficiency and refined musical organisation it would be at this time superfluous to speak; but the noblest trait in Herr Joachim's artistic individuality cannot too often, or too earnestly, be dwelt upon. We allude to the utter forgetfulness of self in whatever he undertakes to play. He is the genuine expounder of the writings of great masters. When he comes before us, bow in hand and fiddle on shoulder, we only think of the composer; and it is not till the work approaches its conclusion that we have time to reflect upon the irreproachable character of the performance to which we have been listening. This, after all, is the real triumph of executive art. It may seem strange to add, but it is, nevertheless, true, that while the most practised of virtuosos, Joseph Joachim is literally no virtuoso at all. Whether engaged with Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Spohr, or Mendelssohn, it is all the same; he is never Joachim, but always the master whose thoughts he is interpreting. Genuine virtuosos—men like Liszt, Bülow, Rubinstein, &c.—invite, nay, force us to consider almost exclusively the personality and distinguishing characteristics of the executant, without reference to the music selected for the exhibition of their powers. With Joachim, however, the case is precisely the opposite. His sole idea is to enforce the claims to consideration of the master-works confided to his keeping. At the Monday Popular Concert of February 3rd, to which the undiminished and undiminishing attraction of Herr Joachim's name had brought together an enormous audience, he led two quartets—Beethoven's "Rasoumowski," in C (No. 3), and one of the several examples which Haydn has bequeathed to us, in the key of G. These have nothing in common but the exquisite symmetry of their form, the methods of development being entirely different. Yet Herr Joachim won the strong sympathy of his hearers in both—and no wonder. His coadjutors were MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti. The mysterious and wonderful andante, in A minor, by Beethoven, thus rendered, was of itself something to bring back any concert to memory. The solo chosen by Herr Joachim was Bach's Chaconne with variations (twenty-nine in number), which, often as he has played it, he never played in more magnificent style. That he was rapturously encored may be readily believed, and that, as usual, he substituted a shorter piece by the same composer. In fact, Herr Joachim's return to the Popular Concerts was a new gratification to the audience, and a new triumph for the artist. The pianist was Madlle Marie Krebs, who, by reviving Clementi's beautiful sonata in C (No. 1 of Op. 34), which has not been played since it was first introduced by Mad. Arabella Goddard, so far back as 1860, afforded general and unqualified satisfaction. Though, in our opinion, the opening movement was taken somewhat too fast, and the andante wanted a little more sentiment (pass the word), the rondo finale was given in perfection, and the whole marked by a correctness, combined with precision, that fully accounted for the unanimous applause bestowed. We should like to hear of this accomplished young lady oftener in music of the Clementi, Dussek, and Woelfl period. She has already taken in hand the Plus Ultra of Dussek; and a vast field lies before her in the same direction. Such nimble, agile fingers as hers are equal to any undertaking. The singer was Mr Edward Lloyd, whose chief success was deservedly earned in Beethoven's quaint and, at the same time, poetical song, "Der Wachtelschlag," which he sang to the English version of Mr W. Hills—"Hark! 'tis the note of the quail." Mr Zerbini was the accompanist.

(To be continued.)

DORDRECHT.—The Society for the Advancement of Dutch Musical Art gave an interesting concert here a short time since. The programme included the Symphony in C major, by W. F. G. Nicolai; a grand air, sung by Madlle Wilhelmine Gips, from an opera entitled De Vergissing (The Mistake), by M. J. Mertens, of Antwerp; the grand air, sung by M. Blauwaert, of Mons, from the first finale of Liederik, another opera by the composer already named; a symphonic prelude to Schiller's Jungfrau von Orleans, from the pen of M. Ed. de Hartog; and various other compositions, by Mendelssohn, Ambroise Thomas, Vander Linden, and Richard Hol.

PROVINCIAL.

EDINBURGH.—The success of Mr O'Neill's Waverley Market promenade concerts has established the fact that a want has been supplied to the amusement-loving public. The programme presented last Saturday evening was sufficiently attractive. The band of the 7th Hussars played selections from La Fille de Mme Angot, the Irish fantasia, "Erin" (Basquit), and the valse, "Casino Tanze" (Gung'l). The band of the Q. E. R. Brigade also took a prominent part in the programme. The vocalists did their work efficiently.

HECKMONDWICK.—A performance of Mendelssohn's St Paul took place on the 7th Feb. The principal vocalists were Misses Carina Clelland and Fawcett, Messrs Henry Guy and Wadmore. The band (under the leadership of Mr Smith) and chorus numbered one hundred and fifty. Mr Bowling, of Leeds, was conductor.

DUBLIN.—Their Graces the Lord Lieutenant and the Duchess of Marlborough had a concert at the Castle on Wednesday evening, the 7th Feb., at which the Dublin Glee Union and Mr Charles Oberthür had the honour to perform. The former, consisting of Mrs Scott-Fennell, Messrs Bapty, R. W. Smith, and Grattan Kelly, sang part-songs, among which Sir Robert P. Stewart's "The Bells of St Michael's Tower" had to be repeated. Mr Oberthür played his popular harp solo, "La Cascade," and afterwards, at the express request of Her Grace the Duchess of Marlborough, another solo. Their Graces expressed their satisfaction in complimentary terms. Besides the Vice-Regal party, there were many others invited.

NORWICH.—A well-filled hall on Thursday evening (Feb. 8) testified to the popularity of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union. Under the conductorship of Dr Bunnett the Union is making much progress; and it is a credit to the city that it has a society of amateurs capable of giving such a concert. The principal vocalists were Mrs Arthur Bullard, Miss Harcourt, Mr Minns, and Mr A. Hooper (a recent accession to the society); Mr Wilkins led the band, and Mr Walter Lain was the organist. The first part consisted of Mozart's First Mass in C, and Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm, for solo voice and chorus. Both were effectively given. Mrs Arthur Bullard sang the Agnus Dei in the Mass, and in Mendelssohn's Psalm the solo parts were taken by Miss Harcourt. The second part opened with Dr Bunnett's fine orchestral introduction to his sacred cantata, followed by the recitative and aria, "Thou art the God that doest wonders," sung by Mr Hooper. Next came a pianoforte duet, Andantino and Rondo (Hummel), by Dr Bunnett and Mr A. Bunnett. Songs and duets followed, and the concert closed with the grand "March of King David's Army" (from David and Abalom), played for the first time in Norwich.

OXFORD.—On Tuesday evening, Jan. 30th, a concert was given in the Town Hall in aid of the Organ Fund of the Church of St Anne's, Soho, London. Several ladies and gentlemen well known for their musical abilities lent their assistance, the duties of conductors devolving upon Messrs Walter Parratt and Lloyd. The programme opened with a pianoforte duet, brilliantly played, by Messrs Lloyd and Parratt. Messrs E. Cholmeley Jones, and Charles Wade, Misses Adela Vernon and Bertha Griffiths, followed with songs and duets. "The Kreutzer" sonata was frequently applauded during its performance, Herr Rosenthal, the violinist, producing the highest notes on his instrument with surprising sweetness and delicacy. "Ah fors' e lui" (Traviata) was sung by Miss Adela Vernon, who received a hearty and unanimous encore. The same compliment was awarded to Miss Bertha Griffiths in "Marguerite." During the evening Mr Sutton, a promising young violinist, gave a solo by De Beriot, and was loudly applauded. Two violin solos, a Romance in G and a Reverie, played by Herr Rosenthal, were also much appreciated. The quartet, "When evening's twilight," concluded the evening's entertainment.

Parliamentary Mediator.
Euphonic term for garotter.

(See Gladstone's Speech, Feb. 8.)

Wellben.

'Twould have gladdened the heart of Johnson,
Who said he loved a good harter,
To hear good advice from Gladstone—
Only, you know, as mediator.

(Same Speech.)

Benwell Wellben.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,
ST JAMES'S HALL.
NINETEENTH SEASON, 1876-7.
DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE TWENTY-FIFTH CONCERT,
MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 19, 1877.
To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.
SONATA, in B flat (posthumous), for pianoforte alone—Mr
CHARLES HALLÉ Schubert.
ARIA, "Vittoria, vittoria" Carissimi.
ARLETTA, from Il Maestro di Musica Pergolesi.
Herr HENSCHEL.
QUARTET, in B flat, Op. 67, for two violins, viola, and violoncello
(First time at the Popular Concerts)—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI Brahms.
PART II.
SONGS, {"Der Neugierige"}—Herr HENSCHEL Schubert.
TRIO, in D minor, Op. 49, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—
MM. CHARLES HALLÉ, JOACHIM, and PIATTI Mendelssohn.
Conductor Mr ZERBINI.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 17, 1877.
To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUINTET, in G minor, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello —MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, ZERBINI, and PIATTI ... Mozart.
AIR, "Si tra i ceppi"—Mr FRANK D'ALQUEN Handel.
SONATA, in G major, Op. 31, No. 1, for pianoforte alone—Mr
CHARLES HALLÉ Beethoven.
SONG, "Nazareth"—Mr FRANK D'ALQUEN Gounod.
TRIO, in E flat, Op. 70, No. 1, for pianoforte, violin, and violon-cello—MM. CHARLES HALLÉ, JOACHIM, and PIATTI Beethoven.
Conductor Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr F. C. BURNAND.—According to the Lyons Salut Publique, M.
Durnand is not Sarden or François—but if either, both, and therefore neither.

Dr. BILE.—Read Godwin's "Essay on Sepulchres."

T. FLANK.—Auber was born in 1782—not 1792.

A CONSTANT READER.—Handel said what was said, not of Piccini
(or Piccinni), but of Gluck—and he (Handel) was right.

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs
DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

TO PAUL MOIST, ESQ.

(From the Undersized Undersigned.)

SIR,—In answer to the cruel compliment implied in your attack of last week, I am prepared to say, as an eye-witness of the fact, and as an outsider, that he did not do it. Any report to the contrary is unfounded, except in malicious presumption, which is no evidence in a court of law, where in due time the parties in question will most certainly appear. I should not have troubled you, but that Mr Burnand is away just now, and did not probably see the article alluded to. At the same time there can be no possible imputation on any one. This view of the case, which I take to be the right, and, in fact, the only one, will, I think, be upheld by both Mr
W. S. Gilbert, and the other friendly person, who shall be nameless, or, if this is more convenient, left till called for. Excuse brevity, as the post has just this moment left, and there is not another for the next five hours. I beg respectfully to sign myself, Yours, Boom House.

THE BOY WITH THE BASSOON.

[The "Boy with the Bassoon," though dialectically mistaken, is, in an amphigourismatical sense, bewildered. Bel and the Dragon are one thing; St George and ditto are another. *Va
Victis!*—A. S. S.]

The Musical World.
LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1877.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—It is odd that Mr Joseph Bennett's too lenient analysis of the hash which Liszt has made out of Schubert's Fantasia in C should have been inserted in the Crystal Palace programme of Saturday, after the manner in which Mr Walter Bache (pianist on the occasion) introduced Mr Bennett's name not long ago in a concert-programme of his own. The Albert Hall directors ought not to have allowed it, and, under the circumstances,
I am surprised that Mr Grovemanns condescended to make use of it.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Times have changed.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—If you say that again I will blow your brains out.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Don't. I won't.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—Have you remarked that pianists rarely heard in public take to public lecturing?

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—At institutes?

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—Pauer—Dannreuther?

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Praeger? Sloper?

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—Liszt will deliver lectures.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—At institutes?

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—Lincoln and Sterndale have lectured.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Benedict and Macfarren.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—At institutes. And Ella?

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—No pianist. Professor, with right of lecture.

(Lights extinguished suddenly. Head of Benwell glides in through bow-window.)

HEAD OF BENWELL (sepulchral).—I only have right of lecture.
(Head of Benwell glides out through the funnel.)

(Lights revive.)

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT (trembling).—Heu!

MR DRINKWATER HARD (shivering).—Cauda! 'Twas the Ghost of Benwell's head!

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT (exasperated).—Say that again and I'll blow your brains out.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Don't. I won't.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—As I was muttering—most all our pianists take to lecture.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—At institutes?

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—At institutes.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Why?

(Lights again extinguished. Bust of Dr Dickplump Schopenhauer Raub glides in through bow window.)

BUST OF DR DICKPLUMP SCHOPENHAUER RAUB (sepulchrally).—I'm a dead man. Unschliffige Shoot! Boggle me no bollards, Bolusartig!

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT (palsied).—I boggled thee no boggles, gracious bust?

BUST OF DR DICKPLUMP SCHOPENHAUER RAUB (sepulchrally).—Nor thou, Furchtsame Hard. Mendelssohn is dead, but Liszt is on live.

MR DRINKWATER HARD (courageously).—Sterndale is dead, but Joseph is on live.

BUST OF DR DICKPLUMP SCHOPENHAUER RAUB (sepulchrally).—Wagner!

MR DRINKWATER HARD (more courageously).—Macfarren!

(Bust of Dr Dickplump Schopenhauer Raub disappears up the chimney.)

MR DRINKWATER HARD (confited).—That ghost-like bust has vanished.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT (in convulsions).—Say that again—

MR DRINKWATER HARD (interrupting him).—With Joseph and George Alexander we're safe.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—I wish I were a pea. (sings):—"I can't endure this mental strain." But about lecture?

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—These pianists have no right to lecture—

(Lights extinguished. Bust of Dr Zweikopff glides in.)

BUST OF DR ZWEIKOPFF (sings):—

"Until they can no longer play."

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—O Creeshna! More ghosts! O Abul Fusil!

BUST OF DR ZWEIKOPFF (merrily).—Go to the "Pops" on Monday—Cali Yug!

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Come with us, courteous Twohead.

BUST OF DR ZWEIKOPFF.—I cannot. I am legless.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT (furiously).—Why should we go? On what account?

BUST OF DR ZWEIKOPFF.—A quartet in B flat, by Brahms Johannes.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—I like the name.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—I like the key.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Both bring pleasant reminiscences. At what time, slender Bust?

BUST OF DR ZWEIKOPFF. Read the Amarasinha, as Hueffer has read it, and you will find that the Sun, whether he be symbolised as Surya, or Brahma, or Osiris, or Apollo, or Siegfried, or what not, it is he who makes time. Farewell! Portez-vous bien.

(Bust of Dr Zweikopff evaporates.)

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—I am getting accustomed to these spirits.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—No more will come. The moon is at its full—

(Moon appears.)

HALF MOON.—Not so: I am but half complete.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Instruct us, lunar half. Should pianists lecture?

HALF MOON.—So they but have the power.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—Power? Pauer!

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—The moon hath made a pun.

[Exit Moon.]

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—Half Moon's offended.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Be it so. Why should pianists lecture?

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—At institutes?

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—At institutes.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—On Wagner?

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—On Wagner.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—If they have bought their portheuffer they must needs—

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—Devaliser?

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—Devaliser.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—But Duke Coleridge lectured upon Weber?

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—He is no pianist, and wanted no portheuffer.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—He had his porthelborn when translating Schubert.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—His porthelborn!

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—I shall lecture on Haydn.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—You will have your portpohl. I shall lecture on Mozart.

MR DRINKWATER HARD.—You will have your portjahn. Better lecture on Chopin—

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT.—No! No! I couldn't carry a portliast.

MR MONTAGUE SHOOT and MR DRINKWATER HARD (ensemble).—Better be honest and carry our portmanteaus.

[Exeunt ambo convinced.]

More "Astounding Impudence."

SINCE a certain article appeared in the Daily Telegraph, the composite phrase, Astounding-impudence has passed ("as the French would say") into a form of proverbial speech. "Judicious Hooker" himself would have approved it. Then came Ghoul ("musical ghoul") from the same egregious pen. "Ghoul" is a nomenclature of which Sir Thomas Browne, George Grove, the author of Godwin's "Essay on Sepulchres," Theophrastus Bombastes Paracelsus, Hierony-mus Cardanus, or Francis Hueffer himself, would have approved. See, in the Boston Courier, our amiable and slightly diaphonous contemporary of New New Athens, how Ghouls are patted on the back by the sages of Massachusetts, whose grave-raking champion is J. J.—Professor, so to speak (non-phonetically), J. J.—

"The orchestral accompaniments of The Messiah, as they have come to us from the hands of the composer, sound poor and thin to ears accustomed to the wealth and richness of modern orchestras. Handel's score reveals no parts other than those written for the strings, oboes, trumpets, and drums, the wind and percussion instruments being very sparingly used. It should be noted, however, that this light instrumentation is no proof of the poverty of orchestral resources at the command of the master in 1741. There are scores by Handel which include parts for flutes, bassoons, harps, harpichords, and horns, besides those which lay within the accolade of The Messiah. Furthermore, Handel employed a number of instruments, both stringed and wind, now unknown or unused. He was ready to use any utensil of a musical sort which would produce an effect—the brazen throats of cannon even being drawn into his service. This willingness, sometimes eagerness, on Handel's part is worth remembering when the purist rises to object to any emendations of, or additions to, any of his scores. Schœlcher, Handel's biographer, maintains that 'if the instrumental portions of Handel's oratorios, as they were executed under his direction, had not been burned at the destruction of Covent Garden Theatre, in 1808, we should doubtless have been astonished at their amplitude,' adding that 'a few scattered fragments serve to show that he sometimes added extra accompaniments.' Be this as it may, Mozart thought it necessary to amplify the orchestration when, in 1789, the work was brought out at Vienna. The parts were then in existence, and could, without doubt, have been easily procured. Mozart's additional instrumentation was, however, partly made necessary by the want of an organ in the great hall of the Imperial Court Library, where the oratorio was performed.

"The mention of an organ carries us back to Handel, who at all public performances of his oratorios, given under his direction, was accustomed to sit at the organ, by the aid of which he could, and presumably did, add the colouring not found in his score. His manuscripts are copiously noted with indications for the use of instruments for which no parts can be found. Schœlcher says that in the Buckingham Palace collection there is a score of the chorus 'Lift up your heads,' with parts for horns, oboes, and bassoons—written antiphonally, to agree with the choral responses—in addition to the string quartet. The enthusiastic biographer declares that the master's orchestration was in some instances very full—too full, if one may believe the gibes of the satirists. En passant, the unprejudiced reader would be amused to note the wonderful resemblance between these pasquinades and those which Wagner has called forth a century and a half later. He cautions students against placing too great trust in the Walsh scores, the publisher being 'used to economise the expenses of engraving by suppressing the accompaniments,' while Handel, 'to save time, only wrote the leading parts when he composed, leaving it to the copyists to multiply them according to his instructions.' Whatever Handel might have done for the enrichment of his most famous work, the fruits of Mozart's labours have been of real value to the musical world. His score includes parts for flutes, clarionets, oboes, and bassoons, for trumpets, horns, and trombones, and for drums, all being additions to the original score. Besides these, he added in several instances parts for second violins and violas, altered here a violin to a flute part, there an oboe to a clarinet, and re-wrote entirely in some cases parts for first violins, for trumpets, and for drums. It was rarely that Handel's forms or harmonies were disturbed, the additions in many cases following the figured bass as written by the composer. Sometimes there were gaps which had to be filled out.

"Still, with all the pains, the work remains incomplete so far as the accompaniments are concerned (!) Or so, at least, it remained until about a year ago, when Robert Franz, at the express request of the Handel and Haydn Society, tendered to him through Mr Otto Dresel, who was then in Europe, undertook the task of supplying the deficiencies of Mozart's score (!) The new score was received from Dr Franz last spring. On examination and comparison with the Handel and Mozart scores, it is evident that the Mozart method has been followed—that is, the figured bass has been worked out in parts for clarionets or bassoons, or both, in phrases where no wind instruments have been employed by either predecessor. In some instances gaps, which Mozart had left unfilled, are closed up. In others, the entire colouring of the score has been freshened and brightened (!!)

The following list gives some idea of the extent of the additions and alterations. The numbers are from the Novello edition :—

"Two clarionets and two bassoons :

Part I. Numbers 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 12, and 18.

" II. " 23, 26, 32, and 43.

" III. " 45 and 54.

Two clarionets and one bassoon :

Part II. Number 38.

Two horns ;

Part I. Numbers 9 and 18.

"The organ accompaniment has been written out for the string quartet in the following recitatives :—

"Part I. Numbers 8, 14, and 15

" II. " 34 and 42.

" III. " 52.

"A better man than Dr Franz could not have been found. His studies of, and researches in, the works of Handel and his great contemporary and fellow-countryman Bach, pre-eminently fitted him for the task. The accompaniments for several of Bach's oratorios and cantatas, and for many of Handel's operatic arias, have been made available for modern use by his new scoring. Three of Bach's works, sung in the Music Hall last season, were re-constructed (!!!!).

"There remain other improvements to be noted. These have been made by Mr Zerrahn (!!!!!) and consist mainly of changes—in some cases quite radical—in the phrasing of the orchestral parts (!!!!!). It cannot well be believed by any intelligent musician that so great a master as Handel should have permitted his string players to perform staccato against the legato movement in the vocal score. The unmusical effect of this mixed method—sanctioned though it may be by long usage—induced Mr Zerrahn to newly phrase not only the string parts, but also those for the wood and wind instruments throughout nearly the entire work—a long and tedious task, but we believe the result will amply repay the labour spent (!!!!!). A prominent feature of this improving—perhaps it would be more nearly correct to say this restoring—process is the reduction of orchestral and vocal parts to something like a uniform consonance in phrasing. The attentive listener will discover the use of the new method in the following numbers : Part I. Numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 17, 18, 20, and 21. Part II. Numbers 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 32, 33, and 41. Mr Zerrahn's work will make itself plainly felt, especially in the choruses numbered 4, 7, 12, 21, 26, and 41, and in the soprano solo numbered 18. In adapting the organ accompaniment of the recitations for string quartet, Dr Franz unaccountably overlooked Number 19, Part I. Mr Zerrahn has, therefore, arranged it for the strings (!!!!!). He has also transposed it to a lower key, in order that it may be sung by an alto voice, the change being justified, if not demanded, by the fact that the first half of the aria, Number 20, to which it serves as introduction, is, in accordance with long-established custom, assigned to the alto.

"The additions to, and emendations (O Gemini !) of, the score of Handel's best known work, of whose extent and importance we have endeavoured to give some idea, &c. (!!!!!). "F. H. J."

When President Grant quits political life he may do worse than devote his leisure time to amending the "emendations" of Herr Zerrahn. To what are we coming? It is gratifying to be informed that neither Professor Longfellow nor J. S. Dwight join heartily in the Ghoul movement, although the name of Otto Dresel made us quiveringly suspicious of one, if not of both. Nevertheless, President Grant, when he "quits political life" (as we have said), in "amending the emendations of Herr Zerrahn," his joyous compatriot, may do better work for humanity than Cincinnatus the deliver could ever effect. List, list, O Isis! Thyophilus Querr.

THE sudden death, on February 2, of M. Eugène Chavet, for ten years editor of L'Europe Artiste, is announced. He was a man of great experience and general information, and might have taken, had he lived, a position of distinction among the men of letters and of science, in whom the French capital is so rich.

WARSAW.—A four-act opera, Stradiota, libretto in Polish by M. Jasinski, music by M. Adam Münchheimer, director of the National Operahouse, has been produced.

COLOGNE.—It is in this town that the Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine will be celebrated at Whitsuntide, under the direction of Ferdinand Hiller. The programme will comprise, among other compositions, Haydn's Seasons, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and Verdi's Requiem, the last being conducted by the composer himself.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

M. FAURE's success at Lyons has been immense. Le Salut Public, Le Progrès, even to Le Censeur and Le Petit Lyonnais, and the Lyonnais-Journal are in raptures about him. Their five voices, thus uplifted in his praise, might really be harmonised into a five-part chorus, to the words, "Vive Faure le Grand!" And then, passing his claims as an artist, see what he has done as a man, mindful of others besides himself. Le Censeur has the following:—

"M. Faure, baryton du Grand-Opéra, a remis ce matin au préfet du Rhône la somme de trois mille francs pour la souscription au profit des ouvriers sans travail. M. Faure, bien avant la représentation, dont on trouvera plus loin le compte rendu, était admiré des Lyonnais; il vient aujourd'hui de conquérir un titre plus précieux. La reconnaissance de Lyon ne sera pas un des moins beaux fleurons de la couronne du grand artiste."—P. L.

This "P. L." cannot be Paul le Louche, seeing that Paul dedicates his wits exclusively to the Public Toulousain. Petrus Longinus is his actual name.

On the 25th February, 1791, Joseph Haydn gave his first concert in London. He was then fifty-eight years old. On the 10th February, 1808, Guillaume Tell was performed at the Grand Opera, Paris, for the five-hundredth time, and the members of the orchestra serenaded its illustrious composer in honour of the event. On the 15th February, 1863, the four-hundred-and-fiftieth representation of Auber's Muette took place at the same theatre. On the 7th February, 1862, the theatre in the Tuileries was inaugurated with an opera, called Ercole amante, and composed by Pietro Francesco Cavalli.

THE month of February is remarkable for the birth of the following musicians: Felix Mendelssohn, Hamburg, 1809; F. F. Chopin, Zelazowa-Wola, 1810; Johann Ludwig Dusek, Czazlau, 1761; Father Stanislao Mattei, Bologna, 1750; André Grétry, Liège, 1741; Giovanni Pacini, Catania, 1796; Niccolò Paganini, Genoa, 1784; Charles de Bériot, Louvain, 1802; Carl Czerny, Vienna, 1791; Georg Friedrich Handel, Halle, 1685; Gioachino Rossini, Pesaro, 1792; Pierre Rode, Bordeaux, 1774; Lauro Rossi, Macerata, 1812; Henri Vieuxtemps, Verviers, 1820; and Johann B. Cramer, Mannheim, 1771. In the same month there died: Giovanni Pier Luigi da Palestrina, Rome, 1594; Michael Glinka, Berlin, 1857; Giuseppe Tartini, Padua, 1770; Gregorio Allegri, Rome, 1662; Theodor Döhler, Florence, 1856; Marco Antonio Portogallo, Lisbon, 1830; Giuseppe Zarlino, Venice, 1590; and Orazio Vecchi, Modena, 1605.

In the month of February, moreover, the following operas were performed for the first time: Semiramide, Rossini, Venice, 1823; Il Barbiere di Siviglia, Rossini, Rome, 1816; Marco Visconti, Petrella, Naples, 1854; I Lombardi alla prima Crociata, Verdi, Milan, 1843; La Figlia del Reggimento, Donizetti, Paris, 1840; La Straniera, Bellini, Milan, 1829; Armide, Lulli, Paris, 1686; Giovanna d'Arco, Verdi, Milan, 1845; L'Etoile du Nord, Meyerbeer, Paris, 1854; Un Ballo in Maschera, Verdi, Rome, 1850; La Juive, Halévy, Paris, 1835; Rinaldo, Handel, London, 1711; Rinaldo, Sacchini, Paris, 1783; Gustave III., Auber, Paris, 1833; Crispino e la Comare, Luigi and Federico Ricci, Venice, 1850 (and not at Naples in 1836, as erroneously stated in the Histoire des Musiciens, by Fétis, in the Musiciens célèbres, and the Dictionnaire lyrique, by Clément, in the Histoire de la Musique dramatique en France, by G. Chouquet, etc.); La Muette de Portici, Auber, Paris, 1828; Les Huguenots, Meyerbeer, Paris, 1836; Tancredi, Rossini, Venice, 1813; Emeralda, Mazzucato, Mantua, 1838; Faniska, Cherubini, Vienna, 1806; Nina pazza per Amore, Coppola, Rome, 1835; and Tebaldo ed Isolina, Morlacchi, Venice, 1822.

OLD PHILLIP ASTLEY once brought out a piece called Sailors and Savages. At that time he had a conductor named Heron. Not remembering the latter's name, he always called him Dr Herring. On the occasion in question, he said: "I want you to compose me a tune for a combat of two broadswords, to re tang, tang, tang." In the piece there was a broadsword encounter between the principal Savage and a Sailor. At the first rehearsal, Astley was seated in front of the stage as usual. The Savage was performed by Mr J. Taylor, the manager's nephew, and the Sailor by Mr John Astley, the manager's son. The fight did not please the old gentleman, who thought it was not striking enough. "Johnny, Johnny," he observed, "this won't do; we must have shields." On hearing the word: shields, Heron, under the impression that the manager wanted Shields the composer, jumped from his seat, gathered together the various orchestral parts, and, getting on the stage, tore them in piece-meal, saying in a high tone: "Now, send for Shields!" "What do you mean, Dr Herring?" inquired Astley, greatly astonished. "Why," replied Heron, "if Mr Shields can compose better than I can, pray send for him at once!" "Oh! by—!" said Astley, "I meant a pair of shields for the fight." A reconciliation took place, and Heron re-composed the music.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

At the "Popular Organ Recital," at the Bow and Bromley Institute, on Saturday, Feb. 10, Dr William Spark, organist to the Corporation of Leeds, was the exponent, assisted by Miss Blanche Grosvenor (vocalist), and Mdlle Bertha Brouil (violinist). We subjoin the programme:—Organ Solo, "Marche Heroique," C major (Schubert); Arioso, for organ and violin, E major, (Dr Julius Rietz); Song, "Looking Back" (Sullivan); Organ Solos, Canzona, F minor, and Grand Chœur, A major (A. Guilmant); Violin Solo, Air for the Fourth String, arranged, with organ accompaniment, by August Wilhelmj (J. S. Bach); Organ Solos, Minuet, A minor, and Gavotte, D major (MS.), first time of performance (William Spark); Song, "Three fishers went sailing" (Hullah); Organ Solos, Andante, E flat major, by Dr S. S. Wesley (1842), and Fugue in G major, by Samuel Wesley (1820); Violin Solo, "Tarantella" (Lasseur); Organ Solos, Pastorale, A minor, and Fuga Scherzando, A minor (J. S. Bach). The room was crowded. Dr Spark repeated his Minuet and Gavotte, and might have the Andante and Fugue of the Wesleys, but merely bowed his acknowledgments. Mdlle Brouil was encored in her violin solos. Mdlle Rossetti accompanied the vocal music.

A CONCERT took place in the Eyre Arms Assembly Rooms on Tuesday evening last, for the benefit of the "Carlton Hall Poor School's Fund." The artists, were Mesdames Alida Gassier, and Augusta Roche, Misses J. Jones and Palmer; Messrs Bernard Lane, Frith, G. R. Renwick, Grimsby, Jopp (vocalists); and Miss Emma Barnett (solo pianist). Mr Arthur J. Barth, of the London Academy of Music, conducted. A selection from Rossini's Stabat Mater gave much satisfaction, the singing of Miss Jones and Mdlle Roche in the duet "Quis est homo," being excellent. Messrs Lane and Renwick, in their respective solos, and Mdlle Roche, in "Fac ut portem," were loudly applauded. Miss Emma Barnett who played in a finished and brilliant manner Mr John Francis Barnett's fantasia on airs from his cantata, The Ancient Mariner, was deservedly applauded and "encored." Miss J. Jones and Mr Lane sang a duet from Paradise and the Peri (J. F. Barnett); Mdlle Alida Gassier displayed her voice to advantage in Wellington Guernsey's Spanish aria, "The Muleteer's Bride," and a new bolero, entitled "An Arab Flower," by F. Mariani; Mdlle Augusta Roche sang the romance, "L'ultimo pensiero" (Mariani), which she was compelled to repeat; Miss Palmer sang twice, and was encored; and Mr A. G. Jopp, who made his first appearance in public, was received with great favour.

MISS DORA SCHIRMACHER.—In the Leipsiger Allgemeine Nachrichten we read that, on the 2nd inst., the directors of the Conservatorium gave a farewell night to Miss Schirmacher, the 300 pupils being present, when she played three Lieder by Mendelssohn and two pieces by Chopin and Schumann, in addition to which she took part with Miss Emery in a chaconne by Raff for two pianos. Both ladies distinguished themselves in this exceedingly difficult piece; in combined passages their unanimity and precision being most extraordinary. The Professor subsequently made a farewell speech, in which he held up Miss Schirmacher as a model to the other students. Prior to leaving Leipsic, the young pianist was presented with a gold bracelet bearing the Gewandhaus motto in Latin, accompanied by a highly complimentary letter from the directors.

LEIPSIK.—The annual concert for the benefit of the Gewandhaus Orchestral Pension Fund brought with it two new compositions, an overture to Gudrun, by Oscar Bolck, and a Symphony by C. Goldmark. The programme of the fifteenth Subscription Concert, on the 3rd inst., was devoted entirely to Mendelssohn, the day being the anniversary of his birth, sixty-six years ago. The works selected on the occasion were the overture to St Paul, an air from Elijah, the 114th Psalm, Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, played by Mdlle Schirmacher, and Die Walpurgisnacht.

Le Diable à Nice.

Read what the Phare du Littoral says of Faure (ce diable de Faure), after witnessing his representation of Mephistopheles in Gounod's Faust :—

"C'est toujours un événement que le passage d'un grand artiste dans une ville, et tel qui restera profondément indifférent à l'annonce de quelque arrivée célèbre par la position, la naissance ou la fortune, sentira toutes les fibres artistiques de son cœur vibrer, en lisant ce simple mot sur l'affiche du théâtre : Faure. Aussi, malgré des prix exorbitants exigés par M. Jarrett (un diable à quatre, qui sait tout à la longue) la salle était comble. Jamais nous n'avions vu un Mephistophélès aussi parfait. Quelle méthode ! quel feu ! quel timbre de voix approprié au personnage ! Ses éclats de rire sont ceux de Satan, lorsqu'une âme maudite tombe entre ses griffes. C'est un Mephistophélès tout vivant, sorti de l'enfer pour impressionner le monde. Vraiment, dans la scène des épées en croix, Faure a été terrifiant ; avec quelle horreur et quelle vérité n'a-t-il pas rendu la souffrance que lui font éprouver ces chants pieux, et quand enfin, délivré, il se redresse et pousse un soupir d'allègement profond, la salle entière a éclaté en bravos prolongés. Avec quel ton et quel sarcasme infernal il a chanté la chanson du Veau d'or et la Sérénade ! Impossible de s'élever plus haut. Qui n'a pas entendu Faure dans Faust, ne peut se faire une idée vraiment."

For us poor Englishmen, who are musically despised in our own country, it is beautiful to see how Frenchmen appreciate their deservedly eminent compatriot.—D. B.

No. 1.—SUNRISE.

(From the Italian of Signor Felici Mariani.)

Night hurrying sails away across the waters,
To seek repose in her own distant isles ;
And slow retire the moon's all-radiant daughters,
But young Aurora lingers with her smiles.
From the deep dell and dark grove's heaving breast,
And misty forms that nightly linger there,
Ascending to the mountain's snowy crest,
Expand their wings, and part into the air.
And forth from out the Eastern hall,
Gilding nature's sable pall,
The lovely light descends to deck
With dewy pearls young morning's neck.
The lark is up in the dewy sheen :—
Oh ! the little saint, with harp unseen,
Is thrilling a hymn on her sky'd tower
With cherub tones and airy power.
And o'er yon Eastern fields of blue
Fall filmy shapes of amber hue,
Weave their bright robes around the car
Of the slow retiring morning star.
Sweet looks the infant day above,
Like the rich and rosy smile of love.
But lo ! behold what o'er yon hill is streaming ;
The sun ! the sun ! Apollo's forehead beaming.

WELLINGTON GUERNSEY.

WIESBADEN.—Herr Eduard Heimendal, pupil of Herr Wilhelmj, made his début at the last Curhaus-Symphonie-Concert.

STOCKHOLM.—Verdi's Mass has been performed here. Mad. Trebelli sang the contralto part.

MADRID.—Rigoletto has been performed at the Teatro Real, with Signora Rubini-Scalisi in the principal female character. Otello was given for the benefit of Signora Pozzoni, who appeared as Desdemona, Sig. Tamberlik being the Moor.

THE following amendment will be proposed in the French Chamber when the Budget is discussed : "Each Theatre enjoying annual grants from the State shall be bound to give every year a gratuitous performance on the 1st January, 25th February, 14th July, and 21st September.

CONTINENTAL PAPERS state that Mad. Adelina Patti has been engaged by M. Halanzier to "create" the part of Paulina in Gounod's Polauto at the Grand-Opéra, during the International Exhibition of 1878. Elsewhere, however, it is asserted that the lady is pledged for the same epoch to the manager of the Théâtre-Italien.

M. LEON FOSSEY, formerly conductor at the Paris Galté and afterwards at the Ambigu, has just died. He was born at Paris in 1829. He produced two one-act operas, Pomme d'Api and Marcel et Cie. He wrote, also, the music for the fairy spectacle of Peau d'Ane at the Galté, and the incidental music for a large number of dramas.

WAIFS.

Ricardo Moragas, the Spanish coreographer, is at Milan.

A new ballet, by Sig. Pallerini, is rehearsing at the Scala.

Signora Ristori was lately robbed in Rome of 14,000 francs.

M. Eugène Chavet, chief editor of L'Europe Artiste, recently died in Paris, aged sixty-five.

Herr Niemann played for the last time this season at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, on the 11th inst.

Sig. Mercuri has completed an opera, Il Violino del Diavolo, written expressly for Signora Ferni.

Professor Rappoldi has accepted the post of "Concertmeister" in the orchestra of the Theatre Royal, Dresden.

The Professors of the Paris Conservatory lately gave a dinner at the Grand Hôtel to their Director, M. Ambroise Thomas.

A young tenor, M. Stéphane, has made his first appearance at the Paris Opéra-Comique as the protagonist in Hérold's Zampa.

Sig. Pinsuti is superintending the rehearsals of his new opera, Mattia Corvino, to be produced at Venice during the present season.

The editor of a sanitary periodical propounds the question : "Does woman fill the lower half of her lungs with air ?" He evidently never heard the voice of a healthy mother-in-law.

The list of works to be performed by the Boston (U.S.) Handel and Haydn Society at its Festival in May, has been increased by the addition of Ferdinand Hiller's cantata, Israel's Song of Triumph.

A little boy, having asked his father the meaning of the word "Paradise," was informed in reply : "Paradise, my son, is that small part of the calendar year when my mother-in-law stays at her own home and minds her own business."

Signora Fossa and Sig. Gayarre, now singing at Milan, are, according to the Secolo, engaged for the spring at the Teatro del Liceo, Barcelona. The Secolo, however, is in error as regards Sig. Gayarre, who will not go to Barcelona, but to London.

The French Minister of Public Instruction and the Fine Arts has granted sums of money, varying in amount, to the Padeloup and the Colonne Concerts, to several societies of Chamber Music, and to the Society of Musical Composers, for two annual prizes.

A lady residing at a fashionable boarding-house in New York amused herself by drinking freely, and chasing her daughter, aged ten, down stairs, with a revolver. The precocious young girl, observed, "The only trouble with Mother is that she lives too high."

M. Halanzier has announced a grand ball, to take place on the 27th inst., at the New Operahouse, for the benefit of the Lyons workmen, who are suffering severely from stagnation in trade. Mad. de MacMahon has consented to act as Patroness.

"I cannot imagine," observed a lady, who was beginning to get elderly, to Douglas Jerrold, "what makes my hair turn gray. I sometimes fancy it must be the essence of rosemary with which my maid is in the habit of brushing it." "I'm afraid, madam," replied Jerrold, "it's the essence of time"—(thyme).

Mr Theodore Thomas was prevented, a short time since, from giving a concert in Watertown, New York, as he had promised. This caused a poet of the town to burst out into the annexed poetic strain : "Oh, Thomas, oh, Thomas, Why did you stay from us, And not keep your promise !"

Dr. Filippo Filippi, Signori Ferrigni and Uda, have been created knights of the Order of the Crown of Italy. "Poor fellows !" exclaims the Trovatore. Another musical critic, the Marchese D'Arcais, has been made officer of the Order of Saint Maurice and Saint Lazarus, with the cross of the Order of Carlo III.

The third number of the annotated catalogue of the Bibliothèque Musicale de l'Opéra, from the pen of M. Th. de Lajarte, has just appeared. It comprises the period from Rameau's Hippolyte et Aricie (1733) to Sabinus, a lyric tragedy by Chabanon de Maugris, music by Gossec (1774). The fourth number will be consecrated to the period of Gluck, and extend from Iphigénie en Aulide to La Vestale (1774—1807). This number completes the first of the two volumes which will constitute the entire work.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—A selection from the works of Handel will form the principal part of the next concert on Friday, February 23. The overtures to the Occasional Oratorio and Athaliah, and airs and choruses from Joshua, Saul, Athaliah, Theodora, with the "Gloria Patri," from the Jubilate Deo, will be included in the programme. An English version of Mozart's Litany in B flat will also be performed for the first time. The principal vocalists engaged are Mme Sinico, Miss Julia Elton, Mr Vernon Rigby, and Mr Lewis Thomas. Sir Michael Costa will conduct, as usual.

The following nominations have just been made in the Legion of Honour: Baron Taylor, Member of the Institute, founder and chairman of five artistic associations, has been promoted to the rank of Grand Officer, and M. Victor Massé, also of the Institute, composer of Paul et Virginie, to that of Officer, M. Victorin Joncières, composer of Dimitri, being created member.

To judge from a paragraph published by El nuevo Figaro of Madrid, Spain does not appear to be a country especially favourable to those engaged in the art of education. While the Government School Master of Calles (Valencia) is devoting his time, health, and energies to the improvement of scholars, his wife and children are going from house to house begging. He has not received his stipend for six years.

Mr John Ivory, pianoforte maker, of Rutland Street, Hampstead Road, died on Friday from injuries received in the tunnel at the Gower Street Station of the Underground Railway, where he confessed he had gone with the intention of destroying himself. At an inquiry held at University Hospital a verdict of suicide whilst in a state of unsound mind was returned. Mr Ivory was nearly eighty years of age, and had been ailing the last two years.

They were reading in the presence of an amiable lady, who is also musical, a list of the vessels composing the French fleet. Suddenly she interrupted them. "Dear me!" she exclaimed, "I never knew before that the illustrious Abbate was that kind of disposition, or, at least, that he was so noted for it." When requested to explain, she observed: "Why, has not the French Government, according to that list, named a ship after him? The Austere Liszt?" (Perhaps their French accent, when reading the word: Austerlitz, was not quite perfection.)

When the Constitution was proclaimed at Constantinople, public enthusiasm ran very high. Mlle Marger, a favourite member of the French company, was compelled to sing three times her famous piece, the Song of the Turcos. The first stanza runs thus:

"Les Turcos sont bons enfants,
Mais il ne faut pas qu'on les gêne;
Car alors la chose est certaine:
Ils deviennent méchants."

M. Guillaume Simon Richault, head of one of the principal musical publishing firms in Paris, died of paralysis, on the 7th inst. The firm was established in 1805 by the deceased's father, who conducted it for sixty years, and was the first person to publish in Paris a great number of works by classical German masters, especially the orchestral scores of Beethoven, long before the last named compositions had appeared in Germany save in detached portions. The speciality of the firm was the publication of symphonies and chamber music, though important dramatic music was not neglected, as is proved by the fact that the names of Boieldieu, Adam, Carafa, Cherubini, Spontini, Méhul, and others, figure largely in the catalogue, one of the most voluminous in the trade.

Il Pensiero di Nizza, the only journal writing in the lingua del paese at Nizza (Nice is nicer in French ears) speaks in raptures of Faure's Mefistofele—and no wonder. The Anglo-American of Nice writes in American English as follows:—

"The great attraction was, of course, Faure in the king. He had a magnificent reception from an audience as numerous as it was possible to be. The appearance of the theatre was indeed splendid. Not only in the boxes were the ladies in grand toilette, but in the stalls many also. There were cascades of diamonds, ropes of pearls, and one lady had emeralds in themselves a little fortune. Faure's embodiment of the king is so finished a performance, both in the acting and the singing, that one has nothing to do but to hear, to see, to enjoy, and applaud."

In witnessing Faure's Mephistopheles we do no more than hear, see, and enjoy. Plaudite amici. We are content to fold our arms and inwardly reflect.

The late Henri Monnier owes no inconsiderable share of his fame to his creation of the character of M. Prudhomme, the ideal model of the respectable citizens, addicted to the perpetration of sounding platitudes. Indeed, he acted the character and made it the vehicle for some of his best sayings. Thus, being accosted by a stranger, who mistook him for a M. Branchu, to his assurance that he was not the gentleman in question, he benevolently added, as if desirous of repairing a fault and setting his interrogator at his ease: "But, though, it is true, I am not he, I have always wished I were!"—Of a friend who said he was taking lessons in notation and could swim a little, Monnier asked anxiously: "Enough to save such another swimmer as yourself?"—"Let us leave our children nothing, if we wish their gratitude to equal our generosity," was another of his remarks:—"Oh, Madame," he observed blandly to a lady a little exhilarated by her third glass of champagne, "intoxication is as charming in a woman as it is hideous in a man."

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE."

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

MOMENTS HEUREUX. Etude pour le Violon (sans Accompagnement) ou Piano seul, Composée, et dédiée à son Maître, Mons. PROSPER SAINTON, par F. J. AMOR (de Salisbury, en Angleterre). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TWO SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

"THE TEST." Words by ADA 4s
"A GENTLE WORD." Words by S. CHAMPION 4s
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE HUNTER. Song. The Words by W. C. BRYANT. The Music by E. REYLOFF. (Sung with great success by Mr G. H. SNAZELLE.) Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Sung by Mr EDWARD LLOYD, and Just Published.

THE RINGLET. Song. Poetry by TENNYSON (by permission). Music by DESMOND L. RYAN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW EDITIONS.

"LA GAYOTTE DE VESTRIS." Arrangée pour piano... .. 3s
"LE RAJAH DE MYSORE." Fantaisie sur l'opéra de C. Lecocq 4s.

Par ALPHONSE LACOMBE.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GAVOTTE (in G). For the Pianoforte. By W. H. MONTGOMERY. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.—All the new and beautiful Songs, Ballads, &c., sung by this distinguished company of Vocalists are now published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess, from whom they may be obtained by the Music-trade and the public. Permission to sing any of the Songs contained in Messrs Moore and Burgess's repertoire is always freely accorded on application to the Manager. It is not necessary to obtain a licence to sing these songs at private meetings and soirées.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SONGS and BALLADS of the day are those sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS at ST JAMES'S HALL. The words of all these songs are written by the most eminent authors, and the music composed by the most celebrated musicians of the age, including Henry S. Leigh, E. L. Blanchard, Frank Vizetelly, Charles Dunphie, J. R. Thomas, W. Meyer Lutz, John Hobson, &c.

MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.
The following new and charming Songs and Ballads are just published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess:—

Riding in a Pullman car.
Alone.
Come where the tangled beeches grow.
My Darling's Last Smile.
Sad sounds the harp now.
Friendship, Love, and Wine.
Let each speak of the world as he finds it.
Sing me the songs that I loved long ago.
The Piquet.

The Wild, White Rose.
A boatman's life for me.
My Lily.
Sing, dearest, sing.
Many weary years ago.
Return of the Exile.
Glory or the Grave.
The Alpine Hunter.
Heavenly Voices.
Gentle Flowers.
The Buckles on her Shoes.
The Flight of the Birds.

May be ordered through any Music-seller, or obtained direct from the Publishers, St James's Hall, post free, One and Sixpence.

Post free, One and Sixpence.

SING ME THE SONGS THAT I LOVED LONG AGO.
Composed by W. MEYER LUTZ. One of the most beautiful and tuneful Ballads introduced by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS for some time past. Now being sung with immense success at ST JAMES'S HALL. Can be ordered through any Music-seller; or obtained from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FLIGHT OF THE BIRDS.—An entirely new and charming Ballad. Words written by HENRY S. LEIGH, Esq. Suitable for Alto, Tenor, or Soprano voices. Now being sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS, at ST JAMES'S HALL, with extraordinary success. Can be ordered of all Music-sellers; or obtained direct from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FOLLOWING NEW and BEAUTIFUL SONGS are being sung at ST JAMES'S HALL with marked success:—"Sing me the songs that I loved long ago," "The Flight of the Birds," "The Piquet," and "Sing, dearest, sing." The greatest successes ever achieved by the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. Can be ordered through all Music-sellers; and of the Publishers, Messrs Moore and Burgess, St James's Hall. Post free, 1s. 6d.

ASSIS SUR LA VERTE COLLINE. ("THE WISH.")
Paroles et Musique de M. WHITE. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Dedicated to the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music.

SIX STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

BY
IGNACE GIBSONE.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-------------------------------|
| No. 1. "THE SWALLOW." | No. 4. "WHITHER SHALL I FLY?" |
| "2. "THE FOUNTAIN." | "5. "ROCKED TO SLEEP." |
| "3. "SPINNLED." | "6. "THE RESTLESS SEA." |

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

ARDITI'S New Ballad, "TRUE." The Poetry by MARIA X. HAYES. Sung by Mlle HELENE ARNIM, at the Promenade Concerts, Royal Italian Opera. Composed by LUIGI ARDITI. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, composed by Signor ARDITI:—

- THE PAGE'S SONG, sung by Mlle Bianchi, Mlle Alwina Valleria, and Mlle José Sherrington. (Poetry by Maria X. Hayes.) ... 4s.
L'INCONTRO VALSE, sung by Mlle Adelina Patti ... 4s.
A KISS FOR YOUR THOUGHT, sung by Mlle Valleria ... 4s.

New Edition.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Sung by Mlle CHRISTINE NILSSON at her Concert in St James's Hall. The Music by J. W. DAVISON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVISON. Sung by Mlle ZARÉ THALBERG at the Floral Hall Concerts (Royal Italian Opera). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVISON. Sung by Mlle SOPHIE LÖWE at the Monday Popular Concerts. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"IN A VALLEY FAR AWAY;"

(MAURYA YAWN ASTHORE.)

BALLAD.

Composed by ELENA NORTON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

FRANCESCO BERGER'S PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

- | | | |
|-------------------------------------|-----|-----|
| "LA BONNE BOUCHE," Valse de Concert | ... | 4s. |
| "UNSPOKEN THOUGHTS" | ... | 4s. |
| "L'ETOILE DE MA VIE" | ... | 4s. |
| "CONSOLATION" | ... | 3s. |
| "A SLUMBER SONG" | ... | 3s. |
| "TROISIEME TARANTELE" | ... | 4s. |

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

FRANCESCO BERGER'S VOCAL COMPOSITIONS.

SIX SONGS FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

- | | |
|---|-----|
| 1. "FALLEN LEAVES." Song for Contralto... Poetry by OWEN MEREDITH | 4s. |
| 2. "CLEANSING FIRES." Do. for Mezzo-Soprano ... ADELAIDE PROCTOR | 4s. |
| 3. "WAYWARD WIND." Do. do. ... GEORGE MOORE | 4s. |
| 4. "TO AN ABSENTEE." Do. do. ... THOMAS HOOD | 4s. |
| 5. "THE STRAY LEAFLET." Do. do. ... AMELIA B. EDWARDS | 4s. |
| 6. "DON'T WHISTLE NEAR THE DOOR." Do. do. ... JAMES ONIONS | 4s. |

THREE SACRED SONGS.

- | | |
|--|-----|
| 1. "THY WAY, NOT MINE, O LORD" | 2s. |
| 2. "LIGHTEN OUR DARKNESS" | 2s. |
| 3. "BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK" | 3s. |

Composed by FRANCESCO BERGER.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW HARP MUSIC.

ENGLISH MELODIES.

Arranged for the HARP SOLO.

By CHARLES OERTHUR.

- Book 2 contains: "The Beggar Girl"—"It's my delight on a shiny night"—
"Oh dear, what can the matter be?"
Book 3 contains: "A lovely lass to a Friar came"—"Come, lasses and lads"—
"The hunt is up."
Book 4 contains: "The Green Lanes of England"—"The Merry Milkmaids"—
"The College Hornpipe."

Price 5s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street; and STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., New Bond Street.
Vienna: CARL HASLINGER, qm Tobias.

TRANSCRIPTIONS OF FAVOURITE SCOTCH AIRS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By EMILE BERGER.

- | | | |
|---|-----|-----|
| "FLORA MACDONALD'S LAMENT" and "KENMURE'S ON AND AWA" | ... | 4s. |
| "HUNTINGTOWER" | ... | 4s. |
| "THOU BONNIE WOOD O' CRAIGIE LEA" | ... | 4s. |
| "THE FLOWERS OF THE FOREST" | ... | 3s. |
| "THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE" | ... | 4s. |

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

HOMELIGHT. New Song. Words by PENCERDD GWFFYN. Music by W. HENRY THOMAS. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

A MOTHER'S LOVE. Song. The Words by MARIA X. HAYES. The Music by WILFORD MORGAN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

LA RISPOSTA. Canzoncina. Parole di F. RIEZZELLI. Musica di M. WHITE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WHEN ALL IS HUSHED. Song. The Words and Music by LILLIE ALBRECHT. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

SERENADE Moresque.

(FROM THE OPERA "SALVATOR ROSA.")

THE ENGLISH WORDS BY MARIA X. HAYES.

The Music by MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	- 3 0
RINK GALOP	- 4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	- 4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	- 4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	- 3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Cotno" and "Palermo"	- 4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	- 4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	- 4 0
WEST-END POLKA	- 3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	- 3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	- 3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	- 3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	- 3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	- 3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE	s. d.
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	- 4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	- 3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	- 4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	- 3 0
HARMONIUM	- 3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	- 3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	- 4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2S. 6D. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

No.		Price.
	OVERTURE	- 3 0
1.	CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	- 3 0
2.	SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	- 3 0
2 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3.	DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	- 2 0
4.	TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	- 4 0
5.	DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	3 0
6.	TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	- 4 0
7.	DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	- 3 0
7 bis.	Ditto ditto. Arranged in F	3 0
8.	FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron"	- 3 0
9.	BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10.	CHORUS, "Joy to night"	- 3 0
11.	SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	- 3 0
12.	LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	3 0
12 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13.	DUET, "See him glaring"	- 4 0
14.	SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	- 3 0
14 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15.	FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	- 4 0
16.	SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	- 3 0
16 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17.	SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	4 0
17 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18.	FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	... 5 0
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	... 2 6
	... 4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

POPULAR CLASSICS

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

NO.										S.	D.
1.	SONATA IN G	HAYDN	4	0
2.	SONATINA in C	(Op. 37)	CLEMENTI	4	0
3.	POSTHUMOUS RONDO in B Flat	MOZART	4	0
4.	SONATA in D	(Op. 47)	DUSSEK	5	0
5.	SONATA in C Sharp Minor	HAYDN	5	0
6.	SONATINA in E Flat	(Op. 37)	CLEMENTI	4	0
7.	BOURRÉE in A Minor	(Suites Anglaises)	BACH	3	0
8.	SONATINA in G	BEETHOVEN	2	6
9.	ECHO	(from the Partita in B minor)	BACH	2	6
10.	SONATINA in F	(Op. 38)	CLEMENTI	4	0
11.	SONATINA in F	BEETHOVEN	3	0
12.	SONATA in C	HAYDN	4	0
13.	PRELUDE AND CAPRICE in C Minor	(1st Partita)	BACH	4	0
14.	SONATA in E Minor	HAYDN	5	0
15.	L'ADIEU	DUSSEK	3	0
16.	TWO MINUETS in C and D	BEETHOVEN	3	0
17.	LA CONTEMPLAZIONE	HUMMEL	4	0
18.	ABSCHIED	SCHUMANN	3	0
19.	ALLEGRO, SARABANDE, & SCHERZO in A Minor	(3rd Partita)	BACH	4	0
20.	SONATA in F	HAYDN	4	0
21.	ANDANTE in B Flat	(Op. 75)	DUSSEK	4	0
22.	RONDO A CAPRICCIO	(Op. 129)	BEETHOVEN	5	0
23.	SOUVENIR	SCHUMANN	2	0
24.	ALLEGRO, SARABANDE, & PASSACAILLE in G Minor	(7th Suite)	HANDEL	4	0
25.	GAVOTTE AND MUSETTE in D Minor	(Suites Anglaises, No. 6)	BACH	3	0
26.	ALLEGRO CON BRIO in E Flat	(From Sonata, Op. 13)	HUMMEL	4	0
27.	SONATA IN D	(No. 10)	PARADIES	4	0
28.	DEUX ROMANCES	STEIBELT	3	0
29.	PRESTO in A Flat	(From Sonata, No. 6)	HAYDN	3	0
30.	SONATA in C	(Op. 53)	WOELFL	5	0
31.	SAXON AIR WITH VARIATIONS	DUSSEK	4	0
32.	PASSEPIED	(Partita in B minor)	BACH	2	0
33.	TWO MINUETS in E Flat and C	BEETHOVEN	3	0
34.	RONDO BRILLANT in B Flat	(Op. 107)	HUMMEL	4	0
35.	TOCCATA in A	(From Sonata, No. 6)	PARADIES	3	0
36.	GIGUE in F Sharp Minor	(Suite, No. 6)	HANDEL	2	0
37.	INVITATION POUR LA VALSE	WEBER	4	0
38.	MINUET AND TRIO in E Flat	BEETHOVEN	3	0
39.	SONATA in E	PARADIES	4	0
40.	NOCTURNE in E Flat	(Op. 9, No. 2)	CHOPIN	2	0
41.	ARIA	(4th Partita)	BACH	2	0
42.	LA GALANTE, RONDO	(Op. 120)	HUMMEL	5	0
43.	RONDO BRILLANT in E Flat	(Op. 62)	WEBER	4	0
44.	WIEGENLIEDCHEN	(Op. 124)	SCHUMANN	2	6
45.	ARIA CON VARIAZIONI in A	(Op. 107, No. 3)	HUMMEL	4	0
46.	OCTAVE STUDY	STEIBELT	3	0
47.	TWO MINUETS	(1st Partita)	BACH	2	6
48.	POLONAISE in C	(Op. 89)	BEETHOVEN	4	0

SELECTED, EDITED, AND FINGERED BY

WALTER MACFARREN.

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE, W.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 8.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT. THIS DAY. The Programme will include:—Overture, The Enchanted Forest (Benedict), first time at these concerts; Violin Concerto, No. 9, in D (Spohr), first time at these concerts; Symphony in G minor (Mozart); Solos for Violin—Sarabande and Tambourine (Léclair); Three Hungarian Dances (Brahms and Joachim); Overture, Tannhäuser (Wagner). Vocalists—Mrs Osgood and Miss Mary Cummings (her first appearance). Solo Violin—Herr Joachim. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Numbered Stalls, in Area and Gallery, Half-a-Crown; Area or Gallery Seats (unnumbered), One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL. Friday, June 22, Public Rehearsal; Monday, June 25, Messiah; Wednesday, June 27, Selection; Friday, June 29, Israel in Egypt. Full particulars will shortly be published.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL, at Eight o'clock. The programme of the next Concert will include the following popular Songs:—"By the margin of fair Zurich's waters" and "Robin Red Breast" (Madme Sherrington); "Strangers Yet" and "She wore a wreath of roses" (Madme Enriquez); "Will he come?" and "The Meeting of the Waters" (Madme Antoinette Sterling); "Good-bye, Sweetheart" and "My Pretty Jane" (Mr Sims Reeves); "Good Night, Beloved" and "Sally in our Alley" (Mr Edward B. Lloyd); "The Vicar of Bray" (Mr Maybrick). Madme Arabella Goddard will perform "On Song's Bright Pinions," by Mendelssohn (Heller), and "Fra Diavolo," by Jules de Sival. The London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr Fred. Walker, Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 4s. and 2s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets at Austin, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of BOOSKY & Co., 295, Regent Street.

RUBINSTEIN.

RUBINSTEIN.

ANTON RUBINSTEIN will give his FIRST PIANO-FORTE RECITAL this Season at ST JAMES'S HALL, on April 30, at Three o'clock. Tickets now ready, and may be obtained at the principal Musicosellers and Librarians, and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

RUBINSTEIN'S RECITALS.—Liverpool, March 3rd; Manchester, 8th; Hull, 7th; Bradford, 8th; Sheffield, 9th; Nottingham, 12th; Birmingham, 13th; Leeds, 15th; Newcastle-on-Tyne, 20th; Dundee, 22nd; Edinburgh, 24th; Glasgow, 26th; Dublin, April 2nd; Southsea, 13th; Brighton, 14th; Bristol, 17th.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY.—President—SIR JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Eleventh Season, 1877. The FIRST CONCERT will take place at the LANGHAM HALL, on WEDNESDAY Evening next, the 23rd inst.; Schubert's compositions forming the first part of the programme. The following Members will appear on this occasion:—Mesdames Louise Gage, Emma Berthold, Helvert, Grosvenor, Lillie Albrecht, Kate Whitelaw, Ada Lester; Messrs Arvi, Trevis, Prenton, Carl Hause, Klein, and Schubert.

MR HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR. Twenty-second Season, 1877. FIRST SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT. FRIDAY next, March 2, ST JAMES'S HALL, Eight o'clock. Sacred and Secular Music, including Bach's Motet for Double Choir, "I will sing unto the Lord" (first time of performance in England). Soloists—Miss Robertson, Miss De Fonblanque (her first appearance in London), and Mr Edward Lloyd. Pianoforte—Mr J. G. Calcott. Organ—Mr John C. Ward. Conductor—Mr HENRY LESLIE. Tickets, 7s., 3s., 2s. Admission, One Shilling. To be obtained at Austin's Office, St James's Hall; and all Music Publishers.

MISS FLORENCE MAY'S TWO PIANOFORTE RECITALS. LANGHAM HALL, 43, Great Portland Street, THURSDAY Afternoons, March 1 and 15, at Half-past Three o'clock. The programmes will include works by Beethoven, Rameau, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Bach, Handel, Brahms, Oliver, May, Pergolesi, Alberti, Bennett, and Weber. Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; and at Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, 27, HARLEY STREET, W.—THIRD SESSION, 1877-8. FOURTH MONTHLY MEETING, on MONDAY, March 5, 1877. At Five p.m. precisely, a Paper will be read by Dr W. MOLE, F.R.S., Mus. Doc., Oxon., on "The Philosophy of Harmony." CHARLES K. SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.

24, Sutherland Gardens, W.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT will play, at the First Concert of the Eleventh Season of the Schubert Society, Wednesday Evening, Feb. 28, at the Langham Hall, J. RÖNTGEN'S SONATA for PIANO and VIOLON-CELLO, with Herr SCHUBERTH (ANDANTE CON MOTO and ALLEGRO MODERATO); and, for Pianoforte alone, THALBERG'S GRAND FANTASIA on "MOSE IN EGITTO."—38, Oakley Square, N.W.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT has the honour to announce that her FOURTH ANNUAL MATINEE will take place early in March, at LOWNDEN SQUARE, Belgravia, by kind permission of George Eyre, Esq. Further particulars will shortly be announced.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his very popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," at Brighton, Feb. 26 and 29; Chatham, March 13.

"KILLARNEY."

MISS CATHERINE PENNA will sing BALFE's popular Song, "KILLARNEY," at Mr Henry Nicholson's Concert, Leicester, on Tuesday, Feb. 27, and at Sheffield, March 2.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR ALFRED BAYLIS will sing the popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on March 1, at Birmingham; and Stoke, March 2.

WANTED immediately, a thoroughly efficient ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, for the Parish Church of Sevenoaks, Kent. Salary, £75 per annum. Duties—Three services on Sunday, and Festivals, and daily in the evening. None but a Communicant need apply. Age not above 40. Applications, with testimonials of recent dates, to be sent to the VESTRY CLERK not later than the 2nd March next.

YOUNG LADIES of 15 to 22 Years, of Dutch Parents, residing in England, with really good voices or musical abilities, intending to follow an artistic career, Lyric or Dramatic, wishing to compete for a SCHOLARSHIP, as PENSIONNAIRE of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, are requested to communicate, by prepaid letters, with Mr C. VAN DER DOOS, Royal Commissary of the Institute of Pensionnaires of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, 62, Sea Street, The Hague, Holland.

TO MUSICAL SOCIETIES.

TO be SOLD, by PRIVATE TREATY, the valuable LIBRARY of the LIVERPOOL MUSICAL SOCIETY, consisting of all the Large Parts for LARGE CHORUS of the Works as follows:—"Joshua," "Israel in Egypt," "Samson," "Alec and Gaius," "Médora," "Creation," "Sabat Mater," "Elijah," "St Paul," "99th Psalm," "Hear my Prayer," "Lauda Sion," "Last Judgment," "Ancient Songs," "Prodgal Son," Locke's "Macbeth," and sundry Part Songs, &c. Catalogues on application to J. HAWKINS, Hon. Sec., 39, Belmont Road, Liverpool.

A VERY fine Collection of Twelve original Italian VIOLINS, by the first Masters, is offered for SALE. For particulars apply to Mr GUSTAV FELDGE, Hamburg, Germany.

MR ARTHUR SHELLEY (ARTURO GARDA), after several years' career in Italy, has accepted an Engagement as FIRST TENOR, Imperial Italian Opera Company, and makes his Début at the Gaiety Theatre, Glasgow, in the Traviata, on Tuesday, 20th inst. Letters respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Italian or English Opera, Oratorio, or Concerts—Gaiety Theatre, Glasgow.

MR SHAKESPEARE requests that all Communications concerning ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., be addressed—6, Howick Place, Victoria Street, S.W.

MDME ENRIQUEZ begs that all communications be addressed to her at No. 5, OAKLEY SQUARE, N.W.

MR WILFORD MORGAN requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to his residence, 18, Surrey Street, W.C.

MR GERARD COVENTRY (Tenor), having returned to Town from his Provincial Tour, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Concerts. Address—Care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

SITUATION WANTED.

WANTED immediately, by a Young Lady, aged 17 years, a SITUATION in a Music Warehouse. Is a good Pianist, and can teach. Good references. Address "DALTA," Musical Warehouse, 18, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

TO AMATEUR FLAUTISTS AND OTHERS.

A GENTLEMAN (having no further use for them) wishes to dispose of a SILVER FLUTE, by RUDALL, CARTE & Co., "1867 Patent," with D and D sharp Snake Keys, also the key recommended by Mr Collard. The Flute, in case, complete, cost 52 Guineas. Also an 18-carat gold head, fitting the above Flute, which cost 30 Guineas. To be sold Bargains, either separately or together. Address—"A. P." 3, Promenade Terrace, Cheltenham.

Price 4l.

A SHORT and EASY SERVICE for the TE DEUM. By Rev. J. HOWARD. London: NOVELLO & Co., 1, Berners Street, W.

THE MONTHLY MUSICAL RECORD.—The cheapest High-class Paper on Music. Yearly Subscription, 2s. 6d. post-free. Years 1871 to 1876 (vols. 1 to 6) bound, each net 3s. "Intelligible and dispassionate criticisms and reviews, analyses of interesting compositions, and a like determination to discountenance the fictitious either in art or its practice; these are the qualifications of the paper."—Morning Post. ALGER & Co., 86, Newgate Street, and 31, Regent Street.

At all Booksellers. In crown 8vo, price 6s.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES OF CELEBRATED VIOLINISTS. Lulli, Corelli, The Bannisters, Tartini, Viotti, Paganini, De Beriot, Ole Bull, Ernst, Joachim, &c. By Dr PHIPSON. RICHARD BENTLEY & Son, New Burlington Street.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

So's Depot for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists.

25, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.

Price List free on application.

THE GUITAR.—M^{rs} SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant instrument, is in town for the Season. For Lessons and Concerts address—22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

SIMPSON & CO.'S

IMPROVED HARMONIUMS.

FROM £5 5s. Five Octaves. Best make. Warranted. Nothing BETTER OR CHEAPER made. Lists post free. Trade supplied.

TO COMPOSERS wishing to PUBLISH.—Music Engraved, Printed, and Published in the best style at unusually low prices. Estimates free on receipt of MS. SIMPSON & Co., 33, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

NEW EDITION OF MACFARREN'S LECTURES ON HARMONY.

Now Ready, in 8vo, price 12s. cloth.

SIX LECTURES ON HARMONY. Delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. By G. A. MACFARREN. Second Edition, thoroughly revised, with numerous Engraved Musical Examples and Specimens. London: LONGMANS & Co.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.—All the new and beautiful Songs, Ballads, &c., sung by this distinguished company of Vocalists are now published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess, from whom they may be obtained by the Music-trade and the public. Permission to sing any of the Songs contained in Messrs Moore and Burgess's repertoire is always free'y accorded on application to the Manager. It is not necessary to obtain a licence to sing these songs at private meetings and soirées.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SONGS and BALLADS of the day are those sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS at St JAMES'S HALL. The words of all these songs are written by the most eminent authors, and the music composed by the most celebrated musicians of the age, including Henry S. Leigh, E. L. Banchard, Frank Vizetelly, Charles Dunphie, J. B. Thomas, W. Meyer Lutz, John Hobson, &c.

MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.

The following new and charming Songs and Ballads are just published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess:—

Riding in a Pullman car.
A One.
Come where the tangled beeches grow.
My Darling's Last Smile.
Fair sounds the harp now.
Friendship, Love, and Wine.
Let each speak of the world as he finds it.
Sing me the songs that I loved long ago.
The Piquet.

The Wild, White Rose.
A boatman's life for me.
My Lily.
Sing, dearest, sing.
Many weary years ago.
Return of the Exile.
Glory or the Grave.
The Alpine Hunter.
Heavenly Voices.
Gentle Flowers.
The Buckles on her Shoes.
The Flight of the Birds.

May be ordered through any Music-seller, or obtained direct from the Publishers, St James's Hall, post free, One and Sixpence.

Post free, One and Sixpence.

SING ME THE SONGS THAT I LOVED LONG AGO.

Composed by W. MEYER LUTZ. One of the most beautiful and tuneful Ballads introduced by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS for some time past. Now being sung with immense success at St JAMES'S HALL. Can be ordered through any Music-seller; or obtained from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrel's, St James's Hall.

THE FLIGHT OF THE BIRDS.—An entirely new and charming Ballad. Words written by HENRY S. LEIGH, Esq. Suitable for A to, Tenor, or Soprano voices. Now being sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS, at St JAMES'S HALL, with extraordinary success. Can be ordered of all Music-sellers; or obtained direct from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrel's, St James's Hall.

THE FOLLOWING NEW and BEAUTIFUL SONGS are being sung at St JAMES'S HALL with marked success:—"Sing me the songs that I loved long ago," "The Flight of the Birds," "The Piquet," and "Sing, dearest, sing." The greatest successes ever achieved by the Moore and Burgess Minstrel's. Can be ordered through all Music-sellers; and of the Publishers, Messrs Moore and Burgess, St James's Hall. Post free, 1s. 6d.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL."

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, St ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

LANSDOWNE COTTELL'S COMPOSITIONS.

MESSRS MOUTRIE & SON have the pleasure of announcing arrangements with Mr COTTELL, enabling them to publish a New Composition, Monthly (Vocal or Instrumental). The success of his new "Wedding March" has encouraged them in requesting Mr COTTELL to arrange it as a Piano-forte Duet. They anticipate a greater demand than ever for his last Compositions. Piano-forte and Music Saloons, 55, Baker Street, W. Catalogues post free.

ASSIS SUR LA VERTE COLLINE. ("THE WISH.")

Paroles et Musique de M. WHITE. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

New Edition.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Sung by M^{rs} CHRISTINE NILSON at her Concert in St James's Hall. The Music by J. W. DAVISON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVISON. Sung by M^{lle} ZARÉ THALBERG at the Floral Hall Concerts (Royal Italian Opera). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVISON. Sung by M^{lle} SOPHIE LOWE at the Monday Popular Concerts. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR JOHN OXENFORD.

(From the "Times.")

Mr John Oxenford died on Wednesday morning at his residence in Trinity Square. He had suffered nearly two years from severe bronchitis, and more than once very slight hopes were entertained of his recovery. Nevertheless, he rallied from time to time, could see and converse cheerfully with his intimate friends, and the chance of his ultimate cure was by no means thought improbable. When least expected, however, he died—calmly, without pain, and retaining his faculties to the last. The immediate cause of his death was heart disease.

For thirty years and more John Oxenford has been a conspicuous figure in the literary world. Though chiefly, if not exclusively, known to outsiders as a dramatist and dramatic critic, he was recognised by many competent to judge as one of the ripest and most variously endowed scholars of our time. Born at Camberwell, on the 12th of August, 1812, though brought up for the legal calling, he early in life took to literature as a favourite pursuit, caring little for a profession in which, with his remarkable intellectual powers, he might have earned brilliant success. But Oxenford was instinctively a lover of books—a devourer of books would be the more emphatic and truer expression. Considering his extraordinary attainments, it seems incredible that he should have been almost self-taught. Such, however, is the fact. He acquired Greek, Latin, and the principal modern languages entirely without aid; and, in addition to this, made himself, though only an amateur in mathematics, able to discuss problems and theorems with any professed master of that difficult study. To this, perhaps, he was in a great measure indebted for the power of concentration which was one of his strongest points. His summary of the plot of a new piece, for example, after only once witnessing the performance, was frequently a masterpiece of clearness and condensation. Everything necessary to inform the reader was there, what was superfluous to the understanding of the plot being discarded; so that one could see the main purport of the drama as clearly as one could see one's own face in a looking-glass. Judged from this point of view, a collection of Mr Oxenford's analyses of plots, separated from his always kindly, sometimes too kindly, criticism, would be a precious acquisition to our dramatic literature. Some people may ask, "Why, with all his experience, learning, and varied acquirements, has such a man left no great work to perpetuate his name?" The question can only be answered in one way. Mr Oxenford was so absorbed in the search of fresh knowledge on all subjects that he spent much of his leisure in reading which he might have more profitably occupied in writing. He must have been instinctively a critic. When a new book on any philosophical theme came under his notice, he would read, digest it, and in a luminous essay, partly descriptive, partly critical, tell those all about it who may not have had time at disposal, or the same irremissible inclination to research. In spite of this, Mr Oxenford was not merely a scholar, but an original thinker; and had it pleased him to write a book in which the rich produce of his studies should be condensed into an accessible form and the light of his far-seeing intellect illumine the whole, we should have gained an invaluable addition to our philosophic literature. But it was a fault with him that no sooner had he read one book than he began another, using it to the same purport, so that he never felt disposed to let the world become acquainted with himself and his ability to frame a philosophy of his own. As an appreciator of others, however, and as a quick discoverer of anything new likely to exercise a future influence on thought, he had few equals. An instance of this may be cited in his early appreciation of Schopenhauer, the long despised and rejected of modern German thinkers. After reading Schopenhauer's collection of essays entitled Parerga und Paralipomena, some quarter of a century ago, Oxenford contributed an article, "Iconoclasm in Philosophy," to the Westminster Review, which immediately attracted attention in Schopenhauer's own country. Dr Francis Hueffer, in an article, "Arthur Schopenhauer," which appeared last December in the Fortnightly Review, speaks of the neglect of the philosopher for nearly twenty years, until he suddenly rose into fame and achieved success. These are the words of Dr Hueffer (himself a German):—

"This success came at last, and from a quarter where it had been least expected, though, perhaps, most coveted. This quarter was England. . . . The attention thus created" (by the Parerga und Paralipomena) "would most likely soon have subsided had it not been for a foreign voice, suddenly and loudly raised in testimony of the neglected philosopher's merits. It soon appeared that the author was Mr John Oxenford, the well-known dramatist, critic, and scholar. The article is masterly in all respects. . . . It may be called, without exaggeration, the foundation of Schopenhauer's fame, both in his own and other countries, for now suddenly the prophet was acknowledged by his people; the journals began to teem with his praise," &c.

But apart from German philosophy and metaphysics, Oxenford was a rare scholar. In Spanish he was as efficient as in German, and this is proved by his translation of Calderon's Vida es Sueño (Life is a Dream), published more than 30 years ago, about which Mr G. H. Lewes, in his book on the Spanish Drama, Lope de Vega and Calderon, says:—"So admirably translated by John Oxenford that, in availing myself of his version, I feel that Calderon suffers no greater injustice than that which a poet must always suffer in translation." In Italian, moreover, Mr Oxenford showed his proficiency by a translation (unfinished and therefore unpublished) of Boyardo's Orlando Innamorato. With regard to his intimate converse with French literature, it may suffice to point to his translation of Molière's Tartuffe. From his favourite German he made admirable translations of Goethe's Autobiography and Die Wahlverwandtschaften (The Affinities), besides Epigrams from Venice, and other things.

An enumeration of the pieces, in all forms, written by Oxenford for the stage would take up more space than we can afford. The first was a farce called My Fellow Clerk, written as far back as 1835. Enough that he who could criticise could write himself, and afford to be criticised in turn. Mr Oxenford also supplied musical composers with librettos for operas, among which may be mentioned Robin Hood and Helvellyn (Macfarren), and the Lily of Killarney (Benedict). Cantatas, too, like the translation of Burger's Leonore (Macfarren), with others, came readily from his always fluent pen. That he was a genuine humourist would be proved alone by his farces Dearest Elizabeth and Twice Killed, the last of which has not only been translated for the German stage, but also for the French Opéra-Comique, where it served as a libretto for Grisar's opera, Bon soir, Monsieur Pantalon. He was, moreover, a true poet, as may be seen in his numberless songs, some of which are among the purest lyrics we possess.

In private life John Oxenford was universally admired for his wit, his humour, and his conversational powers. He possessed the rare faculty of ingratiating himself with all comers. He will be missed, and, indeed, has for some time been missed, in certain circles where his advent was always a pleasure and his departure a pain. His death will be heard of with general sorrow and his memory be cherished for years to come. About his long connection with the Times, and the services he was able to render through its columns to the art he always loved, it does not become us to speak.

THE FLOWER OF ERIN.*

(For Music.)

There is a spot in Erin's isle,
Green spot so dear, beloved the best;
There is a cot where beauty's smile
Has often soothed my heart to rest.
And sure 'tis Norah's, gentle treasure,
Who meets me at the door, and she
Who sings me songs in cheerful measure,
And loves no other lad but me.
Flower of Erin, gentle treasure,
Who meets me at the door, and she
Who sings me songs in cheerful measure,
And loves no other lad but me.

The flowers all bow to Norah's beauty,
Her praise is sung in every tree;
The stars are constant to their duty,
But oh! not one more true than she.
Thin 'tis not I that could deceive her,
No selfish heart beats in my breast;
Her words are truth and I believe her,
Flower of Erin, beauty blest!

And sure 'tis Norah, gentle treasure,
Who meets me at the door, and she
Who sings me songs in cheerful measure,
And loves no other lad but me.

JAMES HICKS.

* Copyright.

FAURE'S FRENCH TOUR.

(From an Occasional Correspondent.)

Success still follows in the train of M. Faure at Lyons, and is as much as ever his very humble, devoted, obedient servant. The enthusiasm of the local press shows no sign of abatement—no evidence of exhaustion; quite the contrary. En foi de quoi, I send a few more extracts. Le Petit Lyonnais of the 14th inst. says:—

"All those who were present yesterday evening at the performance of Guillaume Tell will preserve a magnificent recollection of that event. Faure is certainly the supreme expression of lyric art and the master of French singers. In the part of Guillaume, he may be said to realise our ideal of the personage. He is, of a truth, the hero of Helvetian independence, the hero of the legend, with his ardent patriotism, his hatred of the tyrant, and his powerful love of liberty. Yesterday Faure displayed, without reserve, all the resources of his marvellous talent. From the moment he appeared, he obtained a complete hold of the audience by the superb vigour with which he took his opening air and the dramatic beauty of his acting. In the immortal trio and the scene of the oath, the eminent vocalist had such touches of pride and such pathetic energy, that the entire house repeatedly burst into enthusiastic applause. He was no less fine and less affecting in the prayer of the third act, one of the happiest inspirations of the great composer. Faure's second performance was, therefore, a new and complete triumph."

According to Le Progrès of the 15th inst:—

"M. Faure's success in Guillaume Tell was immense; the public were enthusiastic. The result of this extraordinary representation was foreseen, but it is with much pleasure, that we record the fact."

The opinion of La Décentralisation is subjoined:—

"Faure achieved, yesterday evening, an immense success in Guillaume Tell. The second performance attracted a crowd even more considerable than the first. The outer doors had to be closed, and hundreds of persons were refused admission. The part of Guillaume, a much longer part than that of King Alphonse in the opera of La Favorite, afforded M. Faure an opportunity of exhibiting himself in the splendour of his double talent as an incomparable singer and as a consummate actor, in a word: in all the radiance of his artistic glory. Never was a triumph more splendid. Enthusiasm reached its highest pitch, and, overwhelmed by the ovations of which he was the object, the eminent singer was compelled to repeat several passages. This, of course, rendered his part even more crushing than it otherwise would have been. We may also note that Guillaume was played in five acts. Usually, the fifth act is suppressed. The ballet was badly received; not even the premieres danseuses found grace. Everyone was impatient to see Faure again. Consequently, it was not till they once more beheld him that the excited crowd were silent. Such, is the history of this second extraordinary performance."

On the 17th inst., the critic of Le Courier de Lyon writes:—

"Faure's third performance, given yesterday at the Grand-Théâtre, was the occasion of a fresh triumph for the artist. Faust is classed among our stock masterpieces; everybody has heard it and seen some one play the part of Mephistopheles, but we are constrained to say that, up to the present moment, no other artist has attained the originality and perfection to which Faure rises in it. Insinuating, railing, insolent; a swashbuckler, a fine gentleman, a demon—Faure is all this. Under whatever aspect he presents the diabolical personage to us, he is always correct and perfect, frequently soaring to the sublimest regions of dramatic art. Listen to the ironic accents of the serenade, the strident and satanic laugh with which it terminates, and say whether this is not the terrible personage conceived by Goethe! What a singer! What an actor! Faure has no rival. He is the first of our singers, just as he is the first of our lyric tragedians. Always master of himself, elegant, and aristocratic, Faure strikes us as being one of the most perfect artists it has ever been our lot to hear. The public of Lyons, also, regarded him in this light, and made him repeat several fragments of his part, as in the La Favorite and Guillaume Tell."

La Décentralisation is equally eulogistic:—

"After La Favorite, Faure conquered the confidence of the Lyonnese; after Guillaume Tell, he proved himself worthy of his reputation as an exceptional singer and a consummate actor. Yesterday evening he put the stamp on his reputation as an incomparable artist. We never witnessed such enthusiasm. Such triumphs cannot be described. We do not know which we should admire the more in Faure, the singer or the actor; both united in the same person constitute the most perfect type imaginable for the stage. Several airs were encored, and the most trifling recitatives, delivered with infinite art, evoked frantic applause, &c. The part of Mephistopheles will prove dangerous for all baritones who may in future come to sing it in Lyons."

It would be difficult to find a better conclusion to these criticisms than the letter addressed to Faure by the Prefect of the Rhone:—

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the generous offering which you so eagerly forwarded me for our unemployed workmen. Your heart is on the same height as your talent, and you will leave a profound and lasting impression with those who enjoy the good fortune of hearing you, and with those whose distress you have lightened. The Municipal Council will make a point of expressing to you their gratitude, but I will not wait till they meet before myself thanking you, in the name of the unhappy sufferers, most warmly and most sincerely. Kindly accept, my dear sir, the assurance of my most sympathetic sentiments and my highest consideration.

"OH. WELCHER."

MUSICAL CRITICISM.

From "Mayfair."

"Quis custodiet ipsos custodes?" Who shall criticise the critics themselves? Who indeed? A German metaphysician—none but he would have had the composure of mind—who has invented the term "metacritical" for such reciprocity. But who has accomplished the feat successfully? Certainly not those poets who, more bravely than discreetly, have faced about and stood at bay against their oppressors. Has Mr Browning added to the number of his admirers by his savage retort on Mr Austin's censure, or is there a drearier production in our literature than Mr Swinburne's "Under the Microscope?" Do as Hafiz did, quaff your wine and laugh at your critics, pious or impious. If you seriously remonstrate with them, you are a lost man.

If this is true of men who wield the weapon of language with experienced skill, how much more hopeless is the case of a poor musician—fiddler, or singer, or composer—who is most likely a foreigner, or at any rate little prepared by training and cast of thought to enter the lists with the relentless free-lances of the press? How agreeable must be his surprise on discovering that his dreaded judge is after all a man and a brother endowed with even more than an average share of humanity—for this, strangely enough, is the case, in this country at least. Compared with their brethren in the fields of literature and the fine arts, or with their confrères on the Continent, English musical critics are a wonderfully mild race, too mild, in our opinion, seeing that toleration of mediocrity in art is almost as wicked and quite as detrimental as misappreciation of true genius. This constitutional gentleness of a whole class of writers—of a class, too, less than others checked by editorial pressure or by competent public opinion—may seem strange at first sight. But the deeper psychologist will not be at a loss for reasons to explain the phenomenon. One of these is, perhaps, the very helplessness of the subject to be operated upon, which blunts the dissector's knife. Or is it that musical critics are apt to make more than due allowance for deficiencies of others in executing an art which they themselves find it so difficult even to write about? With regard to those difficulties we propose to tender a few apologetic remarks, the slight pro domo tendency of which the candid reader is requested to pardon.

"Sonate, que me veux tu?" was the witty Frenchman's query, unanswered to the present day, and anxiously repeated on many a Saturday and Monday during the season by two score human beings. What are we to say of a new work with the name of Brahms or Raff affixed to it, and with nothing but a stray allegro or smorzando and some miscellaneous sharps and flats by way of suggestion? It is true that with the help of these latter, together with a few "relative minors," fugatos, and other specimens of technical jargon, a neat little essay may be constructed, gratifying the curious reader and surrounding the critic with the not unwelcome halo of deep if abstruse learning. But, unfortunately, amateurs have of late heard so much of the "emotional basis" and "passionate undercurrent" of musical creations, that abstract wisdom fails to satisfy them any longer. They insist on being told what a piece of music means—what the composer wanted to express by it; and, in obedience to this wish, the critic has to plunge headlong into the stream of "poetic intentions," more or less of his own devising, which ultimately is sure to land him on the shadowy shore of M. Schumann's symphony, "Sur l'influence du bleu dans les arts," so painfully remembered by readers of the Vie de Bohème.

There is, of course, a happy mean between these and other equally objectionable modes of criticism; a way of saying, in a straightforward manner, whether and why a piece of music is good or bad. That this can be done without technical dryness on the one hand, and vaguely poetic declamation on the other, the musical columns of more than one London newspaper tend to prove. But due allowance ought to be made even for those weaker brethren who fail to render musical impressions through the inadequate medium of ordinary critical prose. It is comparatively easy to give a satisfactory account of the spirit and form of a poem or picture, which after all represent only the ideal side of actual existence; but music is the thrice-sublimated essence of this ideal side, and its connection with actualities has ceased entirely.

This state of things is, of course, considerably modified where the musical drama, the opera, is concerned. Here the poor critic at last touches solid ground; he has to deal with tangible shapes; he can tell a story, proverbially silly though that story may be. True in theory; but let us see what form practice is apt to take, in England at least. London is the only capital in the world which can afford two Italian operas; but in no other capital are there fewer performances of new works than in London. Dramatic productions by the most celebrated masters go the round of the stages of Europe for years before the idea of a possible performance begins to dawn upon Mr. Gye or Mr. Mapleson. These gentlemen can afford to ignore rising genius, for they believe in "stars," and their faith is not without its reward. Be the libretto never so silly and the music never so hackneyed, fashionable audiences fill the house as long as the name of Patti or Albani adorns the playbill. Right enough as far as impresario and public are concerned; but how about the critic? Can he fill the gaping column with the tale of Lucrezia's crimes or Rosina's flirtation, which every reader has at his or her fingers' ends. And yet the column gapes and the star wants to shine in print. To this star, therefore, he clings with the tenacity of despair. Her stage presence (we politely assume the star's gender to be feminine), her dramatic action, find due acknowledgment, and all the resources of impassioned prose are exhausted to describe—

"How she shook upon E in alt,
And ran the chromatic scale up,"

But even this innocent pleasure is not without its dangers. Wilful prima donnas may change original keys; and, in the present chaotic state of the pitch, it requires a fine ear indeed to know an E from a D, or any other note of the gamut.

A worse fate even than the boredom of ordinary operatic routine is in store for some writers on music, when at last a new work sees the light of Drury Lane or Covent Garden. First performances are inevitably protracted till long after midnight, the daily papers go to press before the cock crows—say at 3 a.m., and in the interval the musical critic is supposed to form and express his opinion on a new composition, it may be by a new composer with an individual style; and this from a single hearing, and after the excitement and fatigue of four hours' attentive listening. What fatal loss would be incurred by one day's delay of the notice is not easily perceptible to non-editorial eyes. Yet several of our dailies are still reluctant to follow the humane example of wiser contemporaries.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Since my last letter we have had several pleasant concerts; and when I tell you that at one of Mr. Hallé's, Herr Joachim played Spohr's 6th Concerto, his own Nocturne in A, and a selection from Bach, I need scarcely add that there was great enthusiasm, as well as universal delight. At the same concert Joachim's conversion of Schubert's Pianoforte Duet into a grand symphony was heard for the first time in Manchester, and every amateur admired the reverent and thoroughly artistic manner in which Schubert's music had been arranged for the orchestra. Miss Thekla Friedländer was the only singer at this concert, and it would not have been easy to select one more capable and accomplished. Last week Acis and Galatea was given, with Mendelssohn's additional accompaniments. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Guy, and Signor Foli were the principal singers. Mr. Sims Reeves was to have appeared at Mr. De Jong's concert last Saturday night, but, in his absence, Mr. Barton McGuckin, the Dublin tenor, gave "Tom Bowling" and "The Pilgrim of Love."

This week Messrs. Hallé, Joachim, and Piatti will play in Beethoven's Triple Concerto at Mr. Hallé's concert; and a new symphony by Mr. Ed. Hecht will be played for the first time,

Feb. 21st, 1877.

RAMEAU.*

(Continued from page 116.)

This is the place for an interesting letter but little known, and addressed by Rameau to a young musician who wanted to write for the stage and had written to beg Rameau's advice. The letter is curious and instructive.†

"Paris, 29th May, 1744.

"You ask me, sir, what course a young musician, with inspiration and good intentions, should pursue in order to compose an opera. I appreciate fully the honour you do me, but, at the same time, feel deeply mortified that I can be of very little assistance. In the first place, my own affairs are such that I cannot well divert my attention from them, and in the next, what you ask requires a much longer answer than you imagine. You must be acquainted with the stage, and have long studied nature, so as to paint her as truthfully as possible; you must also be versed in all great passions and all great sorrows, and possess a feeling for dancing and its movements, to say nothing of all the accessories; you must be familiar with the various kinds of voices and the actors; command the orchestra and sometimes even the audience. You must know thoroughly of what each instrument is capable. A little genius is necessary, and a little taste even still more so. Allow me to tell you, also, sir, that, in this great work, nothing must be left to chance; for this reason, if I were you, before undertaking so great a task, I would first execute others of less importance: cantatas, divertissements, and a thousand similar trifles, which foster the mind, enliven the imagination, and insensibly render a man capable of greater things. I have studied the stage from the age of twelve; I did not write for the Opera till I was fifty, and even then I did not consider myself capable of doing so, I persevered. In a word, I was courageous . . . daring, and I succeeded . . . "Rameau."

It may easily be imagined that the Court did not remain unmoved by the fame so rapidly achieved by Rameau, and which almost at once became absolutely glory. The King eagerly seized an occasion of doing homage to the composer's genius. This occasion was furnished by the marriage of the young Dauphin with the Infanta of Spain. The marriage, which was to be celebrated at Versailles, called, of course, for splendid entertainments. Voltaire and Rameau received orders to write a lyrical work, for the representation of which a magnificent theatre was constructed on purpose, at great expense, in the Grand Stables. Thus the two celebrated men, whom some persons had succeeded in preventing from producing anything together on the stage of the Opera, became collaborators when the pleasures of the Court were involved. La Princesse de Navarre (such was the title of Voltaire's poem) was a grand spectacular piece in three acts in verse, with a prologue. It was played on the 23rd February, 1745, and the author himself has left the following particulars concerning it: "The King wished to give her Royal Highness, the Dauphine, an entertainment which should not be only one of those spectacular pieces for the eyes, such as all nations can give, and which, passing away with the splendour that accompanies them, leave no trace behind. He ordered a spectacle which might, at one and the same time, serve to amuse the Court and encourage the fine arts, knowing, as he does, that the cultivation of the latter contributes to the glory of his kingdom. His Grace the Duke of Richelieu, first gentleman of the Chamber on duty, made the arrangements for this magnificent entertainment. He had a stage fifty-five feet deep erected in the large riding-school at Versailles, with the audience portion so fitted up that the decorations, embellishments, and everything employed for the performance, could be cleared away in a night, leaving the place ornamented for a costume ball which was to be the entertainment the next day. The stage and the boxes were built with becoming magnificence and with all the taste for which those who directed the preparations have long been known. It was resolved to combine on the stage all the talent which could tend to render the entertainment attractive, and to unite all the charms of elocution, dancing, and music, so that the august lady to whom the entertainment was consecrated might at once be rendered acquainted with the various kinds of talent afterwards to be employed for her amusement. It was resolved, therefore, that the person charged with getting up the entertainment should write one of those dramatic works in which musical divertissements form a part of the subject, in which an element of pleasantry is mingled with the heroic, and in which there is an admixture of opera, comedy, and tragedy." The work was received very favourably, and, after the performance, Rameau had conferred upon him, as evidence of the royal gratitude the title of Private Composer to the King (Compositeur de la Musique du Cabinet du Roi) with the pension of 2000 livres.*

* From the Ménestrel.

† This letter was published some ten years since in one of his feuilletons for the Indépendance belge by Jules Janin, who said: "I here copy an unpublished letter from which it will be seen that the composer, when called upon, was capable of giving good advice." The letter was non altogether unpublished, as De Croix had already given it in L'Ami des Artistes where no one ever thought of looking for it. I cannot say whether Janin had, the original before him; I merely affirm that the version he furnishes (and which I have chosen) is more complete than De Croix's, and somewhat different.

(To be continued.)

TONOMETRY.

(Athenæum.)

(Continued from page 117.)

These instruments, with due precautions, do excellent work; but they are cumbrous, costly, excessively variable with temperature, extremely mild in quality of tone—which prevents verification by any interval but the Octave—with notes difficult to sound more than two at a time, and difficult to flatten and restore to pitch rapidly. These inconveniences are practically overcome by the tonometer made by Georg Appunn & Son (of Hanau, Hesse-Cassel, near Frankfort-on-the-Maine), now in the Loan Collection of Scientific Apparatus at South Kensington, and priced, as I find on inquiry (it is as well to state that I have none but a scientific interest in the apparatus), at 360 German marks, or £18, without the blowing apparatus, which adds about £6 or £7 more. It is of a small size, not at all costly, not nearly so variable in temperature as tuning-forks, extremely reedy in quality of tone—so that the 16th partial can be made effective, and hence all intervals used as verifications—with notes easy to sound and to damp in any number at a time, and to flatten, any one separately and instantly, or gradually, by 1, 2, or even 3 vibrations, and to restore immediately to the former pitch. This last is one of the most important properties of the instrument. It consists of 65 harmonium reeds, actuated by pulls numbered 0 and 1 to 64, which, when pulled out completely, give the true tone, and, when gradually pushed in, gradually flatten the tone. The pitch is from C 256 to C 512, increasing regularly by 4 vibrations. The mode of using it is simple, but would take up too much space to explain.

Using this instrument to measure forks, I found great discrepancies between the numbers shown and the numbers stamped on the forks. For my own satisfaction, therefore, I verified the instrument as follows. First I counted the beats with a pocket chronometer, between pulls 0 and 1, for 15 seconds, and found them 60, or 4 in a second. Next I counted the beats between each pair of the other adjacent pulls for 21 seconds, and found them always 80, or 4 in a second. Hence the whole increase was 4 times 64, or 256 vibrations. Next I examined, first, the usual consonances on the instrument, consisting of 1 Octave 1:2, 11 Fifths 2:3, 11 Fourths 3:4, 10 major Thirds 4:5, 9 minor Thirds 5:6, 4 major Sixths 3:5, 4 minor Sixths 5:8; secondly, the septimal consonances, 6 Sub-fifths 5:7, 4 super-major Thirds 7:9, 8 sub-minor Thirds 6:7, 3 sub-minor Sevenths 4:7; and thirdly, the usual dissonances, having audible identical partials, 7 major Tones 8:9, 5 minor Tones 9:10, 4 diatonic Semitones 15:16; or 87 just intervals on the whole. For every one there was the proper rapid rattle of beating partials, but not the slightest wave of error in the identical partials. This wave was, however, instantly produced by flattening the upper reed, and made to disappear by flattening the lower reed at the same time to the proper extent; and to re-appear by flattening the same more. I have, therefore, a mechanical guarantee that every one of these intervals was correctly represented on the instrument. But every one of them separately proved, after counting the beats, that the lowest tone made 256 vibrations in a second, and the whole set, by their perfect agreement, proved that the beats had been correctly counted.* The introduction and extinction of the beats of error was often very remarkable. Thus the diatonic semitone, pulls 11 and 16, with 300 and 320 vibrations, when the upper note was flattened, beat in error with 4,800, and the same slightly altered—that is, a D sharp above the ninth ledger line above the treble staff, and the same slightly altered. This slow beat of error was distinctly separable from the rapid rattle of the beating partials, including the lowest and strongest. By conscientiously trying every one of these 87 cases, I have convinced myself of the perfect trustworthiness of the instrument; and those to whom I have shown some of them have been equally convinced, among whom I need only mention as most competent to decide, Mr A. J. Hipkins, of Messrs Broadwood's, and Mr E. Greaves, of Sheffield, a large maker of tuning-forks, who have now accepted the 256, 384, and 512 of Appunn's instrument as absolutely correct, and copied them on forks.

I proceed to give an account of some of the remarkable results of applying this accurate tonometer to the examination of forks made by former methods.

A. G. ELLIS.

25, Argyll Road, Kensington.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The fortnightly meeting of professors and students took place on Saturday evening, Feb. 17, when the following pieces were given:—

Passacaille, in G minor, from the 7th Suite, pianoforte, Miss Julia Kirk, pupil of Mr H. R. Evers (George Frederick Handel); Song, "When the pale, pale moon," Miss Elliott (second study), pupil of Mr Montem Smith, accompanist, Miss Frost (Virginia Gabriel); Two Studies, in B flat and G minor, pianoforte, Miss Clara King, pupil of Mr Kemp (Stephen Heller); Sonata, in D, No. 9, violin and double bass, Mr Newton and Mr Harper (Professors' scholar), pupil of Mr H. W. Hill and Mr White, accompanist, Mr Hooper (Arcangelo Corelli); Sonata, in D, 1st two movements, pianoforte, Miss Shapley, pupil of Mr F. B. Jewson (Johann Nepomuc Hummel); Valse Ariette, "La messagère d'amour," Mirella, Miss Clara Sammuel (Parepa-Rosa scholar), pupil of Mr Randegger, accompanist, Miss Kate Steel, Potter exhibitor (Charles Gounod); Romance, in G minor, and Presto, in F (MS.), pianoforte, Mr T. Matthay, pupil of Sullivan and Mr Walter Macfarren (Tobias Matthay, student); Sonata, in C minor, No. 2, Op. 65, organ, Miss Morgan, pupil of Dr Steggall (Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy); Largo, from Sonata in B minor, Op. 58, pianoforte, Miss Kate Steel, pupil of Mr Walter Macfarren (Frederick Chopin); Song, "Out in the rain," Miss Trowbridge, pupil of Mr T. A. Wallworth, accompanist, Mr Myles Foster (T. A. Wallworth); Song without Words, in A flat, Nocturne, in A minor (MS.), pianoforte, Miss Lawrence, Professor Macfarren and Sir Julius Benedict (Emily Lawrence, student); Song, "O Araby," Oberon, Miss Mansell, pupil of Mr Benson, accompanist, Mr Morton (Carl Maria von Weber); Fantasia and Fugue, in C minor, organ, Mr Corke, pupil of Mr Rose (J. S. Bach); Air, "O Liberty," Judas Maccabæus, Miss Annie Patterson (second study), pupil of Mr F. Walker, accompanist, Mr Myles Foster (George Frederick Handel); Andante and Menuetto Capriccioso, from Sonata in A flat, pianoforte, Miss Elwell, pupil of Mr Westlake (Carl Maria von Weber).

The public concert of the studies will take place in the Academy concert-room this (Saturday) evening, when Mr Henry Smart's new cantata, The Fishermens' Song, will be performed for the first time in public.

* Exactly ten months after the production of this piece, there was taken from it a one-act ballet opera, entitled Les Fêtes de Ramire, and performed at the same theatre in the Grand Stables, Versailles, on the 22nd December, 1745. "The divertissement," says De Lérin, in the Dictionnaire des Théâtres, "are those of the Princesse de Navarre. Voltaire added a few connecting scenes, and Rameau composed the music." La Princesse de Navarre was played subsequently at Bordeaux, and Voltaire then wrote for it "a fresh prologue, sent to his Grace, Marshal the Duke of Richelieu, for the performance he had caused to be given at Bordeaux, the 26th November, 1768."

* Let x be the vibrations of the lowest note, p and q the beats added by pulls P and Q , found by counting, so that the reeds actuated by P and Q gave $x+p$ and $x+q$ vibrations, and let $m:n$ be the ratio of the interval. Then, by the preceding footnote, $n(x+p)=m(x+q)$, or $(n-m)x=mq-np$, which gives the value of x in each case. Thus pulls 10 and 47 give a Fifth 2:3, and counting gives $p=4 \times 10=40$, $q=4 \times 47=188$. Hence $(3-2)x=2 \times 188-3 \times 40$, or $x=256$, and so for all the 87 cases. Had there been any error in counting, it would have been detected by one or more of these cases not giving $x=256$. Of course, these perfect intervals render the instrument invaluable to any teacher of musical acoustics.

QUARTET CONCERTS.

Messrs Carrodus and Edward Howell gave their friends another excellent programme at their second concert, in Langham Hall, on Tuesday evening. Neither gentleman played a solo this time; but, in compensation, we had three pieces with which the pianoforte had to do, the pianist being Mr Walter Bache, who chose for his solo display a "Ballade" (so-called) by Chopin, joining Messrs Carrodus, Doyle, and Howell, in Molique's E flat Quartet, Op. 71, and the first and last-named in Sterndale Bennett's "Chamber Trio" (Op. 26), showing himself a thoroughly competent artist, to whom each master was familiar, both as regards style and mechanical individuality, in which latter respect they materially differ. Molique's quartet is evidently modelled upon that of Beethoven in the same key, and for the same combination of instruments. That Mr Carrodus, his most distinguished pupil, should take pride in bringing it forward once more, after a long silence, is no more to be wondered at than the gratification experienced by the audience, for whom so careful and spirited a performance of a really fine work had been prepared. We now-a-days hear too little of Molique. Bennett's melodious trio was also extremely well given, the brilliant finale in particular. In the Serenade we thought the pianoforte part a shade too loud for the stringed instruments, which have always to play "pizzicato." Perhaps the most uniformly effective performance of the evening was that of Beethoven's third "Rasumovsky" quartet, in which Mr Val Nicholson joined the members of the society, as second violin. Mr Carrodus led this in masterly style, and was ably supported by his colleagues, and not the least so by Mr H. Doyle, who has to give out the theme of the fugue. The genuine services rendered by Mr Doyle, as principal viola, in the early years of the Monday Popular Concerts, are not yet forgotten by amateurs, and it is pleasant to hear him once more in quartet. The vocalist was Miss Annie Butterworth, one of the most improving young singers who owe their education to our Royal Academy of Music. Miss Butterworth, whose voice is a rich-toned contralto, gave Handel's somewhat hackneyed "Lascia ch'io pianga" and Mr Arthur Sullivan's charming "Willow Song," both well, and the last with such true and deep-felt expression as to win a hearty and general demand for its repetition, which she could hardly under the circumstances have disregarded. In both her songs she was accompanied with great ability by Mr W. H. Thomas.

THE REID FESTIVAL AT EDINBURGH.

(From the "Scottish Guardian.")

Subjoined is the final clause in an interesting account of the last Reid Festival, for details of which we cannot find space:—

"Though the Reid Bequest has been in operation since 1840, and the Reid Concert has been an annual event since 1841, a series of untoward occurrences long prevented this yearly opportunity from being what it ought to have been. It is only since the accession of the present incumbent to the Music Chair that we have had a concert or concerts worthy of General Reid's munificent intention. But it would be difficult to over-estimate the influence which the Reid Festival now has in fostering a taste for and knowledge of music among the public of Edinburgh. Among the changes for the better is the altered feeling of the students, whose attitude was in old days one of chronic hostility to the Professor of Music. Sir Herbert Oakeley, over and above discharging the recognised duties of the office, has devoted himself zealously and successfully to the laudable object of fostering a love of music among the general body of students. Some two hundred of them are now members of the 'University Musical Association,' a body of choristers whose concert, given every March, under the conduct of the Professor, has become, next to the Reid Festival, the most attractive musical event of the season. All the members of this society receive complimentary tickets for one or other of the Festival concerts; and groups of students might have been remarked here and there on Saturday and Monday among the most attentive and appreciative of the auditory."

It is agreeable to know that the actual musical professor is now diligently and successfully carrying out the bequests of General Reid, whose bequest to the Edinburgh University was intended solely for the interests of music and the progress of musical taste in the Scottish capital. (See also another column.)

BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Since my last there has not been any very great animation in matters musical hereabout, the depression of business having possibly something to do with the comparative paucity of concerts. That Messrs Harrison should have a crowded hall was a foregone conclusion, the names of Therèse Tietjens, Arabella Goddard, and August Wilhelmj being potent and irresistible attractions. The great prima donna was in excellent voice, and delighted all hearers, which was equally the case with our great English pianist, whose performances, however, brought with them some regret that such ability should be devoted to "fantasias." True, we had one movement (the andante, with variations) from the always welcome "Kreutzer" Sonata, so perfectly executed by Mad. Goddard and Herr Wilhelmj, that one was tempted to say, if so much, why not more? A débutante in Mr Mapleson's troupe, Miss Agnes Bonn, possesses a contralto voice of such good quality as to merit careful cultivation, to which, the lady being very young, we may look forward to with confidence.

At Mr Stockley's second orchestral concert the well selected programme comprised, inter alia, the overtures to Oberon, Egmont, and Semiramide, Haydn's Symphony, No. 7 (Salomon set), and a flute concerto by John Francis Barnett, played to perfection by Mr James Mathews, a thoroughly accomplished amateur. One of the noteworthy features of the evening was the first appearance in Birmingham of a young lady who might say, "I came, I saw, I conquered;" for veritably Miss Robertson took her audience by storm. An agreeable person, self-possession combined with a voice of exceptional quality and compass, carried the débutante successfully through the trying ordeal of the most trying aria from Die Zauberflöte, "Gli angui d'inferno," sung in the original key (Q.) with equal brilliancy and clearness. It is to be hoped the reception accorded to Miss Robertson may induce her to assiduously study the art she has adopted, giving especial attention to phrasing, and avoiding alterations for the sake of a rarely possessed high note, as at the close of the "Queen of Night" ("Gli angui d'inferno").† Signor Randegger's charming "Bird of Springtime" was, of course, mere child's play; but "O luce di quest' anima," despite her vocal facility, is not altogether suited to the lady's voice. Miss Robertson's future career will be watched with real interest by amateurs and connoisseurs. The other vocalist was Mr Barton McGuckin, who has made sensible progress since he sang here last, and in whom another young artist of promise may be recognised. Mr Stockley conducted the orchestra, and Mr Stevens accompanied some of the vocal music, each with his well-known ability.

At the second concert of the Festival Choral Society a fair performance of Gade's Crusaders justified the favourable impression it produced at the recent Festival, although the dreamy effect of Scene 2 (Armida) was occasionally marred by the want of delicacy on the part of the orchestra. The part of Armida seems to me as much too low for the voice of Mrs Osgood as that of Peter the Hermit is too high for Signor Foli's. Mr Vernon Rigby sang Rinaldo's music in such a manner as to elicit and deserve the hearty applause of his fellow-townsmen. Hummel's "Alma Virgo" and the first part of Haydn's Saisons completed an interesting programme. At the next concert of the society J. F. Barnett's Ancient Mariner will be given; and for Messrs Harrison's last "Popular Concert," Mr Sims Reeves and Herr Joachim are announced.

D. H.

Re sutor ultra crepidam.

What means the Sporting Chaplain
By his late Gladstonian grapple?
Does the famed battle of Hastings
Give warrant for such basting—
This effluence refined
Of a well-stored, stable mind?

Wellben.

* "If no more, why so much?"—Tom Thumb.

† All the "Queens of Night" do the same.—D. P.

HERR FRANKE'S CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Herr Franke brought his second series of chamber concerts to a conclusion on Tuesday evening, at the Tenterden Street Concert-room, with a programme which in its main features was equally commendable with its precursors; the weakest part in the selection being the only novelty—a quintet for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello, by Herr Carl G. T. Grüdener. We confess to having at present no great acquaintance with Herr Grüdener's works, but if his quintet in D, Op. 6, be a fair sample of his skill, we can afford to wait. Such a production might be considered praiseworthy to a certain extent if it emanated from an amateur, but it contains nothing that a professed musician could well be proud of. The quintet, which to its other demerits adds that of extreme length, was interpreted as well as could be wished by Herren Frantzen, Franke, Van Praag, Hollander, and Daubert. The other concerted pieces were Beethoven's Serenade in D, Op. 8, for violin, viola, and violoncello (Herren Franke, Hollander, and Daubert), and Rubinstein's "Zwei Fantasie-Stücke," Op. 11, for piano and violoncello (Herren Frantzen and Daubert). The concert giver played for solo Beethoven's Romance in G, and in answer to a demand for repetition substituted a movement from a suite of Bach's arranged for the fourth string of the violin. Mr Barton McQuackin sang "Adelaida" and Gounod's new song, "When thou art nigh," with much taste and feeling, earning well-deserved applause in either instance. Herr Franke announces a third series of four concerts to take place in May next; we trust that excellence, as well as novelty, will be his aim in constructing his programmes. His enterprise merits all encouragement.—Standard, Feb. 15.

BRAHMS' QUARTET IN B FLAT.

The Standard, in noticing one of the chamber-concerts of Herr Franke, gives the subjoined opinion about the latest quartet of Herr Brahms:—

"Anything in the shape of a novelty from the pen of so distinguished a composer as Herr Brahms must excite a widespread feeling of interest in musical circles generally, and the performance for the first time of the quartet in B flat, Op. 67, on Tuesday evening attracted a numerous and distinguished audience to the concert-room at the Royal Academy of Music. Like most modern musicians—especially those of a kindred extraction—Herr Brahms is both an original thinker and one who chooses his own method of expression; unlike the majority of his German brothers in art, however, he yields obedience to the established rules of construction, and his efforts are always marked by as strict an adherence to form as is consonant with the assertion of his own strong individuality. The quartet in B flat is a specimen of masterly workmanship throughout, and is built entirely in accordance with customary rule; but it is none the less characteristic of its composer, or of the broad independence of his ideas. The first movement is most curiously elaborated, and abounds in changes of rhythm and accent which at first are most perplexing to the auditor; this section of the quartet is certainly open to the charge of being abstruse, but the workmanship displayed is of a high order, and the distribution of the parts evinces a master-hand. The second movement is of a quasi-religious nature, and occasionally recalls snatches of Elijah, besides otherwise suggesting a Mendelssohnian influence; the melody is broad and expressive nevertheless, and the arrangement of the themes for the instruments is simply exquisite. In the third or scherzo movement (which is not at all a scherzo in the true sense of the term) the employment of mutes to all the instruments except the viola, which has the theme, has a somewhat curious effect, and the strangeness of accent and measure is even here more apparent than in the opening allegro. It is difficult, indeed, for a casual listener to decide in what measure the movement is written. The finale, though definite in plan, is as curious in treatment as the preceding movements. In respect of technical workmanship, perhaps, it is entitled to rank highest. Such a production as this, however, cannot be judged by its separate parts, but in its entirety, and thus considered, the quartet is a decidedly fine and suggestive composition. In its interpretation Herr Franke, as leader, was associated with Herren Van Praag, Hollander, and Daubert, and the performance, creditable on the whole, was materially indebted to Herr Hollander, whose viola playing was remarkably fine."

The new quartet was heard on Monday Evening at the Popular Concerts, and its merits, as is invariably the case with new compositions (see the Globe of Tuesday last), are likely to be discussed with considerable freedom.

HACKNEY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

Referring to Mr Ebenezer Prout's new and spirited venture at Hackney, the Globe has the following:—

"The rapid growth of popular taste for high-class music is attested by the number of suburban musical societies which have sprung into existence within the last few years. These provide for residents in the outskirts of London the same kind of musical fare furnished by the great central societies of the metropolis, and are a notable feature of the day. As a specimen of the work which many of them perform, the concert given recently by the Hackney Choral Association at the new Town Hall, Shoreditch, is worthy of comment. Some of its regulations might be advantageously adopted in other quarters. Encores are forbidden, and no one is allowed to enter or quit the hall during the performance of any piece. These rules, strictly enforced, enhance the enjoyment of an excellent concert, and enable an audience of 1,200 persons to hear the entire programme before half-past ten o'clock. More pretentious musical institutions might profit by this example. The selection at the concert to which we refer was highly interesting. Mendelssohn's music to Athalie and the greater portion of Schubert's Rosamunde music were performed by a chorus of 130 voices, aided by a band of 45 competent instrumentalists. The solos in Athalie were sung by Misses M. Williams, Geddes, and Butterworth, and the connecting lines were well recited by Mr Charles Fry. The Athalie choruses are a severe test, but the Hackney Choral Association proved equal to their task. The precision of their attack and the refinement of their style reflect much credit on the conductor of the society, Mr Ebenezer Prout, B.A., the well-known composer and critic. He has disciplined his forces so well that they produce far more satisfactory effects than those commonly attained by over-large choirs hitherto usurping pre-eminence. Mr Prout has a firm, intelligible beat, and carries his performers along with him. This was noticeable in the Schubert music, which has seldom been so well rendered. The band did ample justice to the overture to Athalie, while the great 'War March of the Priests' and the overture to Rosamunde were admirably played. In the selection which concluded the concert, Mr Winn won deserved applause for his spirited execution of Handel's 'Honour and arms.' The concert, attended by visitors from a long distance, was a gratifying illustration of the progress of high-class music in the suburbs. On May 7th, Signor Randegger's Fridolin will be performed."

May more such ventures be undertaken by men as competent as Mr Ebenezer Prout. Nothing better could be desired for the benefit of legitimate art.

To Francis Hurffer, Esq.

Les Mystères de Londres, by Sir Francis Trollope (PAUL MEURICE). Romance in Eleven Volumes—1844. (A very long and mysterious romance.)

The first, second, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth volumes of the—

Biographie Universelle des Musiciens. By F. J. FETIS. (Rarest edition, 1887)—for those who desire to complete their Bibliographie Générale de La Musique (a very long and mysterious romance).

MILAN.—Poliuto has been performed at the Scala, with Signora Fossa, Signori Fernando, Pantaleoni, and Bedogni in the principal characters. Signor Pallerini's new ballet, Nerone, with music by Signor Dall' Argine, was promised for to-day, the 24th inst.

CAIRO.—Der Frieschütz has been produced at the Viceregal Italian Operahouse. The cast included Signore Miller, Duval, Signori Fancelli, Medini, Mirabella, and Pinto.—On the 10th inst., a Requiem, composed by Signor Bottesini, for his brother, Luigi, who recently died here, was performed in the Roman Catholic Church. It was greatly admired, more especially the "Dies Irae," the "Tuba mirum," the "Quid sum Miser?" the "Marcia," and the "Elegia."

VIENNA.—Herr Gustav Hölzl, a singer who was whilom a great favourite with the Viennese, celebrated his fiftieth professional anniversary on the 17th inst. at the Kômische Oper. Born at Pesth, it was there that he made his first appearance on the stage. From 1835 to 1862 he was a member of the Imperial Operahouse in this capital, but, having, as the Friar, sung, in Templer und Jüdin, the burden "Ora pro nobis," which had been cut out of one of his songs, he was dismissed. He was allowed, however, a pension. The opera for his benefit was Lortzing's Wilde Schütz.

MR KUHE'S MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

We cannot give a detailed notice of Mr Kuhe's annual Brighton Festival; but an account of some incidents of interest connected with it will be acceptable to our readers. On the first day, for example (Tuesday the 13th inst.), a new cantata, by Mr Frederic Clay, under the attractive title of Lalla Rookh, was produced. About this the able musical critic of The Daily Telegraph gives the subjoined account:—

"The chief novelty of this festival was produced at the opening concert on Tuesday evening, and excited a good deal of interest for perfectly natural and sufficient reasons. A cantata based upon a work so well known and popular as Moore's Lalla Rookh has, on that very account, a certain degree of interest; much more when the writer of the libretto is the author of successful dramas, like Mr W. G. Wills, and the composer, a musician like Mr Frederic Clay. Such a conjunction could not fail to be attractive. Mr Wills has founded what he truly calls the 'slight plot' of his book upon the prose tale which serves as a setting for Moore's poetic gems. Beyond this he is in no way indebted to his famous predecessor; even the charming verses sung by Feramorz, 'Tell me not of joys above,' being omitted in order that the libretto might boast of entire originality. Moore's tale is as closely followed as possible. The leading characters, for example, are all reproduced with no more change than that of transforming the 'little Persian slave, who sang sweetly to the Vina,' into a confidential attendant bearing the name—famous in Eastern romance—of Leila.

"In doing his share of the work, Mr Frederic Clay kept himself well within the limits of that form and style by means of which he has gained the repute of a graceful and pleasing, if not a very profound writer. He seems to be one of the few who, having accurately measured their powers, never essay to go beyond them, and are, consequently, natural and unforced. This is precisely the impression conveyed by the music to Lalla Rookh. Nowhere unduly pretentious, it nowhere suggests the idea of a composer worrying himself into a fever in the vain effort to do something phenomenal. At the present time this is in itself attractive, and at any time there must be a certain degree of charm in spontaneous music. That Mr Clay has the gift of easy and graceful tune everybody knows, but nowhere, perhaps, has he turned it to better account than in Lalla Rookh, which is melodious from first to last. At the same time, we may point out that the composer is addicted to a certain monotony of rhythm, owing to his fondness for particular 'measures.' He has also the habit of making his phrases independent of each other to such a degree that the effect of a continuous melody is rarely secured. In other words, the phrases are more formal, and, so to speak, square-cut, than is consistent with the best results. These are, however, but tricks of which Mr Clay, by a little effort, could easily rid himself, and in no important degree do they touch his capacity as a melodist. Nor, as regards the particular instance under observation, are the defects upon which we have remarked specially serious. All things to the contrary notwithstanding, the music of Lalla Rookh cannot fail to please those who regard tune as a sine quâ non. Alike in his concerted pieces and in his orchestral accompaniments, Mr Clay aims at simplicity. It may be said that he hits the mark only too well, and we are far from sure that the objection is not well grounded. In a work of such pretensions one naturally looks, especially among the choruses, for whatever proof of scholarship may legitimately appear. But Mr Clay has suppressed nearly all evidence of this kind, while his orchestral accompaniments, though coloured with taste, and therefore pleasing, are somewhat meagre in form. It may be said that the object in view was the wide popularity of that which is accessible to, and comprehensible by, the greatest number. But a composer owes something to himself and to his art; and, as Mr Clay is undoubtedly able to discharge that obligation more fully than in Lalla Rookh, we trust, on another occasion, to see results of a higher kind. The scene of the story naturally entailed upon the music a good deal of what is called 'local colour,' which, however, Mr Clay has laid on here and there too freely. Like the trombones in a score, the elements of 'local colour' should be used in full view of the fact that, while powerful on fit occasion, they can easily be employed over much. Here, for instance, one soon tires of the tom-tom, cymbal, and triangle effects supposed to be necessary, but really belonging to that, by comparison, low form of art which consists in mere imitation. With this observation our list of objections to Mr Clay's work ends, and we have only to recognise its general brightness, its engaging spontaneity, and the happy art with which music always unaffected and always truthful in its expression is wedded to Mr Wills' verse. These qualities, so readily appreciable, secured a good reception for Lalla Rookh. The audience took kindly to it from the first number, encored Feramorz's air, 'I'll sing thee songs of Araby,' encored also a pretty quartet, 'Morn wanes, we must away,' and applauded the rest without stint; while at the close Mr Clay, who conducted, was summoned to the platform to receive warm congratulations."

It is to be hoped that Mr Clay's new work will be heard in London during the forthcoming spring and summer season. The next incident of importance to which the critic of the Daily Telegraph refers is the first performance in Brighton of Verdi's Requiem Mass, about which, in the preamble of his letter, he writes as subjoined:—

"The Requiem Mass, composed by Verdi in honour of his friend Manzoni, was given, for the first time in Brighton, on Thursday evening, and attracted a large audience. We are scarcely called upon to discuss the merits of this work. Every amateur has, in some manner or other, examined them for himself, and been guided to one of the many conclusions respecting it which the novelty of its style, the daring boldness here and there displayed, and pre-conceived notions of what constitutes sacred music, have suggested to different minds. It may be necessary, however—and is certainly advisable in the interest of a general rule of criticism—to repeat a caution against judging Verdi's Mass from the standpoint of that which is analogous to it in English art. The composer wrote as an Italian for Italians; wherefore to condemn his music because it is not 'sacred' according to our own interpretation of the word, would be ridiculous, and, what is more, offensive in the sense of an implied assumption that the incorrect to us should on no account satisfy anybody else. Admitting, as is our duty, that an Italian may with justice entertain a notion of sacred music different from the notion of an Englishman on the same subject, and judging Verdi's Mass solely as an ornate illustration of the solemn themes with which it deals, there is nothing to prevent a right conclusion save, perhaps, the difficulty of reconciling one's self to certain of its more incongruous features. But that difficulty will disappear in time. The religious pictures of the old Italian masters present details such as shock the novice by their freedom, and even to his mind touch upon the blasphemous. But acquaintance removes the impressions thus early formed, and by-and-bye the student—novice no longer—sees in them nothing but an outcome, peculiar, it may be, to the country and the time, of exalted religious feeling. We should not forget that when Rossini's Stabat Mater was new to English ears it excited a storm of disapproval; whereas now it ranks among accepted sacred works. Such, in all likelihood, will be the happy fate of Verdi's Mass, despite the hardness with which it wrenches certain forms of musical expression from the lyric theatre and bends them to the service of the Church. The Brighton public received the work with not less favour than on a first presentation it has commanded elsewhere—eagerly applauding, as a matter of course, such beautiful sections as the 'Recordare Jesu pie' and the 'Agnus Dei.' Other portions were not understood with so little effort, and there are some—for example, the 'Sanctus' and the fugue of the 'Libera me, Domine'—which, whether understood or not, can never please; but, speaking generally, the Mass obtained a gracious reception, and more than justified its choice."

In his notice of another of Herr Kuhe's festival concerts, the same critic refers to Sir Julius Benedict's too much neglected overture, The Enchanted Forest:—

"The overture by Sir Julius Benedict, entitled The Enchanted Forest, was written to illustrate a well-known romance of the author of Undine. This work, though composed eight years ago, had, strange to say, been heard only once before, through the medium of an indifferent performance at a Philharmonic concert. And yet it is one of the most imaginative and musically things ever produced by the pupil of Weber. Admirable in point of construction and brimful of attractive themes, it possesses a still higher merit in the force and truth of a suggestiveness which brings the listener's mind into harmony with all that fancy may conceive of a region where natural and supernatural blend in mysterious union. We trust that this work will no longer lie neglected, since, in its case, neglect means positive injustice. Sir Julius himself conducted its performance, and must have been gratified by a marked success."

We are glad to know that the Enchanted Forest will be heard at the Crystal Palace concert of to-day.

CHRISTIANA.—A new theatre is to be erected in place of the one recently destroyed by fire. Half the requisite amount, 400,000 Norwegian thalers, will be raised in shares. The project has been energetically pushed forward, and subscriptions, already amounting to 250,000 crowns, have been received from all parts of Norway.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

THE TWENTY-SEVENTH CONCERT.
MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 26, 1877.
To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.

SONETTO, in F major, Op. 31, for violin, alto, flute, clarinet, oboe, bassoon, horn, violoncello, and double bass—MM.
JOACHIM, ZEBINI, SVENDSEN, LAZARUS, DUBBUCC, WOTTON,
WENDLAND, REYNOLDS, and PIATTI Spohr.
SERENATA, "Vieni o cara" } Handel.
AIR, "Mi da speranza" }
SONATA, "Les adieux, l'absence, et le retour," Op. 81, for pianoforte alone—Mme SCHUMANN Beethoven.

PART II.

SONATA, in A major, for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment... Handel.
Herr JOACHIM.
SONGS { Schubert.
... .. Schumann.
Herr HENSCHL.
QUARTET, in C major, Op. 22, No. 3, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, ZEBINI, and PIATTI ... Haydn.
Conductor Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 24, 1877.
To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET, in D major, No. 7, for two violins, viola, and violoncello —MM. STRAUS, L. RIES, ZEBINI, and PIATTI Mozart.
SONGS, { "Star vicino" Salvator Rosa
"Suoi dur la vita allor" Buononcini.
Mr BARTON MCGUCKIN.
VARIATIONS SERIEUSES, in D minor, Op. 54, for pianoforte alone—Mme SCHUMANN Mendelssohn.
ELEGIA, for violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment—Signor
PIATTI Piatti.
AIR, "On wings of music"—Mr BARTON MCGUCKIN Mendelssohn.
TRIO, in B flat, Op. 97, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—
Mme SCHUMANN, MM. STRAUS, and PIATTI Beethoven.
Conductor Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

NOTICE.

With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive four pages extra, and again, from TIME TO TIME, as expedient.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1877.

(At the Fish and Volume. —Midnight—candles.)

DR FOX.—What is your opinion of the new quartet?

DR GOOSE.—I entertain a mixed opinion.

DR FOX.—On what account?

DR GOOSE.—Why, I think that (hums) :—

DR FOX (interrupting him).—Is very like (hums) :—

DR GOOSE.—Well, that two-four is very like six-eight —

DR FOX.—Second subject very like first—eh?

DR GOOSE.—Yes; and there was no great difficulty in making them come together.

DR FOX.—And what say you to (hums) :—

DR GOOSE.—Why, Raimondi would have mixed up all three—six-eight, two-four, and three-four—while shaving.

DR FOX.—Great fuss about nothing?

DR GOOSE.—The expression is eft

DR FOX.—But how about this (hums) :—

DR GOOSE (interrupting him).—Going together with this (hums) :—

DR FOX.—You sing out of tune. Never mind. Here again we have six-eight and two-four, cheek by jowl.

DR GOOSE.—Raimondi composed three oratorios, either of which could be played alone, either two of which could be played together; and as for the matter of that, so could the three of 'em.

DR FOX.—Cui bono?

DR GOOSE.—Much ado about nothing.

DR FOX.—Jullien made a wager that he would mix up two of his own oratorios with Raimondi's three, and no one would know that anything had been added.

DR FOX.—Wagner would throw in a sackful of his ninety-two motives, and —

DR GOOSE (interrupting him).—And no one would detect the impertinence. Some Englishman (merus Anglicus) wrote a canon in forty independent parts —

DR FOX (interrupting him).—So independent that no one knew there were more than four, if so many.

DR GOOSE.—But what say you to this (hums) :—

DR FOX.—A hepisode, as J. B. would say.

DR GOOSE.—A quoi bon the hepisode?

DR FOX.—To arrest the progress of the working out —

DR GOOSE (interrupting him).—Having nothing to do with it?

DR FOX.—Ganz recht. But you forget (hums) :—

DR GOOSE.—Which afterwards comes (hums) :—

DR FOX.—Inverted. Cur? Anybody can do that much.

DR GOOSE.—Well, such is the complexion of the times. To stop Liszt, who can't invent themes, and therefore can't invert them, our sticklers for the old school invert or reverse whatever, non inventus, comes into their heads.

[Candle goes out.—Apparition.]

HABBY LISZT.—My Benny Dick! What are those Philistines saying about me?

SUR BENNY DICK.—Sweet Habby, never mind. While you and I are neck to neck, we will hold our own. Your Elizabeth is adorable.

HABBY LISZT.—Your Peter is a stone with which you may lapidate your enemies.

BENNY.—O! Habby!

HABBY.—O! Benny! What do you think of my Mazeppa? (Lightning, thunder, voice of Mr Ap'Mutton in the distance.)

AP'MUTTON'S VOICE.—Ho! Ho! Since I have obtained Odin's one eye and blue mantle, I wander through the universe like a post mortem spectre! Where art thou, Dr Shoe? Where is my pen that I may write about Mazeppa!

[Tremendous crash.]

(Ap'Mutton's voice muttering inaudibly in space.)

HABBY LISZT.—That was the voice of Ap'Mutton.

BENNY DICK.—Ho! I must go! [Exit Benny Dick.]

WRAITH OF WAGNER.—Come along, Habby!

HABBY.—Oh! [Exit, on headless dragons, to Bayreuth.]

(Candles re-illuminated.)

DR FOX.—I thought Ap'Mutton was translated.

DR GOOSE.—He is now a cross between Wotan of the Spear and Ahasuerus the Wanderer. He has endeavored Flosshilde, and Wagner wants to put him in Walhalla, where the Scandinavian gods were brent.

DR FOX.—You know more than I imagined. But what say to this (hums):—

DR GOOSE.—A heavenly melody, worthy to go among the motives of the Tetralogy.

DR FOX.—Wagner has no melody.

DR GOOSE.—Hueffer says that his melos —

DR FOX (interrupting him).—Melos is good —

DR GOOSE.—That his melos is the only melos that surpasses Beethoven's melos.

DR FOX.—And my melos? I have written a song —

DR GOOSE.—Bother your song and your melos —

DR FOX (interrupting him).—It begins:—

DR GOOSE.—And how does it end?

DR FOX.—Thus:—

DR GOOSE.—Reversed?

DR FOX.—Reversed.

DR GOOSE.—But what about —

Bell rings.

DR FOX.—That bell? It sounds like the ring of Dishley Peters.

Enter WAITER.

WAITER.—Mr and Master Peters, please.

[Exit Drs Fox and Goose severally.]

MR DISHLEY PETERS, SEN. (to WAITER).—What have those idiots been discussing?

WAITER.—Sir, it was something about a quartet; and they say that next week they will come and settle their differences about the other parts of it.

MR DISHLEY PETERS, JUN.—You mean their inferences?

WAITER.—No, sir, their differences.

[Exit WAITER.]

MR DISHLEY PETERS, SEN.—They have been talking about —

MR DISHLEY PETERS, JUN.—The new quartet of Brahms.

MR DISHLEY PETERS, SEN.—Something too much for them. Asses!

MR DISHLEY PETERS, JUN.—Asses!

MR DISHLEY PETERS, SEN.—I also have something to say about that, which I shall communicate to you at our next meeting.

MR DISHLEY PETERS, JUN.—Grammercy, parent! I shall be all ears.

(Enter WAITER.)

WAITER.—Mr Seeher of the Ebolg asks to see you, sir.

MR DISHLEY PETERS, SEN.—Tell him I'm sleepy, and that he was mistaken. (Exit WAITER.) I sup with Academus. And you, my boy?

MR DISHLEY PETERS, JUN.—I sup with Athenæus, just returned from France.
(Exeunt severally from Fish and Volume.)

CASUISTS and others are fond of debating whether it is more desirable to possess a heart capable of love and affection, sensitively alive to the claims of friendship, and ever ready to listen to the voice of pity and compassion, or to be absolutely indifferent to such considerations, and, like the Miller of the Dee in the ballad, to "care for nobody." The question is one which has been discussed very frequently, and, we are bound to add, with the amount of acrimony usually infused into topics which should be treated philosophically and dispassionately. Looking at it in its general bearings, we have neither the time nor the inclination to enter on it at length, nor the pretension to settle it satisfactorily if we had. If, however, we view it only as it affects us in our relation to popular favourites in the domain of dramatic or lyric art, we are almost inclined to think, when the hour arrives for those favourites to appear before us for the last time, that it would have been better had we not appreciated their talent so keenly, and not allowed them to obtain so firm a hold upon our sympathies. Mediocrity has its good side, after all. It can boast of a negative excellence not without its value. A merely respectable singer or a merely tolerable actor may fail to move our tears or excite our enthusiasm; but artists of this description, when they retire from public life, do not leave behind them regrets which are as acute as they are unavailing.

Such were our reflections as we entered the Gaiety to witness the last public appearance of the gifted and inimitable John Parry. At that moment we felt we liked him so much as almost to wish we had never seen him. We then tried to fancy that we were once more about to spend an exceedingly pleasant afternoon; we did all we knew to cajole ourselves into the notion that we should be delighted with the coming performance, as we had been delighted with so many performances of John Parry's in days gone by, and that we should enjoy it with increased zest, because we should never witness another. But in our inmost heart we were painfully aware that all the jolity, all the jauntiness which we assumed was a sham, with no more vitality in it than there was in Armand Du Plessis, Cardinal Duke of Richelieu, and First Minister of France, when, a short time previous to his death, he sought to look strong and well by the aid of painted cheeks, a daintily-waxed moustache, and a carefully-trimmed beard. It was in vain that we attempted to derive consolation from the fact that the audience, which filled every place in the house, included the Prince and Princess of Wales; many men eminent in literature, science, and art; and many others eminent—to our mind, at least—for their admiration of the Veteran Entertainer. "Does not such an assemblage as this prove," we said to ourselves, "how highly he was esteemed; how popular he was—and is? Of course it does." But that was just it. The distinguished gathering proved too much, a great deal too much, for it proved how heavy was the loss we were soon to sustain, and how very far we were from agreeing with Juliet that—"Parting is such sweet sorrow."

It struck us, all our endeavours at self-deception notwithstanding, that parting is a somewhat bitter sorrow.

In the theatre a bill was given us. The first page, designed by the clever pencil of Alfred Thompson, presented to our gaze the portrait of the mobile, good-natured, and expressive face, which we knew so well. Around the portrait were depicted, among various objects due to the playful fancy of the limner, a number of mystic, weird-like hands. These, of course, represented a few of the multitudinous hands with which John Parry used to produce his marvellous effects on the piano, and which, by virtue of certain magic gloves, endowed with a power similar to that inherent in the Tarnhelm, or Casque of Darkness, worn by Siegfried in Herr R. Wagner's Ring des Nibelungen, conferred invisibility on the fingers which they covered. Now that their owner has retired, there can be no harm in stating the fact, and destroying for ever the general but absurd notion that John Parry was provided with only one pair of hands. It is not Antiquity alone that can show a Briareus: Underneath the portrait was a scroll whereon were inscribed the words:—"Gaiety Theatre. Farewell Benefit to John Parry, February 7th, 1877." We read and re-read those words, as though they were printed in cuneiform characters, not to be deciphered save after minute scrutiny and repeated perusal. Yet the absurdity of thus poring over them was all the more glaring, because, even had they been in cuneiform characters, our instinct would at once have guessed what they meant. On the second page of the programme stood the announcement of Sheridan's play of The Critic, with a most brilliant cast. At the top of the latter stood the name of Mr Charles Mathews as Sir Fretful Plagiary, while, farther down, it figured opposite that of Puff. But Mr Charles Mathews had sent a clever, sprightly, and witty letter, informing Mr Hollingshead that the writer, laid up by "that agreeable complaint, so airily spoken of by those who never had it, 'a touch of the gout,'" was, to his deep disappointment, unable to take part in the benefit. So Mr Charles Collette, who made up in the semblance and imitated the manner of the perennially youthful sufferer, undertook the part of Puff, and Mr Bishop that of Sir Fretful. At length the curtain rose. We have been told that the performance of the play was excellent, and we do not doubt that it was; we have learnt subsequently, from various sources, that Miss Nelly Farren and Mr J. L. Toole, as well as all the other ladies and gentlemen who had so kindly offered their services on the occasion, sustained their respective characters with great success, and again we do not doubt that such was the case. But, in sober truth, we have no very distinct recollection of anything they did. We were too much absorbed with the third page of the programme, commencing: "After which MR. JOHN PARRY will attempt to recall reminiscences of bygone days under the title of 'Echoes of the Past.'" Then Mr. Soutar came forward and stated, as we were afterwards informed, that the proceeds of the benefit amounted to one thousand three hundred pounds. Then there was a pause; then from behind the curtain proceeded the sounds of the air: "Should auld acquaintance be forgot?"—the last air played in public by John Parry nine years ago; then the house re-echoed with the most enthusiastic applause, long continued, and ending only to burst forth afresh. A few words, bearing the impress of profound feeling and perfect sincerity, was the signal for still more applause, and then Time seemed to have adopted the mode of progression ascribed by Shakespeare to crabs, and we found ourselves once more listening to the woes endured by our old friend the Tenor, in consequence of that celebrated tin tack which some one has left on the stage, and which will keep running into the tenorial boot. After that we had the "Singing Lesson," and the "Operatic Rehearsal," with all the grace, the humour, and the genial irony of former times. The next element in the programme was Charity begins at Home, given by Mr and Mrs German Reed's company, of which he whom we had met to honour was so long a member. This was succeeded by "Goosey, Goosey, Gander," as arranged by the retiring artist; a fragment from "Whittington and his Cat"; more cheering; more applause; much waving of hats and handkerchiefs, during which the one solitary occupant of the stage, deeply affected, kept bowing the gratitude which his tongue was unable to express, and then all was over. John Parry had, in his professional career, taken farewell of us for ever!

May he still be spared many years to enjoy the regard and respect he has so fairly earned, both as an artist and a man. May he long live to know that the impression produced by his wonderful creations was far too profound to pass away when he ceased to pursue the profession on which he cast so much lustre; and let him be assured that more than one spectator said sorrowfully to himself, when the curtain fell on the afternoon of the 7th February:

"I shall not look upon his like again."

N. V. N.

DEATHS.

On February 7th, in Paris, Monsieur GUILLAUME SIMON RICHAULT, Music Publisher, of No. 4, Boulevard des Italiens, aged 71.

On February 19th, JOHN REGINALD NORRIS, only surviving son of James J. Monk, Professor of Music, 48, Oxford Street, Liverpool.

On February 21st, JOHN OXENFORD, Esq., aged 64.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

THE following anecdote is narrated in relation to La Fête du Village voisin, recently revived at the Paris Opéra-Comique. At one of the early performances, a member of the company was indisposed. Martin, an immense favourite, was asked to request the indulgence of the public. Though an admirable singer, he was a poor orator. However, he advanced towards the footlights, and stammered: "Ladies, and—and—gentlemen—our comrade X is, at this moment, not in a—that is—he is in a—he is unable—because—that is, in consequence—in fact, I might say—a—a—not feeling capable—" One of the audience cried out: "Sing it, Martin, old fellow; you will get on better."

MOLLE CONTAT, according to the Journal de Musique, was, oratorically considered, quite the reverse of Martin. Fleury said: "She is a woman who would make the audience applaud her dress-maker's bill, if she recited it upon the stage."

ON the 8th of next month, at two o'clock, the honorary degree of doctor of music will be conferred upon Herr Joachim in the Senate House of Cambridge University, the determination to pay this honour to the distinguished foreign musician, so well known and so highly honoured in England, having been arrived at last May. The actual ceremony will consist of nothing more than the presentation of Herr Joachim to the Vice-Chancellor by the Public Orator, who, in a Latin speech, will review his musical career. Following this, however, at eight in the evening, Herr Joachim, Mus. Doc., will attend a concert of the University Musical Society, at which original compositions by himself and Brahms will be played. The occasion will be one of special interest.

ACCORDING to Dr Burney, Queen Mary, having expressed approbation of the Scotch air, "Cold and raw," Purcell made it a perpetual bass to a song in the next birthday ode, 1602, beginning, "May her blest example chase." This pleasantry is said to have been occasioned by Her Majesty's asking for the tune after Mr Goatling, one of the gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, and the celebrated Mrs Arabella Hunt, with Purcell to accompany them on the harpsichord, had exerted their united talents to amuse their august listener with compositions which they supposed—erroneously, it would seem—to be of a superior class.

M. OSWALD has just brought to light the following curious letter from Auber to Scribe, who had requested the composer to let him have a "monstre" for a certain part of Zerline, ou la Corbeille d'Oranges, performed in 1851, at the Paris Opéra-Comique. A "monstre" is a set of nonsense verses, written to serve as model for the librettist, and give him an idea of what the musician requires. Auber's letter runs thus:—

"Here you have, my dear Eugène, the heroine's air in the second act. I have this instant finished it. Spanish style. The scene is at Naples, of course. Something with go in it. Make her speak of her love. She still resists; but that will not be for long. I want you to do something in this style, you know:—

RECITATIF.

J'ai remarqué que la particulière
A la jambe tres-journalière.

CANTABILE.

Aïe! Aïe! Aïe! quel fichu mal!
Tra la la! j'ai la sciatique!
Vive la reine Marguerite,
Et le tabac de caporal!
J'étais, hier soir, au Gymnase,
Et je vous donne pour certain
Que, pour un homme de mon âge,
Je suis rentré tard ce matin.

ALLEGRO.

Le journal l'Epoque
A beaucoup de vogue.
L'armée et la flotte
Le lisent souvent.
Lorsque la princesse
Est mal à son aise,
Elle se dessèche
Ainsi qu'une fleur.
Aimer, quelle vie!
Rimer, quelle scie!
Cette poésie
M'a mis en sueur!

For the stretto, three lines. The remainder as above. Ever yours."

WE are told that, besides playing upon the lute and virginals, Queen Elizabeth was a performer on the violin, and on an instrument something resembling a lute, but strung with wire, and called: a poliphant. A violin of singular construction, with the arms of England and the crest of Dudley, Earl of Leicester (the Queen's favourite), engraved upon it, was sold at a sale of one of the Dukes of Dorset. From its date, 1578, and from the arms and crest, Queen Elizabeth is conjectured to have been its original possessor. It is curiously carved. The several parts, however, are so loaded with ornaments, that it does not possess more tone than an ordinary violin muted. The neck, too thick to be grasped by the hand, has a hole for the performer's thumb. The hand is incapable of shifting, so that nothing save what lies within its first position can be executed.

There was an old fellow called Barrable,
Who found that his land wasn't arable;
So he said, "Let me see,
I'll do photography"—
And made money!! this knowing old Barrable.

The young Abercorn,
Though so lately born,
Now learns by a laugh,
To know nothing but chaff.

Bentwell.

WE have been requested by the widow of the late Dr George Tolhurst to return her sincere thanks to those ladies and gentlemen who have so kindly assisted in relieving her immediate necessities, and for their sympathy with her in her bereavement.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

THE ninth festival of the St Monica Institute took place in the Shoreditch Town Hall with success. The "star" of the evening was Mdme Liebhart, who sang Mr G. B. Allen's "Little Bird" and two old English ballads, being on each occasion "called" several times. Mdme Liebhart was in excellent voice, and sang with her usual bright spirit. Mr Maybrick gave "Nancy Lee," and Mr Henry Guy, Sullivan's "Sweethearts." A feature in the evening's entertainment was the whistle of the locomotives on the railway that passes over the Town Hall, and which "assisted" the audience in their applause. Herr Wilhelm Ganz played his new galop, "Allons vite," with great effect, and Signor Carozzi a solo on the flute admirably. Miss Bella Thomas, a pupil of Signor Randegger, made a favourable début. Her voice is fresh and well trained. The conductors were Herren Ganz and Lehmyer.

At Langham Hall, Mr Charles E. Tinney gave a concert of vocal and instrumental music. The audience, both large and fashionable, testified by frequent applause their appreciation of the efforts of the several executants. The concert opened with Smart's trio, "Queen of Night," well sung by Mdmes Kate Brand, Orridge, and Mr C. E. Tinney. Miss Orridge gave "Long years ago," accompanied by the composer, Mr Tinney. Mr L. Oswald followed with Hatton's song, "To Anthea." Mr Tinney sang "The Borderer," and was recalled. Miss Kate Brand gave several songs most effectively. Miss Leonora Braham obtained a recall for the "Jewel Song" in Faust. Mr Henry Guy sang Beethoven's "Adelaide" (recalled), and also a charming serenade, "Luna, veil thy light," composed by Mr Tinney, the composer accompanying. The second part opened with a dramatic quartet (MS.), sung by Mdmes Brand and Orridge, Mr Guy and Mr Tinney, entitled "Song of the Evil Spirit of the Woods." The instrumentalists were Miss Isabel Thurgood (pianoforte) and Mr S. A. Tinney (flageolet), both of whom acquitted themselves to the satisfaction of the audience. Mr H. Seligman gave Sullivan's "Looking Forward," and Mr Tinney gave "Nancy Lee."

A GREAT number of artists have, during the winter season, had the good fortune to be admitted to Mrs Ely's "At Homes," which take place every Friday, from eight to eleven. The large, elegant salons and the fine music-room of that lady are thrown open on that night to a small number of music lovers and a large number of vocal and instrumental artists. The centre of the room is occupied by a fine organ, and two grand pianofortes are placed in the adjoining room. A large musical library, some rare instruments, and a few pictures adorn the walls. Everything breathes of comfort and taste. Mrs Ely, herself an excellent organist, generally plays a prelude by Bach or Handel, which is followed by a selection of music improvised by the artists. The accomplished hostess has "received" since last October the élite of the profession, to whom she is a devoted friend and a generous patron. Mrs Ely is to be congratulated on the taste and refinement with which she superintends these interesting re-unions.

The programme of Mr Augustus L. Tamplin's recital, in the "Estey" Organ Rooms, on Thursday afternoon, consisted of a Preludium; "La Colombe," entr'acte (Gounod); Duetto, "Dolce conforto al misero, Il Giuramento (Mercadante)—the Misses Allitsen; Toccata (Hasler); Song, "Der Wanderer" (Schubert)—Miss Allitsen; Berceuse (A. Fiori); Duets, "Autumn" (Schumann), and "The Harvest Field" (Mendelssohn)—the Misses Allitsen; Fantasia, Dinorah (Meyerbeer).

How far the previously announced intention of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales being present at the performance of Verdi's Requiem in commemoration of Manzoni may have influenced the great attendance at the Albert Hall on Monday night it would be difficult to ascertain. A more brilliant assemblage has rarely congregated in that enormous building, and when the exceptionally late hour for commencing the work—nine o'clock—arrived, the vast salle was filled in every part. Since the memorable occasion of the introduction in May, 1875, when the artistic world of London was invited to welcome the illustrious composer on the first production of the Mass, with Mdme Stoltz, Mdle Waldman, Signor Masini, and Signor Medini as solo and quartet, Verdi's contribution to sacred music has become more or less familiar to amateurs, both in the metropolis and in the provinces. That no pains were spared to secure an effective rendering may be inferred when it is stated that the quartet of vocalists consisted of Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Mr Edward Lloyd, and Signor Foli; the choruses being, as formerly, entrusted to the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, Mr Barnby directing a strong and efficient orchestra, and Dr. Stainer presiding at the organ.

COPENHAGEN.—M. Delibes' comic opera, Le Roi l'a dit, is in rehearsal at the Theatre Royal.

PROVINCIAL.

REIGATE.—On Tuesday evening, the 13th February, a ballad concert was given in the Market Hall, under the direction of Mr J. Benfield, for the benefit of the Church Schoolmasters and Mistresses Benevolent Institution. The concert was announced as being under the patronage of Sir H. W. Peek, Bart., M.P., and Sir Trevor Lawrence, Bart., M.P. The Mayor of Reigate (W. Carruthers, Esq.) "presided." There was a large attendance, and the efforts of the artists who took part in the programme were much appreciated. The programme—the only fault of which was its length—consisted of vocal and instrumental music, and "readings" by Mr J. Trevarthen. The promoters of the concert had been fortunate enough to secure the services of Miss Marion Green, the daughter of a resident of Redhill, and pupil of F. B. Jewson, Professor at the Royal Academy of Music. Miss Green played Beethoven's grand sonata in C, Op. 53; Mendelssohn's 5th Book of Lieder, as well as a polonaise by Chopin, and proved herself a thorough master of the instrument of her predilection. She played each piece in artistic style, and was loudly applauded.—Abridged from a Local Journal.

WEST MALVERN.—This usually quiet locality was a scene of bustle and animation on Tuesday evening, February 17th, in consequence of another of those popular entertainments got together by the exertions of the Rev. F. T. Grey. Too much praise—says the Malvern News—cannot be bestowed upon a gentleman who will endeavour to enliven and add to the dullness of the season, when the sun is in its winter solstice, and Nature seems to be lying in a dormant condition. The schoolroom in which the entertainment was given was filled to overflowing, such an array of amateur and professional talent being selected as insured success. The lady vocalist was Miss Gillam, and the gentlemen were Messrs Brown, Elzy, Evans, Lockyer, Ogg, and Watson, Master Batchelor, and the Rev. F. T. Grey. Mrs Fitton was the pianist, and Mr F. F. Rogers the accompanist. "Readings" by Messrs J. Lewis and Corder were also given. Among the noteworthy singing was that of Mr J. M. Evans, whose "Mary Lee" (accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr F. F. Rogers) elicited a great deal of applause. The Rev. F. T. Grey, on behalf of those present, thanked the Rev. C. E. Freeman for his kindness in supporting the entertainment, and stated that, when the Easter holidays commenced, they would endeavour to provide other such amusements for the district.

WEST BROMWICH.—At the second concert of the West Bromwich Choral Society Mr Anderton's cantata, John Gilpin, was given with unqualified success. The principal parts were sustained by Misses Emma Beasley and Emilie Lloyd, Messrs V. Rigby and Hilton, all acquitting themselves in a manner that left nothing to desire. The choruses were sung in a manner to reflect great credit upon the conductor, Mr W. Hartland, who, considering that the Society has existed barely eighteen months, has achieved wonders. The composer expressed himself highly pleased with the performance. The second part of the programme (miscellaneous) calls for no special remark. It would, however, be unjust not to refer to the accompanist, Miss Lizzie Hartland, whose services, like those of her brother, being tendered gratuitously, are all the more appreciated.

DUBLIN.—On Tuesday evening, February 13, Miss Elena Norton's clever comic opera, The Rose and the Ring, was given at the Antient Concert-rooms with great success. The Irish Times says:—"We have already noticed Miss Norton's able composition at length, and have only now to say that the performance was a very excellent and enjoyable one. The first and worthiest of Irish musicians, Sir Robert Stewart, lent his valuable service as conductor, and the opera was admirably cast. Conspicuously successful was the singing of Miss Elena Norton, who, in the elegant ballad, "He does not love me," exhibited charm, finish, and delicacy of style. She was warmly applauded and frequently encored. The soprano and contralto parts, taken respectively by Miss A. O'Hea and Miss Heyne, were filled very efficiently. Miss Norton has experienced the premier pas qui coule. Her success ought to encourage her to further venture in the art which she has hitherto followed with so much success."

GLASGOW.—An excellent opportunity was given by the directors of the City Hall Saturday evening concerts to the public of Glasgow of hearing Mdme Sinico, Mdme Rose Hersee, Mdme Demerice-Lablache, Mr Snazelle, Signor Campobello, and Signor Norito, (clarinet). The artists did their best, and the services of Mr Berger as pianist were entirely acceptable to the audience. The concert opened with a duet for the clarinet and piano; and the tasteful execution of Mr Berger, and wonderful facility of manipulation, as well as sweetness of playing, displayed by Signor Norito, the clarionettist, were received with great favour. Mr Snazelle sang "The German Wedding Song" (Poniatowski) with appropriate expression, and his other songs were also rendered with a tastefulness worthy of hearty commendation. Signor Campobello, who received a most cordial greeting, retains all his freshness of voice and the qualities which make him a favourite. Mme Sinico contributed "Connais-tu le pays?" and another romance by E. Campobello, entitled "Forget thee;" but, perhaps, nothing that she sung took so well as her singing of "Home, sweet home." Mme Hersee shone with her accustomed brilliancy in "Where the bee sucks." Mme Lablache was heard to advantage in songs by Randegger and Donizetti. The hall we have seen better filled when the programme was not so attractive.

RAMSGATE.—A correspondent informs us that an attractive concert was given in the Concert-room of the Granville Hotel on the 17th inst. The vocalists were Miss Larkcom, Mr Gordon, and Mr Pearson. Mr John Cheshire played three harp solos, all encored. The entertainment gave much pleasure to a numerous audience.

CONSOLATION.

How sweet, upon a summer's day,
When cares my bosom wring,
To stray into the woods, and hear
The birds in chorus sing.
And if a rippling stream should chance
To cross the path I trace,
I'll kneel me down upon its brink,
And bathe my fevered face.
Then on a mossy bank I'll sit,
To hear the throats'le's note;—
O wondrous voice! so rich and sweet!
My cares are all forgot.

J. C. B.

SONNET.

EVENING CLOUDS.

Serene above me float the clouds so bright,
Their skirts tipp'd with evening's golden ray;
Like wide-spread screens they hang athwart the way,
Whence come the beams that sparkle through the night.
They're banners, held to decorate the height
Of heaven's blue arch, through which the sun hath sailed;
Their fleecy form withholdeth now the sight
Of night's pale orb, that waits to be unveiled.
So now my fortune, like the sinking sun,
Adown the dreary way is falling fast;
The clouds which fled, when I my course did run,
Will make the sky look dull and overcast.
Though pure and fine, and seem but gay air-toys,
They'll soon grow dense, and shut out all life's joys.

Leat, 1877.

DOWNHILL SMITH.

KARLSRUHE.—Herr Ignatz Brüll's opera, Das Goldene Kreuz, has been successfully produced at the Grand Ducal Theatre.

FLORENCE.—Sig. Marchetti's Gustavo Waza is announced at the Pergola, and is to be followed by Herr R. Wagner's Rienzi.

BARCELONA.—A buffo opera, Fior di Rosa, the libretto of which is founded on the French Fleur de Thé, has been produced at the Teatro Principal. The music is by Señor Galleani.

BRESLAU.—The second Silesian Musical Festival will be held here at Whitsuntide, under the joint direction of Herren Julius Schäffer, Bernard Scholz, and Ludwig Deppe.

STRASSBURGH.—Eighty pupils of the Teachers' Seminary recently gave a performance of Mendelssohn's music to Sophocles' Œdipus in Colonus. Herr Brüll's Goldenes Kreuz has been produced at the Stadttheater. Meyerbeer's Africaine is in rehearsal.

PRAGUE.—Liszt was announced to appear at the Literary and Artistic Association on the 15th inst., to play two compositions by Mosonyi, two by Dr Hans von Bülow, and one by Count Geza Zichy.

DRESDEN.—Herr F. Ries, the music publisher, has announced for the end of the present month a work which will doubtless prove very interesting. It is entitled: Friedrich Chopin, sein Leben, seine Werke, und seine Briefe (Frederick Chopin, his Life, Works, and Letters), by Herr Moritz Karasowski.

ST PETERSBURG.—La Forza del Destino, written for this capital and first produced here in 1863, has been performed at the Italian Operahouse by Signore Stolz, Cary, Signori Masini, Padilla, Strozzi, and Capponi.—Sig. Masini has been re-engaged.

JULES JANIN'S LIBRARY.*

A few days more, and the auctioneer's hammer at the Hôtel Drouot will have scattered to the four corners of the globe all that represented to the present generation the sympathetic survivor of the brightest epoch in our literary and political life, an exquisite, accomplished, and—for us writers—never-to-be-forgotten type of a gentleman, a man of letters, and an honest man, who, for nearly fifty years of lively, original, and disinterested criticism, had only admirers, and never made an enemy. Nothing will now remain of Jules Janin but his works, or, rather, a few of his books, for, as to what constitutes his real glory and undisputed authority, that is: the feuilleton, the article written from day to day, we might as well ask the autumn wind to account for the leaves it carries off, or Echo for the song of the passer-by. We are not speaking, however, of the pictures, the objects of art, or the old antique furniture. The dispersion of these things is a necessary fact; the division of an inheritance; a museum offered to commerce; the circulation of merchandise.—But the library? But the books, so well known throughout Europe, and less precious, perhaps, for the unparalleled splendour of the paper, the printing, the original drawings, and the binding, for their rarity and their selection, than for their dedications and the autographic notes in which J. J. drew himself as he lived and breathed—is it not a poignant sorrow, and is it not an unpardonable fault of the Institute to have allowed this collection truly worthy of the French Academy to escape them, when nothing was needed for them to possess it save their acceptance of the condition stipulated by the widow of installing it in a special room, bearing the name of the glorious and dearly loved companion of her life? They hesitated and waited, so, when Death, who does not wait, sent the lady to rejoin her husband, the power of decision was naturally left to the heirs, and they did not hesitate availing themselves of their right. The sale will begin on the 16th inst., and last eight days.

As much as, if not more than, the two most important sales for the last twenty years, during which we have had some exceedingly curious ones—Solar's sale, remarkable for the number of volumes, the prices they fetched, and the fabulous sumptuousness of the bindings, which caused a very keen connoisseur to say that the best expert of such a sale could be no other than a jeweller—and Brunet's sale, the most irreproachable, though perhaps somewhat too systematic, as regards old editions—this sale of Janin's, with only its 1,377 lots, has already thrown all amateurs and booksellers into a fever of excitement.

And there is good reason for it, since, of all kinds of fancies, the love of books is the most intelligent and the most tenacious; it is, also, that in which individual tastes are marked by the most exclusive predilections and singular likings; this is what distinguishes the bibliomania from the real bibliophilist. One man values only old books; another, only modern ones. For persons of the former class, the oldest editions, the binding of the period, manuscripts, books produced in the infancy of the printer's art, gems, and rarities, never cost too much. For persons of the second category, splendid editions, large-sized paper, double or triple engravings, the mosaic and other work executed by our marvellous French binders, those goldsmiths in leather and moire—as Victor Hugo would say—realise the ideal of possession. Certain libraries are exclusively historical or scientific; others, theological, romantic, dramatic, or poetical; facetious, musical, oratorical, eccentric, &c.; we know specimens belonging to each of these kinds. There are gleanings for all in Janin's collection, which contains something for every taste.

We shall mention no title; we should not have room enough to do so, and we should be infringing upon the catalogue—a masterpiece of that excellent printer's, Jouaust—very learnedly compiled by M. Potier, and, as M. Louis Ratisbonne says, in a preface filially clever, revealing all the charming arcana of a library which, though long celebrated, is not much known, and which M. Albert de la Fizelière and our venerated master, Paul Lacroix, have already summarily described.

"Charming" is the right word. There is the name, for instance, of Mad. Adèle Janin borne by many of the volumes, and those not the least magnificent, and either engraved or chased on their covers, enveloped in an affectionate dedication, or printed in the text—what can be more charming for those who were well acquainted with domesticity marked by such constant serenity, and of married life in which devotion on the one side competed with admiration on the other?

* From Le Figaro.

Charming, too, and sometimes very touching, are the notes with which he enriched his books, as if he had foreseen what additional value the latter would derive from those notes. We will quote a few of them.

On the first fly-leaf of a superbly bound manuscript of his Gaietés champêtres, I read:—

Here, my dear child, is a manuscript of the Gaietés champêtres, written in honour of my wife, most honoured and esteemed of all the beautiful women in the universe.—J. JANIN.—With the quasi-funereal date of 1873 (fall of M. Thiers).

He was in the habit, we must state, whenever the fact of his purchasing or receiving a book coincided with any event which interested his opinions or his heart, of confiding it, so to speak, to this natural friend. Thus, on a copy of the Edicts et ordonnances des très Chrétiens Rois, &c., he writes:—

An old book bought on the quais. I saved it from ruin in the midst of the ruin brought about in 1848.—J. J.

Sometimes his annotation is in verse:—

Tiré pour quinze amis sur papier de Hollande;
Deux ou trois ont gardé cette amicale offrande.

The book is Alfred Busquet's poem, La Nuit de Noël.

On another occasion, it was Rachel who brought him triumphantly the priceless quarto manuscript in which M. Laurent, Inspector at the Comédie-Française, recorded, day by day, in a series of extraordinary calligraphic feats, all the characters played or "created" by her from her first appearance on the 12th June, 1838, to the 23rd March, 1855, as well as the detailed account of the receipts, the total of which amounted to 4,394,231 francs, 10 centimes; he thus transcribes the conversation between "The Great One" ("La Grande") and himself:—

MADemoiselle RACHEL A JULES JANIN

Je dépose en vos mains mes titres de noblesse.

M. JULES JANIN A RACHEL.

Soit ! Je conserverai vos parchemins, Altesse !

Le 25 avril 1855. JULES JANIN.*

Passing over a great many other things, we may hastily mention the Daphnis et Chloé, by Amyot, the original edition with the Regent's figures, engraved by Audran. In this book Janin first writes with the pride of a bibliophile:—

This copy belonged to Roger Collard. It comes out of his library, and it was young Andral, his grandson, who gave it me on the 9th February, 1848.—J. J.

Then, on the fly-leaf, after mentioning the different editions of the Greek romance, he writes with the acuteness of the journalist:—

Monseigneur, said an Italian artist to Philippe d'Orleans, on seeing his drawings for Longus, you are a master of drawing. There wants scarcely anything to make you a great artist, save for you to be a poor devil like me, di poco necessità.†

One of the ten copies on India paper of Alexandre Dumas the Younger's plays is ornamented with the following words, written in pencil, which are a eulogium as much as an expression of thanks:—

Much pleased and exceedingly proud.—Jules Janin.

Lastly, there is a volume with the arms of the Countess de Verrue (L'Académie galante, and the Différents caractères de l'Amour, 1682—1685):—

March, 1849.—This little book has not appeared in any of the sales during the past six months, so fertile in wrecks. It was found on Rosalinde's toilet table between a pot of paint and a bottle of Portugal Water. The destiny of books !

(To be continued.)

* MADemoiselle RACHEL TO JULES JANIN.

I deposit in your hands my patents of nobility.

M. JULES JANIN TO RACHEL.

So be it. I will preserve your deeds, Highness !

The 25th April, 1855. JULES JANIN.

† Sic, in Le Figaro, at least.

WAIFS.

Mr W. A. Barrett, the eminent musical critic, has undertaken to superintend the musical section of the Exhibition of Ancient Printed Books, &c., for the Caxton Celebration at Stationers' Hall in June.

Wagner's Walküre is in active rehearsal at Vienna.

M. Capoul has accepted an engagement at St Petersburg.

Herr Wilhelmj is engaged for a tour in the United States.

The Swedish Ladies' Quartet are now giving concerts in Italy.

Beethoven's tomb in Währing Cemetery is in a dilapidated state.

Mr Wilford Morgan has returned to town from his concert tour.

Miss Edith Wynne is engaged for the forthcoming Leeds Festival in September.

The oratorio performed on Saturday at Mr Kuhe's Brighton Festival was the Creation.

Professor A. Kraus and his Son have organised an exhibition of musical instruments at Florence.

An appeal has been made in favour of a great granddaughter of Rameau's, who is in a state of indigence.

Mad. Lacombe Duprez, niece of the famous tenor, has been engaged for three years at the Paris Opéra-Comique.

The attitude of Russia towards Turkey is thus explained: the Czar believes Ottomans were made to be sat upon.

M. Amédée Pichot, chief editor of La Revue Britannique, died recently in Paris, aged eighty-one.

After witnessing the first performance of his opera, Die Maccabäer, M. Anton Rubinstein left for London, via Berlin.

The rehearsals of Schumann's Genoveva are being vigorously pushed forward at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin.

The Order of the Red Eagle, Fourth Class, has been conferred upon Herr Robert Radecke, Royal Prussian Chapelmaster.

M. Alfred Jaëll is making a tour through Switzerland. He has already appeared at Bâle, Berne, Neuchâtel, Geneva, &c.

Mdlle Moiset, who achieved a success at Venice, as Ophelia, shortly leaves France for Florence, to sustain the same character.

The rehearsals for the Musical Festival at Liège have commenced. The orchestra will number 140, and the chorus 800 performers.

M. Offenbach's La Foire Saint-Laurent, libretto by MM. H. Crémieux and Saint-Albin, has been produced at the Folies-Dramatiques.

Manfred, with Schumann's music, was to be performed for the first time in Berlin, at the Royal Operahouse to-day, Herr Kahle sustaining the chief part.

It is for five years, and not merely for the season of 1877-78, as erroneously stated, that M. Aimé Gros has been appointed manager of the Lyons Theatres, enjoying a grant from the Government.

The pupils of the Conservatory of Music at Boston (U.S.) gave their quarterly concert on the 6th inst., in Tremont Temple. The eleventh year of the institution began on the 15th.

Mr W. A. Barrett, who has, by fair right of distinction, been elected a member of the Royal Society of Literature, will lecture at the room in St Martin's Lane on literary and musical topics, early next June.

M. Obin, professor of lyric elocution at the Paris Conservatory, will return to the stage, for the purpose of sustaining the character of Father Joseph in M. Gounod's Cinq-Mars, at the Opéra-Comique.

The pianoforte manufactory of Messrs Squire & Sons, Stanhope Street, Euston Road, was burnt to the ground on Monday night. The property destroyed is estimated at between £15,000 and £16,000.

The Emperor and the Empress of Brazil lately visited the Conservatory of Music in Naples. They were received by the Governors, the Marchese di Laino Spinelli and Baron Genovese, and the Director, the Cavaliere Lauro Rossi.

Mdlle Aimée and her company have been singing at the New York Eagle Theatre. During her stay she will produce Les Dragons de Villars, Madame l'Archiduc. Among the latter will be La Belle Poule, La Reine Indigo, Le Châtel, and La Petite Mariée.

Messrs Simpson & Co., of Argyll Street, have issued a valuable little book, by Mr Jacob Bradford; entitled The Music Pupil's Register, designed for the use of schools and elementary pupils. It will be found of essential service to music teachers desirous of saving their own time and that of their pupils.

The following is the cast of M. J. Massenet's new work, Le Roi de Lahore, now in rehearsal at the Grand-Opéra, Paris: Sitâ, a young priestess, Mdlle de Reszké; Kaled, a slave, Mdlle Fouquet; Alim, King of Lahore, M. Salomon; Scindia, a usurper, M. Lasalle; Timour, the Grand Priest, M. Boudouresque; Indra, a god, M. Menu; a chief, M. Auguez.

The interdict against female singers in churches has been removed in Paris. Sixty pupils of the Conservatory sang in the Requiem recently celebrated for Habeneck at the Trinity.

The company with which Sig. Gardini intends giving Italian operatic performances, to begin next month, in Berlin, will comprise among its members Mdle Etelka Gerster, Signori Marini, Mendioroz, and Bagagiolo. Sig. Bevigiani is to be conductor.

A lawyer, hailing from Galesburg, Illinois, was asked by a lady in a railway car to get her a cup of coffee. He obeyed her request with alacrity, paid ten cents for the coffee, charged the lady fifteen cents, and pocketed five cents as his commission on the transaction.

Cagliostro, the celebrated French prestidigitateur and necromancer (just arrived from New York), will make his first appearance in his "Cataclysm of Mysteries" at the Crystal Palace next Tuesday. "Cagliostro is a great conjuror and a very handsome gentleman."—American Papers.

Mad. Adelina Patti will proceed from St Petersburg to Vienna, where the Italian operatic season commences on the 3rd March and terminates on the 4th May. In addition to Mad. Patti, the company includes Mad. Trebelli, Signori Nicolini and Masini, tenors; Sig. Strozzi, barytone; and Signori Zucchini and Ciampi, buffos.

"It does certainly seem," observed an American Editor, during the political struggle lately going on in the United States, "as if woman was placed rather in the background. But though she cannot vote or appear in processions, she can cut the wood and bring up the coal, and thus leave the men more time to talk over matters."

Mr Shakespeare's singing in the Messiah at the Royal Albert Hall, on Ash Wednesday, is thus spoken of by The Standard:—"Mr Shakespeare, upon whom the whole of the tenor music devolved, acquitted himself ably of his arduous task. He phrases like a true artist and sings with musicianly feeling. Mr Shakespeare's greatest success was in the air 'Behold and see,' rendered in perfect taste, and with much power of emotional expression."

An International and Retrospective Musical Exposition will be held at Bologna in 1878. The Minister of Public Instruction has promised the support of the government and a grant of money. Sig. Antonio Zanolini, member of the Italian Senate, has been appointed chairman of the committee. It is to be regretted that this Exposition will be simultaneous with Paris, one section of which is exclusively reserved for ancient musical instruments.

Two orchestral concerts are announced to take place next week, conducted by Mr Frederic Archer, at Sheffield. Mr Sims Reeves, Signor Foli, and Mdme Patey are to be the principal vocalists; Mr Carrodus, leader; and Mr Archer, solo organist and pianist. Among other "classical" things, Symphonies by Beethoven and Mendelssohn are to be given, as well as Sterndale Bennett's overture The Naiades, and his pianoforte concerto in F minor. The proceeds of the undertaking are to be given to local Charities.

Mad. Nilsson, intended to sing at Geneva, but has changed her mind, and the city on the lake will not hear her. The following, we are told, is the reason. The Theatre is under the superintendence of a Committee of exceedingly pious and proper persons, who insisted, before giving their permission for the lady to appear, that Faust should not be one of the operas played, and that the costumes worn by the lady should be submitted to the Committee for approbation. Mad. Nilsson determined not to visit Geneva.

The ladies of Paris have followed the example set by Mad. MacMahon, for the purpose of aiding the Charity Ball at the New Operahouse on the 27th inst. One hundred of them will figure as patronesses. An immense awning will cover the steps in front of the building so that the leaders of fashion will be able to descend from their carriages without fear of inconvenience from wet. Herr Johann Strauss has offered his services gratuitously, which, as his terms are several thousand francs a night, means that he is one of the most liberal subscribers to the ball.

Mr Burnand's Black-Eyed Susan, the most popular of modern burlesques, has been revived at the Royal Aquarium Theatre, and is now given every evening, with the old farce of Mr and Mrs White for a lever de rideau. Mr F. Dewar resumes his original part of Captain Crosstree, of which he gives an admirably comic exposition. Miss Maggie Brennan plays with much vivacity the part of Susan, closely associated with the fame of Miss M. Oliver. Other rôles, which are well supported, are the William of Miss Bessie Bonehill, Mr Fawn's Dame Hatley, Miss Nelly Harris's Dolly Mayflower, and the Shaun of Miss N. Phillips. The whole is mounted with signal care, and forms a highly attractive entertainment.

A clergyman in Connecticut lately desired to call the attention of his congregation to the fact that, as it was the last Sunday in the month, he would administer the rite of Baptism to children. Previously to entering the pulpit, he received from one of the Elders, who, by the way, was exceedingly deaf, an intimation to the effect that, as the children would be present in the afternoon, and he (the Elder) had the new Sunday School books ready for distribution, they would be there for all who wished to purchase them. After the service, the clergyman began the notice of Baptismal service thus: "All of those having children whom they desire to have baptised, will bring them this afternoon." At this point, the deaf Elder, hearing the mention of children, supposed it was something in reference to his books. Under this impression, he rose and said: "And all of those having none and desiring them will be supplied by me for the sum of twenty-five cents."

About two promising pupils of Madame Sainton-Dolby at Kuhe's Brighton Festival, the correspondent of the Daily Telegraph speaks as follows:—

"The vocalists were Miss Julia Wigan and Miss Adela Vernon, two of the most promising among the sopranos now making their way to the front. Since it is as difficult to sing well Mozart's sentimental arias as to play perfectly his pianoforte sonatas, Miss Wigan must be congratulated upon success with 'Porgi amor.' But her dashing execution of 'Erani involami' produced a greater effect upon the audience, who quickly appreciated excellence destined ere long to obtain wider acknowledgment. Miss Vernon had only one song—Costa's 'Dall' Aiallo'—but in that she made her mark, confirming the good impression created last year, showing that the interval had been employed to acquire greater command over somewhat exceptional means. Mr Kuhe deserves to be thanked for giving young artists such as these ladies an opportunity of showing what they can do."

It is the boast of England that no musical composer, whatever his nationality, is denied a fair hearing; but there is danger that in the multitude of claimants there is some chance of native talent being thrown in the shade. No higher branch of composition can be found than that which contributes to the elevation of cathedral service, and amongst all who have worked in this direction not one is worthier honour than Henry Purcell. With the view of saving his sacred compositions from being thrust aside—especially those anthems which for nearly 200 years have been the glory of church music in its highest office—the Liverpool Sacred Harmonic and Purcell Society was instituted. The society already numbers over fifty members, the patronage embracing names well known in connection with music generally, and the Purcell revival scheme is fortunate in having as its president Mr W. L. Rushton, who has shown much enthusiasm in the work.

EDINBURGH ORCHESTRAL FESTIVAL.—The third and last of our great orchestral concerts was given on Tuesday night, the 13th inst., to a crowded audience. This "Reid" Concert of 1877 is the twelfth given under the direction of our present Professor of Music, and during twelve years we have seen, thanks to Sir Herbert Oakeley's energy, the Reid Commemoration Concert made the nucleus of an orchestral festival at which music of the highest class, with the best performers, is given. Mendelssohn's overture to the Midsummer Night's Dream immediately followed the Reid music. The concerto for piano and orchestra, the only composition of the kind written by Schumann, was perfect from beginning to end, the most prominent feature being the playing of Mr Hallé. We had also a fine performance of Beethoven's Symphony in C minor conducted by Mr Hallé. Sir Herbert Oakeley's "Edinburgh" March made a very fitting conclusion to the festival. Mdle Thekla Friedländer gave Weber's "Glöcklein im Thale," the "Aria di Giovannini," by Bach, and "Ask me no more," by Sir Herbert Oakeley. Signor Foli sang Handel's "Revenge, Timotheus cries," and Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers."—Edinburgh Courant.

MR LAMBORN COCK'S SALE OF COPYRIGHTS.—This important sale, which has just taken place under the direction of Messrs Puttick & Simpson, of Leicester Square, has produced a grand total of £8,254 3s. 2d., the catalogue comprising 379 lots only. The competition was brisk throughout, and the prices ruled high, as will be seen from the subjoined list, showing the result of the principal items. Lot 34, Beethoven's Works, edited by Sir Sterndale Bennett, £250 15s. 3d. (Ashdown & Parry). Lots 40 and 41, Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Works, £536 8s. 6d. (J. Williams). Lot 75, Sir J. Benedict's Undine, £73 18s. 9d. (Cock). Lot 117, Pinsuti, Six Two-part Songs, £176 8s. (Novello). Lot 135, Modern Part-songs for Mixed Voices, £177 7s. 6d. (Lamborn Cock). Lots 215, 216, and 217, Bennett's First, Second, and Third Concertos, £67 6s. 4d. (A. Mills). Lots 218 and 219, Bennett's Fourth Concerto, and his Preludes and Lessons, Op. 33, £329 9s. (Ashdown & Parry). Lot 223, ditto, Three Diversions, Op. 17, £15 (ditto). Lots 225 and 226, ditto, Overtures, "Waldnymph" and "Naiades," £55 5s. 6d. (Augener). Lot 227, Six Songs, Op. 23, and Six Songs, Op. 35, £597 6s. (Novello). Lot 228, One hundred and twelve Chamber Trios, principally for Female voices, £800 (Ashdown & Parry).

Lot 247, Sir M. Costa's Naaman, £710 6s. 6d. (J. Williams). Lot 255, Hatton's "Song should breathe," £66 (Ashdown). Lot 269, Pinsuti, "Water Lily's Answer," £50 15s. (Cox). Lot 271, ditto, "Dreams, only dreams," £33 (Metzler). Lot 273, ditto, "By-and-by," £33 (Cox). Lot 276, ditto, "The Falling Star," £43 10s. (Cox). Lot 277, ditto, "Guardian Angels," £31 10s. (ditto). Lot 278, ditto, Six Songs, £150 (A. Mills). Lot 279, ditto, "Sleep in Peace," £32 16s. (Cox). Lot 280, ditto, "Listening to the Singer," £39 (Metzler). Lot 310, Costa (Sir M.), "Ecco quel fiero istante," £37 (A. Mills). Lot 311, Donizetti, "La dea del Lago," £22 10s. (ditto). Lot 321, Lillo, "La Desolazione," £110 5s. (Ashdown). Lot 322, Marras, "Sio fossi un Angelo del Paradiso," £24 3s. (ditto). Lot 335, Thomas (J.), "Llewellyn," £156 10s. (Thomas). Lot 336, Vol. 4 of Welsh Melodies, £212 (ditto). Lot 348, Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, £1,875 (Novello).

ENGLISH GLEE WRITERS.—An interesting lecture on "English Glee Writers" was delivered at the London Institution on Friday night, the 16th inst., by Mr W. A. Barrett, Mus. Doc., Oxon., before a crowded auditory. The lecture was illustrated with musical examples, contributed by a very efficient choir, including, amongst others, Mr Suter, Mr Coates, Mr Winn, and Mr Lewis Thomas. In opening his address Mr Barrett gave a careful and concise account of the origin of the word glee, which, in its musical connection, does not necessarily imply anything joyous, the music partaking of the nature of the words, whether their tendency be grave or gay. The title in all probability was handed down from the ancient English glee-men—bodies of men associated both for the performance of musical and other entertainments, dancing, tumbling, and "clowning" being included in their category. These glee-men knew nothing of the glee, and Mr Barrett conjectured that their specific title meant combination; and as their principal doings were musical the word "glee" was handed down with a new meaning—that of harmony in musical parts. The glee sprang from the madrigal, upon the decadence of the latter. "Sumer is icumen in" (A.D. 1250), a six-men's song, or madrigal in six parts, the earliest example of contrapuntal writing for voices, copied from one of the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum, is the first instance of written English music, as well as the first evidence of fugue, catch, or canon, and is at least a hundred years, if not a couple of centuries, before any other composition of the kind. The effect of this primitive work is far from unpleasing to the ear, although rules now indispensable in the art of part-writing are infringed—the different voices, for instance, constantly coming in in consecutive fifths and octaves. The glee was essentially of home growth, and its characteristics were the employment of single voices to each part in the score and a greater independence of movement. Whereas the madrigal is constructed in one movement without break or alteration of rhythm, the glee is subdivided into as many sections as the composer deems suitable to the changing nature of the lyrics. Examples were given of glees by Thomas Weelkes (1578-1614) and Orlando Gibbons (1583-1625) showing the transitory state of this form of writing, the songs partaking of the nature both of madrigal and glee. The first published glee was the "Turn, Amaryllis," of Thomas Brewer (1609-1676); but after this the title gained general acceptance. Dr Arne did much to foster the taste, but it was in the days of his successor, Samuel Webbe (1740-1816), that the glee was at its height. Webbe wrote 107 glees, besides other works, while his contemporaries ran him pretty close. Mr Barrett proceeded to trace the origin of glee clubs, and to pursue the development of the glee through its successive stages, instanced by excerpts from John Stafford Smith (1750-1836), Reginald Spofforth (1770-1827), Dr Callcott (1756-1821), Stephens (1769-1837), and William Horsley (1774-1858), down to Sir Henry Bishop, Thomas Attwood, Pearsall, and Sir John Goss, all of whom may be included amongst composers of the present century. The lecture was listened to with the greatest interest.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE"

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 873 and 1499. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

MOMENTS HEUREUX. Etude pour le Violon (sans Accompagnement) ou Piano seul, Composée, et dédiée à son Maître, M^{ons}. PROSPER SAINTON, par F. J. AMOR (de Salisbury, en Angleterre). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TWO SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

"THE TEST." Words by ADA 4s

"A GENTLE WORD." Words by S. CHAMPION 4s

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE HUNTER. Song. The Words by W. C. BRYANT. The Music by E. REYLOFF. (Sung with great success by Mr G. H. SNAZELLE.) Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Sung by Mr EDWARD LLOYD, and Just Published.

THE RINGLET. Song. Poetry by TENNYSON (by permission). Music by DESMOND L. RYAN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW EDITIONS.

"LA GAVOTTE DE VESTRIS." Arrangée pour piano... .. 3s

"LE RAJAH DE MYSORE." Fantaisie sur l'opéra de O. Lecocq 4s.

Par ALPHONSE LACOMBE.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GAVOTTE (in G). For the Pianoforte. By W. H. MONTGOMERY. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Dedicated to the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music.

SIX STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

BY
IGNACE GIBSONE.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-------------------------------|
| No. 1. "THE SWALLOW." | No. 4. "WHITHER SHALL I FLY?" |
| " 2. "THE FOUNTAIN." | " 5. "BOOKED TO SLEEP." |
| " 3. "SPINNLED." | " 6. "THE RESTLESS SEA." |

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

ARDITI'S New Ballad, "TRUE." The Poetry by MARIA X. HAYES. Sung by Mdle HELENE ARMIT, at the Promenade Concerts, Royal Italian Opera. Composed by LUIGI ARDITI. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, composed by Signor ARDITI:—

THE PAGE'S SONG, sung by Mdle Blanchi, Mdle Alwina Valleria, and Mdle José Sherrington. (Poetry by Maria X. Hayes.) ... 4s.

LYNCONTRO VALSE, sung by Mdme Adelina Patti 4s.

A KISS FOR YOUR THOUGHT, sung by Mdle Valleria 4s.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	- - - - 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	- - - - 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	- - - - 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	- - - - 3 0
RINK GALOP	- - - - 4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	- - - - 4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	- - - - 4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	- - - - 3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	- - - - 4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	- - - - 4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	- - - - 4 0
WEST-END POLKA	- - - - 3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	- - - - 3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	- - - - 3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	- - - - 3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	- - - - 3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	- - - - 3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE	- - - - 4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	- - - - 4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	- - - - 3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	- - - - 4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	- - - - 3 0
HARMONIUM	- - - - 3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	- - - - 3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	- - - - 4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2S. 6D. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
OVERTURE	- - - - 3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	- - - 3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	- - - 3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	- - - 2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	- - - 4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	- - - 4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	- - - 3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st ACT, "I'm not the Baron"	- - - 3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night"	- - - 3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	- - - 3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring"	- - - 4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	- - - 3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd ACT, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	- - - 4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	- - - 3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	a. d.
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	5 0
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. Kiko	2 6
	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC.

PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

BOOSEY & CO.'S

NEW EDITION OF

The Passion

(ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW).

THE PROSE TAKEN LITERALLY FROM THE GOSPEL, AND THE VERSE TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN

BY

JOHN OXENFORD.

THE MUSIC EDITED BY

J. PITTMAN.

PRICE 1s. 6d. CLOTH, GILT EDGES, 3s.

ALSO, PUBLISHED SEPARATELY, THE MUSIC (IN FULL SCORE) OF

THE CORALES,

ACCOMPANIED BY THE WHOLE OF THE TEXT, FORMING A COMPLETE HANDY BOOK FOR THE USE OF THE CONGREGATION.

PRICE 6d. IN PAPER. 1s. CLOTH GILT.

London: BOOSEY & Co., 293, Regent Street, W.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 9.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT. THIS DAY. The Programme will include:—Concerto in G, for string orchestra (J. S. Bach), first time in England; Serenade and Allegro Gioioso, for pianoforte and orchestra, Op. 43 (Mendelssohn); Symphony, No. 8, in F (Beethoven); Aria, "Mia speranza adorata" (Mozart), first time at these Concerts; Overture, Inez de Castro (Alfred Holmes). Vocalists—Miss Robertson (her first appearance at these Concerts), Mr Edward Lloyd. Solo Pianist—Miss Josephine Lawrence (her first appearance at these Concerts). Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Reserved Numbered Stalls, in Area and Gallery, Half-a-Crown; Area or Gallery Seats (unnumbered), One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL. Friday, June 22, Public Rehearsal; Monday, June 25, Messiah; Wednesday, June 27, Selection; Friday, June 29, Israel in Egypt. Full particulars will shortly be published.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT has the honour to announce that her FOURTH MATINEE MUSICALE will take place (by kind permission) at 59, LOWNDES SQUARE, Belgravia, on SATURDAY, March 24th, at Three o'clock. Vocalists—Mme Louise Gage, Mme Enriquez, and Signor Garcia. Violoncello—Herr Schubert. Pianoforte—Miss Lillie Albrecht. Röntgen's Sonate, for piano and violoncello, will be performed (for the second time in England), the Andante con moto and Allegro vivace, by Miss Lillie Albrecht and Herr Schubert, and the Piano Solo will consist of: Fugue in E minor, ending with Grand Choral, Op. 35 (Mendelssohn); Studies from Book 25, No. 20 (for Sixths), and 21, Allegro non tanto, and Scherzo in B flat minor, prestissimo con fuoco, Op. 31 (Chopin); Rigoletto (Liszt); Study for Chords in E sharp major (Thalberg); and Finale (by desire) "The Blue Bells"—Miss Lillie Albrecht. Conductor—Mr CHARLES E. STUPPENS. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; Family Tickets (to admit three) and Programmes at Messrs Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, and of Miss LILLIE ALBRECHT, 38, Oakley Square, N.W.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS, St James's Hall, at Eight o'clock. The programme on Wednesday next will include the following popular songs: "Robin Redbreast," "Comin' through the rye," and "A little mountain lad"—Mme Sherrington; "The Lost Chord" and "Sweet and Low" (Wallace)—Mme Antoinette Sterling; "My love has gone a sailing," "By the sad sea waves," and "Barbara Allen"—Miss Helen D'Alton; "I cannot say goodbye" and "Tom Bowling"—Mr Sims Reeves; "Phyllis is my only joy," "Elly Mavourneen," and "Why?"—Mr Edward Lloyd; "Nancy Lee," "The Stirrup Cup," and "Leather Bottel"—Mr Maybrick. Mme Arabella Goddard will perform "La Truite," by Stephen Heller, and Gottschalk's celebrated "Midnight March." The London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr Fred. Walker, Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 4s. and 2s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets of Austin, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street.

"KILLARNEY."

MDME ALICE BARTH will sing BALFE's admired Ballad, "KILLARNEY," at the Irish Ballad Concert, at St James's Hall, Mar. 17.

BENEDICT'S ANDANTE, AND CHOPIN'S POSTHUMOUS MAZURKA.

MRS CLIPPINGDALE, MDME MATILDE BAXTER, and Mr WM. GANZ will play the admired Arrangement by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT of his ANDANTE and CHOPIN's Posthumous MAZURKA, for four performers on two grand pianofortes, on April 3, at Langham Hall.

"THE NAIADES."

MADAME ALIDA GASSIER will sing WELLINGTON GUERREY's Waltz-Aria, "THE NAIADES" and MARIANI's Bolero, "I AM AN ARAB MAID," at Langham Hall, on April the 3rd next.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE PERREN will sing ASCHER's popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on the 3rd of April, at Langham Hall.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his very popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," at Chatham, March 13.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY.—President—SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Eleventh Season, 1877. The Next MEETING for TRIAL of New COMPOSITIONS will take place on WEDNESDAY, 14th March; the Next SOIREE, WEDNESDAY, 21st March, and the Next CONCERT, WEDNESDAY, 11th April (Schumann's Compositions forming first part of programme). The Soirées and Concerts of the Society and Branches afford excellent opportunities for young rising Artists to make their debut, and for Composers to have their works introduced. Full Prospectus on application by letter, to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., care of Messrs D. DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

LANGHAM HALL, 43, GREAT PORTLAND STREET.—In Aid of Mrs Weldon's Orphanage, MONDAY Evening, April 9, 1877, at Eight p.m. Mr Charles K. Salaman in the Chair. MRS WELDON'S THIRTY-SECOND SOCIAL EVENING. "The Two Paths; or, Conservation and Restoration." Mr Charles Lunn will deliver a Lecture on the above, illustrated by the Children from Mrs Weldon's Orphanage. Reserved seats, 5s.; unreserved, 2s. 6d. Admission, One Shilling.

* This Essay, of which Mr Charles Lunn has presented the Copyright to the Orphanage, will be published, with additional remarks and an account of the Soirée by the MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, 39, Great Marlborough Street, Regent Street, London. Price One Shilling.

TO MUSICAL SOCIETIES.

TO be SOLD, by PRIVATE TREATY, the valuable LIBRARY of the LIVERPOOL MUSICAL SOCIETY, consisting of Full Band and Vocal Parts for LARGE CHORUS of the Works as follows:—"Messiah," "Judas," "Joshua," "Israel in Egypt," "Samson," "Acts and Galates," "Theodora," "Creation," "Stabat Mater," "Elijah," "St Paul," "95th Psalm," "Hear my Prayer," "Lauda Sion," "Last Judgment," "Ancient Mariner," "Prodigal Son," Locke's "Maobeth," and sundry Part Songs, &c. Catalogues on application to J. HAWKINS, Hon. Sec., 39, Belmont Road, Liverpool.

MR ARTHUR SHELLEY (ARTURO GARDA), after several years' career in Italy, has accepted an Engagement as FIRST TENOR, Imperial Italian Opera Company, and makes his Debut at the Gaiety Theatre, Glasgow, in the Traviata, on Tuesday, 20th inst. Letters respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Italian or English Opera, Oratorio, or Concerts—Gaiety Theatre, Glasgow.

MR SHAKESPEARE requests that all Communications concerning ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., be addressed —6, Howick Place, Victoria Street, S.W.

MDME ENRIQUEZ begs that all communications be addressed to her at No. 5, OAKLEY SQUARE, N.W.

MR WILFORD MORGAN requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to his residence, 18, Surrey Street, W.C.

MR GERARD COVENTRY (Tenor), having returned to Town from his Provincial Tour, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Concerts. Address—Care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Dépôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists.

25, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.

Price List free on application.

THE MONTHLY MUSICAL RECORD.—The cheapest High-class Paper on Musio. Yearly Subscription, 2s. 6d. post-free. Years 1871 to 1876 (vols. 1 to 6) bound, each net 3s. "Intelligible and dispassionate criticisms and reviews, analyses of interesting compositions, and a like determination to discountenance the fictitious either in art or its practice; these are the qualifications of the paper."—Morning Post. AUGENER & Co., 86, Newgate Street, and 31, Regent Street.

"VOLE MON OISEAU."

PENSÉE FUGITIVE POUR PIANO.

Par IGNACE GIBSONE.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Third Edition.

A FIRST BOOK ON THE

THEORY OF MUSIC.

BY LOUISA GIBSON.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE, MARCHIONESS OF LORNE.

Adopted in the South London Musical Training College, and in various High Schools in London and the Provinces.

LONDON:

WEEKES & CO.; NOVELLO & CO.; WHITTAKER & CO.
AND OF THE AUTHOR, LEATON TERRACE, PLYMOUTH.

Price, boards, 3s.; stiff paper, 2s.; postage, 2d.

TO AMATEUR FLAUTISTS AND OTHERS.

A GENTLEMAN (having no further use for them) wishes to dispose of a SILVER FLUTE, by RUDALL, CARTE & Co., "1867 Patent," with D and D sharp Shake Keys, also the key recommended by Mr Collard. The Flute, in case, complete, cost 32 Guineas. Also an 18-carat gold head, fitting the above Flute, which cost 30 Guineas. To be sold Bargains, either separately or together. Address—"A. P." 3, Promenade Terrace, Cheltenham.

THE GUITAR.—M^{me} SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant instrument, is in town for the Season. For Lessons and Concerts address—22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

SIMPSON & CO.'S

IMPROVED HARMONIUMS.

FROM £5 5s. Five Octaves. Best make. Warranted. Nothing BETTER OR CHEAPER made. Lists post free. Trade supplied.

TO COMPOSERS wishing to PUBLISH.—Music Engraved, Printed, and Published in the best style at unusually low prices. Estimates free on receipt of MS. SIMPSON & Co., 33, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL."

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 6s., post-free.

No. 8, St Andrew's Terrace, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

New Edition.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Sung by M^{me} CHRISTINE NISSEN at her Concert in St James's Hall. The Music by J. W. DAVISON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVISON. Sung by M^{lle} ELEANOR THALBERG at the Floral Hall Concerts (Royal Italian Opera). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVISON. Sung by M^{lle} SOPHIE LOWE at the Monday Popular Concerts. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.—All the new and beautiful Songs, Ballads, &c., sung by this distinguished company of Vocalists are now published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess, from whom they may be obtained by the Music-trade and the public. Permission to sing any of the Songs contained in Messrs Moore and Burgess's repertoire is always freely accorded on application to the Manager. It is not necessary to obtain a licence to sing these songs at private meetings and soirées.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SONGS and BALLADS of the day are those sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS at St JAMES'S HALL. The words of all these songs are written by the most eminent authors, and the music composed by the most celebrated musicians of the age, including Henry S. Leigh, E. L. Blanchard, Frank Visetelly, Charles Dunphie, J. E. Thomas, W. Meyer Lutz, John Hobson, &c.

MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.

The following new and charming Songs and Ballads are just published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess:—

Riding in a Pullman car.
Alone.
Come where the tangled beeches grow.
My Darling's Last Smile.
Sad sounds the harp now.
Friendship, Love, and Wine.
Let each speak of the world as he finds it.
Sing me the songs that I loved long ago.
The Piquet.

The Wild, White Roe.
A boatman's life for me.
My Lily.
Sing, dearest, sing.
Many weary years ago.
Return of the Exile.
Glory or the Grave.
The Alpine Hunter.
Heavenly Voices.
Gentle Flowers.
The Buckles on her Shoes.
The Flight of the Birds.

May be ordered through any Music-seller, or obtained direct from the Publishers, St James's Hall, post free, One and Sixpence.

Post free, One and Sixpence.

SING ME THE SONGS THAT I LOVED LONG AGO.

Composed by W. MEYER LUTZ. One of the most beautiful and tuneful Ballads introduced by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS for some time past. Now being sung with immense success at St JAMES'S HALL. Can be ordered through any Music-seller; or obtained from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FLIGHT OF THE BIRDS.—An entirely new and charming Ballad. Words written by HENRY S. LEIGH, Esq. Suitable for Alto, Tenor, or Soprano voices. Now being sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS, at St JAMES'S HALL, with extraordinary success. Can be ordered of all Music-sellers; or obtained direct from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FOLLOWING NEW and BEAUTIFUL SONGS are being sung at St JAMES'S HALL with marked success:—"Sing me the songs that I loved long ago," "The Flight of the Birds," "The Piquet," and "Sing, dearest, sing." The greatest successes ever achieved by the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. Can be ordered through all Music-sellers; and of the Publishers, Messrs Moore and Burgess, St James's Hall. Post free, 1s. 6d.

ASSIS SUR LA VERTE COLLINE. ("THE WISH.")

Paroles et Musique de M. WHITE. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Sung by Mr EDWARD LLOYD, and Just Published.

THE RINGLET. Song. Poetry by TENNYSON (by permission). Music by DESMOND L. RYAN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW EDITIONS.

"LA GAVOTTE DE VESTRIS." Arrange pour piano... 3s.
"LE RAJAH DE MYSORE." Fantaisie sur l'opéra de G. Lecocq... 4s.

Par ALPHONSE LACOMBE.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GAVOTTE (in G). For the Pianoforte. By W. H. MONTGOMERY. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Dedicated to the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music.

SIX STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

BY IGNACE GIBSONE.

No. 1. "THE SWALLOW." No. 4. "WHITHER SHALL I FLY?"
" 2. "THE FOUNTAIN." " 5. "ROCKED TO SLEEP."
" 3. "SPINNIED." " 6. "THE RESTLESS SEA."

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

ARDITI'S New Ballad, "TRUE." The Poetry by MARIA X. HAYES. Sung by M^{lle} HELENE ARNIM, at the Promenade Concerts, Royal Italian Opera. Composed by LUIGI ARDITI. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, composed by Signor ARDITI:—

THE PAGE'S SONG, sung by M^{lle} Bianchi, M^{lle} Alvina Valleria, and M^{lle} José Sherrington. (Poetry by Maria X. Hayes.) 4s.

L'INCONTRO VALSE, sung by M^{me} Adelina Patti... 4s.

A KISS FOR YOUR THOUGHT, sung by M^{lle} Valleria... 4s.

MR BACHE'S CONCERT.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

In nothing did the lively fancy of that worthy gentleman and pattern of chivalry, Don Quixote de la Mancha, appear more striking than in the idea he had formed of the Senora Dulcinea del Toboso. Her eyes to him were stars of heaven, her lips were crimson flowers, and her every gesture spoke dignity and love. Whereas, others less gifted with imaginativeness said that she squinted and had freckles; her immediate atmosphere being, moreover, charged not with ambrosial perfumes, but the odour of garlic. We are, of course, entitled to find amusement in the poor Don's delusion, nevertheless let us not forget that few escape the same sort of craziness in one form or another. Most men have their Dulcineas—idols whose ugliness the fervour of worship transforms into beauty, and whose very faults are held up as proofs of perfection. Here is Mr Walter Bache, for example, enamoured of Abbé Liszt, not so much in the fashion natural to a disciple, but after the manner of a Quixote. If devotion, self-sacrifice, and unhesitating faith mean anything at all, the Knight of La Mancha never worshipped the Lady of Toboso with a more complete absorption of every faculty of his nature than Mr Bache shows in his worship of Liszt. Of course we do not push the parallel far between Dulcinea and the Abbé. Cervantes may have unduly decried her, but we know him as, at least, a possible inspirer of chivalric feeling—as a man of high mark and renown, of strong individuality and manifest genius, though, according to some, wrong in the artistic principles which guide his action. At all events, the champion of Liszt in England is Mr Bache, with whom the Abbé's opponents may at any time be called upon to reckon. We ourselves, having characterised a certain meddling of Liszt with Weber according to the strength of our convictions thereon, speedily heard the rattle of Rosinante's hoofs, and the quicker clatter of Dapple—for never yet was a Quixote without a donkey in his train. Even as the Don charged the huge four-armed giants, so did Mr Bache, unmindful of odds, gird at us and relieve his feelings, which was all that came of the action, because nobody can be angry with an amiable enthusiast. We hold, indeed, that the spectacle of enthusiasm at a time of pervading flabbiness in matters of opinion is adapted to work for good. Wherefore let us hope that the day may be far distant when Mr Bache will lay aside his weapons, and send Rosinante out to grass.

In preparing for the concert which took place in St. James's Hall on Tuesday night—his thirteenth annual assertion of Liszt's claims—Mr. Bache exercised considerable discretion. The occasion was, in its very nature, an attack upon the system of law and order which regulates the musical world, and he did well, therefore, to look around for allies. Men the most masterful have done the same. When Jehu drove into the court of Ahab's Palace and Jezebel mocked him, even that hard-hitting revolutionist did not disdain the help of the eunuchs who threw her out of the window. In Mr Bache's case, the eunuchs were represented by Mr Edward Dannreuther and Mr Richard Wagner, who came forward each armed with a pamphlet. Mr Dannreuther's weapon—originally flourished in the pages of the extinct journal, Concordia, but re-sharpened for the occasion—defended meddling with the masters; while that of Wagner was brandished in the face of everybody unable to see the merits of Liszt's Symphonic Poems. There was need for both, but especially for the first, inasmuch as Mr Bache's programme opened with Herr Klindworth's version of Chopin's second pianoforte concerto, in which is presented a glaring instance of the artistic immorality we are asked to approve. Here, be it observed, is no question of one musician technically improving the work of another. We are quite ready to grant, if asked to do so, that the Klindworth score is, as such, a better score than that of Chopin; and, indeed, it would be absurd to contend that interference with the work of a dead master is necessarily to its disadvantage from a structural point of view. Mr Dannreuther clearly sees that this is not the matter at issue, and his efforts are, therefore, mainly directed to establish the legality and morality of such interference. In this task he has, we believe, entirely failed—albeit he writes learnedly, heads his pamphlet with a quotation from Goethe, talks of Kant's critical philosophy in the first line, and introduces Schopenhauer in the penultimate paragraph. We shall not follow his argument, since the question is not so much one for dialectics as for the moral sense. No manner or quantity of reasoning can justify A. in laying hands upon the property of B., which he had no share in creating, and to which he has no legal right. A dead master's work is as much his property as the reputation it helped to make; nay, the style and method of it are his. Wherefore, till somebody proves that theft is a virtue we must hold that whoever interferes is a trespasser, if not worse. Incidentally, however, we may refer to the manner in which Mr Dannreuther answers an objection drawn from one of the sister arts. Meddlers with the masters are often warned that were any daring hand to alter a chef-d'œuvre of painting according to certain ideas of what the artist might, could, would, or should have done under some conceivable circumstances, no punishment would be considered too great. To this Mr Dannreuther replies by urging that the parallel is faulty, since the "original sketch, copy, edition, whatever it may be, of a piece of music, is not destroyed by a masterly transcription or re-instrumentation." If we say that the touched-up work is represented by an amended copy of a picture, Mr Dannreuther will be satisfied. But we cannot say anything of the kind, because in the one case the master's own production is offered in an altered form; in the other, an imitation of the master by some one else. Thus the concerto played on Tuesday night was a genuine Chopin, re-coloured by Klindworth. What would be said to a genuine Claude, re-touched even by Millais? Mr Dannreuther further sets up a comparison between the meddlers and the masters on the one hand, and the painters and their pupils on the other, remarking that in the old ateliers it was common for great artists to design a picture which others filled in. Here, too, the parallel fails. It is one thing for a subordinate to work under the master's eye, having his sanction and encouragement, and quite another to do to the production of a man now dead that which, when living, he never imagined and possibly would never have approved. As to the particular case of Chopin's Concerto, however much we admire Klindworth's scoring per se, we cannot possibly accept it, so much do the effects produced outrage the ideal of Chopin which acquaintance with his works has formed. Even the defects of a master are characteristic, and, as "the style is the man," we would rather have his works with all their faults than learn, at his expense, how some one else would have produced them.

As Mr Bache brought forward on Tuesday night two of Liszt's symphonic poems—Maseppa and "Les Preludes"—the occasion was opportune for a translation by Dr Hueffer of the letter, addressed to a couple of initials, in which Wagner vindicates their form and character. Dr Hueffer need not have taken the trouble to apologise for the master's championship of his father-in-law, because the world is only interested in its cogency, not in its origin, even though "the friendship between these two remarkable men is a beautiful phenomenon." All friendship is beautiful, but we trust it is nowhere phenomenal, especially among members of the same family. Wagner's affection for Liszt, anyhow, is no reason why we should be predisposed to accept his arguments in re the Symphonic Poems. We regret that it is out of our power here and now to discuss the Bayreuth master's letter as it deserves. To one point only can we refer; namely, the plea in favour of Liszt's form. After showing that orthodox form is really a development of that of the dance, Wagner asks, "Whether the march or the dance, with all the ideas connected with these actions, is a more dignified motive of formal development than, for instance, the conception of the characteristic features of the deeds and sufferings of Orpheus, Prometheus, &c." He further demands "whether it is not more noble and more liberating for it (music) to adopt this form from the conception of the Orpheus or Prometheus motive than from the dance or march?" Without entering into any comparisons, it seems to us that there is but one possible answer to the main query—an answer in the affirmative. To advocate finally in musical form would be as absurd as to apply it to means of locomotion. Music existed before, and is independent of its accented methods, just as language was language prior to the appearance of the first manual of grammar. No one should be blamed, therefore, for exercising an undoubted right, and trying to develop new forms. Rather should the attempt be encouraged, even by those who are most disposed to judge the results with severity. The form of Liszt's Symphonic Poems has consequently an unassailable raison d'être till its failure is demonstrated. He must be a bold man who would declare that failure upon no more than a superficial knowledge of the works. The test is, are these tone-pictures suggestive to a candid mind of the scenes and events they illustrate? If so, their end is gained, their form justified, and an abiding right to be established. Whether they represent the highest development of art is a distinct question, not challenged, and therefore not to be entertained. The actual merit of the works played last Tuesday night must, of course, be judged in its highest form, by sensuous impressions, and we are bound to admit that along with much that gave cause for wonder was much that excited the imagination and touched the heart. If only for the sake of the possibility thus opened up, let us give this new thing fair play. We should be ready to welcome any real art development, no matter whence it come, and equally slow to condemn from reasons which may spring from nothing more serious than unfamiliarity. To use the words of Mr Dannreuther: "Let us examine, carefully and impartially, that which is supposed to run athwart of pseudo-tradition; let us take care not to ignore that which is accomplished on other and better than traditional grounds, for fear lest men might some day, in Schopenhauer's phrase, be tempted 'to derive ignorance from ignoring.'" Respecting Liszt's concerto in A major, which was also presented by Mr Bache, we have before spoken, and can only repeat that, as "pure" music it is a woeful failure. Liszt seems to require the stimulus of a "poetic basis," without which he degenerates into incoherence or ugliness. A course of such works would reduce even a fanatic for the art to the condition of Othello, who liked not "music that may be heard." We have only to add that all the pianoforte solos were played by Mr Bache with more intellectual comprehension than power or brilliancy; that the orchestra, conducted by Mr Manns, was numerous and highly efficient; and that the performance generally gave satisfaction. Liszt's "Lorely," scored for orchestra, was sung in the course of the evening by Mrs Osgood in a very charming manner. The song is by no means easy, but the clever American soprano was successful alike with its letter and its spirit—an achievement upon which she may be congratulated.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

The programme of the opening concert contained several very familiar works which need not detain us long. Such were Mendelssohn's concert overture, Melusine, Beethoven's Symphony in C minor (No. 5), Spohr's Dramatic Concerto for violin, and the overture to Oberon. All that it is possible to say of these masterpieces has been said time and again, wherefore, avoiding "vain repetitions," we dismiss them with a reference to the performance of Spohr's Concerto by Mr Henry Holmes. But for a temporary loss of memory, or access of nervousness, which caused the artist to break down in the cadenza, we should have nothing but praise to award him. Assuming loss of memory, we trust that not only Mr Holmes, but other executants who play without book, will accept a warning that they have no right to incur unnecessary risks. Edward Grieg's pianoforte Concerto in A minor was the quasi-novelty of the concert, and excited some little interest as played with facility and intelligence by Mr Dannreuther. In his programme notes to this work, Professor Macfarren likens its fragmentary melodies and peculiar restlessness to "the jagged coast line of our Author's Northern home." The term "jagged" is new in its application to modern orchestral music of the advanced school, and we accept it as appropriate, because suggestive of the angularity and jerkiness caused by the wave of epilepsy which seems to be passing over the musical world in obedience to some mysterious law. If, however, the "jagged" Norwegian coast has affected Grieg's mind, it becomes a question whether young composers should not be kept from the study of geography. The vocalists were Mdme Edith Wynne and Mr. W. H. Cummings, who sang respectively Gounod's "Dalla torre sua romita" (Saffo), and Handel's "Where'er you walk" (Semele).

THADDEUS EGG.

MR KUHE'S MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

The concert given on Monday evening week was as "popular" as the greatest conceivable variety of music "understood of the people" could make it. Its programme included a portion of the "Farewell" symphony, played "by general desire," for the sake of Haydn's joke; a Dead March from Fox's Jackdaw of Rheims; "Rory O'More;" Ardit's capital selection from Aida; Jullien's "Caledonian Quadrilles;" a Hungarian Fantasia, by Liszt; a waltz, "Les Belles Viennoises"—not Schubert's, but Ardit's; and the overture to Zampa. No wonder that the Dome was crowded as it had not been before, and was not likely to be after, for in Brighton, as elsewhere, the majority of concert-goers are those to whom the classic Muse appeals but with faint effect. It is useless to complain of this, and we who regret it must needs withhold remonstrance when Mr Kuhe urges that his Festival could not take place at all but for some concession to public taste. He cannot be expected to impoverish himself for the cultivation of Brighton amateurs; nor can the strictest purist expect to have an arrangement condemned which, admitting comparatively low-class music on one occasion, thereby derives power to present in half a dozen programmes that which is better. The balance is enormously on the right side, after all. We are not called upon to notice this concert in detail, and two or three observations will suffice. Copies of Mr Fox's Dead March not having come to hand, the Slow March from Clay's Lalla Rookh was repeated in its stead; but the Dance of Almas from Cowen's Corsair proved more fortunate, and had the favourable hearing its marked and picturesque character must always ensure. Mr Kuhe played the solo part in Liszt's work with uncommon vigour and brilliancy, while in his own fantasia on "Faust," M. Sainton won the plaudits of the entire house by the masterly execution of themes which, presented in whatever form, are always welcome. The solo vocalist was Miss Julia Warwick, a young soprano attached, we believe, to the Carl Rosa company. Miss Warwick made a successful début in Brighton. Her voice is of pure and pleasant quality, while her style shows that she has been well taught. Signor Ardit conducted both his own pieces and the Hungarian Fantasia, but at all other times the bâton was held by Mr Kuhe.

Tuesday, the 28th, brought with it a "Wagner Night," and also made the fact pretty clear that the amateurs of Brighton are not yet enthusiastic disciples of the Bayreuth master. The Dome was but partly filled, while, save on one or two occasions, when Wagner appeared least Wagnerian, apathy reigned throughout. Yet the selection was a good one, and the music had a fair rendering by tolerably efficient means. Is the result to be explained—as concerning the audience—by the remark of one among their number, who said, "Wagner is always leading us to expect something which never comes"? Of course "hope deferred" is adequate not only to apathy but even disgust, when deferred through an entire evening. The concert began with the overture to The Flying Dutchman, the next orchestral selection being the "Funeral March" from the Götterdämmerung, played for the first time in Brighton. It was too much to expect that this splendid effort of genius would be understood in all its significance by an audience wholly unacquainted with the principles of its construction, and the significance of its themes. But one might have looked for something like prompt and warm acknowledgment of its solemnity and impressiveness—qualities lying on the very surface of the music. Whoever did this was disappointed. The March, though, on the whole, well performed by the orchestra, aided by the band of the 20th Hussars, passed with no more than conventional recognition. Better fortune attended the familiar introduction to Lohengrin, and still better waited upon Ardit's selection from Tannhäuser, as given under the arranger's personal direction. The various solos played by Messrs. Radcliff, Lazarus, Hughes, and Reynolds were much applauded, while the exceedingly fine March aroused enthusiasm for the first time, Signor Ardit having to return and bow his acknowledgments again and again. With the Tannhäuser selection, Wagner's share in the programme ended, and gave place to a group of miscellaneous works, at the head of which stood the Symphony in E, composed by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, and first played at the Crystal Palace in 1865. During the intervening twelve years Mr. Sullivan, though unfortunately producing nothing of a similar kind, has taken care to improve his one work in the light of growing experience and matured taste —the symphony being now very different from what it was originally, thanks, above all, to judicious curtailment. Youth often errs on the side of redundancy, and although the very defect has sometimes a charm about it, the attraction of a work in which no effort is wasted and nothing is superfluous must ever be greater. Mr Sullivan has recognised this to so much good purpose that his symphony, heard for the first time since the changes were made, comes before us almost as a revelation. It is now one entitled to rank as an English classic, and of which the composer has a right to be proud. Nevertheless, we should like to see the third movement removed in favour of a genuine scherzo, thus securing a needed relief after the overpowering sentiment which marks the andante. Mr Sullivan, who was warmly received, conducted his own work, and had reason, all things considered, to be satisfied, not only with the performance, but with the effect produced. The remaining instrumental selections were Sivi's "Carnaval de Cuba," ably played by Mr Viotti Collins, and the overture to Auber's Zanetta. Miss Sophia Löwe, the only vocalist on this occasion, agreeably relieved the orchestral pieces by singing, in her best style, "Dich, theure Hall" (Tannhäuser), Elsa's Dream (Lohengrin), and Sullivan's "Orpheus with his lute."

Assuming that the classic muse was angered on Monday night, she must have been appeased on Saturday afternoon, when little, save works after her own heart obtained a hearing. Novelty, it is true, was absent from the programme; but, on the other hand, nothing was present that had not become familiar by reason of its very excellence, and, therefore, claimed repetition as of right. Sterndale Bennett's overture, The Naiades, opened the concert, charming every cultured amateur with its unforced tunefulness and exquisite finish. One can hardly listen to this inspiration without keen regret. What ought not the genius which produced it to have done, and, by comparison, how little did he accomplish! "Enough," it may be answered, "to win him a grave in Westminster Abbey." True, where the proximity of that grand old worker, Handel, and the close neighbourhood of Purcell, who lived but half a life, must be an everlasting reproach. Nevertheless, let us give thanks for the Naiades. Had Bennett written nothing else he would not have lived in vain. Following the Englishman's overture came the andante and rondo from Ferdinand David's fifth violin concerto, the solo by M. Sainton, who, it need scarcely be remarked, did justice to the work of his distinguished countrymen. We know too little in this country of the music other than operatic produced by our nearest neighbours, and M. Sainton does good service, not only to those whom he regards with patriotic pride but also to ourselves, whenever, as yesterday, he improves our acquaintance with them. The accomplished French violinist, after a capital display of skill, was recalled and heartily applauded. Mendelssohn's G minor Concerto followed, with Mme Arabella Goddard at the pianoforte. Concerning music so familiar it would be as superfluous to speak as to dwell upon the manner in which Mme Goddard has for so many years acted as its principal English interpreter. Whether the marked change of this artist's style, as obvious yesterday afternoon, be an improvement or not is a matter of opinion, but there can be no doubt of the fact that she gave a brilliant and impressive rendering of the work, and one that fairly deserved all the applause it called forth. Beethoven's C minor symphony, Sullivan's incidental music to the Merchant of Venice, the bridal processional music from Lohengrin, and the overture to Zauberflöte, were other features in an excellent concert, over which Mr Arthur Sullivan presided with unflinching success. The vocalist was Miss Frances Brooke, who sang Spohr's beautiful air, "Rose softly blooming," with so much obvious appreciation of its sentiment as to encourage a hope that, when the nervousness of a beginner disappears, she will do ample justice to her vocal ability.

NAPLES.—Il Guarany, by Signor Gomez, has met with a good reception at the San Carlo.

NEW YORK.—The Abbot-Brignoli concerts having proved successful, De Vivo, the manager, determined to give a short Italian operatic season, commencing on the 23rd February at the Academy of Music. De Vivo will, it is said, be succeeded by Max Strakosch, who, according to report, is in negotiation with Volpini, now in Havana. Miss Cary, it is likewise asserted, will join Strakosch's company on her return from Russia.

John Oxenford.

(From the "Musical Times.")

On Wednesday, the 21st ult., died, at his residence, in Trinity Square, Southwark, John Oxenford, aged 65 years. The great majority who learn this fact will do so without giving it a second thought; it may even be that the name will pass under their eyes with but a faint recognition, so true is it now, as when the words were uttered, that "the world knows nothing of its greatest men." Nevertheless, John Oxenford was a great man in all that constitutes the essence of such a character. He was modest. With gifts so many and varied, he might have aspired to a high place in the sight of his countrymen. The world was, in a special sense, open to him where to choose, and those who knew him best most appreciated the opportunities of distinction that lay to his hand. But, like many another who has done good service to literature and art, he was satisfied, as regards the bulk of his labours, to work in the comparative obscurity which shrouds the journalist. Personal recognition he never coveted, finding all the reward his ambition craved in the esteem and admiration of a chosen few, and in the consciousness of duty faithfully done. Even in private life this feature of his character was conspicuous. None ever loved more than he to discuss high matters with congenial minds, but none shrank more than he from an ostentatious display either of opinions or learning. "Wise as a serpent" in all that constitutes the materials of sound judgment of men and things, he was yet "harmless as a dove" in the sense of an almost childlike simplicity of manners and modesty of soul. Such a man was not one to push himself in among the crowd who struggle for a "coign of vantage," whereon they may attitudinise before a gaping world. Persons like these, from aspirants after a seat in the parish vestry to candidates for a place on the Treasury Bench, may be necessary to the completeness of social organisation; but John Oxenford found his happiness in work which, while it influenced men's thoughts throughout the whole realm of culture, left the worker in congenial retirement.

John Oxenford was great no less in the capacity to do great things. He does not seem to have had the educational advantages which, in early years, are of such value as giving young ambition a good start in the race of life. But, like many others whose names are written in brass on the walls of Fame's temple, he knew how to make up for this deficiency. An admirable elegiac notice in the Times of the 23rd ult. well said, "Considering his extraordinary attainments, it seems incredible that he should have been almost self-taught. Such, however, is the fact. He acquired Greek, Latin, and the principal modern languages entirely without aid; and, in addition to this, made himself, though only an amateur in mathematics, able to discuss problems and theorems with any professed master of that difficult study." Nor was this all. He had an acquaintance little short of phenomenal, not alone with the ordinary productions of English and Continental literature, but with that literature in its most recondite, obscure, and eccentric manifestations. His purview throughout life seems to have taken in the whole field of book-work, and the marvel is how he found time to read, the power to retain, and the ability to digest so much. Of course, we have an explanation in the fact that, with a remarkable memory, Oxenford possessed a capacious, orderly, and luminous mind. His brain was like some well-stocked and well-lighted library, the owner of which knows exactly the position of every book, and can put his hand upon it at a moment's notice. It may, of course, be said—and, indeed, has already been suggested—that the man's mind was receptive out of all proportion to its productiveness. The disproportion, we fancy, is not so great as it seems, taking into account the immense amount of work done by Oxenford for our periodical literature. Still, one cannot but regret that such a ripe, massive, and broadly cultivated scholar did not leave behind more of the intellectual wealth which, unhappily, has now gone down to the grave, and is lost to us for ever.

Concerning John Oxenford's greatness as a critic, it is hardly necessary for us to speak, since he laboured for a generation or more in the fierce light that beats upon the Times. An intellect more qualified for critical work no man ever had, and it is only to be regretted, in the interest of dramatic art, if not of dramatic artists, that he ever allowed his mind to be influenced by a nature amiable even to weakness. Thus was his usefulness limited, though his personal popularity was increased; and the cause of truth suffered that an unwillingness to wound might be indulged. But while we regret this, it is impossible not to think with all the more kindness of the man's individuality. "Even his vices leaned to virtue's side." How readily and heartily he praised when praise was due, and how prompt he was to discover and encourage merit, everybody knows. Talent, even in its most limited development, never appealed to John Oxenford in vain, though he too often passed over incompetence as though he did not see it, or thought it worth no more than an artful sentence meaning praise or blame, as the reader chose to take it.

The private character of John Oxenford is laid bare by the simple statement that he could not have had an enemy in the world. A nature so frank and large-hearted is its own passport to the affections of all with whom it comes in contact; and the dead scholar and critic will be sorely missed in the circles which he enlivened by his wit and warmed by his geniality. The writer of this notice well remembers meeting him accidentally at the solemn table-d'hôte of a genteel hotel at an oppressively respectable inland watering-place. During the meal word was brought that the body of a lad had been taken out of a stream close at hand, while just previously a complaint had run around the table against the scarcity of the "pure element." "Now," said Oxenford, in that strident voice which always commanded attention, "here's a curious thing—a boy drowned, and no water to drink." Despite sympathy for the defunct, the remark thawed the guests at once, and a chorus of laughter was the prelude to a clatter of tongues.

It is beyond the scope of our hurried lines to give the details of Oxenford's various labours. To musical readers he is perhaps best known by his libretti, and a host of smooth and polished verses. These will keep him fresh in the memory of the followers of the sister art to that he served so well. But nowhere will he soon pass into oblivion. Requiescat in pace.

AN UNPUBLISHED LETTER BY S. T. COLERIDGE.

Highgate, 5th Jan., 1818.

To Mr BOOSEY, Old Broad Street.

DEAR SIR,—Accept my very best wishes for your future prosperity as united in one firm by everything sacred in heaven and earth.

I most sincerely congratulate Mr and Mrs Boosey, and pray that they may long continue to have the fairest splendour Heaven can shed on declining life, the gleam and heart-recovery warmth of parental cares, rewarded by filial love and duty.

I shall do myself the pleasure of waiting on you in the course of next week. I have every reason to hope that we shall be able speedily to realise the plan of a Teutonic society under the best auspices. Mr Steyne, to whom I owe an apologetic letter, though in very truth my will has not been a sharer in the offence, will find that I have not been idle, or unsuccessful.

I am about to give a course of lectures—a ticket for which I shall entreat you to accept—fourteen in number, and should be obliged to you to permit me to insert your name as one of the three at whose shop tickets and prospectuses may be procured. The other two are Hookham (or, perhaps, Murray) and Messrs Taylor and Hessey. If I do not hear from you to the contrary, I shall suppose my request acceded to. I put down my name as subscriber to Goethe's works, common paper. Have they arrived?

Believe me, dear Sir,

Yours respectfully,

S. T. COLERIDGE.

Mr Herrwitz has composed what I think a still prettier Hebrew ode, of some length, sung before the synagogue on the confirmation of a youth recovered from a sickness that had threatened his life, and deprived him of the use of his limbs. Would the sale of the poem tempt you to risk the printing of this work, as translated by me, the profits to be divided into three? This, however, is quite between ourselves, for I have not proposed it to my worthy Christian neighbour of the Jewish persuasion—true Christian at heart, he is, however anti-evangelical his belief may be.

* The above letter was written by the poet to Mr Boosey, the book publisher, on the occasion of his taking his two sons into partnership—one of whom (the late Mr. Thomas Boosey) afterwards became the music publisher of Holles Street.

VENICE.—Signor Morini, having been unsuccessful in his management of the Teatro de la Fenice, went off suddenly, leaving the members of the orchestra, chorus, and ballet unpaid. The theatre is closed, as is, also, the Teatro Goldoni.

THE FUNERAL OF MR JOHN OXENFORD.

The remains of the well-known scholar and popular dramatist, Mr John Oxenford, were interred at the Roman Catholic Cemetery, Kensal Green, in accordance with the rites of a Church into which he had lately been received. At eleven o'clock the coffin was taken from the house of the deceased, in Trinity Square, to St George's Cathedral, Southwark, where a Requiem Mass was performed, the officiating priest being Father Reeks, who afterwards attended at the grave. A very beautiful choral service, lasting an hour, was chanted, the Requiem being the composition of Herr Meyer Lutz, who played the organ accompaniments. The boys of the Cathedral formed the body of the choir, and the principal solo vocalists were Mr J. F. Cook, Mr Crutwell, and Mr Edward Murray. The coffin of polished oak, with solid brass crucifix, handles, and ornaments, bore a plate with the following inscription:

"John Oxenford, Esq., died 21st February, 1877, aged 64 years.

Requiescat in pace."

Wreaths and crosses of white camelias, cyclamens, azaleas, and snowdrops, twined with small ivy and other dark foliage, were placed upon the pall. A procession of priests and acolytes, with crucifix and lighted candles, met the coffin at the entrance of the Cathedral, and preceded it to the chancel. After Mass, the body was replaced in the hearse which had brought it from Trinity Square, and the long procession of mourners was quietly and speedily marshalled by the undertakers, Messrs Walker and Chubb. In the first mourning coach were Mr E. Oxenford, Mr A. Oxenford, Mr Elgood, and Mr J. W. Davison. The second contained Mr F. Marshall, Mr F. Chatterton, Mr Edmund Yates, and Father Reeks. The mourners in the third coach were Mr Murphy, Mr Hawkins, Mr Pittman, and Dr Smith. The servants of the deceased followed in a private carriage; and in other carriages which brought up the rear were gentlemen known in that republic of letters which John Oxenford both served and adorned. Many more who had known him, and who sincerely mourned a companion so genial and a friend so true, were waiting in the cemetery when the hearse entered the gates. It would be useless to give a list which must needs be incomplete, and would almost certainly err in the omission of names claiming most to be recorded; but among others we remarked Mr Creswick, Mr and Mrs Andrew Halliday, Mr Swinbourne, Mr Leopold Lewis, Mr Odell, Mr A. B. Kelly, Mr Horace Wigan, Mr Duncan Davison, Mr Godfrey Turner, Mr Ferrand, Mr Arthur Swanborough, Mr Cuthbert, and Mr Furneaux Cook. Nearly two hundred persons, it is computed, assembled to show their respect for the deceased. The ground in that in which are deposited, for a time, the remains of Cardinal Wiseman, whose temporary grave is not far from that tenanted by a late and, one may say, unexpected convert to the Church of Rome.

WIESBADEN.—A new violinist, destined apparently to fix public attention, cropped up at the last Symphonie-Concert, in the person of a young man, scarcely twenty, who is named Edward Heimendal. He comes from Elberfeld, and achieved a sensational success. He is a pupil of Professor August Wilhelmj; he is highly gifted and possessed of earnest artistic purpose. His tone and execution are much extolled, while his style is characterised as thoroughly "German." He played marvellously well Richard Wagner's "Albumbblatt," arranged as a Romance for violin and orchestra by August Wilhelmj. There was a storm of applause at the conclusion of the composition. His rendering, also, of Ernst's "Ungarische Weisen" was magnificent. He was uproariously re-called after each piece, and at once re-engaged.

Popular Concerts.

(RETROSPECT.)

(Continued from page 119.)

There was nothing new to speak of in the programme of Saturday, Feb. 10; but it was, as usual, a pleasure to hear Beethoven's early quartet in B flat (sixth and last of the Haydn set), played as it is invariably played by Herr Joachim, Signor Piatti, and associates. Tartini's "Trillo del Diavolo," was, for the twentieth time, so admirably executed by the Hungarian violinist as to create a legitimate desire on the part of many among the audience to know something more of the music composed by the renowned Istrian virtuoso. With so fortunate a dream as resulted in this sonata he must surely have dreamt again. Schubert's interesting sonata in A minor was extremely well rendered by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, whose recent appearances at the Popular Concerts have materially increased her repute; and a new singer, Miss Gowa, made a decidedly favourable impression in Lieder by Taubert, Beethoven, and Franz. When are we to hear an English song, too, at these performances?

The programme on Monday evening, Feb. 12, would have been attractive if only on account of the very fine interpretation by MM. Joachim, Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti of the first of Cherubini's three quartets for stringed instruments. Perhaps this quartet, although its fellows in D minor and C major have incontestably high merits, is also the best of the series. The scherzo and trio were especially admired; and had not Herr Joachim with commendable discretion refrained from compliance with the strongly manifested wish of his hearers they would have been played over again—much to the detriment of the final movement, which, as the genial Schumann happily expresses it, "sparkles like a diamond when you shake it." The success of the E flat quartet will probably induce the director of the Popular Concerts to revive one at least of its companions during the sojourn of Herr Joachim among us. At the same concert we had (only for the second time) Schumann's somewhat laboured and diffuse, but in parts very fine, sonata for pianoforte and violin in D minor, which at the hands of Mlle Marie Krebs and Herr Joachim could hardly fail in producing all the effect inherently belonging to it. As on previous occasions, we found the trio and finale the most spontaneous and well wrought out period of the sonata, the finale especially being instinct with wonderful life and spirit. Mlle Krebs also played Sterndale Bennett's three sketches, "The Lake," "The Millstream," and "The Fountain," the last with such freedom and exquisite delicacy as to evoke an encore not easy to resist. These charming pieces, the inspiration of Bennett's Academy days, always sound fresh and young, although it is over forty years since they were composed. Mr Barton McGuckin, a tenor who has but recently come before the public, made a very favourable impression in airs by Salvator Rosa and Buononcini (Handel's Italian operatic rival), and in Mendelssohn's song, "The Garland." This gentleman has an agreeable voice—a legitimate tenor—which he already uses to good purpose. Moreover, he sings with unimpeachable taste, never condescending to exaggeration. The fairest hopes may be reasonably entertained of Mr McGuckin's future career. Sir Julius Benedict accompanied him in each of his songs—an advantage not to be over-estimated.

It is always a treat to hear Mozart's exquisite quintet for stringed instruments in G minor, with Herr Joachim as first violin and Signor Piatti as violoncello, especially when the other parts are so completely filled as by MM. Ries, Straus, and Zerbini on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 17. Mr Hallé, pianist for the day, played the first of Beethoven's sonatas, Op. 31 (in G), besides joining Herr Joachim and Signor Piatti in the same composer's E flat trio, Op. 70. The singer was Mr Frank D'Alquen; the accompanist, Sir Julius Benedict.

More than ordinary interest was attached to the concert of Monday evening the 19th Feb., on account of the production of Herr Brahms's quartet in B flat, his latest composition of the kind. About this elaborately constructed piece we are unable to speak with confidence after a single hearing; but that it is written with as much musicianly skill, carefulness of design, and earnest purpose as anything we know from its eminent composer's pen may be confidentially asserted. Each movement has a distinct character, and yet all four divisions hang together as integral parts of a whole. For this reason alone it proclaims itself the work of a great musician; and that Herr Brahms is a great musician, none can deny. Nevertheless, much serious consideration is required to grasp the inner meaning, and to become thoroughly familiar with the technical details of any of the more important compositions of this artist. Holding Herr Brahms in high esteem, as one of the genuine musicians of our time, we refrain from any attempt at absolute criticism until better strengthened by further acquaintance with his new quartet. Nevertheless we are strongly inclined to think that, for ingenious contrivance, if not for wealth and spontaneity of ideas, it is entitled to rank among his very best. The quartet was rendered con amore by MM. Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Piatti, listened to with close attention, and movement after movement loudly applauded. The pianist was again Mr Charles Hallé, who played Schubert's fine, if not somewhat diffuse, sonata in B flat, as few other pianists can play it, besides being associated with MM. Joachim and Piatti in Mendelssohn's first trio (D minor). Herr Henschel, the vocalist of the evening, in an air from Handel's Rinaldo and two Lieder by Schubert, showed himself possessor of a capable voice, if not of a very refined style. The accompanist was Mr Zerbini.

The return of the eminent pianist, M^{me} Clara Schumann, to the Popular Concerts is always looked forward to by the many admirers of her genius with anxious expectancy. This may account in a great measure for the crowded attendance at St James's Hall, on Saturday afternoon, when Herr Joachim, the present absorbing attraction of the season, was engaged elsewhere (at the Crystal Palace). M^{me} Schumann, as usual, was honoured with an enthusiastic reception—a reception never accorded but to the highest favourites of the public. She played nothing she had not on several occasions played before, but whatever she may choose, when bestowing upon it her earnest thought and care, is sure to be more or less welcome. The Variations Sérieuses of Mendelssohn, built upon an original theme in D minor, are exactly suited to her energetic style. This piece, about which the composer himself speaks with satisfaction, in a letter from Leipsic, addressed to his friend Carl Klingemann (1841) approaches more nearly than any other composition of the kind, to the famous 32 variations of Beethoven on a theme in C minor; and it is only to be regretted that instead of 17 (the letter mentions "18," doubtless including the coda), the number of Mendelssohn's variations had not been doubled, in order to exhaust the capabilities of the theme as fully as Beethoven has exhausted the capabilities of his. The Variations Sérieuses, nevertheless, even admitting that the composer, had he felt so inclined, might have done still more with the theme, can hardly fail to please when rendered as M^{me} Schumann renders them—entering, as she does, heart and soul into their character and significance. Twice re-called after her performance, she also joined Herr Ludwig Straus and Signor Piatti in Beethoven's B flat trio—fifth, last, and grandest of the series of works for the same combination of instruments which the illustrious musician bequeathed to his art. The quartet was one in D major, which, until the complete catalogue of Mozart's compositions was published, was generally called "No. 7," but is now known to be his 26th. That it is one of his most melodious, graceful, and captivating need hardly be said; nor is it requisite to dwell upon its performance, by such practised experts as MM. Straus, Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti. One of the striking features of the programme was an "Elegy," for violoncello (in E minor), composed and performed by Signor Piatti, accompanied on the pianoforte by Sir Julius Benedict. Though in dimensions a bagatelle, this "Elegy," played as it was, excited the utmost attention and interest, evoking as marked signs of approval as anything in the concert. Why does not Signor Piatti—recognised, and justly so, as the greatest of living violoncellists—write a sonata or concerto for his own instrument, and thereby add something of sterling value to its repertory? That repertory, as no one is more fully conscious than himself, stands in great need of replenishing. Mendelssohn, in 1846, had designed a violoncello concerto for Signor Piatti, but did not live to put it upon paper. More is the pity! The vocalist on Saturday was Mr Barton McGuckin, a young tenor of genuine promise, who, in airs by Salvator Rosa, Buononcini, and Mendelssohn, distinguished himself most favourably, and won the unqualified approval of the audience.

M^{me} Schumann made a second appearance on Monday evening, when, as might have been expected, her attraction, added to that of Herr Joachim, drew a very crowded audience. This time the illustrious pianist was heard in Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 81, best known as "Les Adieux, l'Absence, et le Retour"—a work always rendered by her with a profound insight into its meaning, and a careful avoidance of the exaggeration from which music having an avowed "poetic basis" usually suffers. M^{me} Schumann combines true reverence for the genius of the composer with her own commanding ability, and is thus saved from the egotism into which ability without such reverence often falls. Again was she successful in enlisting the sympathies of her audience, whose applause, long and loud, compelled a return to the platform. Herr Joachim's solo—Handel's Sonata in A major—obtained a recognition equally emphatic, played as it was to absolute perfection. For this work, in responding to an encore, the great violinist substituted a charming Romance by Spohr, and gave it with a daintiness and taste beyond praise. Other works in the programme were Spohr's melodious, if sometimes trivial, Nonetto, and Haydn's piquant Quartet in C, Op. 33.

The pleasure of this concert—perhaps the most enjoyable of the series—was much enhanced by the singing of Herr Henschel, a baritone-bass gifted with a beautiful voice, rare charm of style, and the natural and true expression of a genuine artist. Alike in songs by Handel, Brahms, and Rubinstein, this gentleman asserted the uncommon power which has promptly made him a favourite.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

The prospectus of this society's sixty-fifth season calls for very little remark, no matter from what point of view we regard it. Those amateurs, for instance, whose highest Philharmonic good is the presentation of standard works have as much reason for quiet satisfaction as in former years, if not more than in the immediate past. From them, therefore, no word of complaint will come. On the other hand, earnest sympathisers with English art, to please whom was never the society's object, have no right to be surprised at the fact that their wishes are once more disregarded. True it is that English music figures slightly in the scheme. We are promised the orchestral piece written by Mr. J. F. Barnett for the Liverpool Festival, and entitled The Lay of the last Minstrel; Sterndale Bennett's overture, Parisina; Professor Macfarren's violin concerto, and Sullivan's overture, In Memoriam. This is not much, but until somebody proves that it is an inadequate representation of English as compared with foreign composers, we cannot join in expressions of disappointment and indignation. It seems to us that a good deal of well-meaning but mistaken patriotism is called forth in connection with this matter. Societies like the Philharmonic are rated for not encouraging native talent, which we are told is not only existent in a form worthy of patronage, but suffering painful eclipse for the want of it. We strongly doubt whether these things be so. Native talent worth anything in the higher walks of art is actually rare, while as a matter of simple truth, easily to be ascertained by observation, an English musician who has composed a work worthy of being heard by the side of masterpieces need not wait long for its production. It is, no doubt, conceivable that a genius, "born to blush unseen," may vainly seek an opportunity of attracting attention. But, as a rule, events and circumstances work out just results; and to suppose that societies formed for purposes of the highest musical culture should be saddled with the duty of prospecting and developing talent not strong enough to assert itself is absurd. One such society we have in the Philharmonic, and however much that one may have fallen from its high estate, it should at least be commended for recognising only the music which presents an undoubted claim to notice. The novelties in the prospectus being few, well-wishers of the Philharmonic are the more encouraged to hope that the performances this season will reach a fairer standard than of late. There is a serious necessity for improvement if it be true, as we believe, that the society's present doubtful, not to say precarious, position arises from the quality of its workmanship. Audiences are not what they once were; and, as the Philharmonic now appeals to the public at large rather than to a select coterie, it must stand or fall on the simple question of excellence. The society's concerts, we regret to say, are not excellent; and, unless a change soon comes, its best friends may even be compelled to advocate the termination of a long and, on the whole, honourable career, lest matters go from bad to worse. We earnestly beg the directors to take the subject into consideration, and to stop at no measures which may tend to keep the Philharmonic in its place as our representative orchestral association.

Chadurus Egg.

A GOOD LIFE OF BEETHOVEN.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—Will you have the kindness to inform me, through the medium of the Musical World (if convenient), which you think is the best life of Beethoven, no matter whether in English, German, or French—also ditto Shelley.—I beg to remain, yours truly, POLKAW.

[There is no good life of Beethoven; but there is one by Schindler, which is a very bad one. Thayer's, when finished, will be worthy a place in any library. There is no absolutely good life of Shelley; but there are several more or less incomplete ones. Schindler may be consulted for dates, &c. He can be had both in French and in German.—D. P.]

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

(RETROSPECT.)

The programme of the fourteenth concert included Weber's overture to Euryanthe, more romantic than even Oberon itself, and Beethoven's C minor symphony—both splendidly executed, and appreciated at their worth. There was a novelty, moreover, in the shape of a "Sarabande Espagnole," for orchestra, by M. Massenet, a French composer now much in vogue, about which all we have to say is, that it is as unlike the sarabandes of J. S. Bach and Handel as possible. Liszt's arrangement, or rather disarrangement, of Schubert's Fantasia in C, for pianoforte, with added orchestral accompaniments, was performed, Mr Walter Bache being at the pianoforte. How such Vandalism is countenanced escapes our comprehension. Had Schubert required orchestral accompaniments to his fantasia, which was composed for pianoforte alone, he surely could have made far better than those supplied by Abbé Liszt. This meddling with the compositions of dead masters is becoming intolerable. Why should music be the only art submitted without protest to such treatment. Why not painting also? Fancy a Liszt improving upon a Leonardo da Vinci, a Raphael, or a Titian! "Whether," says the programme analyst, "one musician has a right to take the completed work of another, and deal with it as he pleases, is a question which may not be discussed here." It may, however, be discussed elsewhere; and we say, without hesitation, that such a proceeding is on all grounds inadmissible. It would be equally so even had Liszt improved Schubert, whereas he has merely smothered him in a cloud of bombast. The encouragement of such perpetrations is unworthy the Crystal Palace Concerts, and no ingenious special pleading can excuse them. There is an anecdote of Rossini which would apply not unfitly here. A certain pianist, just after the death of Meyerbeer, played to the composer of Guillaume Tell a funeral dirge in commemoration of the composer of the Huguenots. At the end of the performance Rossini remarked, "Very good; but what a pity you are not dead instead of Meyerbeer, so that he might have composed the dirge; it would have been better still." We do not wish the Abbé Liszt cut off before his appointed hour; on the contrary, may his shadow never be less. At the same time, we are earnestly of opinion that had Schubert survived him he could have added more appropriate orchestral accompaniments to one of Liszt's pianoforte works than those which Liszt has provided for the Fantasia in C major. Seriously, the practice should be altogether discontinued; it is assuming undue significance, and in the end no composer will be safe. The singers at this concert were Mdme Patey (who introduced "His right hand shall hold us up," one of the most attractive numbers in Professor Macfarren's Birmingham Festival oratorio, The Resurrection, which she sang in the most perfect style), and Miss Nannie Louise Hart, a débutante, too overcome by nervousness to be just now a fair subject for criticism.

The concert on Saturday, Feb. 17th, opened with the noble overture to Cherubini's tragic opera Medée, ending with one of a very different complexion, entitled Saul, and signed "Bazzini;" but whether it be the composition of a well-known violinist of that name, who will be remembered as having played at our Philharmonic Concerts and elsewhere, a good many years since, was not stated in the programme. "Bazzini" ("G" and "A. M." refraining) has been allowed to give a very eloquent description of the intent and plan of his overture in the programme; and this, taking the composer at his word, absolves us from all necessity for criticism. Such a proceeding, nevertheless, ought not to be sanctioned at concerts like those held in the Crystal Palace. Haydn's delicious symphony in G, the one composed in 1791 (scarcely half a year before Mozart's death) for his Oxford degree—of old called, variously, "Letter Q," and the "Oxford Symphony"—played as it was under the direction of Mr Manns, would alone have given interest to the concert. The finale, built upon an unpretending theme, worked out in the happiest manner, is exceptionally admirable, even for Haydn, who, in this peculiar character of movement, combining bucolic simplicity with masterly elaboration, has never been surpassed. The solo performer was Mdle Marie Krebs, who gave Beethoven's fourth concerto, without book, so well, that we should like to hear her for once play it with the book before her, being assured that it would be not only more convenient for herself, but also for the conductor, who is answerable for the well-going of every piece to the correct performance of which he is virtually pledged. This performing "from memory" is well enough where others are not concerned—because then the performer is alone responsible for what may occur; and it frequently happens that great "sensational" executants—pianists especially (who, were it desirable, could readily be named)—memory occasionally failing, are forced to substitute, "impromptu," something of their own for what has been written by the composer. Mdlle Krebs, whose repertory embraces all styles, can afford to dispense with this evidence of self-asserting virtuosity. The singers at Saturday's concert were Mdme Antoinette Sterling and Miss Sophie Löwe, who, between them, gave selections from Bach, Beethoven, and Mr A. S. Sullivan.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

The doings of students, however interesting as indicative of future excellence, are scarcely matters for criticism, and it is not our present purpose to do more than refer in general terms to the performances in the Concert Hall of the Royal Academy of Music last Saturday night. Some among the presumably more advanced pupils appeared on the occasion, and the programme contained two works of special interest as showing what results the institution now promises in the matter of creative ability. These compositions were an anthem by Oliveria Prescott, and a song by Eaton Fanning—names well known in connection with the Academy concerts, and not now mentioned with respect for the first time. While recognising the merit of both works, it is impossible not to wish for a speedy and more conclusive proof that our oldest school of music is shaping material adapted to achieve higher and better things. The same remark applies to the executive department with scarcely less force. We are, of course, glad to see students of fair acquirements going out of the Academy to act as the missionaries of their art over all the land. But as this has long been the rule, it would be a pleasant relief to welcome eminent talent, of which we might boast in the face of the world. No academy, we very well know, can create talent, great or small. None the less, however, is a steady flow of no more than respectable ability somewhat depressing. Without making special mention of all the instrumental and vocal solos given on Saturday night we may state that Miss Margaret Bucknall was heard to great advantage in a Berceuse by Chopin, and that Miss Butterworth obtained and deserved a recall for her rendering of Mr Eaton Fanning's song. The ladies who appeared, in addition to these, were Misses Prescott, Julia de Nolte, Cobbe, Holcroft, Wayland, Burrough, Heatherly, Goldsmith, and Mrs Paschal.

The chief interest of the concert was excited by a new cantata written for female voices, with pianoforte accompaniment, and entitled The Fishermidens, words by F. E. Weatherly, music by Henry Smart. We find the "argument" of this attractive little work stated as follows: "Three fishermidens—Elsie, Alice, and Agnes—put out to sea at eve with their companions. The wind falls, and, as they lie becalmed, Elsie, at the request of the others, sings the ballad of Lilian, a maiden who was lured to her death by the Sea Maidens. Anon there is heard in the distance the wooing strain. Alice would fain listen at any cost. Her companions dissuade her. Again the fatal singing is heard, but at this moment they catch from a convent the faint chanting of nuns singing to the Virgin. The fishermidens join in fervently, and the spell is broken." Mr Weatherly has told this simple story very well in his verses, which are smoothly written, adapted for musical enunciation, and, generally speaking, lyrical in a high degree. We may doubt, in point of fact whether the composer could possibly have been more fortunate as regards his book. Mr Smart's share of the work is, looking at his well-earned fame and unquestionable ability, just what might have been expected. Every bar gives evidence of appropriate ideas, graceful expression, the skill of a master, and the tact of a veteran. Where the sections of a work are so uniformly good it is hard to particularise, but mention must be made of the opening chorus—a charming example of Mr Smart's happiest manner; of the choral scene, "Hark, hark," one of the most elaborate and characteristic numbers; and of the trio, with connected double chorus, "Sister, lend no willing ears." In all these, and indeed throughout the cantata, we meet with nothing but music of admirable make, satisfying alike to the intellect and to sentiment. The Fishermidens, is therefore, one of Mr Smart's successes, upon which every amateur who recognises the composer's worth will hasten to congratulate him as warmly as did the applauding audience of Saturday night. The performance, conducted by Mr Walter Macfarren, rendered justice to its theme, the chorus knowing their task well, and the soloists, Misses Brand, Reimer, and Orridge, giving ample satisfaction.

We subjoin the programme:—

Adagio and Presto, from Sonata in E, pianoforte and violin, Miss Morgan and Miss Julia de Nolte, Professor's Scholar (J. S. Bach); Anthem, "The righteous live for ever," Oliveria Prescott, student; Aria, "In Uomini," Così fan tutte, Miss Roby (Mozart); Barcarolla, "Vedi che bellasera," Miss Kate Brand and Mr Seligman (Gounod); Fugue, in C minor, organ, Mr Corke (J. S. Bach); Aria, "I tuoi frequenti palpiti," Niobe, Mr James Sauvage (Pacini); Berceuse, in D flat, Op. 57, and Fantaisie Impromptu, in C sharp minor, Op. 66, pianoforte, Miss Margaret Bucknall (Chopin); Cantata, for female voices, The Fishermidens, Misses Kate Brand, Mary Davies, Reimar, Ada Patterson, and Orridge—pianoforte, Mr F. W. W. Bampfylde (Henry Smart); Scherzo a Capriccio, in F sharp minor, for the pianoforte, Miss Elwell (Mendelssohn); Song (MS.), "Forget me not," Miss Annie Butterworth (Eaton Fanning, student); Andante and Variations, in E flat, Op. 82, pianoforte, Miss Cobbe (Mendelssohn); two Vocal Duets, Misses Holcroft and Wayland; Duo Concertante, for two pianofortes, on the march in Weber's Preciosa, Mrs Paschal and Miss Burrough (Mendelssohn and Moscheles); Air, Miss Featherby; Andante Pastorale and Allegro Marziale, from Sonata, Maid of Orleans, Op. 46, Miss Goldsmith (W. Sterndale Bennett); Song, "I fear no foe," Mr Jopp (Pinsuti); Anthem, "Behold, I bring you glad tidings" (Goss). Mr Walter Macfarren conducted, and the accompanists were Messrs Hooper, Jarratt, Morton (pianoforte), and H. T. Rose (organ).

The next Students' Orchestral Concert is announced to take place at St James's Hall, on Saturday evening, March 24, when Schubert's Mass in E flat will be performed for the first time.

THE LONDON THEATRES.

Good Rhymes for Country Cousins.

Opera Grand Now to hand.	At the Haymarket, Not quite the old set.
Royalty Bouffe, Well enough.	At the Court, Good, by report.
At the Folly, Awfully jolly.	At the Lyceum, Irving, you may see 'um,
At the Queen's, In their teens.	At the Princess's, London's intricacies.
At the St James's, Frenchified mesa.	At the Olympic, Anti-Irish fit.
At the Criterion, On Bail they try on.	At the Gaiety, Paul Pry .
At the Adelphi, Everything they try.	At the Aquarium, Black-eyed Susan .
At the Vaudeville, Our Boys still.	Aquarium Aquatics, Beethoven and Hicks.
At the Strand, Always crammed.	At the Globe, Byron en robe.
At Drury Lane, Much the same.	Opera-Comique, Bohemian retreat.
At Marie Wilton, Peril still on.	At the Alhambra, Fledermaus .

At the Grecian,
Conquest in season.

To F. C. Burnand, Esq.

Benwell.

HAMBURG.—Der Widerspännstigen Zähmung has been successfully brought out at the Stadttheater.

LEIPZIG.—Herr Robert Radecke lately played several organ compositions by J. S. Bach at a sacred concert given in St Thomas's Church for the benefit of the Bach Monument in Eisenach.

AMSTERDAM.—At the request of Mad. Christine Nilsson, the French pitch has been adopted at the Theatre Royal.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

THE TWENTY-NINTH CONCERT.
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 5, 1877.

To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

- PART I.
QUARTET, in F major, Op. 59, No. 1, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Beethoven.
SONATA, in E flat, Op. 7, for pianoforte alone—Mr FRANKLIN TAYLOR ... Beethoven.
PART II.
LIEBESLIEDER-WALZER, Op. 52, for four hands on the pianoforte, and voice parts ad libitum—Pianoforte—Mdlle MARIE KREBS and Miss AGNES ZIMMERMANN; Vocalists—Mdlles SOPHIE LÖWE and HELENE ARNIM, MM. SHAKESPEARE and PYATT ... Brahms.
QUARTET, in B minor, Op. 3, No. 3, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—MM. FRANKLIN TAYLOR, JOACHIM, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Mendelssohn.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 3, 1877.

To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

- QUARTET, in B flat, Op. 67, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Brahms.
SONGS,—"Es steht ein Lind'" ... Old German.
"Golden Slumbers" ... Old English.
Mdlle THEKLA FRIEDLANDER.
PASTORALE, in F major ... Bach.
PRELUDE and FUGUE, in E minor—For pianoforte alone ... Bach.
Mdlle SCHUMANN.
SONGS,—"Es hat die Rose sich beklagt" ... Franz.
"Ich wandre nicht" ... Schumann.
Mdlle THEKLA FRIEDLANDER.
QUINTET, in E flat, Op. 44, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello—Mdlle SCHUMANN, MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Schumann.
Conductor ... Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR CUNNINGHAM BOOSEY.—The doctorate, which is one of the appendices to Dr Liszt's many honours, was conferred upon him by the University at Königsberg—equal to our Kingston, or King's Town. Farmer Point, when dealing in north German cattle there, could boast beeves, if not muttons.

NOTICE.

With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive four pages extra, and again, from TIME TO TIME, as expedient.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1877.

ADELINA PATTI.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—This incomparable artist has condescended (rather descended) to write a disclaimer to the Editor of a paper which published in its columns one of the most infamous articles that ever helped to strengthen the arguments of those idiots who hold the honourable profession of Journalism in contempt. Here is a translation of her letter:—

(To the Editor of the "Figaro.")

"SIR,—On the 15th inst. I instituted proceedings against the Marquis de Caux for a judicial separation. The matter being before the Courts, I shall say nothing upon a subject on which the legal authorities will have to decide. My attention has this morning been drawn to articles published in your paper on the 21st and 22nd inst. I take the first opportunity of protesting against a story which is absolutely incorrect. I arrived at St. Petersburg on the 1st of December last, and with my husband, M. le Marquis de Caux, took up my residence in apartments at the Hotel Demouth, which I then occupied for the ninth time. I remained there until the 22nd inst., passing my life in the sight of all, enjoying the consideration which has always been extended to me, and surrounded up to the last hour by numerous and honourable friends, and escorted by them even to the carriage which brought me direct to Paris, accompanied by my maid, M. Franchi, my theatrical agent, and my two servants. I arrived in Paris for the purpose of attending to my suit and of presenting myself tomorrow before the President of the Tribunal. I request you to publish this letter in your earliest issue. Accept the assurance of my high consideration."—ADELINA PATTI, Marquise de Caux.

"Paris, Monday, Feb. 28."

What the press has to do with the private life of persons exercising the profession of which Mdlle Patti is so brilliant an ornament, we could never understand; but if artists will stoop to take notice of paragraphs and articles alike offensive and disgraceful to journalism, they must take the consequences. Qui s'excuse s'accuse; and this is exactly the position in which Mdlle Patti, through bad advice, or her own indiscretion, has placed herself. Nevertheless, it does not make the conduct of certain "journalists" (so-called) a bit less mean and reprehensible. One would guess from the article (which we have read with intense disgust); that the writer had followed the Marquise de Caux from St Petersburg to Paris, step by step, prying into her every movement, squatting, like a toad, under her table, and, for that matter, creeping underneath her bed, like the contemptible hero of Balzac's Peau de Chagrin. We can imagine nothing so dastardly. To such prying, however, public characters are exposed. The greater their eminence, the greater the number of their would-be detectives, their mouchards—their Jonathan Wyldes, in short. What had the Marquise ever done to this writer that he should dog her footsteps like a down-tailed cur? What was the Marquis de Caux to him, or he to the Marquis de Caux? Was he ever implicated in their differences? Time enough when they are brought before a tribunal of justice—and then the whole country, if it be a free country, is concerned to know the verdict of the court.

If this dirty sneakhoodism (as Carlyle would say) is to be a characteristic of the press, then is the press degraded to the lowest depths, and I, for one, would as soon associate with the common hangman as with any one of its members. The Press should be (and honourably conducted is) the first, not the fourth, estate; but, used for such vile purposes, it becomes no recognisable state at all.

Poor Adelina! Who could have been the fool that advised thee to take public notice of such filthy garbage? Leave these things in future to scavengers, who exist upon dirt.

AN ENGLISH MUSICIAN.

Clarendon Hotel, Birmingham

Threatened Visit of Richard Wagner.

We have received a communication from Bayreuth, which we print literatim et verbatim (especially verbatim):—

"I have much pleasure to inform you, that I have just now heard by best authority that Mr A. Wilhelmj has succeeded in persuading the great master Richard Wagner to conduct some concerts in London personally. The maestro, who, as is well known, has a very high opinion of the musical talents of Wilhelmj, will accordingly give a series of concerts along with him. Mr Wilhelmj will not merely play the solo parts, but will also be acting as solo violinist, the same as he did at the festival plays of Bayreuth. The programme has not been fixed as yet, but I have been told that besides Wagner's own compositions the works of Beethoven will be performed as well. These concerts will no doubt be the main point of attraction of this year's musical season. And England may well be proud of having the greatest composer of the day amongst them. These concerts are for the benefit of the Bayreuth festival play fund.

"Bayreuth, February 27th, 1877."

The above is printed verbatim et literatim (especially literatim).

D. P.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

It is stated that Madame Adelina Patti, accompanied by her advocate, M. Devormandie, appeared on Tuesday before the Civil Tribunal of the Seine to sue for authorisation of separation from her husband. The Marquis de Caux was also present, with his counsel, M. Maza. The husband and wife were ushered into the private chamber of the President, in order that the usual statutory attempt at reconciliation should be made, but all representations failing, the judge issued an order authorising the lady to present her demand, and allowing her in the meantime to reside with her sister, Mdme Strakosch. The same decree gives Mdme Patti leave, during the suit, to sing at Paris, Vienna, London, and other cities where she has engagements. Mdme Patti has left for Vienna, where she is engaged to sing on Saturday.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY AND MUSICIANS.—The installation of Herr Joseph Joachim as Dr of Music in the University of Cambridge on the 8th of this month promises to be an affair of more than ordinary interest. Herr Brahms has expressed his inability to come to England to be honoured by a similar distinction on the same occasion; but with Herr Joachim there we need not shed many tears about Herr Brahms. Years gone by the late Meyerbeer disappointed the University, when, at the suggestion of Dr Macfarren's predecessor, Sterndale Bennett, the composer of the Huguenots was to be installed Doctor in Music at Cambridge; the expressions of Meyerbeer's regret, however, were couched in such language as to show that his absence was not merely from caprice, but in consequence of illness making a journey to England impossible at the time. Herr Brahms is a great man in his way, but Meyerbeer was at least equally renowned. Herr Brahms cannot receive his diploma without presenting himself at the ceremonial. It is too much trouble, however, for him to come; and so we have lost not only Meyerbeer, but Brahms. Nevertheless, Haydn was initiated Mus. Doc. at Oxford; and Haydn, after all, was somebody.—Graphic.

THE celebrated vocalist, Anastasia Robinson, was descended from a good family in Leicestershire. Her father was a portrait painter, but, owing to loss of sight, was deprived of the power of supporting his family. Yielding to his daughter's strong love of music, he placed her under Dr Croft, Sandoni, and an Italian singer called the Baroness. Anastasia sang at the King's Theatre for some years, till at length her personal charms and accomplishments, combined with the amiability of her character, won the heart of the Earl of Peterborough, who privately married her, and, after a time, publicly acknowledged her as his wife. She survived him about fifteen years and died in 1750.

ON one occasion, when he was a Singing-Boy at Exeter Cathedral, Inoleodon was selected to take part in the anthem, "Let my complaint come before Thee, O Lord." Judge Nares, then upon the Western Circuit, and a brother of Dr Nares, attached to the Chapel Royal, was so deeply affected by the pathos and sensibility the boy infused into the solo, "Let my soul live," that he burst into tears, and, sending for the young vocalist after the service, presented him with five guineas, as a token of his great approbation.

MESSRS HUG, of Zurich, have now for sale a most curious and interesting relic. This is Beethoven's piano, which the master used during the whole of his glorious career, and which was made expressly for him by a Vienna firm. Evidence of its authenticity is in the hands of the present possessors.

THE Marquise de Caux has written to some papers—the Paris Figaro among others—to deny the truth of certain scandalous articles which have been published to her disparagement. Charming and accomplished, but ill-advised lady!

THE scheme of obtaining, by public subscription, the amount requisite for the execution of a bust of Herr Joachim is relinquished at his particular request, it having never been submitted to him for his approval.

"Of all the fine arts"—says Mad. de Staël—"music is the one which acts most immediately on the soul. The others direct the latter to such and such an idea; music appeals to the inmost source of existence, and entirely changes our internal disposition. What has been said about divine grace, which suddenly transforms hearts, may, humanly speaking, be applied to the power of melody; and among our presentiments of the life to come, those which spring from music are not to be despised. Music is so transient a pleasure, and we feel so strongly that it is escaping from us even while we hear it, that a melancholy impression is blended with the gaiety it excites. But, on the other hand, when it expresses sorrow, it calls also into existence a sweet feeling. The heart beats more quickly as we listen to it; while the satisfaction caused by the regularity of the measure reminds us of the shortness of time, which it thus makes us want to enjoy. There is no longer a void, there is no longer silence around us; life is filled up, and the blood flows rapidly; we feel in ourselves the movement attending a life of activity, and we have not to fear, outside of us, the obstacles with which such a life meets. Music doubles the faculties of our soul; on listening to it we feel capable of the noblest efforts. Thanks to music, we march enthusiastically to death; music possesses the happy inability of expressing any low sentiment or falsehood. In the language of music, misfortune itself is without bitterness, without anguish, and without irritation. Music gently raises the weight which we have nearly always in our heart, if we are susceptible of serious and deep affection—a weight sometimes confounded with the sentiment of existence itself, so habitual is the pain it causes. We seem, when listening to pure and delicious sounds, as though we were about to seize on the secret of the Creator, and penetrate the mystery of life. No words can express this impression, for words crawl after primitive impressions as prose translators crawl after the footsteps of poets. The vagueness of music adapts itself to every movement of the soul; and we all believe we recognise in a melody, as in the pure and tranquil luminary of night, the image of what we desire upon earth."

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

GERMAN ATHENÆUM.—This society held its usual monthly musical evening for the forty-sixth time on Saturday, February 24th, at 51, Mortimer Street, under the direction of Herr Daubert, who made an excellent choice of pieces. The first was Beethoven's quintet for strings, Op. 29, led by Herr Ludwig, who acquitted himself in a musicianlike manner. Herr Henschel, who made a favourable impression at the last Monday Popular Concert, sang a ballad by Loewe in fine style, and earned the applause due to his talents. Herren Coenen and Daubert played Brahms's Sonata, Op. 38, in E minor, for pianoforte and violoncello, which was warmly applauded. The allegretto movement pleased the most. Herr Henschel then gave two songs by Brahms, and the musical part of the entertainment concluded with Schubert's posthumous quintet in D minor, led by Herr Wiener in a manner that gained the approbation of the company. In the variations, especially, Herr Weiner was admirable. The other artists who assisted were Messrs van Praag and Hahn. Herr Von Ernst Larsen was the chairman of the evening.

Mdme MARIE BELVAL gave a concert at Langham Hall, on Thursday evening, the 28th ult., which attracted a large attendance. Mdme Belval possesses a sympathetic contralto voice, which she fully developed in Sir Julius Benedict's song, "By the sad sea waves," accompanied by the composer; Gluck's "Che farò," a song by Mr Wilhelm Ganz, and the Scotch ballad, "Bonnie Dundee," in all of which she proved herself a thorough artist. Mdme Belval and Mr George Perren gave Balfe's duet, "The Sailor sighs," so well that they were unanimously called upon to repeat it. Mr G. Perren was never in better voice. He sang, in perfection, Ascher's popular romance, "Alice, where art thou?" Mr Perren sang equally well Sir J. Benedict's "Eily Mavourneen." Mdme Liebhart gave Mr G. B. Allen's "Little Bird" (flute obbligato, Signor Luigi Corrozzini), and was compelled to repeat it. Miss Annie Sinclair gave "Jenny of the Mill," in good style, and was encored. Miss Lelia Bertie sang Mr Ganz's "Nightingale's trill" and a song by Rossini; Mr Wm. Shakespeare, Mr Ganz's "I seek for thee" and the serenade, "Ecco ridente;" and Miss F. Brookes a song, set to the well-known words "God upon the ocean." Herr Josef Ludwig and Signor Pezze each played solos on the violin and violoncello, and joined Mr W. Ganz in excerpts from Mendelssohn's Trio, Op. 49, and Beethoven's, Op. 1. Mr Ganz played his new galop, "Allons vite," and his réverie, "Vision du passé," and accompanied, with Sir Julius Benedict, the vocal pieces. Miss Marie Belval's concert was a success, and deservedly so.

M. HENRI LOGÉ, a young Belgian pianist, who has established himself in London, gave a concert at St George's Hall, on Tuesday morning, assisted by his sister, Mlle Gabrielle Logé. M. Logé's performances consisted of classical as well as modern compositions. Among those specially noticeable were Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor; the Andante and final movement of Beethoven's Sonata Appassionata; a Polonaise, by Chopin; and a composition of his own, "Les Patineurs." The approbation of the audience was awarded to M. Logé at the conclusion of each piece. Mlle Gabrielle Logé made a favourable impression; her singing of "Connais-tu le pays" (Mignon), and songs by Gounod and others, met with marked encouragement.

MISS FLORENCE MAY gave her first recital this season, at Langham Hall, on Thursday, March 1. The programme contained: Beethoven's Sonata, in C major, Op. 53 (dedicated to Count Waldstein); a Gavotte, with variations, in A minor, by Rameau; Studies, by Chopin (Vivace, D flat major; Allegro ma non troppo, G flat major; Presto, C sharp minor); Mendelssohn's Barcarolle, in A major; Schumann's Etudes en forme de Variations, in C sharp minor (Etudes Symphoniques), Op. 13; Bach's Gavotte, in G minor; Handel's Gigue, in G minor; and Hungarian Dances, by Brahms. It was quite a "feast" of good things for the select and appreciative audience who assembled to listen to the young pianist's clever performance. At the conclusion, Miss May was unanimously "called" to receive well-merited applause. Miss May's next recital is announced for Thursday week.

PROVINCIAL.

DUBLIN.—The Gaiety Theatre has been crowded nightly since Miss Alice May has appeared. The Irish Times of the 13th thus criticises Miss May:—"Her reception was more than a success—it was a triumph. Her voice is beautifully clear, tuneful, and 'young'; her art is elegant and piquant, full of grace and espièglerie; her personal attractions are very considerable, and her great acting is distinguished by vivacity and 'chic,' without a trace of anything approaching in the remotest degree to 'broadness' or vulgarity." All the press of Dublin are most liberal of praise to the young "Australian nightingale." Of La Fille de Madame Angot, given for the first time by Mr South's company, the Irish Times says:—"We expected great things from Miss May, and we were not disappointed. Her Mlle Lange was a very complete impersonation. Her acting is very graceful and piquant, of a decidedly French school—particularly in gesture and accent—but by no means 'Frenchy' in the signification of the term which is taken to convey ideas of an unpleasant character. There is not the smallest souçon of broadness or offensiveness in her manner, while the text spoken by her wants nothing on the score of intelligent interpretation. Her song, 'The Hussars of Angereau,' and the duet with Clairette in the second act, were 'encored.' Her rendering of the part was a perfect success." Thus Dublin confirms the good opinions of London, Liverpool, and other towns, as well as that of India, Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The members of the Polytechnic Institution were gratified on Wednesday evening with a superior class of "concert-lecture," given by Mrs John Macfarren and two lady vocalists, whose combined talents awakened, and unremittingly continued the interest and enjoyment of a large and attentive audience. Mrs John Macfarren's pianoforte performances are distinguished by artistic conception, and her judgment in the selection of classical compositions is acceptable to the most refined taste, yet not too remote from the sympathies of less instructed hearers. The exordiums, descriptive of the peculiar styles of the different masters, were delivered with distinctness of elocution and musical accent. The two lady singers fairly divided the honours, each in turn receiving the emphatic approbation of the audience. Miss Agnes Drummond (soprano) possesses the qualities of a first-class vocalist, and Miss Orridge (contralto), a richness and depth of tone most graceful to the ear.

H. S. T.

NEW BROMPTON (Chatham).—Herr J. Saverthal (Royal Engineers) has been giving concerts with a string band, composed of a select number of the military band of the regiment, in the schoolroom of the military engineers, before the officers and their friends. We give the programme of the concert of February 26th as a specimen:—Overture, Prometheus (Beethoven); Symphony, Surprise, No. 6 (Haydn); Overture, The Naiades (W. S. Bennett); Lied, "Am Meer" (Schubert); Intermezzo, Midsummer Night's Dream (Mendelssohn); Allegretto, "Alla Turca;" Sonata in A (Mozart). The concerts reflect credit on the enterprise of Herr Saverthal.

Moscow.—Wagner's Tannhäuser has been produced at the Imperial Operahouse. The principal parts were sustained by Anna d'Angéry, Smerowski, Naudin, and Cotogni. Bevnigani conducted.

FAURE IN THE FRENCH PROVINCES.

Finis coronat opus may with justice be applied to the great French barytone's concluding performance in Lyons, ere he left that city for Bordeaux. The Salut Public, of the 19th February, says with reference to this performance:—

"M. Faure terminated yesterday, with Hamlet, at the Grand-Théâtre, his series of performances, which have been for him a triumph in four evenings. The four performances have exhibited, under four different aspects, his double and marvellous talent as a singer and an actor; tender and melancholy as Alphonse; powerful and overflowing with patriotism as Guillaume Tell; elegantly diabolical as Mephistopheles; terrible and fatal as Hamlet; besides being an accomplished singer in all four. Why could he not add to this quadruple incarnation that in which he is more admirable than any: Don Juan? Had he done so, the festival would have been complete. Unfortunately, Don Juan is not a stock piece at our Grand-Théâtre. After Don Juan, Hamlet is, indisputably, M. Faure's most considerable creation. In all the other characters he has had successors, some of whom have, perhaps, surpassed him; but the part of Hamlet is one which he has entirely formed himself, and on which he has set so personal a stamp that he has, so to speak, made it his own, and in consequence it belongs exclusively to him. . . . The Hamlet of Shakespeare would not tamely have submitted to M. Ambroise Thomas's music. The librettists have filed down the angularities. . . . This pasteboard Hamlet, tricked out in M. Thomas's music, has found in M. Faure a magician who has endowed it with life. With the help of the music it would be as dull as ditchwater, had not the great artist slipped so thoroughly inside it, and caused it to move its arms and legs. . . . This is a feat of strength, and we are not surprised at M. Faure's attempting it; but certainly no feat of strength was ever more victoriously executed. We cannot cite the passages in which M. Faure was inferior or superior to himself; everything was delivered and sung with perfection; perhaps, with even too much perfection. The mad scene and the drunken song in the third act evoked an encore, three re-calls, and two wreaths. The rest was in keeping."

The critic of the Courier de Lyons writes on the same date:—

"The house was crammed; the iron columns of the upper galleries, overheated by the breath of so many persons, perspired, to use the picturesque expression of an enthusiast, who had not shrunk from mounting up to the fourth tier for the purpose of hearing the master. Fancy: as early as one o'clock in the day a very respectable 'tail' already twined and twisted under the peristyle of the Grand-Théâtre. Some of the individuals composing it had brought campstools with them, and waited patiently, chatting with their neighbours, or nibbling, from time to time, a piece of sausage. It is evident that, at a fifth performance, frantic admirers would have taken up their position the evening before. It must have been out of pity for these unhappy melomaniacs that M. Faure, perceiving the temperature was growing cooler, refused to sing again. He would not, doubtless, assume the responsibility of so many cases of bronchitis. I can see no other plausible motive for his refusal, if I take into consideration the continually increasing ovations with which he was greeted. . . . Before such an interpretation criticism is mute. . . . As far as I am concerned, M. Faure has given me the Hamlet of whom I dreamed when reading Shakespeare. . . . Hamlet is no madman. There have been tragedians of talent who thus caricatured the poet's thought. . . . M. Faure has not fallen into this mistake. He has conceived the part in a more elevated sense; and those who never saw him previously will be dazzled by the performance, as though Titian's Danaë had suddenly walked out of the canvas in all her resplendent nudity. The impersonation is an embodied dream."

From Lyons M. Faure proceeded to Bordeaux. His reception on the banks of the Garonne was as warm and enthusiastic as it had been on those of the Rhone. La Province of the 23rd February is in no way behind the papers already cited in its appreciation of M. Faure. Here are some extracts from its notice:—

"The performances, so impatiently looked forward to, of the celebrated barytone, Faure, have at length just commenced at the Grand-Théâtre. Long before the box lists were opened, the box office was besieged by numberless demands, and, when official intimation of the artist's speedy arrival was given, the subscribers, who enjoy the privilege of securing their places a day before the general public, took in a moment nearly the entire house for the three performances of Faust, Guillaume Tell, and La Favorite. After this, it is superfluous to observe that the theatre was crammed, and that for some days tickets were at a premium. . . . We may state that Faure the concert singer in no way resembles Faure the artist on the stage, and that those who had the good fortune to hear him at his concerts three months since, can form no notion of what he was yesterday evening in Doctor Faust's laboratory; in the midst of the dancing at the Kermesse; under the shady trees of Marguerite's garden; at the door of the church; or in the palace of Mephistopheles. Faure is not merely the eminent singer with the supple voice of extensive compass, the consummate musician, long familiar with all the difficulties of his art, whom we then applauded in the airs from the Siege de Corinthe, of Paulus, and of Joconde; in "Les Rameaux" the 'Alléluia d'Amour' and Adam's 'Noël;' he is, also, a first rate actor, who unites with his marvellous singing the most appropriate and most varied stage-play. From the moment Mephistopheles appears, we derive as much enjoyment from seeing as from hearing him. Look at him, for instance, when he is studying the old Doctor, and endeavouring to discover through what secret door he can penetrate to the Doctor's heart. Observe the insinuating air, with which he glides among the toppers seated in the great square; the expression of anguish he imparts to his features in presence of the sign of Redemption; his comic walk with Gretchen's attendant; his sardonic laugh; his proud and aggravating attitudes towards his adversaries; the fixed nature of the look he directs on the poor repentant girl; and his supreme efforts to snatch the two lovers from the fatal prison. Then, after all this, listen as he sends forth his triumphant notes in the 'Veau d'Or;' as he sighs his serenade at Marguerite's door; and as he executes with incomparable breadth of style the magnificent scene in the church, going through the smallest passages of recitative with striking truth, and imparting to the whole an importance of which no one appears to have thought it susceptible. He repeated the Serenade, and the public would doubtless have asked, also, for the grand scene in the church again, had they not feared being too indiscreet."

La Gironde corroborates this flattering notice:—

"Yesterday evening M. Faure's first performance, awaited with such impatience, at length came off at the Grand-Théâtre. The house presented an unusual sight. The stalls and the pit were absolutely crammed with persons in grand toilet. . . . After the ronde of the 'Veau d'Or,' the public could not restrain themselves. When the applause began, it finished only with the apotheosis of the last act. The quartet in the fourth act, the final scene in the garden, and especially the serenade in the fourth act, with its strange chucklings (it had to be repeated), the scene in the church, &c., were so many opportunities for M. Faure to achieve a triumph. Those who have heard him only at a concert know but one side of his genius; the actor in his case is on a level with the singer. . . . To extol Faure's splendid voice and exceptional vocal talent would be to analyse perfection."

VERDI'S "REQUIEM."

(From the "Echo.")

A performance of Verdi's Requiem free from the interest and excitement which attended its introduction under the auspices of the illustrious composer, was needed to confirm the favourable opinion that has been expressed of its merits, and test its powers of enlisting the sympathies of the general musical public. Though anxiously looked for, such a performance has been long delayed, owing doubtless to the inability of our musical societies to command the same amount of executive ability as was brought to bear upon the work when Verdi himself first introduced it to an English audience. The desired performance took place before as large an audience as ever assembled in the Royal Albert Hall. The result testified to the worth of previously expressed opinions, and indicated the measure of the future popularity in store for Verdi's chef d'œuvre. Before an audience well versed in the sublime oratorios of Bach, Handel, and Mendelssohn, and the no less sublime Requiem of Mozart, it would not have been surprising had the more dramatic character of Verdi's Requiem found objectors, especially as the performance was experimental, and was to decide whether the Requiem music was of the order to justify its being associated with those works which constitute the repertory of the Royal Albert Choral Society. But the proofs of genius were too numerous to admit of nice distinctions being made between what is ecclesiastical and what is sacred, whilst the pathetic character of some of the phrases was so touching, the description of the anguish of the unrepentant so graphic, the originality of every motivo so striking, and the skill of a great master so apparent, that the judgment pronounced by Spohr on Rossini's Stabat Mater might fairly be said to be that of the entire audience:—"If we may not call it Church music, let us agree to speak of it as fine music, as the best fruits of a composer's gifts laid on the altar of his religion."

CRYSTAL PALACE ORATORIOS.

The first of a series of "Lenten Oratorios" was given at the Crystal Palace with remarkable success, an audience numbering nearly two thousand persons being attracted by Haydn's Creation. The choruses were sung by two hundred members of the Crystal Palace choir, many also members of the Sacred Harmonic Society, and sung, too, with great spirit. The fine band of the Palace was equal to all requirements, but the opening "Representation of Chaos" would have been more effective had the wind instruments been balanced by a larger number of strings. The organist, Mr. Willing, discharged his duties admirably, and the organ was substituted as accompaniment to the recitatives, to the manifest advantage of the general effect. The principal soprano was Miss Robertson, pupil of Signor Randegger, the purity of whose style and the refinement of whose phrasing did credit alike to scholar and instructor, and exacted a highly favourable impression. The tenor was Mr. Barton McGuckin, who possesses a voice of exceptionally fine quality, and obtained well-deserved applause for his excellent rendering of "In native worth." Signor Federici, to whom the bass music was entrusted, left nothing to be desired; and although his voice is more a barytone than a bass, he did full justice to the lowest notes of the music. His articulation, too, was good—a rare merit—also observable in Miss Robertson and Mr. McGuckin. The conductor was Mr. Manns.

On Tuesday, March 6, Mendelssohn's Elijah will be performed; on Tuesday, March 20, Rossini's Stabat Mater and Mozart's Twelfth Mass. These "Lenten Oratorios" seem likely to prove attractive.—Lynt, Globe, Feb. 20.

CARRODUS AT MANCHESTER.

(From the "Manchester Examiner and Times.")

Although Mr. Carrodus has been too long absent from the Manchester concert rooms, the enthusiastic reception from the audience and orchestra which greeted him on Monday evening could not leave him in doubt about the estimation in which he is held. We were proud of him when as a Keighley boy he satisfied some of the most exacting of critics, and his masterly execution of Molique's fine concerto proved that he had lost none of the skill and cunning which won so much admiration in years gone by. Molique's work is one of those dignified and classical compositions which reflect honour on the age which produces them; every movement has its individual character, and the unity of the concerto as a whole is not less striking than the attractive beauty of the separate parts. Mr. Carrodus, who played the concerto from memory, is not only a complete master of the technicalities of his instrument, but, as a pupil of Molique, he is a faithful exponent of the thoughts of his illustrious master. At the end of the concerto the clever executant was enthusiastically recalled. In the second part Mr. Carrodus played two charming compositions by Tours. The dreamy beauty of the "Romanza" was admirably realised, and the "Tarantella" afforded the executant an opportunity to display both skill and versatility. In these pieces Mr. Carrodus had the advantage of Mr. Halle's pianoforte accompaniments.

[This was at the Gentlemen's Concert—absurd name, now that we have no more Sir Charles Grandisons—of February 28.—D. P.]

MR JOHN OXENFORD.

(To the Editor of "The Times.")

SIR,—In your just but too brief article on the late Mr. John Oxenford, you speak of his being entirely self taught. It seems due to the memory of a scholar who has long passed away, Mr. S. T. Friend, to recall the fact that Mr. John Oxenford was for some two years one of the most favoured, and certainly the most gifted, of the pupils of that somewhat eccentric man of genius, who would, had he been able, have dissuaded Oxenford from his dramatic career—considering that he had the highest philosophical faculties, together with a versatility of powers which pointed to another sphere. His dramatic taste, however, was developed so early that his heart was not to be given to other pursuits. I was his fellow pupil (for he was but a trifle my senior), and I remember his eager dramatic efforts in the drawing-room at Camberwell. He was but a boy—a very graceful and attractive boy. I could get him at that time to think of little else than the drama, though he was far ahead of all around him in scholarship at fourteen years of age; and I bear testimony to his unsurpassed sweetness of character and self-forgetting nobleness and childlikeness. W. J. I.

["W. J. I." would do well to quote correctly. The writer in The Times did not say "entirely," but almost, self taught. The two years with Mr. Friend could not have taught John Oxenford one-hundredth part of what he knew and had acquired by his own unassisted industry.—D. P.]

Beethoven at the Aquarium.

There can scarcely be much discussion concerning the highest aim of symphony writing, and we have Beethoven's own words to show what he meant when he composed the "Sinfonia Pastorale, No. 6, Op. 68." Symphonies such as Beethoven wrote are surely the most invigorating stimulants to the imagination, and the great master, although he gave in this very work the keynote to his impressions, yet declared that his Pastoral Symphony was rather the record of impressions than actual representation of facts. We can well imagine the horror caused to some minds by the exhibition of a moving illustrative panorama during the execution of Beethoven's sublime work. We can forgive the scorn occasioned by the dull declaration that such music cannot inspire without assistance, and that the mind is dead to fancy before such enchantment. But horrified as we may be, and scornful as we may be, still we are brought face to face with the fact that no gates to enchantment are unlocked by the genius of the musician, and that when he pipes there are some who will not dance. The question, therefore, resolves itself into this, are we to leave unimpressionable minds in a state of darkness and chaos, are we to reserve Beethoven and his symphonies for such as understand and appreciate them, or may we in all gentle kindness suggest their beauty in a round about and, artistically speaking, an heretical fashion? Not much harm can surely be done by scenic illustrations to the Pastoral Symphony, and if any chance converts are made to the imaginative school, the honest design of the Aquarium authorities may well be spared some of that "scorn of scorn" to which it is at the outset exposed. There will be some who will listen to the music and shut their eyes, and many more who will gaze at the panorama and shut their ears; but if music and scenery in combination suggest to any mind the refining and ennobling influence of Beethoven, it may be possible that such humble inquirers may be spared some of the lashes inflicted by an avenging aestheticism. But now that the thing has been done, now that Beethoven's "record of impressions" has been taken up to the painting-room, now that his adorable fancy has been exposed to the harsh rigour of reality, now that his May meadows and sunlit fields, and carousing villagers, and thunder-storms, and thanksgiving prayers have been measured out by rule of thumb on canvas, it is indeed curious to observe how differently one sublime subject can appeal to varied minds. Mr Julian Hicks has painted a beautiful panorama, but to say that the panorama touches the musical sentiment or the first principles of the idyll would be disloyalty to Beethoven and unfriendly to nature. We will allow, for the sake of argument, that identical impressions are not created by the same touch, but if this magic symphony was not meant to suggest the exquisite simplicity of nature and the purity of rural innocence, it meant nothing. Mr Hicks has discarded the purely pastoral, and directed the mind to the abstract classical. He does not take his audience with the music through meadows, by the side of rivulets, amongst the villagers. When are the "pleasant feelings aroused in the heart on arriving in the country" in this unreal world of classic temples, broken columns, and impossible citadels? It was the country that God made, and not the palaces built by man that Beethoven described. It is as true now as then. The blue-bell fields of Kent, the solemn shade of the beeches and oaks of England, the villagers of our own time, the rural charms of England, all come before us with the first notes of Beethoven's pastoral music. Could not Mr Julian Hicks have led us among the hedge-rows and thatched villages of our own land instead of conducting us to the stately grandeur of an unknown world? We see an Acropolis on every hill, and a ruined Palmyra in every valley. The carousing villagers are attired like Paris on the hill of Ida, the dances are suggestive of fauns and satyrs. Pan and Bacchus, Eneone and Adonis are the figures in the panoramic picture, and the red storm-sun sinks upon a wild plain scattered about with Corinthian columns. The management has done well in its honest effort to educate the taste, the scenic artist has painted a moving picture distinguished for its boldness and beauty. Mr George Mount has done his best for Beethoven's music, but picture and music are distinct and apart. The mind refuses to take them together.—Chabucus Egg.

HERR WILHELMJ IN DUBLIN.

Messrs Cramer, Wood & Co. have earned the gratitude of all musicians and musical amateurs residing in the capital of the Emerald Isle by affording them an opportunity of hearing the above celebrated artist, who gave his first concert in the Bijou Concert Rooms, Westmoreland Street. Of course, Herr Wilhelmj was very successful, and produced a deep impression. The Dublin Express says:—

"Herr Wilhelmj is, in truth, an instrumental star of the first magnitude. Transcendent excellence in violin playing is sometimes associated with a weird, attenuated figure in the performer; but Herr Wilhelmj's personal appearance—if he will pardon the reference to it—does not at all bear out this theory. His tall form and almost massive shoulders seem cast in a military mould, and his thick black hair and deeply-marked features finish the portrait of a man of uncommon power. The pieces he selected were in the highest degree calculated to afford scope to his powers and delight to the most critical audience. To hear Mendelssohn's Concerto for the Violin played by Wilhelmj was indeed a rare treat, which many will long remember. The perfect tune in which he plays, no matter how trying may be the music, or how much double-stopping may be involved, although but one of the group of excellencies which belong to him, and small compared with the rest, imparts a singular and satisfying charm to his performance. His tone is so rich and powerful that the sounds of the instrument not only filled a room the construction of which was calculated to deaden echo, but penetrated through Messrs Cramer's house. The expression and execution he exhibited were superb. The orchestral accompaniment not being attainable, the pianoforte accompaniment was substituted. This was played in an admirable and perfectly worthy manner by Herr Rudolph Niemann. It is needless to add that Wilhelmj was heartily applauded. His next piece was a violin theme, adapted by himself, from one of Chopin's Nocturnes, in which his double-stopping was wonderful, and he had to comply with an encore. Finally he played the aria and variations from Beethoven's Kreutzer Sonata, the pianoforte part being taken by Herr Niemann. Words fail to convey the charming effect of this. What came from the violin was more like a voice, a speech, or a song than anything else; and every justice was done by the pianist to the pianoforte part."

The critic of Freeman's Journal entertains quite as high an opinion of the German virtuoso, and tells us:—

"The first note he drew from his violin revealed the master, and when the piece—Mendelssohn's Concerto in E minor—was finished, the enthusiasm and admiration of his hearers were expressed in a rapturous burst of applause. Herr Wilhelmj must be ranked amongst the best violinists of our day. Every note was fine and bright, and drawn, when there was need, with the rarest and most exquisite delicacy; yet there were a power and a breadth that reached the most impassioned and vigorous expression. The most careful and critical attention could not detect an atom of untunefulness. Wilhelmj's second piece was his own arrangement of a Nocturne by Chopin, which he played superbly—so superbly that it elicited an irresistible encore. His last appearance was with Herr Niemann, in Beethoven's Kreutzer Sonata, which he played throughout with marvellous grace, nerve, and fluency. Such an artist is a rarity."

The Irish Times is "short and sweet"—but very sweet. It observes:—

"There is scarcely any necessity to allude to the violin playing of Herr Wilhelmj. For such a performer there is no room for criticism, and eulogy is needless; the breadth, solidity, and magnificent power of his playing—the tone, finish, and elegance of the great master—could not fail to reach the least instructed of the audience. His first piece was Mendelssohn's Concerto in E minor, which he played admirably. Encored in a Nocturne by Chopin, he played a solo on the Meistersinger (Wagner), and afterwards, with Herr Niemann, the andante from the Kreutzer Sonata. Herr Wilhelmj was very cordially applauded throughout."

Herr Rudolf Niemann, as already mentioned, was the pianist. Besides accompanying Herr Wilhelmj in Mendelssohn's Concerto, he performed a fantasia of his own and a composition by Chopin in a manner which afforded unalloyed satisfaction to an intelligent and appreciative audience. The vocalists were Miss Giulia Warwick, Mdlle Redeker, and Mr F. Love. The first-named lady gave "Within a mile o' Edinbro' Town," "Forsaken," and "Rory O'More," with great power and sweetness. Mdlle Redeker contributed "Che farò senza Euridice" from Gluck's Orfeo e Euridice, a song by Mr C. E. Essex, "Come not when I am dead," and German songs. Mr Wood's pieces were "The Pilgrim of Love" and "Eily Mavourneen." The concert delighted all present, and will be long remembered on the banks of the Liffey.

JULES JANIN'S LIBRARY.*

(Continued from page 144.)

To show how intensely Janin's wit and heart were loved, venerated, and understood by the greatest minds of our day, it now remains for us to glean among the dedications and the offerings with which people taxed their ingenuity to present him, as speedily and as magnificently as possible. Some of them possess an historical value.

Ponsard, who owed him so much in every way, Emile Augier, Alexandre Dumas the Younger, Octave Feuillet, Jules Lacroix, who used to bind up with his pieces the notices of them in Les Débats, and the two Goncourts, never produced anything without offering Janin the earliest specimen in the shape of a copy of an exceptional edition, of which only a limited number were struck off. The same was true of many other authors. Sometimes it is the manuscript itself which the author takes a pride in seeing him accept. It is thus that there will figure in the sale L'Honneur et l'Argent, Le Père prodigue, La Ciguë, and the third act of Paul Forestier, L'Invitation à la Valse, by Alexandre Dumas the Elder, Mademoiselle de Clermont, by Scribe, &c.

Roger de Beauvoir, who, in his palmy days, took a delight in ferreting out rarities for Janin, once sent him Le Livre à la mode (printed in green ink) by Carraccioli, with an autographic expression of homage twenty-eight lines long, and, on another occasion, Cicero's Cato major (Barbous, 1758), in magnificent old binding:—

To J. J.

A toi cet orateur romain
Philosophe au brillant plumage,
Accepte Caton de ma main,
C'est un fou qui te donne un sage.†

M. Thiers reserved the first large paper copy of his Histoire du Consulat for "His excellent friend, Janin." After the Coup d'Etat, Armand Bertin wrote Janin a letter, which Janin added to Bertin's own catalogue, and which runs thus:—

MY DEAR JANIN,—I have not seen you to-day (3rd January, 1852); I wanted to say that I again beg you not to attempt to entrap the censure. By entrapping them you first entrap me, and begin by getting the feuilleton suppressed, and the paper afterwards, &c.

In consequence of this, Jules, like a good fellow as he was, held his tongue and chafed at the bit. He had just received, however, a very profound piece of consolation. Louis Philippe's august widow had made him the truly royal present of the finest known copy of the Marguerites de la Marguerite (Lyons: Jean de Fourmes, 1547), and of the Elzevir Régnier of 1652—NOT CUT!—which had for its neighbour in his library the Ronsard of 1555-1559, offered, also, by a Queen—a Stage-Queen:—

Offered to M. J. Janin by the Lady of the Camelias, EUGENIE DOCHE.

Among other clever women, I may mention Augustine Brohan, represented by five letters interchanged with Mad. Janin on the subject of her proverb: Compter sans son Hôte—Suzanne Lagier, by a Plautus, the Venice quarto Plautus (Alde, 1572), bearing upon the fly-leaf some Latin, if you please:—

Ex munificentia equidem nostrâ, anno J. C., 1847. SUZANNE LAGIER.

There are still several other clever women, the last of all being the much-regretted Aimée Desclée, represented by La Visite des Noces, the copy of which contains with her letter a letter from the author:—

. . . Praise is always nice, but, thus awarded, it is adorable.

A woman would be happy at reading it, even though its principal subject were a rival.

Then come the poets. Ponsard was not contented with offering each of his works piously loaded with praises and thanksgivings. He brought with him from Italy a Catullus in the first Aldine edition:—

From Catullus, Tibullus, and Propertius, to the friend of Horace, a confraternal mark of homage, and from an old friend to my dear and excellent friend J. Janin.—PONSARD.

* From Le Figaro.

† To J. J.—To you is this Roman orator, a philosopher with brilliant plumage, sent; accept Cato from my hands; it is a madman who presents you with a sage.

Mistral, the Provence Virgil and Theocritus, contents himself with writing on the title-page of Mireille:—

A Jules Janin, un poutoun de Mereio!

Is not this worthy of both of them?

Béranger has heard of the magnificent copy of his complete works possessed by Janin, who hastens to forward it to him, and the song writer returns it enriched with the following words:—

My poor daughters,* return to him who received you so generously. You see, despite your little merit, how splendidly he has dressed you—you who, usually, run about the street in such sorry attire. Ah! thank the good Janin, who, aware that your old father had not the means of decking you out so richly, has taken upon himself the expenses of your toilet, and, despite so many persons interested in your ruin, has the courage to adopt and defend you. Such generosity is rare at the present day. Republican as they accuse me of being, I request you to present the assurance of my gratitude to the King of Criticism.

BERANGER.

May, 1856.

This courage, by the way, of defending whom and what he liked, never failed Janin. M. Victor Hugo has, in his finest prose, engraved his testimony to this fact, first on Les Contemplations, two volumes almost as splendid as the Béranger, ornamented with original drawings and photographs, and doubled in value by the celebrated letter of the 10th August, 1856; and then on the Légende des Siècles, in the following autographic, and, we might almost say, lapidarian dedication:—

To him who, as a poet and a friend, is inexhaustible.

To the valiant and winged pen.

To the noble heart which understands and celebrates the victory of the vanquished.

To the man who, for the last thirty years, has been one of the dazzling coronations of Paris.

TO JULES JANIN

H. H., 1st January, 1860.

VICTOR HUGO.

* * * * *

But the gem of this peerless casket, the rarest, if not the most beautiful, the most "Janinian," if we may use the word, of all these books, is a simple duodecimo volume, sternly bound by Niédreé, Peux Hommes ou Un Secret du Monde, a five-act drama in verse by poor Adolphe Dumas. The drama is not a masterpiece, but on seven leaves bound up at the beginning of the volume, the author has written some forty touching verses, and on the eighth leaf these impressive lines:—

Janin, that year, was the happiest of men, and he well deserved to be so, for he was the best of men. He fought for me a duel with swords, a pitched battle with his pen, and gave me a pension of 2,000 francs.

This is Janin to the life. What can we add to it? The tears come into our eyes before such delicacy and grandeur, and we ask ourselves how his heirs can have parted with such a book. If it is not withdrawn from the sale, we entreat the National Library, for the sake of French literature, to purchase it, and place it, open at leaf viii., in one of the glass cases of honour.

HUGUES BLAIR.

COPENHAGEN.—We read in the Dagbladet that the Swedish singer, Mdle Victoria Bunsen, who is on her return to London, gave an evening concert in the large hall in Amaliengade. It was an agreeable sight to see every seat filled in this large hall. Amongst the audience were the Ambassadors and Corps Diplomatique from different countries. Mdle Bunsen has an exceptionally good contralto voice. Her lower notes are full and rich, the higher notes are not so full, but she understands how to manage them so well that we look upon her altogether as a most excellent artist. Mdle Bunsen sang an air by Rossini, a romance by Daunström, a theme and variations by Rode, "Deh non voler," and the Brindisi by Donizetti. She was "called" after each of her songs, and enthusiastically encored after Rode's variations. Mdle Bunsen was well supported by the pianists, Mdle Félicia Bunsen and Herr Otto Bendix, as well as by the violinist, Herr Hilmer, of the Royal Opera.

* It must be borne in mind that the French word "Chansons" is feminine.

MDLLE ALBANI IN PARIS.

The season at the Théâtre-Italien did not at first give promise of being a very favourable one. Indeed, it almost seemed as, though Fashion had capriciously turned her back on the Salle Ventadour, when M. Léon Escudier was fortunate enough to secure the services of Mdle Albani. Since that lady's first appearance, the aspect of matters has completely changed, and the fair Canadian prima donna has more than justified the flattering reports which preceded her arrival at and début in the French capital. Papers of the most opposite political hue have at length found a subject on which they can, for once, agree. That subject is the exceptional talent of Mdle Albani. I could fill two or three numbers of the Musical World—supposing I were allowed to do so—with eulogiums pronounced upon her, even within the last week or so, by the press. I will give merely a specimen or two. After saying that the public had received with marked favour three modestly-scored little acts, entitled, La Sonnambula the Paris-Journal goes on to tell us that—"It is true that the name of the fair Sonnambulist was Albani, for whom the music, so sweet, so fresh, so elegiac, and so original, seemed to have been written no longer ago than yesterday. It is becoming difficult to praise Mdle Albani and, above all, to find new formulas for the purpose. When we have said that her taste is exquisite; that the art she displays is perfection itself; that her virtuosity is calculated to satisfy, but not to astound or surprise, still less to dazzle, the most particular; when we have added that she possesses, more than any other vocalist of the present day, the gift of moving us, because she is moved herself, and because, in her case, the woman and the artist are blended in a profound and true sentiment, which radiates and is communicated, not simply to the singers around her, but also, and more especially, to the public who listen to her; when we have extolled the penetrating brilliancy of her upper register; when we have said all this once and twice, we have to repeat it again; . . . and, as this is the most just and best course that can be adopted, we now do so."

Le Soleil writes in reference to her Lucia:—

"Mdle Albani was literally acclamée by a frantic audience. After her grand mad scene, she received two enormous bouquets, one of roses and the other of Parma violets. The latter was of fantastic proportions. Her performance was one long triumph."

Listen, now, to the Courier de France:—

"Mdle Albani obtained last night, before our capricious Parisian audience, a great and legitimate success, which soon assumed the character of a real triumph, such as the Théâtre-Italien has not witnessed for many long years."

The Charivari can be as serious as any of its usually graver colleagues, when it is brought face to face with such rare natural gifts enhanced by such rare artistic training. Thus does it contribute to the general outburst of praise:—

"After Lucia, Rigoletto. Mdle Albani, who does not stop to think how great her efforts are, has given only a single morrow to her grand victory of last week. She then immediately engaged in a fresh battle. It was won beforehand. For the Parisian public has definitively adopted this young glory of art, and rendered her their own by their enthusiastic bravos. . . . The Théâtre-Italien has recovered its high vogue."

But I am afraid of encroaching too much on the space of the Musical World, and will, therefore, add only an extremely significant fact recorded in the Gaulois:—

"A circumstance significative of the great success achieved by Mdle Albani is the opening of a second box office."

Surely this is a proof positive of the impression Mdle Albani has produced on the Parisian public.

R. S.

Join all our talents; let our hearts accord
The merits of a genius to record.
Shall we enrich our language by one word,
To express great thinker, writer?—Oxenford.
Wellben.

Turkey pens have been so much in use that 'tis thought there's nothing left but recourse to steel all round.
Wellben Benwell.

CONCERT OF THE POLYTECHNIC SCHOOL.

The friendly Society for Mutual Assistance, supported by the old pupils of the Polytechnic School, gives every year a concert, which, from the choice of the pieces performed and the merit of the artists, is justly considered one of the best of the season. This year we had, for the literary part, Gozlan's piece, La Pluie et le beau Temps, by the artists of the Comédie Française; in the instrumental portion, MM. Tolbecque and Régnier; and as vocalists, Mdle Anna Eyre (of the Italiens), Mdle Rosine Block (of the Opéra), Mdle Granier (of the Renaissance), and M. Bosquin. Mdles Anna Eyre and Block first sang a fragment from Rossini's Stabat. Mdle Anna Eyre then gave the air, "Ah fors è lui che l'anima," from La Traviata. We say nothing of her beauty and of the perfect grace of her toilet. What especially struck us was the suppleness of her talent, which adapted itself successively to sacred music and the most pleasing specimen of Italian opera. We had previously heard her at the Italiens, and are surprised that the management does not avail itself of the services of this excellent artist.—Le Petit Parisien.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of Organ Recitals by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 1st:—

Marche Religieuse	Adolphe Adam.
Duet, "Let thy footsteps follow," Faust	Spohr.
Soirées de Vienne (No. 6, A minor)	Schubert & Liszt.
Fantasy on Old English Carols	W. T. Best.
Prelude and Fugue (G major)	Mendelssohn.
Andante, from the Fourth Pianoforte Concerto	Beethoven.
Chorus, "Immortal fame attends thee"	Handel.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 3rd:—

Overture, composed for a Military Band	Mendelssohn.
Air, "From celestial seats descending"	Handel.
Andante, for the Organ (E flat major)	S. S. Wesley.
Sarabande, from the Second Violin Sonata	Bach.
Gavotte, from the Sixth Violoncello Sonata
Minuetto, from the First Symphony	Mendelssohn.
Marcia Eroica and Finale	W. T. Best.

TO MY ABSENT LOVE.*

Among the glittering gems of night,
That sprinkle all the azure sphere,
There is but one supremely bright,
Whose lustre shines so calm and clear.

In many a circle I have been,
Where youth and beauty brightly shine,
Where diamonds glisten 'midst the scene,
And joy o'erflows like sparkling wine;

Where every sight can please the eyes,
And music's voice is sweet to hear,
Where farthest from the heart are sighs,
And from the gaze the liquid tear.

Yet, mingling with each happy throng,
The one lone spirit there was mine;
To it my star did not belong,

One face was missing—it was thine.

G. HUNT JACKSON.

* Copyright.

SWEDEN.—We extract the following from a letter addressed to us from Göteborgsposten, January 20th, 1877:—Victoria Bunsen, our famous contralto, is at present giving concerts in Cristiania (Norway), where her first appearance took place on the 14th inst. Mdle Victoria Bunsen, who never before sang in Cristiania, was received in a most flattering way by the public as well as the press, which latter finds, among her excellent qualifications, a deep contralto, voluminous and strong, well equalised and with a pleasing timbre both in the higher and lower register. In making use of her vocal resources, she proves herself an accomplished and intelligent artist, and her execution is correct and tasteful. Her success at the concert was complete; applause and re-calls followed every number, and the last one, the Brindisi from Lucrezia Borgia, was encored. Mdle Felicia Bunsen is praised as an accompanist of great merit.

WAIFS.

Schumann's Genoveva is in rehearsal at the Berlin Opera. It is said that Mad. Engalli is engaged by Mr Mapleson. M. Jules Dias de Soria lately made a short visit to Milan. Herr Schubert has left town to play in Paris and Lyons. Mr Carl Rosa's opera company has been playing at Edinburgh with great success.

M. Cavallé-Coll has just completed a magnificent organ for the Town Hall, Manchester.

M. Chennetière, a pupil of the Conservatory, has been engaged at the Paris Opéra-Comique.

M. Gounod's new opera, Cinq Mars, is completely finished, and will shortly be put in rehearsal.

The rehearsals of Herr R. Wagner's Walküre still continue at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna.

Mr Henry Leslie's concerts, with the assistance of his justly famous choir, were resumed last night.

Mad. Adelina Patti is engaged for forty representations next winter at the Théâtre-Italien, Paris.

Herr Heinrich Barth has been appointed pianist to his Imperial Highness the Crown Prince of Prussia.

A new theatrical paper, Don Basilio, with the inevitable agency attached to it, has been started in Milan.

Mad. Christine Nilsson's success in Vienna has been so great that another engagement has been offered to her.

Mlle Zaré Thalberg is at present at Barcelona, but returns to fulfil her engagement at the Royal Italian Opera.

M. Charles Garnier, the architect of the Grand Opera, Paris, has been chosen to build the new operahouse in New York.

Herr Brahms' quartet in B flat was first introduced to an English audience at one of the quartet concerts of Herr Franke.

Certain Republican editors are so mad with Senator Conkling that they would like to hit him over the first half of his name.

What can one poor weak woman, with a thick club, do against a husband who crawls under the bed and refuses to come out?

It is asserted positively that the Vice-Regal Theatre at Cairo will open next year as heretofore, with Italian opera and ballet.

On his way from St Petersburg to London, M. Anton Rubinstein played in Paris at a concert given by M. and Mad. Massart.

Mr Brinley Richards has accepted an engagement in South Wales, to give a series of lectures at Easter, on "National Music."

Sig. Petrella has finished the first act of his new opera, Salambô, which he is writing to the order of Sig. Ricordi, the music publisher.

The Emperor of Germany has subscribed 3000 marks, and the Committee of the Leipsic Gewandhaus Concerts 300, towards the Beethoven Monument.

Signora Savertal is, we hear, singing with great success at Livorno, having just finished her engagements at the Teatro dal Verme, and at Pavia.

His Majesty the Emperor of Germany has conferred the Royal Order of the Crown, Fourth Class, on Herr Edmund Bartholomäus, publisher, of Erfurt.

In consequence of the indisposition of M. Vauthier, the part of Annibal, in M. Lecocq's opera of La Marjolaine, had to be sustained for some nights by M. Falchieri.

Sig. Lauro Rossi, Director of the Conservatory of Music, Naples, has set on foot a subscription for the purpose of erecting a monument to Thalberg in the cemetery of that city.

Beethoven's Missa Solemnis will be performed at the fourth Subscription Concert of Stern's Gesang-Verein, Berlin, under the direction of Professor Julius Stockhausen.

Dr Armitage has presented to the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, at Upper Norwood, one large and two small organs, at a cost of 1,000 guineas.

By order of the Municipality of Aix, the Rue de la Charreterie, where the composer of Le Désert resided occasionally with his relations, will henceforth be called the Rue Félicien David.

M. Capoul had not, a few days since, signed with the management of the Italian Opera in St Petersburg. He asks the respectable sum of 120,000 francs for the season of four months and a half.

The King's Cross Theatre, lately put up for sale at the Auction Mart, was "bought in." No bidder went beyond £1,500, although only subject to £9 per annum ground rent for twenty-seven years.

With a view of improving the Services at the Parish Church of Lower Norwood, the authorities have raised the salary of the Organist and Choirmaster to £100, and have appointed Dr. Sloman, of Reading, to the post.

In consequence of a misunderstanding between the author-composer of Philemon et Baucis and the conductor of the orchestra, the re-production of the work for the débuts of Mlle Donadio-Fodor, at the Paris Opéra-Comique, has been deferred for a short time.

Dr S. H. Mosenthal, the dramatic author, died recently in Vienna. He was born at Cassel, in 1821. Besides his other pieces, he wrote several opera librettos, including those for Die lustigen Weiber von Windsor, Die Maccabäer, Das goldene Kreuz, and Die Folkunger.

Herr Jauner intends devoting himself exclusively to the management of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna. He will not renew his lease of the Karltheater, but will be succeeded, after August 1st, 1878, by Herr Pollini, manager of the Stadttheater, Hamburg.

Signor Arditi left last Saturday for Vienna, where he is engaged at the Italian Opera to conduct the "Adelina Patti" performances. On his return, in May, Signor Arditi proposes to give his grand orchestral concert at the Royal Albert Hall. The first part of the programme is to consist of compositions by Wagner.

Mdme Jenny Van Zandt (Vanzini) the American prima donna, is at Milan with her daughter, Marie (aged sixteen), who is studying for the operatic stage under Lamperti, and who, we are informed, predicts for her a brilliant career. Her début is expected to take place in the spring of 1878, at one of the Operahouses in London! Nous verrons.

Sophocles' tragedy, Antigone, with Mendelssohn's music, is to be given with full band and chorus of one hundred voices, at the new Concert Room of the Royal Academy of Music, on Saturday evening next, for the benefit of St John's Hospital. The tragedy will be "recited" by Mr Ryder and Miss Evelyn. Mr J. Rosenthal will lead the band, and Mr Alfred Gilbert will conduct.

On the morrow of New-Year's Day, madame asked her husband for a new outfit. "My darling," he replied, "that would make the third in two months, and times are so hard that—" "You will kill me," exclaimed the lady, bursting into tears, "and my funeral expenses will cost you more than a new dress!" "Ah! but I should have to bury you only once," was the comforting rejoinder.

Mdme Trafford (Mr Frank Romer's accomplished pupil) has been singing the part of Desdemona in Rossini's Otello with great success at Cadiz (Spain). A local journal says:—"The applause bestowed on her singing in the final air of the second act, and the "Willow" song of the third, was loud and unanimous, and we sincerely congratulate Mdme Trafford on her great and deserved success."

M. Corentin Guyho and Count d'Osmoy, members of the French Chamber of Deputies, are about to present to that body a resolution for modifying the rate levied upon the Paris theatres for the poor (the droit des pauvres). They propose that in future the rate shall be raised, not upon the gross receipts, but upon the profits, thus relieving managers when takings are not equal to expenditure.

Mad. Marie Sass, as reported in these columns, brought an action against the manager of the Théâtre-Lyrique for a breach of engagement, consequent upon M. Victor Hugo's refusal to allow Lucrezia Borgia to be played as a French libretto. After pleadings and counter-pleadings, ere the Court had delivered its verdict, which took a fortnight to consider, the matter was arranged amicably.

Herr Richard Wagner, says the World, has definitively given up all idea of having any performances at Bayreuth this year. He intends to recruit his finances for the Nibelungen treasury by giving concerts in London, during the approaching season. King Ludwig is said to be furious with Wagner for the publication of his recent epistle to the faithful, and has held no less than six privy councils on the subject.

The programme of the fifth Popular Concert, directed by M. Dupont, at Brussels, was devoted entirely to Richard Wagner. The first part comprised the overtures to Lohengrin, Tannhäuser, and Die Meistersinger, a romance for the violin, and an air from Der Fliegende Holländer. The second part consisted of fragments from the Ring des Nibelungen, including "Der Ritt der Walküren," the Funeral March, and the final scene of Die Walküre, besides the March composed for the International Exhibition at Philadelphia.

A weekly musical contemporary, in offering some remarks about cathedral organists with reference to the growing taste for modern compositions, ventures to predict that it will indeed be a bad time for Church music if complete neglect should hide the works of Purcell, Kent, and others. We are disposed to think that the utter want of critical discrimination which could couple the glorious works of our greatest English musician with such hollow and weak effusions as "Kent's Anthems" will seriously reduce the value and weight of the writer's well-intentioned advice. If Kent is such an important element of the classics of conservative Church musicians, for goodness' sake let us go ahead and not look backward.—Musical Times.

The last manager of the Komische Oper, Vienna, having proved as unfortunate as his predecessors, has resigned the management, and the proprietors have decided on putting up the theatre to auction.

The first concert of the Schubert Society this season took place on Wednesday, Schubert's vocal and instrumental compositions forming the first part of the programme. Particulars next week.

Verdi's Requiem has again been performed at Albert Hall, under the direction of Mr Barnby. We have already given our opinion of this sacred work by the foremost living Italian composer, and find no reason in any respect to modify it. That it will ever rival in popularity the Stabat Mater of Rossini, with which it has been frequently compared, we cannot, despite its many fine passages and occasionally touching earnestness, be induced to believe. Verdi is a genius after his manner; so was Rossini after another.—Graphic.

It will greatly please those of our readers who are graduates of a University in Arts, Music, or Divinity, to know that a representative of the "New England" University, U.S.A., is prepared to convince himself, in his chambers in the Strand, of the remarkable merits of those who apply to him for a doctorate; and that on receipt of "the" University dues, any degree is forwarded (by parcel delivery) carefully wrapt up inside an appropriate hood. As the duties which this representative of a learned body has to perform are of a delicate kind, we forbear to mention his name or exact address, although a letter from him offering to confer the degree of Mus. Doc. is lying before us.—Musical Times.

The general amusements of the Aquarium are now distinguished for their variety, liberality, and consistent excellence. There are few dull hours, and the day passes pleasantly away. All the morning and afternoon the visitor is treated to a succession of entertainments; the theatre is crowded till dinner-time. Scarcely has Mr Frederic Archer's organ recital ended before songs by Miss José Sherrington and Mr Shakespeare, glees by the well-trained Aquarium choir, &c., lead up to the Beethoven pièce de résistance; and after that comes lighter fare in the shape of an extremely clever "second-sight" entertainment, conducted by Mr Herriott, with the aid of his intelligent little daughter Louie, and a ventriloquial performance by Lieutenant Cole, who has no rival in his difficult art. These who find themselves unable to pass a happy time at the Aquarium must be hard to please.

The Reid Festival, since the accession of Sir Herbert Oakeley to the music chair of Edinburgh University, has assumed an importance out of all proportion with that accorded to it in former times. Sir Herbert, by means of courteous demeanour, musical ability, and general conduct, is at length, with the approval of all his colleagues, placed in a position commensurate with the idea entertained by General Reid, the munificent bequeather of the fund. The annual orchestral festival, last week, into details about which we have no space to enter, was, according to all accounts, honourable alike to the Professor, to those who worked under him, and to the growing musical taste of ever-musical "Auld Reekie." The orchestra was that now familiarly styled "Manchester's Own," the credit of forming which is exclusively due to Mr Charles Hallé, who, as might have been expected, was pianist on the occasion.—Graphic.

That Frenchmen know how to honour their great artists as well as their warriors has been proved by the ceremony which recently took place over the tomb of Auber, at Père-la-Chaise. During the siege of Paris the composer, still in possession of all his faculties, though almost ninety years of age, took his accustomed walk through the streets of his beloved city; and although beholding with an aching heart the changes wrought by the stern realities of war, bore bravely up against the misery which had fallen upon his country until his favourite horses were seized and killed to supply food for the nation, and then he bowed to his fate and calmly passed away almost unnoticed. But when Paris was restored to her usual life, a subscription was raised to remove the body of Auber from the vault where it had been hastily deposited to Père-la-Chaise; and, although the remains were transferred in December last, it was not until the 29th January that the ceremony we have mentioned took place at the tomb. A handsome but appropriately plain monument had been erected, and a bust of the composer placed at the grave. Instrumental and choral music, from Auber's operas, was given with thrilling effect upon the thousands of mourners assembled; funeral orations were delivered, immortelles laid upon the tomb, the tears moistened the eyes of the many who felt that they had lost not only a representative artist who had for so many years lived and worked in their midst, but a true-hearted man who had earned a widely spread sympathy by his kindly and generous nature. It may be justly said that France has a right to be proud of Auber; but this noble tribute to his memory has made the admirers of Auber proud of France.—Musical Times.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY
ADOLFO FERRARI

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE"

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mlle Adwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

MOMENTS HEUREUX. Etude pour le Violon (sans Accompagnement) ou Piano seul. Composée, et dédiée à son Maître, Mons PROSPER SAINTON, par F. J. AMOR (de Salisbury, en Angleterre). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TWO SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

"THE TEST." Words by ADA 4s.
"A GENTLE WORD." Words by S. CHAMPION 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE HUNTER. Song. The Words by W. C. BRYANT. The Music by E. REYLOFF. (Sung with great success by Mr G. H. SNAZELLE.) Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

SERENADE MORESQUE.

(FROM THE OPERA "SALVATOR ROSA.")

THE ENGLISH WORDS BY MARIA X. HAYES.

The Music by MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WHEN ALL IS HUSHED. Song. The Words and Music by LILLIE ALBRECHT. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

No.		8. No.
1. SONATA IN G	HAYDN ..	4 0
2. SONATINA in C	CLEMENTI ..	4 0
3. POSTHUMOUS RONDO in B Flat	MOZART ..	4 0
4. SONATA in D	DUSSEK ..	5 0
5. SONATA in C Sharp Minor	HAYDN ..	5 0
6. SONATINA in E Flat	CLEMENTI ..	4 0
7. BOURRÉE in A Minor	BACH ..	3 0
8. SONATINA in G	BEETHOVEN ..	2 6
9. ECHO	BACH ..	2 6
10. SONATINA in F	CLEMENTI ..	4 0
11. SONATINA in F	BEETHOVEN ..	3 0
12. SONATA in C	HAYDN ..	4 0
13. PRELUDE AND CAPRICE in C Minor	BACH ..	4 0
14. SONATA in E Minor	HAYDN ..	5 0
15. L'ADIEU	DUSSEK ..	3 0
16. TWO MINUETS in C and D	BEETHOVEN ..	3 0
17. LA CONTEMPLAZIONE	HUMMEL ..	4 0
18. ABSCHIED	SCHUMANN ..	3 0
19. ALLEGRO, SARABANDE, & SCHERZO in A Minor	BACH ..	4 0
20. SONATA in F	HAYDN ..	4 0
21. ANDANTE in B Flat	DUSSEK ..	4 0
22. RONDO A CAPRICCIO	BEETHOVEN ..	5 0
23. SOUVENIR	SCHUMANN ..	2 0
24. ALLEGRO, SARABANDE, & PASSACAILLE in G Minor	HANDEL ..	4 0
25. GAVOTTE AND MUSETTE in D Minor	BACH ..	3 0
26. ALLEGRO CON BRIO in E Flat	HUMMEL ..	4 0
27. SONATA IN D	PARADIES ..	4 0
28. DEUX ROMANCES	STEIBELT ..	3 0
29. PRESTO in A Flat	HAYDN ..	3 0
30. SONATA in C	WOELFL ..	5 0
31. SAXON AIR WITH VARIATIONS	DUSSEK ..	4 0
32. PASSEPIED	BACH ..	2 0
33. TWO MINUETS in E Flat and C	BEETHOVEN ..	3 0
34. RONDO BRILLANT in B Flat	HUMMEL ..	4 0
35. TOCCATA in A	PARADIES ..	3 0
36. GIGUE in F Sharp Minor	HANDEL ..	2 0
37. INVITATION POUR LA VALSE	WEBER ..	4 0
38. MINUET AND TRIO in E Flat	BEETHOVEN ..	3 0
39. SONATA in E	PARADIES ..	4 0
40. NOCTURNE in E Flat	CHOPIN ..	2 0
41. ARIA	BACH ..	2 0
42. LA GALANTE, RONDO	HUMMEL ..	5 0
43. RONDO BRILLANT in E Flat	WEBER ..	4 0
44. WIEGENLIEDCHEN	SCHUMANN ..	2 0
45. ARIA CON VARIAZIONI in A	HUMMEL ..	4 6
46. OCTAVE STUDY	STEIBELT ..	3 0
47. TWO MINUETS	BACH ..	2 0
48. POLONAISE in C	BEETHOVEN ..	4 6

WALTER MACFARREN.

Digitized by Google

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	- 3 0
RINK GALOP	- 4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	- 4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	- 4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	- 3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	- 4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	- 4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	- 4 0
WEST-END POLKA	- 3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	- 3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	- 3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	- 3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	- 3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	- 3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE	s. d.
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	- 4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS.

MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	- 3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	- 4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	- 3 0
HARMONIUM	- 3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	- 3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	- 4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2S. 6D. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

No.		Price.
	OVERTURE	- 3 0
1.	CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	- 3 0
2.	SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	- 3 0
2 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3.	DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	- 2 0
4.	TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	- 4 0
5.	DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	3 0
6.	TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	- 4 0
7.	DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	- 3 0
7 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8.	FINALE, 1st ACT, "I'm not the Baron"	- 3 0
9.	BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10.	CHORUS, "Joy to night"	- 3 0
11.	SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	- 3 0
12.	LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	3 0
12 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13.	DUET, "See him glaring"	- 4 0
14.	SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	- 3 0
14 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15.	FINALE, 2nd ACT, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	- 4 0
16.	SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	- 3 0
16 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17.	SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	4 0
17 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18.	FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	5 0
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	2 6
	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 10.

SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

ST JAMES'S HALL.

Mr F. J. CAMPBELL,
Principal of the
ROYAL NORMAL COLLEGE and ACADEMY of MUSIC for the BLIND,
Has the honour to announce
A GRAND EVENING CONCERT,
Under Royal Patronage,
IN AID OF ITS FUNDS,
On FRIDAY next, March 16,
Commencing at Half-past Eight o'clock precisely.
Vocalists—Miss Maggie Reece, and the Choir of the Royal Normal College, assisted by the following distinguished artists, who have most kindly given their services:—Herr Henschel, Herr Joachim, Mr Fritz Hartvigson, Herr Henri Petri, and Mr August Manns.
By special permission of the Directors,
The Crystal Palace Saturday Orchestra,
Augmented to One Hundred and Nineteen Performers.
Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNs.
This will be the only occasion during the ensuing season when the Crystal
Palace Orchestra will so appear in London.
Stalls and Front Row of Balcony, One Guinea; Reserved Area and Second Row of Balcony, 10s. 6d.; Unreserved Balcony, 5s.; Admission, 2s. 6d. Tickets at Austin's Office, St James's Hall, and all the principal Libraries and Music Publishers.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT has the honour to announce that her FOURTH MATINEE MUSICALE will take place (by kind permission) at 59, LOWNDES SQUARE, BELGRAVIA, on SATURDAY, March 24th, at Three o'clock. Vocalists—Mme Louise Gage, Mme Enriquez, and Signor Garcia.
Violoncello—Herr Schubert. Pianoforte—Miss Lillie Albrecht. Röntgen's Sonata, for piano and violoncello, will be performed (for the second time in England), the Andante con moto and Allegro vivace, by Miss Lillie Albrecht and Herr Schubert, and the Piano Solos will consist of: Fugue in E minor, ending with Grand Chorale, Op. 35 (Mendelssohn); Studies from Book 25, No. 30 (for Sixths), and 21, Allegro non tanto, and Scherzo in B flat minor, prestissimo con fuoco, Op. 31 (Chopin); Rigoletto (Liszt); Study for Chords in E sharp major (Thalberg); and Finale (by desire) "The Blue Bells"—Miss Lillie Albrecht.
Conductor—MR CHARLES E. STEPHENS. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; Family Tickets
(to admit three) and Programmes at Messrs Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, and of Miss LILLIE ALBRECHT, 38, Oakley Square, N.W.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY.—President—SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.
Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERT. Eleventh Season, 1877. The Next MEETING for TRIAL of New COMPOSITIONS will take place on WEDNES-DAY, 14th March; the Next SOIRÉE, WEDNESDAY, 21st March, and the Next CONCERT, WEDNESDAY, 11th April (Schumann's Compositions forming first part of programme). The Soirées and Concerts of the Society and Branches afford excellent opportunities for young rising Artists to make their début, and for Composers to have their works introduced. Full Prospectus on application, by letter, to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., care of Messrs D. DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TO-NIGHT.

ANTIGONE, SATURDAY Evening, March 10, at the ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, in Aid of St John's Hospital, Leicester Square. The Play will be read by Mr Ryder and Miss Evelyn; the Music, by MENDELSSOHN, will be performed by Full Band and Chorus of 100 Voices. Leader—Mr Rosenthal. Conductor—MR ALFRED GILBERT. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and One Shilling, at the Royal Academy of Music; or at Chappell's, New Bond Street.

MR GEORGE F. GEAR'S FIRST CONCERT, St GEORGE'S
HALL, TUESDAY Afternoon, March 20, at Three o'clock. Mme Edith Wynne, Mme Patey, and Mr Edward Lloyd. Harp—Herr Oberthür; Violin—
Herr Wiener; Violoncello—Herr Daubert; Pianoforte—Mr G. F. Gear. Conductors—MR GANZ and Mr G. F. GEAR. Stalls, 7s. and 5s.; Balcony, 3s. Tickets may be obtained at the Office, St George's Hall; or of Mr G. F. GEAR, 66, Seymour Street, Portman Square, W.

"KILLARNEY."

MDME ALICE BARTH will sing BALFE's admired Ballad,
"KILLARNEY," at the Irish Ballad Concert, at St James's Hall, Mar. 17.

BENEDICT'S ANDANTE, AND CHOPIN'S POSTHUMOUS MAZURKA.

MRS CLIPPINGDALE, MDME MATILDE BAXTER, and Mr WM. GANZ will play the admired Arrangement by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT of his ANDANTE and CHOPIN's Posthumous MAZURKA, for four performers on two grand pianofortes, on April 3, at Langham Hall.

The Portrait:

A WEEKLY PHOTOGRAPH AND MEMOIR.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING.

On SATURDAY, MARCH 10th.

No. IV.—JOSEPH JOACHIM. With a Memoir by J. W. DAVISON.

In Preparation,

ANTON RUBINSTEIN. With a Memoir by JOSEPH BENNETT.

PROVOST & CO., HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

"THE NAIADES."

MADAME ALIDA GASSIER will sing WELLINGTON
GUERIN's Waltz-Aria, "THE NAIADES" and MARIAN's Bolero, "I AM
AN ARAB MAID," at Langham Hall, on April 3rd next.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE PERREN will sing ASCHER's popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on the 3rd of April, at Langham Hall.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his very popular
Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," at Chatham, March 12.

MR WELBYE-WALLACE (of the Crystal Palace and Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester, &c., &c.), having Returned from Abroad, can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Opera, or Oratorio. All Communications to be addressed to his Agent, Mr E. D'OTLY CARTER, 2A, Craig's Court, Charing Cross, S.W.

MDME MARIE BELVAL begs that all Communications be addressed to her at 7, Cavendish Place, Cavendish Square, W.

THE CELEBRATED CAGLIOSTRO.

PRIVATE SOIRÉES of CAGLIOSTRO (Prestidigitateur).
For Terms apply to MAURICE DE FRECE, HARRIS & Co., 15A, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

MR FREDERIC WOOD (Primo Tenore), on Tour with the Wilhelmj Concert Party. All Letters to be addressed, care of Messrs
HODGE & BAKER, 6 and 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MR ARTHUR SHELLEY (ARTURO GARDA), after several years' career in Italy, has accepted an Engagement as FIRST TENOR, Imperial Italian Opera Company, and makes his début at the Gaiety Theatre, Glasgow, in the Traviata, on Tuesday, 20th inst. Letters respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Italian or English Opera, Oratorio, or Concerts—Gaiety Theatre, Glasgow.

MR SHAKESPEARE requests that all Communications concerning ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., be addressed
—6, Howick Place, Victoria Street, S.W.

MDME ENRIQUEZ begs that all communications be addressed to her at No. 5, OAKLEY SQUARE, N.W.

MR WILFORD MORGAN requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to his residence, 18, Surrey Street, W.C.

MR GERARD COVENTRY (Tenor), having returned to Town from his Provincial Tour, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Concerts. Address—Care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

YOUNG LADIES of 15 to 22 Years, of Dutch Parents, residing in England, with really good voices or musical abilities, intending to follow an artistic career, Lyric or Dramatic, wishing to compete for a SCHOLARSHIP, as PENSIONNAIRE of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, are requested to communicate, by prepaid letters, with Mr O. VAN DER DOSS, Royal Commissary of the Institute of Pensionnaires of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, 92, Sea Street, The Hague, Holland.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS
FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists.

25, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.
Price List free on application.

THE MONTHLY MUSICAL RECORD.—The cheapest High-class Paper on Music. Yearly Subscription, 2s. 6d. post-free. Years 1871 to 1876 (vols. 1 to 6) bound, each net 3s. "Intelligible and dispassionate criticisms and reviews, analyses of interesting compositions, and a like determination to discountenance the fictitious either in art or its practice; these are the qualifications of the paper."—Morning Post. AUGENER & Co., 86, Newgate Street, and 31, Regent Street.

TO AMATEUR FLAUTISTS AND OTHERS.

A GENTLEMAN (having no further use for them) wishes to dispose of a SILVER FLUTE, by RUDALL, CARTE & Co. "1867 Patent," with D and D sharp Shake Keys, also the key recommended by Mr Collard. The Flute, in case, complete, cost 32 Guineas. Also an 18-carat gold head, fitting the above Flute, which cost 30 Guineas. To be sold Bargains, either separately or together. Address—"A. P." 3, Promenade Terrace, Oheltenham.

THE GUITAR.—Mdme SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant instrument, is in town for the Season. For Lessons and Concerts address—22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

SIMPSON & CO.'S

IMPROVED HARMONIUMS.

FROM £5 5s. Five Octaves. Best make. Warranted. Nothing BETTER or CHEAPER made. Lists post free. Trade supplied.

TO COMPOSERS wishing to PUBLISH.—Music Engraved, Printed, and Published in the best style at unusually low prices. Estimates free on receipt of MS. SIMPSON & Co., 33, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Sung by Mr EDWARD LLOYD, and Just Published.

THE RINGLET. Song. Poetry by TENNYSON (by permission). Music by DESMOND L. RYAN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GAVOTTE (in G). For the Pianoforte. By W. H. MONTGOMERY. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Dedicated to the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music.

SIX STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

BY
IGNACE GIBSONE.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-------------------------------|
| No. 1. "THE SWALLOW." | No. 4. "WHITHER SHALL I FLY?" |
| "2. "THE FOUNTAIN." | "5. "ROCKED TO SLEEP." |
| "3. "SPINNLED." | "6. "THE RESTLESS SEA." |

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

ARDITI'S New Ballad, "TRUE." The Poetry by MARIA X. HAYES. Sung by Mdlle HELENE ARNIM, at the Promenade Concerts, Royal Italian Opera. Composed by LUIGI ARDITI. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, composed by Signer ARDITI :—

- | | |
|--|---------|
| THE PAGE'S SONG , sung by Mdlle Bianchi , Mdlle Alwina Valleria , and Mdlle José Sherrington . (Poetry by Maria X. Hayes .) | ... 4s. |
| L'INCONTRO VALSE , sung by Mdlle Adelina Patti ... | ... 4s. |
| A KISS FOR YOUR THOUGHT , sung by Mdlle Valleria ... | ... 4s. |

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.—All the new and beautiful Songs, Ballads, &c., sung by this distinguished company of Vocalists are now published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess, from whom they may be obtained by the Music-trade and the public. Permission to sing any of the Songs contained in Messrs Moore and Burgess's repertoire is always freely accorded on application to the Manager. It is not necessary to obtain a licence to sing these songs at private meetings and soirées.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SONGS and BALLADS of the day are those sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS at St JAMES'S HALL. The words of all these songs are written by the most eminent authors, and the music composed by the most celebrated musicians of the age, including Henry B. Leigh, E. L. Blanchard, Frank Vizetelly, Charles Dunphie, J. R. Thomas, W. Meyer Lutz, John Hobson, &c.

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.
The following new and charming Songs and Ballads are just published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess :—

- | | |
|---|---------------------------|
| Riding in a Pullman car. | The Wild, White Rose. |
| Alone. | A boatman's life for me. |
| Come where the tangled beeches grow. | My Lily. |
| My Darling's Last Smile. | Sing, dearest, sing. |
| Sad sounds the harp now. | Many weary years ago. |
| Friendship, Love, and Wine. | Return of the Exile. |
| Let each speak of the world as he finds it. | Glory or the Grave. |
| Sing me the songs that I loved long ago. | The Alpine Hunter. |
| The Piquet. | Heavenly Voices. |
| | Gentle Flowers. |
| | The Buckles on her Shoes. |
| | The Flight of the Birds. |

May be ordered through any Music-seller, or obtained direct from the Publishers, St James's Hall, post free, One and Sixpence.

Post free, One and Sixpence.

SING ME THE SONGS THAT I LOVED LONG AGO.
Composed by W. MEYER LUTZ. One of the most beautiful and tuneful Ballads introduced by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS for some time past. Now being sung with immense success at St JAMES'S HALL. Can be ordered through any Music-seller; or obtained from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FLIGHT OF THE BIRDS.—An entirely new and charming Ballad. Words written by HENRY B. LEIGH, Esq. Suitable for Alto, Tenor, or Soprano voices. Now being sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS, at St JAMES'S HALL, with extraordinary success. Can be ordered of all Music-sellers; or obtained direct from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FOLLOWING NEW and BEAUTIFUL SONGS are being sung at St JAMES'S HALL with marked success:—"Sing me the songs that I loved long ago," "The Flight of the Birds," "The Piquet," and "Sing, dearest, sing." The greatest successes ever achieved by the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. Can be ordered through all Music-sellers; and of the Publishers, Messrs Moore and Burgess, St James's Hall. Post free, 1s. 6d.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL."

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, ST ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

New Edition.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Sung by Mdme CHRISTINE NILSSON at her Concert in St James's Hall. The Music by J. W. DAVISON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVISON. Sung by Mdlle ZARÉ THALBERG at the Floral Hall Concerts (Royal Italian Opera). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVISON. Sung by Mdlle SOPHIE LOWE at the Monday Popular Concerts. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

ASSIS SUR LA VERTE COLLINE. ("THE WISH.") Paroles et Musique de M. WHITE. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

Wagner.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

While all the world waited for the recent manifesto of Prince Gortschakoff, Herr Richard Wagner bustled upon the scene with a circular, addressed from the gaudy house at Bayreuth to his agents at home and abroad. We are sorry to learn that the great composer of Der Ring des Nibelungen is not happy. But we cannot say that surprise attends regret, because little experience of human nature is needed for the discovery that a man's craving after the food of vanity and pride may be insatiable. Herr Richard Wagner affords a remarkable example of this fact. Were he proud and vain in no more than an ordinary degree, the experience of Bayreuth last August would now be to him a source of supreme content. What happened on that occasion? The attraction of his genius, or the vastness of his pretensions, drew the élite of the musical world from all civilised countries to a fifth-rate German town. Men were satisfied to travel hundreds—in some cases thousands—of miles, to pay exorbitant prices, and to endure personal discomforts which those only can appreciate who underwent the experience, simply to know the thing he finally deigned to offer the German people as a national art. At that time the earth was filled with the name of Wagner. His Nibelungen Trilogy overshadowed for a moment the Eastern Question itself; the noise of battle between his friends and foes out-thundered the cannon of Turk and Serb; while Emperors, Kings, and Princes paid him homage. Looking back upon the difficult path which led to so splendid an eminence, and conscious that every obstacle had been surmounted by his own resolute daring, Wagner might have said "Even my ambition aims no higher. This is the hour of apotheosis; who will may take the prophet's mantle I now resign." There were visitors to Bayreuth in plenty cherishing small respect for the "new art," and, perhaps, no great esteem for the personal character of its chief exponent; but to a man they sympathised with him in his triumph. Wagner thus conquered the admiration of his bitterest opponents, and doubtless treasured it as the most precious of laurels. Ages ago another clever man stood in a like position. A great King took him into favour, placed him next to the throne, mounted him on the horse sacred to Royalty, and showed him to applauding multitudes as one whom it was a delight to honour. Not an inhabitant of "Shushan, the capital," seeing Haman's pompous array filing along the streets, but believed the favourite's happiness complete. So it would have been, perhaps, had not a poor Jew, sitting in the gate of the palace, omitted to rise and do obeisance. We are sorry to say it, for the sake of human nature, but Wagner has his Mordecai. There are people, stiff-necked and stubborn, who will not bow down to him. It is not so much that professional jesters, like most of the Parisian musical critics, turn his doings into ridicule, as that men of graver sort, whose conversion would be a victory, refuse allegiance. On their account Wagner is unhappy, and, like Haman, meditates reprisals. It is true that he cannot issue an edict for the destruction of all who refuse to acknowledge the perfection of his art; but his mind is made up that no enemy shall in future enjoy the luxury of blasphemy against the Bayreuth Show. How this resolve is to be executed the manifesto points out.

Wagner is careful to explain, first of all, that he had a scheme for the Festival of last August other than that actually adopted. The idea was to offer the Ring des Nibelungen as a bonne bouche to a kind of family gathering, made up exclusively of the composer's avowed adherents. Why this was departed from is not made clear. In one sentence we are told that Wagner's friends provided him with the means necessary to carry out the plan; and, in another, that he was "compelled by untoward circumstances to have recourse to the curiosity of the general public, and to allow tickets of admission to be offered for sale." The exact nature of the "untoward circumstances" we are left to guess, and can only surmise that the Wagner Societies, having undertaken a responsibility greater than they could discharge, were compelled to traffic for gain with the Philistines beyond their borders. At any rate, the general public were admitted to the performances with a result which, according to Wagner, placed his art and artists in a false light, besides giving rise to a misconception that he was "trying to force the work, together with the peculiar mode of its execution, upon the operatic public in general;" whereas he simply meant to "offer it to its well-wishers and promoters." Although the disastrous nature of these consequences is not very apparent, Wagner has resolved that no further risk shall be run. The true supporters of the undertaking, and persons who wish to hinder its influence, must henceforth be kept apart, nor ever again shall the Bayreuth representations take place "in the presence of those who look upon them with hostile incapacity." Some of us, therefore, unless "hostile incapacity" be turned into friendliness and—what appears to be synonymous—true discernment, have looked our last at the temple near the Lunatic Asylum of the old Franconian town. It is barred to us, save for that one chance, as effectually as was Paradise to the Peri, and exclusion must be endured as best it can. We may regret this, but have no right to complain. If Wagner prefers appearing only among his disciples, nobody is empowered to say him nay. On our side, however, there is the liberty of speculating as to reasons. According to the manifesto, these are found in the defects inevitable to the early stages of so complicated a form of art—defects which no unsympathetic eye should be permitted to see. But surely all the mischief possible from such a cause has been done. The whole world has inspected Wagner's lyric drama in its crudest form, and the time is somewhat late to look it up from further view. To say nothing about giving occasion for the obvious remark that either this thing cannot endure criticism, or that its critics are excluded as a measure of retaliation. Yet how does Wagner propose to carry on the annual Festival at Bayreuth without those whom he contemptuously styles "the merely paying public?" In the first place, he wishes the Wagner societies to buy up a thousand seats at five pounds each; and, doubtless, this could and would be done, for a few years, at all events. It seems, however, that five thousand pounds is no more than one-half the estimated expense. An equal amount must come from somewhere. Why not, urges Wagner, with characteristic audacity, from the German Government? This is no new idea of the master, for he tells us that he has long had his eye on the Imperial Treasury, looking for "the final participation of the authorities of the Empire as the return I hoped and called for as soon as I should have succeeded, by means of the first performances of my work, in placing the peculiar character of our artistic tendencies in a clear light." He therefore urges all his patrons to petition the Reichstag for a grant of a hundred thousand marks per annum, and dilates with unctious upon the accruing advantages. The permanency of the Festival would be secured; a stamp of national significance would be impressed on a theatrical institution as well as upon its administration; the Government would be interested in the preservation of the original character of an enterprise differing widely from all others, and not less interested in keeping the administrative arrangement free from any taint of pecuniary speculation.

What does Wagner tender the German Government in exchange for the annual five thousand pounds? Neither more nor less than a thousand annual tickets for the series of representations, to be disposed of among those whom the Imperial officials might choose. But here arises another question. How if the Government allot its tickets to persons who would look upon the performances with "hostile incapacity?" Such an untoward event has surely been guarded against in Wagner's mind, though there is no hint of the precaution in his letter; and hence, if the scheme be adopted, the wisdom of the Imperial Government will have to devise a test by which to find out whether candidates for free tickets are really and truly among the elect of Bayreuth. We should like to see a deputation approach Prince Bismarck with Wagner's proposal in hand, and mark the Chancellor's grim smile as its audacity reminds him of a rencontre with the proposer himself. "I am sorry, your Highness, that we meet so rarely," Wagner, then resident in Switzerland, is reported to have said. The Prince is said to have answered, "Unfortunately, it is out of my power to live at Lucerne." Yet what are the German people, in their poverty, likely to think of Wagner's desire to take five thousand pounds a year from the national treasury? Were they all of one mind as to the art presented at Bayreuth, acquiescence would follow as a matter of course. Only a small minority, however, care anything about it, and, this being so, the remainder have a fair right to dissent from the endowment of that which they regard as wrong or valueless, especially when its manifestation is to be a hole-and-corner affair got up for the enjoyment of a select few, and hidden from public criticism. National money should be devoted to national purposes, not spent upon a clique who meet together in an out-of-the-way town, and under the roof of a building the doors of which are shut against all the rest of the world. The scheme, which will certainly fail if there be any common sense left in Germany, is characteristic of its author, and, not only so, but suggestive of more, perhaps, than he would like to acknowledge. That must be a poor weakly thing, no matter to what branch of human enterprise it may belong, which cannot endure the light and wind of heaven, which needs all the care of a tropical plant in the frigid zone, which calls piteously for the Jupiter of Government to be its nursing father, and screams "Take him away!" when it catches sight of a critic. Not under circumstances like these do new arts establish themselves. Rather does the result follow, if at all, upon a manful descent into the arena and a victory gained in the face of the world by sheer force of excellence.

JOHN OXENFORD'S DRAMATIC WORKS.

(From the "Era.")

The following is a list of Mr Oxenford's contributions to the stage:—

Aminta (libretto), Haymarket, January 26, 1852.
An Appeal to the Public, Lyceum, 1848.
Ariadne (adapted from Corneille), Olympic, January 28, 1850.
Beauty or the Beast, Drury Lane, November 2, 1863.
Billing and Coing, Royalty, January 16, 1865.
Bristol Diamonds, St James's, August 11, 1862.
Brother Sam, Haymarket, June 10, 1865.
Case of Conscience, Princess's, November 16, 1857.
Charming Widow, Lyceum, March 8, 1854.
Cleft Stick, Olympic, November 8, 1865.
Cousin Joseph.
Dangerous Friend, Haymarket, October 31, 1866.
Day Well Spent, English Operahouse, April 4, 1835.
Dearest Elizabeth, Haymarket, January 22, 1848.
Dice or Death, Lyceum, June, 1836.
Dr Diworth, Olympic, April 15, 1839.
Doubtful Victory, Olympic, April 20, 1858.
Down in a Balloon, Adelphi, April 10, 1871.
Dream of Love, Opera Comique, October 21, 1872.
East Lynne, Surrey, February 5, 1866.
Family Failing, Haymarket, November 17, 1865.
Family Party, Strand, November 12, 1849.
Five Pounds Reward, Olympic, December 3, 1855.
Girl I Left Behind Me, Olympic, November 2, 1864.
Gone to Texas, Olympic.
Helvellyn (libretto), Covent Garden, November 3, 1864.
Hidden Treasure (partly by the late Tom Parry), Adelphi, November 25, 1871.
I and My Double, Lyceum, October, 1835.
I couldn't Help it, Lyceum, April 19, 1862.
Idol's Birthday, Olympic, 1839.
It's an Ill Wind that Blows Nobody Good, Adelphi, May, 1860.
Last Days of Pompeii, Queen's, January 8, 1872.
Legal Impediment, Olympic, October 28, 1861.
Leghorn Bonnet, Adelphi, February 16, 1852.
Life Chase (in conjunction with Horace Wigan), Gaiety, October 11, 1869.
Magic Toys, St James's, October 24, 1859.
Make the Best of it, Haymarket, July 5th, 1851.
Monastery of St Just, Princess's, June 27, 1864.
Mr Hughes at Home, Haymarket, July 5, 1856.
Much too Clever (in conjunction with Joseph Hatton), Gaiety, February 23, 1874.
My Fellow Clerk, Lyceum, April 20, 1835.
Neighbours, Strand, November 10, 1866.
No Followers.
Oliver Twist (new version), Queen's, April 11, 1868.
Only a Halfpenny, Haymarket, May 30, 1855.
Pauline, Princess's, March 17, 1851.
Peter Jenkins, Lyceum.
Please to Remember the Grotto, St James's, December 26, 1865.
Porter of Havre (Porter's Knot), libretto, Princess's, September 15, 1875.
Porter's Knot, Olympic, December 2, 1858.
Quiet Day, Olympic.
Rape of the Lock, Olympic, March 27, 1837.
Reigning Favourite, Strand, October 9, 1849.
Retained for the Defence, Olympic, May 23, 1859.
Sam's Arrival, Strand, September 8, 1862.
Stephen Digges, Adelphi, September 14, 1864.
Tartuffe, Haymarket, March 25, 1851.
Timour the Tartar (in conjunction with Shirley Brooks), Olympic, December 26, 1860.
Tragedy Queen, Lyceum, 1849.
Twice Killed, Olympic, November 26, 1835.
Two Orphans, Olympic, September 14, 1874.
Uncle Zachary, Olympic, March 8, 1860.
Virginia.
Waltz by Ardit, Adelphi, March 7, 1874.
What have I done? Olympic, March 12, 1838.
Widow's Weeds (in conjunction with Horace Wigan), March 19, 1870.
World of Fashion, Olympic, March 17, 1862.
Young Lad from the Country, Drury Lane, November 21, 1864.

BRUSSELS.—La Marjolaine has been for some time in active preparation here. M. Ch. Lecocq has himself superintended the latter rehearsals.

JOHN OXENFORD.

(From "Yorick.")

Players are an ungrateful race if the news of John Oxenford's death does not awaken in some of the most prominent of them feelings of regretful gratitude. John Oxenford loved the actors and enjoyed their society thoroughly. Added to this he was by nature a kindly critic. Too kindly, some say, because he was rarely severe even when severity seemed needful. Before he applied the lash he invariably reflected whether or not the actor was poor and dependant for his livelihood upon his profession? A word of condemnation in the Times is a serious rebuff to any artist. The thunderbolts of Jupiter are not to be dealt about as though they were mere fireworks instead of deadly missiles. Oxenford sometimes erred, perhaps on the side of lenity. We do not blame him for it. Albeit one or two young actors may by a word of praise have puffed themselves up into an undue elevation of egotism, in the main his genial criticism had a healthy effect. Had he not been so capable and cultured a dramatic critic he might have been a more severe one. Incapable and unqualified critics often endeavour to cover their incompetency by a show of blustering satire. That Oxenford tempered his justice with mercy was a proof of his superiority. When he did not point out faults he gave the reason for condemnation. And much of his criticism is worthy of being placed beside Hazlitt's. As we have said, the players ought to regret him. At the well-known histrionic club in Adelphi Terrace he was their literary lion. And he accepted their homage in a spirit of camaraderie characteristic of his Bohemian instincts. If some of them fawned upon him and did him lip-service in view of his journalistic favour, by the better sort he was beloved and honoured. Dramatic criticism has improved generally, in our day has become more healthy, and vigorous, and uncompromising. But for a critic with the breadth of vision and extent of culture that belonged to John Oxenford we look in vain.

HERR RICHARD WAGNER'S GRAND-NATIONAL-FESTIVAL-STAGE-PLAYS.

According to good authority, the festival-plays at Bayreuth will not be repeated this year, the reason being of a technical and political nature, and in no way connected with considerations relating to Richard Wagner's health. The "master" has seldom been better and fresher than since his return from Italy, and is working most energetically in completing the score of his Parcival, a musical drama related by form and purport to "Lohengrin," and containing more particularly grand choral and concerted pieces. Following the advice of his devoted friend and adherent, August Wilhelmj, Herr Wagner thinks of making, about the middle of April, a professional visit to England, where, as is well known, Herr Wilhelmj has exerted himself successfully in preparing people for the composer's arrival. In the concerts, at which the "maestro" will personally conduct, among other things, several of his newest compositions, Professor Wilhelmj will probably take part. The receipts of the London performances are intended to cover last year's Bayreuth deficit. There is a prospect that next year the festival performances will positively take place in Bayreuth, since it is certain that, by then, the scenic and mechanical improvements will have been carried out to R. Wagner's satisfaction.—Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

Joachim.

Joachim, how shall we name thee, how set apart
 From the many followers of thy tuneful art?
 The King of instruments never lacked for playing;
 Eccentric geniuses, wonders did on one string;
 And many more, whose finely-wrought cadences
 Have moved the human heart to heavenly ecstasies.
 Apart, above them all, thou sits enshrined;
 Grandeur will ever be with thy name entwined.

Benwell.

QUARTET CONCERTS.

The last of the series of quartet concerts given by Messrs Carrodus and Howell was held on Tuesday, the 6th inst., in Langham Hall, and again demonstrated that which the previous meetings had abundantly shown, the high capabilities and merits of those artists. It may therefore be said the purpose for which the series was given has been fully realized; for it is evident pecuniary profit was not the motive, but an honourable ambition to lay before the musical public a test of those qualities the expression of which has been denied them on other London platforms. A few years back every artist claiming eminence gave concerts annually, to afford his friends a chance of appreciating his qualities as an executant or composer. Those occasions were, perhaps, not always productive of sound art, nor real progress, but still they gave the professor something to work for during the year. Those were the days of patronage. But the patronage of the art, following that of literature, has slipped away from the aristocracy to the general public; my lord losing thereby an influence over his countryman not to be replaced either by riches, titles, or political power. The people, thank heaven, have passed their tutelage, and, discarding the lead of the aristocracy, meet weekly in St James's Hall to enjoy a spiritual beauty in art denied to rich and haughty pretenders to culture. The very excellence, however, with its consequent monopoly, of the Popular Concerts has produced disadvantages; for has it not closed the door of entrance to the public to every artist not engaged at them? To remedy this evil, in their own case, Messrs Carrodus and Howell started the series of concerts upon the success of which they are most heartily to be congratulated.

The concert opened with Reinberger's Quartet in E flat for pianoforte and strings, performed by Messrs Dannreuther, Carrodus, Doyle, and Howell. With many striking qualities it has a tendency to that "louder development," which rages and roars in our modern orchestras. The opening movement would, were it not for reiterated unison passages and a dislocation of parts, be acceptable. The Adagio in G major gave promise, by a melodious introductory passage, of relief, soon, however, to be lost in noise and fury. The Minuetto in G minor was quaint and graceful, and the finale allegro, with its jig-like introduction and subsequent theme led off by the 'cello, formed a characteristic conclusion to a work somewhat coldly received by the audience, who, perhaps, will learn to appreciate it when more accustomed to its obstreperousness, or when time has brought the relief of partial deafness. Of a very different order were Molique's four pieces for violin and piano, selected from a set of six (Op. 47). Herein was found music, genuine, pure, and without alloy. On this occasion was also found a player who came to his task not only with consummate ability, but a personal love and reverence for the memory of the worthy composer, his kind master. Mr Carrodus gave the earnest and plaintive Ballade (No. 1) in B minor with great breadth of phrasing, and revelled in the cheerful Allegro vivace in A major. He sang on his instrument the meditative Andante arioso in C major, and carolled forth the joyous, Allegretto grazioso in F major. The audience were enraptured at his skill and the themes upon which it had been expended, and insisted upon the repetition of the last piece. He was joined by Mr W. Henry Thomas at the pianoforte, for which instrument Molique has written independent parts that support the leading instrument by solid harmonies, interlaced with graceful melodic passages. Of Mr Thomas's execution it may safely be said that such accuracy, neatness, and refinement are not always devoted to a task often considered subordinate. Chopin's second Scherzo, for the piano, in B flat minor opened the second part of the programme. It is, perhaps, the best known of the works of that captivating composer. Its very familiarity, however, may blind the listener to the self-assertion and pomposity of its character. It was performed by Mr Dannreuther with that mastery over the key-board, breadth of tone, and vigour of accent peculiar to this gentleman's efforts, and was received by the audience with acclamations. Mr Edward Howell played Mendelssohn's Romance. The purity, delicacy, and richness of tone, combined with the rare intelligence of this artist, were worthily expended upon a composition remarkable for grace and power. The audience would gladly have heard it again; but the virtuoso could not be prevailed upon, though summoned repeatedly to the platform to receive their plaudits. Beethoven's Quartet in F (No. 1, Op. 59), in which Mr V. Nicholson joined the previously mentioned instrumentalists, concluded a delightful evening's entertainment, and proved to the mind of every one present that the executants were fully competent and specially qualified for such work. Mdm Rose Hersee enlivened the programme by singing three suitable songs, in each of which she showed her bright voice, facile execution, and charm of style, qualities that secured for her hearty applause and recalls.

P. G.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

Two works were heard for the first time at the Crystal Palace on Saturday, one a concerto in G major for strings only, by J. S. Bach; the other an overture by Mr Alfred Holmes, whose death a few months ago was regretted as the premature end of a career destined, seemingly, to be crowned with success. However much the old German master's composition may suggest reflections upon the class to which it belongs, and the style of which it is an example, there is very little to be said about it per se. Even the ingenious annotator of the programme could do no more than call attention to its "extraordinary spirit," and this, we may observe, was well brought out by means of a capital performance. Others of the set of six to which that in G major belongs would, perhaps, better repay revival owing to the singular mixture of instruments they present, not even Mozart's Salzburg compositions showing more quaint grouping. Their production would, of course, be for the sake of gratifying curiosity alone, which object we may conclude was in view when choice fell upon the one played on Saturday. Mr Holmes's overture—that to his MS. opera, Inez de Castro—was performed in 1874 by the now defunct British Orchestral Society, and received at that time full attention. We need not repeat now what was said then, and will only remark that, arguing the merit of the opera from that of the prelude, circumstances, by hindering its representation, have not been just. We cannot help regretting, moreover, that the amiable musician, who looked upon Inez de Castro as his master-work, should have passed away without receiving the public verdict which he anticipated with confidence and pride. The symphony on this occasion was Beethoven's No. 8—one of those respecting whose performance at the Crystal Palace remarks are as superfluous as is eulogy of the work itself. Enough about music so familiar, played in a style so well known that both together produced an effect which might have been described to the letter beforehand. This time, however, Mr Manns resisted—and very wisely—a demand to hear the favourite allegretto again. There is always a danger lest encoring particular movements should grow into a habit and become meaningless, as well as destructive of the symmetry and balance of the work itself. Miss Josephine Lawrence made her first appearance at the Saturday concerts as solo pianist, giving Mendelssohn's Serenade and Allegro gioioso (Op. 43), not only with sufficient executive skill, but with such refinement and attention to details as evidenced progress in her art. Her accent and phrasing were especially good, while her style was agreeably free from the qualities appertaining to "higher development." Miss Lawrence fairly deserved her recall. Another first appearance was that of Miss Robertson, the young lady who has of late come out of the front rank of amateurs in search of an equally honourable place among professionals. She has yet something to do before attaining the object of her worthy ambition, but the owner of a voice so exceptional in its range, and of an intelligence much above the common is, at all events, well equipped by Nature for the task. Miss Robertson sang Mozart's concert aria, "Mia speranza adorata" and Randegger's "Marinella," in a manner that won the favour of her audience, and stamped her Crystal Palace début as of an encouraging character. The second vocalist was Mr Lloyd, whose rendering of Brahms' song, "Golden Days," and the Serenade from Clay's Lalla Rookh, gained another of the successes to which this favourite tenor is now accustomed.—D. T.

FLORENCE.—Sig. Marchetti's Gustavo Waza will shortly be represented at the Teatro della Pergola, with Mad. Durand, Signori Carpi, Manzoli, and Lombardelli in the principal characters. The rehearsals have been directed by the composer. A "Symphonic Ode," entitled Christoforo Colombo, has been successfully performed at the Teatro Filarmonico. The music is by Sig. Gambini, who has used the words already employed by Félicien David.

FINISHED PUPILS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—In the turbulent career of a musician there is, perhaps, no period more anxious and painful than that of the student, who, having gone through the prescribed course of studies, with more or less success, awaits public employment. Such is my present state; and I crave your pity and indulgence whilst I recite my trials. By the kindness of friends I was sent to a London institution to cultivate those musical gifts I had precociously manifested. Having left that institution, my supplies are now stopped. Charity ceased when the round of class instruction was completed; for it was thought I then possessed the means of gaining a livelihood, if not of achieving distinction. "Before you," it was said to me, "is the sea of life. Courage, forward! ride bravely on its waters!" But am I afloat? Alas, no. I cannot of myself launch my craft, now stuck fast in the sands of helplessness. Oh for some strong and generous hand to shove me off, and set me sailing in quest of the land of hoped for, nay, of promised success.

Do not suppose, Sir, I have really any ground for complaint of wilful neglect, or that I seek to charge my masters with wrong-doing. As a rule, they have done their duty. Is it not, however, a harsh destiny for one so destitute of friends as myself to be turned adrift from accustomed protection and shelter? My place, however, was wanted; a younger pupil, one who has not yet spent his little all in education, now fills my seat, and possesses the ephemeral affection and interest of my masters. I am therefore discarded, never more to be looked upon with favour until I bring them reflective honours, until I am enrolled as a success in that book of shams and lies called—fame. A music master, after all, seems but an adroit dairyman, who pats the member of his stock that is actually filling the pail; perchance he looks with smiles upon the coming yielders of riches, but coldly turns his back upon the one who, like myself, is dried up and has no more to give. Driven on by my juniors, I am thrust back by seniors, and in the midst of those contrary and opposing forces, I am helplessly tossed to and fro without making progress. If I turn back to my old haunt I am met with the cry of hungry youths, "Make way, you sir, we would also eat." If I press forward my way is barred, and hoarse voices shout, "Hence, starve if ye will; come not nigh, for this is my sole birthright!" Every avenue to the public is choked by a throng of struggling beings, partaking somewhat of the Scylla and Charybdis breed. The youthful traveller finds to his misery that "Dire Scylla there a scene of horror forms,

And here Charybdis fills the deep with storms."

Am I exaggerating? Let him who thinks so ask any of the many hundreds of "finished pupils" now idle and starving in London. Let him accompany me in my quest of engagements; witness the multitude of my fellow applicants, and hear the cold, harsh responses of employers and entrepreneurs, and uncharitable, if not malicious, remarks of established professors. Your journal records only successes—you are too kind to publish failures. Week after week you paint the bright side of musical life, thereby unwittingly leading youth into the snare. Triumph is loud tongued, whilst failure is silent in the street. But it is heard, alas! in many homes, in sighs and bitter lamentations; it is written on hearts that break, on ruined hopes and wrecked lives. Of your mercy aid us, Sir. By your skill devise for us an opportunity of testing our quality. Leave us not, as our masters have left us, "to waste our sweetness on the desert air." Help to gain us an artistic standing ground, before we are crushed by the oncoming of the swarming crowd of scholars! I am, Sir, a helpless though highly-finished pupil, and yours always truly, JONATHAN JONES, Jun.

Somers Town, March 7th, 1877.

"MY MOTHER'S SONG."

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—In your notice of my concert at the Langham Hall, the name of Herr Ganz's song was omitted. It was "My Mother's Song," for which I obtained an encore. If you will kindly mention this in your next impression you will much oblige, yours faithfully, 7, Cavendish Place, W.
March 7th, 1877.

MARIE BELVAL.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our Correspondent.)

The production of a new symphony is not too common an event in the provinces to be passed by without notice, and I will not apologise for troubling your readers with a passage from the criticism of a local newspaper on Mr Ed. Hecht's symphony in F minor, which was first heard at one of Mr Hallé's concerts at the end of last month: "Those who know Mr Hecht in his compositions will not require to be told that in no one of the four movements of the new symphony is there any condescension to anything derogatory to art; no indulgence in tricks and fanciful devices for the sake of pleasing the ear; nothing ad captandum is noticed in the work, nor is there any trace of disfigurement by meretricious sentimentalism. We are disposed to think, indeed, that Mr Hecht has not done justice to his gift of melody. He might have been afraid of being accused of writing pretty music. The brightest fancies are too often obscured by over elaborate treatment, and frequently simplicity is sacrificed to excess of colour; the listener's attention is now and then so much occupied with the details that he fails to grasp the continuity of the ideas, and more than once he is confused by what seems like lack of coherence in their sequence. It is quite possible, however, that further acquaintance with the peculiar harmonies and startling discords of particular passages would prove them to be indispensable to the composer's meaning, and we might refer to many notable examples of music now generally admitted to be amongst the greatest, which was said to be dreary when first heard. The first allegro, though certainly not the least carefully written, is perhaps the least satisfactory portion of the symphony; its second theme is less attractive than the first; and we do not hesitate to say that the movement might be abridged with advantage. There are some charming passages in the andante, and the occasional obscurity does not prevent appreciation of the striking originality of the treatment of the leading theme. The subject of the scherzo is very bright and lively, and the finale allegro con brio attracts at once by its bold and spirited opening, though in this, as in the earlier movements, the composer seems to have been too anxious to take advantage of all the resources of the orchestra. In congratulating Mr Hecht on the splendid performance of his work and on the cordial manner in which it was received, we do not wish to express the opinion that his first symphony ought to be considered the measure of his musical capabilities, but it may be truly said that he has judiciously avoided the cheap and easy success which might have been secured had he written it in the style it is customary to call 'popular.' His symphony is at least an honest piece of work, and could only have been written by a scholar and a musician."

At the same concert there was a splendid performance of Beethoven's triple concerto, by MM. Hallé, Joachim, and Piatti, and the two distinguished visitors afterwards excited the usual, nay, more than the usual, enthusiasm by their solo performances. Mdlle S. Löwe was the only singer, and she was never heard here with greater pleasure.

Last week Elijah was given, under Mr Hallé's direction, and the popular oratorio was, perhaps, never more thoroughly enjoyed here. The principal singers were Mdlle Tietjens, Mdlle Patey, and Mr Vernon Rigby; and, as all sang their best, I need not say how the solos were given. Signor Foli had never sung here in the Elijah, and though the music is often rather too high for him, he showed much intelligence, and was very successful. Both ladies were in fine voice, and both seemed determined to do justice to the composer. Mr Rigby, too, was in good voice, and gave great satisfaction.

Mr De Jong gave an extra benefit concert on Saturday last, for which he had engaged Mdlle Tietjens and Mr Sims Reeves, but, unhappily, neither of these distinguished artists was able to appear. Mr Reeves' inability to come had been advertised in the morning papers, yet we believe comparatively few tickets were returned, and when the announcement of the non-appearance of the popular prima donna was made to the immense audience, scarcely any took advantage of the offer to return money. Save by the cruel anxiety he must have endured, the enterprising conductor was not too severely punished.

At the last "Gentlemen's Concert" Schubert's unfinished Symphony in B minor was the opening piece, and Mdlle Valleria and Mdlle Patey were the singers. I see you inserted an extract from a local newspaper about the successful performance by Mr Carrodus of Molique's Concerto, and a cruel note by "D. P.," questioning our right to the title the Gentlemen's Concerts have borne for more than half a century. Mr Carrodus deserves all that was said, and more; but when you next see Mr "D. P.," will you tell him that if he would come to Manchester and see what the Gentlemen here are really like, I am quite sure that so genial a cynic and so keen a judge of human nature would admit that even Grandison has left successors? Du reste, "D. P." is always welcome for his own sake.

Last night Herr Rubinstein played in Manchester for the first time for ten years. The audience was very large, the programme remarkably interesting, and the famous artist's success was almost unparalleled. Here is the programme:—1. Prélude et Fugue (A. Rubinstein); Thème et Variations (Haydn); Préludes et Fugues (J. S. Bach); Sonate, in F minor (Beethoven). 2. Barcarolle (Schubert—Liszt); Lieder ohne Worte (Mendelssohn); Carneval (Schumann). 3. Sonata, in B minor, Op. 35 (Chopin); Études (Chopin). 4. Nocturne, Gavotte, Barcarolle, Valse Caprice (A. Rubinstein).

March 7th, 1877.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

Jeanne, Jeannette, et Jeanneton, opéra comique, by M. P. Lacombe, was given here for the first time at the Salle Monsigny. It was well played and sung by Mdlles Mariolick, Lyonnel, Noailles; MM. Delorme, Davy, Théo, and Guillemot. The plot is prettily arranged by MM. Clairville and Delacour, and is more original than the music. Since last I wrote the following operas and dramas have been given:—Belle poule, Petite Marquise, Camard à trois becs, Jolie Parfumeuse, Fleur de Thé (Lecocq), Gavaut Mineur et Cie., L'Auberge des Adrets, Les Jurons de Cadillac, Le Bossu, Les Deux Veuves, César Borgia, Le Bourd (Adam), and La Mendicante.

On Saturday last there was a "Representation extraordinaire, au bénéfice de Mlle Marie Lyonnel," who has been at the Theatre de Boulogne some months, and has now become a great favourite, which was proved on Saturday by several valuable presents being offered to and accepted by her, among which I would mention a poupée (i.e., a fac-simile of herself as she appeared in the second act of La belle poule), about two feet high, which walks and turns its head. The house was crammed to witness the performance of Les Jeux de l'Amour et du Housard, a vaudeville in one act, by L. Duru and H. Bocage, capitably played by Mmes Dailly, Legrand, Faillaut, and Théo, M. Delorme, &c. The event of the evening was, however, La Grande Duchesse de Boulognestein, set forth in the programme as a "méli-mélo," in one act, words by M. Y—, de Boulogne-sur-Mer, sur la musique de MM. Offenbach, Hervé, Charles Lecocq, etc. (which latter word meant Rossini and Donizetti). Whatever "méli-mélo" may mean I do not know, but I must confess that I never saw a "pot-pourri" with less rhyme, reason, plot, or passion. The words depend mostly on puns on the actors' names, such as the following:—"Es-tu d'avais (Davy), qu'au pied de l'orme (Delorme). et plus loin, le froment (Froment)," &c., and "ce n'est pas une femme c'est une bonne elle (Lyonnel)." The whole was listened to with breathless attention, to catch the local allusions, while the acting of Mlle Lyonnel, especially when she takes the part of a poissarde, and makes up as a capital portrait of a certain dame de la halle, who was once famous here, but whose name is heard no more (pour raison de famille), was exceptionally good, and received hearty applause. La belle poule was given afterwards, and the performance terminated at 12.45 a.m.

On Monday the last performance of Marceau took place, as a "representation extraordinaire," the prices being exactly half the ordinary ones. There was a full house. On Tuesday another benefit, that of Mlle Dury, première grande rôle, took place.

To-night there is a concert for the benefit of the "Lyonnais work-people," at which the Société Musicale, Les Orphéons, and several artists will assist. Benefits on Saturday, Sunday, and Tuesday next.

The "Ave Maria" of Isidore de Lara, which I have already mentioned in the columns of the Musical World as so successfully sung at the Toussaint (Nov. 1) last year, will be sung at St Nicholas Church at Vespers, on Easter Sunday, by M. Condet.

I think I told you that the composer, M. Isidore de Lara, had again, for the third time, received the highest honours at the Academy of Music in Milan, for composition. X. T. R.

Boulogne-sur-Mer, February 28.

BERLIN.—Signor Gardini commenced his Italian operatic season at Kroll's Theater with Lucia di Lammermoor. Mlle Gerster, Lucia; Signor Marini, Edgardo; and Signor Mendioros, Enrico, were favourably received, and the performance was eminently successful.

THE NORFOLK AND NORWICH FESTIVAL.

(From the "Norwich Argus.")

No. 1.

I must this week give some space to a subject of great importance, and to which I consider the time has come to draw the attention of those whom it concerns in your old city. I allude to the Triennial Festival which will, in the ordinary course of affairs, come off somewhere in the autumn of 1878. When I last wrote on the subject it was to express the hope that the Committee were going to profit by past experience and set about entirely re-arranging the system on which the Festival has been conducted, or rather, for the last few years, misconducted. To the best of my belief not a single step has as yet been taken to carry out this work. I can scarcely credit that a body of men who are supposed to represent the enlightened musical interests of your city can be content to let things go on as they have done, with the certainty facing them that the results of their mistaken, or at least antiquated notions will once more be a disastrous failure. It ought to be sufficiently evident to them that the circumstances which surrounded and influenced the successful Festivals of bygone years are in nowise the same as those of the present time; while the existing arrangements are hardly altered in any one respect. Let me point out some of these changes to those who seem not to have marked their course.

In the early days of the Norfolk and Norwich Festival these musical meetings formed almost the sole opportunity that the provincial gentry and citizens had of hearing performances of oratorios and sacred works on a large scale. I speak, of course, of those who seldom if ever went to London, and journeys to the metropolis in those times were of rarer occurrence than now. They might hear a full choral service in the cathedral of their own churches, and now and then go to a modest rendering by some local society of the whole or part of a sacred work. But for the truly adequate performance of such music they had to wait, and did wait, for the Festival. It might be expensive, but they had to make the outlay only once in three years, besides they fully calculated the fact that they were directly aiding the funds of the local charities. The nobility and county families, too, were much more ready to come forward than they are now; first, because they were personally solicited to do so by those who are not now alive to continue the good work; secondly, because the triennial meeting used to be a very grand affair and gave great opportunities for show and state; thirdly, because Festivals were then much more fashionable, and there really was an earnest desire to support an excellent hospital. Again, twenty years ago the schemes used to be far more attractive, inasmuch as they contained many new works by famous composers, and the soloists were for the most part superior in numbers and celebrity to those who have appeared in later years.

How altered is all this now! To begin with, a standard oratorio can be heard anywhere in London for a shilling, and such works are constantly being performed in excellent style in every fairly large city or town in the kingdom. The gentry and citizens rarely let a year pass without coming to London, and, if musically inclined, can hear their ordinary festival programme carried out for a quarter the festival price, and certainly in much better fashion than it can possibly be done on the triennial occasion. The county families are principally a third of the year in London, where they do not miss a single performance of note, and when they go to their country seats would rather not be disturbed; moreover they are tired of festivals, and, in these days of wealthy lower classes, will tell you plainly that they do not care to be brought into contact with "anybodies" and "nobodies," especially when they can hear these things so much better elsewhere. As for the charities, some people (I would not say all) prefer making their yearly donations, and having them "writ large" for the eyes of the world to admire, instead of giving them without ostentation in the shape of buying festival tickets. These, then, are the changes, revolutionary in their extremeness, that have gradually taken place; and, while nothing has been done to modify the pre-existing arrangements in the slightest degree, the latter have diminished in consistent and eventually profitable liberality. I was alone in pointing out for months previously the mistakes that led to the failure of the last festival—a failure that it appears to me perfectly possible to avoid repeating, if certain absolutely necessary modifications are entered into and carried out with spirit by those whose duty it is to study the welfare of a trust which has clearly not prospered of late under its primary system of management. My suggestions on this point I must leave for another week, as I have already entered into more space than I originally intended, although not more than the gravity of the subject demands.—Norwich Argus, February 24th.

ST PETERSBURGH.—The Italian operatic season terminated on the 18th February.

PERMANENT MUSICAL SCHOLARSHIP FOR WALES.

Mr John Thomas makes the following appeal to the Principality, and we heartily wish him success:—

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—In consequence of the remarkable results of the first three years of the London Welsh Choral Union Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, I ventured, in my address to the subscribers, to suggest a much more important and comprehensive scheme, viz., the establishment of a Permanent Musical Scholarship for Wales, to be competed for by candidates from all parts of the Principality, and to be open to vocalists and instrumentalists.

Since the publication of the address, I have received so many subscriptions and promises of support in furtherance of the proposed scheme, that I am induced to make a general appeal to my country in aid of so national a cause.

Not less than a Thousand Pounds will be required to endow the Scholarship; and I address myself specially to choral societies and lovers of music to support my efforts. Should these efforts be crowned with success, the Scholarship will be of immense advantage to all young rising musicians in Wales, and be the means of rapidly raising the general standard of musical excellence throughout the Principality.

The Scholarship is intended to give the successful candidate three years' musical education at the Royal Academy of Music; so that, at the termination of the period of each Scholarship, another educated musician may be added to those who have already distinguished themselves, and who are indebted to that Institution for the high position they occupy in their profession.

As soon as the necessary amount shall have been subscribed, a committee will be formed for the purpose of carrying out the object in view.

Subscriptions (which will be duly acknowledged, and lists published from time to time) to be forwarded to me. Believe me, yours sincerely,

JOHN THOMAS (Pencerrdd Gwalia).
Harpist to her Majesty the Queen.

53, Welbeck Street, London, W.
St David's Day, 1877.

No. 2.—SUNSET.*

(From the Italian of Signor Felice Mariani.)

It is the hour when winds and waves
Scarce heave one sigh around their caves;
It is the hour to musing sweet,
When sun, and sea, and glory meet.
The sinking orb seems in his flight
Pausing to bid the world good-night—
No funeral waters o'er him swell,
And peal afar his funeral knell.

But though he's gone beneath the sea,
A pensive glow like memory,
That beauteous light of snow long set,
In soften'd radiance lingers yet.
As we behold him thus retire,
In such a cloudless blaze of fire,
Leaving a twilight in the air,
That softly, sweetly, lingers there,—

We think of when our course is o'er,
And on this world's remotest shore,
When, like yon blended sky and sea,
Time melts into eternity.
Like him we look a last adieu,
Ere yet the earth fades from our view!
O may no clouds around us lower,
To darken our departing hour!

WELLINGTON GUERNSEY.

* Copyright.

NIMES.—Les Huguenots, which, as announced a short time since in the columns of the Musical World, was never performed in this town, for fear of a collision between the Protestants and the Roman Catholics, has at length been brought out at the Grand-Théâtre. On the first night it did not go off so smoothly as could have been wished, in consequence of the tenor part being taken at a very short notice by M. Mazurini, in place of M. Léon Achard, suddenly summoned to Paris by the death of his child. In other respects everything went off very well, and of the dreaded collision between the two great religious parties, there was not the slightest indication.

A BOOK OF OLD SCOTCH BALLADS AND AIRS.*

As Fletcher of Saltoun was dining close to the Thames, in company with the Earl of Cromarty and Sir Christopher Musgrave, one day during the reign of Queen Anne, the conversation happened to turn on the way in which the lower classes were "daily tempted to all manner of lewdness by infamous ballads sung in every corner of the streets." Hereupon Fletcher of Saltoun said he knew a very wise person who believed that: "If a man were permitted to make all the ballads, he need not care who should make the laws of a nation." We have all heard these words quoted—or misquoted—times innumerable, and there can be no doubt that the power of ballads over the human mind is very strong, though it would, perhaps, be rather a dangerous experiment to entrust all legislation to a Parliament whose members owed their seats solely to the authorship of compositions of the kind in question. Still, we have little opinion of a nation that cannot boast of its ballads. Poland possessed no ballads, and Poland has ceased to exist as an independent state. Nor is the influence of ballads confined to the poor and uneducated; some of the greatest and most polished poets drew their earliest inspirations from ballads, and all members of the genus irritabile have felt their charm. Every addition to our stock is a gain, and for this reason we feel thankful to the Dean of Moray, the Rev. Mr Christie, for the handsome quarto volume he has recently published, and we anxiously look forward to the promised second volume.

Of the one hundred and fifty, or more, ballads presented to us, the text of the majority are taken, often in an abbreviated form, from the works of Bishop Percy, Sir Walter Scott, Jamieson, Motherwell, Kinloch, Sharpe, Buchan, and others—as we learn in the preface. About thirty are published for the first time, from traditional sources, while a few were written by the Dean himself and his late father, in imitation of the old style. In giving us the hitherto unpublished ballads, the Dean has not always reproduced them as he heard them recited. Whenever he considered the old version objectionable in its rugged and primitive simplicity, too outspoken, or too coarse, he thought it incumbent on him as a Christian clergyman so to "purify them" that they might be sung in any company. We sincerely respect his view of the matter, but cannot help regretting he holds it. If many able churchmen of ancient and modern times had regarded their editorial duties in the same light, the grand literature of classical antiquity would have come down to us sadly mutilated. The Dean would be increasing the obligation under which we already stand towards him, if he would publish, for antiquarians and scholars alone, a small extra volume, containing the genuine traditional versions.

For musicians, one great attraction of the book consists in the fact that it contains not only the words, but the airs as well. It is a storehouse where we find most valuable and rare specimens of genuine old Scotch melodies, which bear about as much resemblance to what modern composers have been pleased to dub Scotch melodies, as the Highlander who figures in the ballets of Continental theatres bears to the true and genuine son of Ancient Gael. The airs rescued from oblivion by the Dean cannot fail to interest deeply the lover of musical lore. They teem with instruction. One popular fallacy, namely: that the flat seventh was inadmissible in Scotch melodies is strikingly refuted by them, as strikingly as the similarity existing between them and the folk-songs of Norway and Sweden prove that the forefathers of the God-fearing and sober race who now inhabit the sea-coast of Aberdeen owed their possessions in Scotland much more probably to their good swords than to their hereditary title-deeds.

Before closing our notice of this charming work, let us again thank the Dean for the pleasure afforded us by the first volume, which we cordially recommend to our readers.

MARSEILLES.—Piccolino has been performed, with Mdlle Reine in the principal character, at the Grand-Théâtre. A three-act buffo opera, Le Grand Mogol, words by M. Chivot, music by M. Edmond Audran, both of this town, has been successfully brought out at the Théâtre du Gymnase.

* Traditional Ballad Airs, arranged and harmonised for the Pianoforte and Harmonium from Copies procured in the Counties of Aberdeen, Banff, and Moray, by W. Christie, M.A., and the late Wm. Christie, Monquhitter. Edited, with the Words for Singing and with Illustrative Notes, by W. Christie, M.A., Dean of Moray, &c., and Chaplain to the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, K.G. Vol. I. Edinburgh: Edmonston & Douglas.

A BORDEAUX CRITIC ON M. FAURE.

These lines, intended to epitomise our opinion of the above eminent artist, have been reserved until after his departure. It struck us that, when our hands had ceased applauding him, this retarded evidence of our admiration would be, as it were, a last echo of his triumph—a most humble, but assuredly a most sincere echo of it.

There is no place in France where art, especially music, is more cultivated and more honoured than in our own handsome and intelligent city. All lyrical and instrumental celebrities make a point of appearing in our theatres and at our concerts, which are the envy of Lyons and Marseilles. The public of Bordeaux are not an ordinary public; they possess artistic taste and instinct. They have given proofs of what they are capable; they have contributed their full share of remarkable artists, and, when they grow enthusiastic for one of the latter, it is very certain they know what they are doing. Exaggeration does not enter into their temperament, since, though the latter participates in the ardour of the South, it does not allow that ardour unduly to overflow. For these reasons, we consider that Faure's success here is most conclusive; a success of which he ought to be more proud than of any other; a success which most loudly condemns the ostracism, so to speak, which has driven him from the Grand-Opéra, Paris. It is not our province to busy ourselves with the material side of the question, but we think that M. Halanzier was bound, at any price, to secure our greatest lyric artist for the first theatre in France, and that the success achieved by Faure in the country constitutes a thorough condemnation of the artistic judgment of the very clever manager.

In three different characters, we have seen Faure equally good and equally perfect; whether interpreting Mephistopheles, Guillaume Tell, or Alphonse, he identifies himself with each of these types, so different to one another. His voice is skilled in rendering the most violent as well as the gentlest emotions; and right royal is the way in which he sings the "Jardins de l'Alcazar" or says to Balthazar: "Priest, do not forget what you owe to your King!" While he is impassioned, ironical, and cruel in turns with Léonore; with Arnold he is heroic; and with Jemmy, pathetic. We must have heard him utter the words, "Mais je connais le poids des fers!—Quel fardeau que la vie!" or the phrase, simple though it be: "Elle nous attend tous les deux;" to know to what a height he is capable of rising. In Faust, not to mention the grand and most striking pieces, such as "La Danse du Veau d'Or," the "Sérénade," &c., with what meaning he emphasises the words, "Vous voyez qu'elle a fait bon accueil aux bijoux," and "La voisine est un peu mâre." It is this power, this truth of expression, for which his acting is remarkable. He gives due value to the slightest details which go to make up a part in its entirety, which sustain the interest, and lend constant animation to the story. We have already spoken of his gestures, his costumes, and his stage-bearing; in these respects we do not think it possible that the perfection he has attained can be excelled.

There is one point on which criticism will be at variance with all singers: there is not a singer of any importance who does not take some liberties with the text. We shall never succeed in compelling an artist possessing in his voice some one particularly rich note, not to be prodigal of it and not to substitute it occasionally for another, especially if it does not injure the style and the harmony of the musical phrase. Faure is very sparing, if not altogether innocent of these familiarities, though he has been accused of some. We consider them, however, in his case, of slight importance. We think that the respect due to the composers and their works do not suffer from them, and that, invariably bearing, as they do, the stamp of the best taste, they are very venial. They are, moreover, extremely uncommon, and, in the three grand operas in which he appeared here, we can enumerate only a very few. What Faure respects most deeply is the intention, the thought, and the genius of the composer; to render these he employs all the manifold and admirable qualities which nature has lavished on him. We believe it would be impossible for anyone to penetrate more deeply than Faure into a part; to adorn it with more delicate gradations of light and shade; to hit upon more felicitous contrasts and juster intonations; to identify himself more thoroughly with a character or an epoch. Faure does not possess that mordant which instantaneously seizes on the public. He proceeds by degrees; he leads his audience to the sublimest heights of enthusiasm by a road on which each stage is cleverly calculated; he exerts a kind of fascination; his normal condition is the monotony of perfection, varied by outbursts of genius.

Not satisfied with charming dilettanti, he thought he might do something also for the poor, and he did it on a grand scale. Bordeaux has not been chary of its ovations to this great artist, who expends his talent, as he expends his wealth, in profusion. For our part, we are happy at not having shown ourselves the least fervent of his admirers.—Journal de Bordeaux.

—o—

DR W. A. BARRETT'S LECTURES.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—In your issue of 24th ult. there is a notice of a lecture by Dr W. A. Barrett on the English glee composers, &c., which gave me much pleasure to read. It is pleasant to find men of Dr Barrett's ability and artistic taste devoting themselves to such a meritorious labour, and had I been a resident in London, the chances are I would have formed one of the audience on that occasion, it being a subject which interests me deeply. I trust the Doctor will not be offended with me, however, if I venture to supplement one of his statements, viz., that "Webbe wrote 107 glees, besides other works." I possess a list of no fewer than 211 glees, &c., of Webbe's, of which 163 are original, and the others harmonized or adapted (48 in number). Many of these were published singly, or in works got up by other composers, and it required the enthusiastic and persevering research of more than thirty years on my part to disinter them. Any person perusing Lonsdale's edition of Webbe's glees, in three large volumes, published after the composer's death, and edited by his son, would be apt to suppose that it contained all, or nearly all, of his pieces, as probably Dr Barrett did. Webbe also wrote several masses, anthems, &c. One more slight correction in regard to R. J. S. Stevens (called Stephens in your notice). I have always understood the year of his birth to have been 1753, and not 1769, as stated in your notice. Trusting that my emendations will be accepted in the same spirit in which they are written, I remain, yours truly,

D. BAPTIE.

MY LITTLE LOVE.*

Winsome little love of mine,
Sitting in the twilight shine,
Blue eyed, dimple cheek'd, and fair,
Tossing back her wealth of hair;
Singing as the birdies do,
When the skies are bright and blue;
Wooing all my heart away
With the burden of her lay—
Love.

Winsome little love of mine,
How her blue eyes gleam and shine!
Sixteen summers scarce have shed
Gladness o'er her sunny head;
Yet I told a story sweet,
Sitting at her dainty feet,
In that happy twilight time,
When our voices sang in rhyme—
Love.

LOUISA GRAY.

* Copyright.

BRUSSELS.—We read in the Indépendance Belge that M. Charles Meerens has had a certain number of copies printed of his Mémoire upon the diapason, which was addressed to the National Institute of Geneva, and was read at the meeting of the 21st October last. The Mémoire was inserted in the annals of the Institute and unanimously approved. Although the works upon musical theory of M. Meerens—our contemporary remarks—have no longer need of recommendation; we, nevertheless, call the attention to the Mémoire of those who interest themselves in the question of "musical pitch," which now seems completely and definitely settled. The general approbation of the solution given by M. Meerens fully justifies its success. Little seems now needed in order that the la of 864 vibrations should be adopted universally, and that the difficult question of the diapason be at last decided to the satisfaction of all. We know that a difference of opinion as to a few vibrations (absolutely null from a practical point of view), has kept the unity of tone in suspense all over the world for the last twenty years.

Musical World Ballads.

(By our Special Cockney.)

No. IV.

A Merry Curious Dream.

O gentelfoke! O gentelfoke i've sich a tail 2 tell.

'T'wos all along ov 'ot pork chops
Wot hunto me befell.

Veerby a lessing u may lern
Ov wot is good 2 heat,
Afore up stares 2 bed u takes
Yer pore hold weery feet.

Arter pork chops i slept & dreemd
Ven lo! a churchyard dreer,
Vith graves & tooms, & 'erselike u's
Did hunto me appeer.

The vind it 'owld, the howl did 'oop
Hup in the hivy tower,
Vile cross the sky the clouds they rusht
Full 60 mile an hour.

And now & then the moon pcept hout,
2 thro a gashly lite,
& hevry toom it seem'd a ghost
A-standin there in site.

"O, hout o' this i goes" ses i,
& turns and tries to run.
Lor' bless yer, not a foot ood move
(Don't grin, it haant no fun).

Then all at vunce, i 'gan to walk,
But not the vish'd-for vay.
A power misterous led me hon
An' veer i kood not say.

But, ho! it wos a curious thing!
At hevry step i took
The vind vent down, the clouds packt hoff
(I'll swear it hon the Book),

Till, has i stopt beside a grave,
It kum a bootjous nite,
An' "Schubert" on the stone i red
As plane as hin daylite.

Among the branches hover 'ed
A niteingale did sing,
An' all around there wos a sound
As hov a hangel's ving.

But O, most vunderfull 2 tell!
Sweet moosio i did 'ear,
'T'wos 'evingly moosic in the hair
A-sounding loud & kleeer.

Down dropt i on my marro-bones
Vile teers kum hin my hi's—
"O, never vill i go" i ses,
"From these celestahul jyes."

But has i neeld, the moosic dide,
The hangels floo away,
The niteingale, she stopt 'er song
As tho 't wos break ov day.

The vind so fowl began to 'owl,
And dark clouds 'id the moon;
"Woo-hoop, who-hoo" the vise burd kride,
i trembled like a loon.

As vell i mite, for throo the tooms
There kums a figger dred,
Vith vild, vite air, and long black close
—i vood av turnd & fled.

That figger hit droo ni the grave,
An' neeling hat the stone,
Did chip, chip, chip, vith chissale keen
(Hit thote hit wos alone).

Chip, chip, the chissale vent amane,
The howl it kride, "Ho! Ho!"
An' hi, oo stood there lookin' hon,
Ses, "'Bre's a rummy go!"

At last the figger ras'd itself,
A shape so lonk & stern,
And then vot wos it's little game
I speedily did lern.

Pore Schubert's name wos roovind quite,
It wea'd me for 2 c,
S. C. L. P. G. I. B. S.
C. z. R. C. and T..

My hanger, bilin' like a pot,
I kood no more repress.
Ses i "Old man, give me yer name,
Likewise kerrect address."

The figger lookt, but not at me,
At suthin' next my side,
I turns my ed, and, lo! there stood
A woman heegle-hi'd,

Vith grand set face, an' pashunt meen,
All drest in robes ov vite,
Vile in 'er 'and she bore a sword.
O, 't wos a goodly site!

"Oo keers for Trooth?" the figger black
All sneerindy did say,
"Go 2 the bottum ov yer vell,
For u av had yer day."

Lord, 'ow the howl did skreem jist then,
"Too-who, too-who, too-whit,"
But Trooth, she hanserd nare a vurd,
Nor ohangd 'er face a bit.

She honky beckund vith 'er 'and,
And now—most strange to tell—
Vith sithe and 'ourglass Time there stood
—The figger give a yell.

"O, spare me, spare me," loud it kride,
But kryin wos in vane,
For bit by bit it disappeerd
Vile thunder rord amane.

Hout kums the moon, so brite & kleeer
As Trooth, she rased her sword,
And tuched the mootelated stone
—U vont beleve my vord.—

But L I S and z and T
Did gleam vith sulfrous lite,
Vile hall the rest shone sweetly there
In 'evingly randyunce brite.

Now Father Time puts hout 'is 'and
To likewise tuch the stone,
Lo! L I S Z T wos gone
And Schubert stood alone.

Then Time and Trooth bith blent the grave
Vich stratevay blossomd hore
Vith bootjous heeverlastin flowers,
—The like vos nare afore.

"Ooray" kryes i, an' waves my 'at
'Igh hup abuv my 'ed,
Then gives a jump for joy, & voke—
I'd tumbled hout o' bed.

J. B.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

LAST CONCERT BUT TWO OF THE SEASON.
THE THIRTY-FIRST CONCERT.

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 12, 1877.

To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.

SEXTET, in B flat, Op. 18, for two violins, two violas, and two violoncellos—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, ZERBINI, PEZZE, and PIATTI ... Brahms.
SONG, "Only a year ago"—Mlle SOPHIE LOWE ... Agnes Zimmermann.
ÉTUDES SYMPHONIQUES (EN FORME DE VARIATIONS), for pianoforte alone—Mme SCHUMANN ... Schumann.

PART II.

TRIO, in E flat, Op. 1, No. 1, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mme SCHUMANN, MM. JOACHIM and PIATTI ... Beethoven.
SONG, "Irish Lullaby" ... C. V. Stanford.
Mlle SOPHIE LOWE.
ANDANTE and SCHERZO, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Mendelssohn.
Conductor ... Mr. ZERBINI.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 10, 1877.

To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET, in E minor, Op. 59, No. 2, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Beethoven.
AIR, "Honor and arms"—Herr HENSCHEL ... Handel.
SONATA, in A major, Op. 101, for pianoforte alone—Mme SCHUMANN ... Beethoven.
SARABANDE and TAMBOURIN, for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment—Herr JOACHIM ... Leclair.
SONGS, { (a) Venetianische Lieder:
"Wenn durch die Piasetta"
"Lele! rudern hier"
(b) "Flutenreicher Ebro" } ... Schumann.
Herr HENSCHEL.
QUARTET, in D minor, Op. 76, No. 2, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Haydn.
Conductor ... Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT. THIS DAY. The Programme will include:—1. Festival Overture (G. A. Osborne), first time at these Concerts. 2. Dramatic Concerto, for violin and orchestra (Spohr). 3. Symphony, No. 2, in G (Schumann). 4. Romance, for violin, from the Hungarian Concerto (Joachim). 5. Overture to William Tell (Rossini). Vocalists—Mme Sinico-Campobello, Signor Campobello. Solo Violin—Mr Henri Petri (his first appearance). Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANN. Numbered Stalls, in Area and Gallery, Half-a-Crown; Unnumbered Seats, in Area and Gallery, One Shilling. After the Concert, the Band of the Scots Fusilier Guards will play for Promenade.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL. Friday, June 23, Public Rehearsal; Monday, June 26, Messiah; Wednesday, June 27, Selection; Friday, June 29, Israel in Egypt. Full particulars will shortly be published.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.—NOTICE.—At the LAST CONCERT but ONE, on WEDNESDAY next, the programme will consist entirely of Standard Songs, one part being devoted to Old English, and the other to Scottish Ballads. It will include:—"Robin Adair," "Tell me my heart," and "On the Banks of Allan Water" (Mme Edith Wynne); "Caller Herrin" and "The Three Ravens" (Mme Antoinette Sterling); "The Balliff's Daughter of Islington," "Bonnie Prince Charlie," and "The Blue Bells of Scotland" (Mme Cave-Ashton); "The Bay of Biscay" and "The MacGregor's Gathering" (Mr Sims Reeves); "Draw the Sword, Scotland," "The Anchor's Weigh'd" and "The Thorn" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "Soots who has wi' Wallace bled," "Friar of Orders Grey," and "Hearts of Oak" (Mr Maybrick); "Drink to me only with thine eyes" (Mr Beckett); "Jessie, the Flower of Dumbane" (Mr De Lacy); Mme Arabella Goddard will perform "The Vicar of Bray" and Fantasia on Scotch Airs. The London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr Fred. Walker. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 4s. and 2s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets of Austin, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of BOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street.

JOACHIM.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Music, granted to Joachim, by grace of the senate last May, was conferred on him at Cambridge on Thursday. Joachim was introduced to the senate in an eloquent Latin speech by the Public Orator, Mr J. E. Sandys.

In the evening a concert took place in the Guildhall. Dr Joachim, the hero of the evening, was greeted on his entrée with uproarious applause, which was renewed with increased warmth after his magnificent performance of Beethoven's Concerto. Dr Joachim's new Overture, and Brahms' Symphony in C minor, were given with great success. Full particulars next week.

DEATHS.

On the 26th February, at View Island, Reading, of congestion of the lungs, in the fifty-first year of his age, Major WARD SOANE BRAHAM, Royal Berks Militia, youngest son of the late John Braham, Esq.

On the 5th March, at his residence, 23, Green Heys Road, Prince's Park, Liverpool, THOMAS JAMES BESWICK.

NOTICE.

With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive four pages extra, and again, from time to time, as expedient.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1877.

Pro and Con.

At the Bee and Bottle.

COLONEL TWIST.—By Jove!—you shall come.
DR SEIVERS (shivering).—I had enough the other night.]

COLONEL TWIST.—By Heliogabalus!—come you must.
 DR SHIVERS.—I won't! (emphatically). I can't.
 COLONEL TWIST.—By Pan!—If you don't, I'll twist you into a knot.

DR SHIVERS.—Gordian?

COLONEL TWIST.—Gordian—by St Simeon Stylites!

DR SHIVERS.—Then, blow'd if I do.

COLONEL TWIST.—By Alexander ab Alexandro!—I'll make you come. You were asleep, by Troglophides!—all through the Preludes.

DR SHIVERS.—I wasn't. I talked with Jumbo, who talked with Jumbo.

COLONEL TWIST.—Get out, or, by Julius Scaliger!—I'll drag you to the spot. I'll twist you into a knot—by Franciscus Huefferius!

DR SHIVERS.—Gordian?

COLONEL TWIST.—Gordian!

DR SHIVERS.—Then I shan't be able to budge.

COLONEL TWIST.—I have my scymetar. I'll sever the knot with my scymetar—by the umbril of Pomponatius!

DR SHIVERS.—Go to!—tyrannical old Saracen! Besides Jumbo and Jumbo promised to meet us at the Bee and Bottle.

COLONEL TWIST.—No, by Barbaggia!—they didn't.

DR SHIVERS.—By Barberossa!—they did; and so did Boil and Powis, Sir Caper and Pitt—to talk about Mazeppa —

Loud crash in Smoke-room.

COLONEL TWIST.—By Benny Dick Spinoza!—what's that?

(Voices outside, significant of difference of opinion.)

DR SHIVERS (shivering).—That's Boil and Powis. Boil's the most obstinate fellow I know, and Powis the most oleaginous.

[Exeunt temporarily.]

Enter BAYLIS BOIL and PURPLE POWIS.

MR BAYLIS BOIL.—I tell you it's infernal rubbish.

MR PURPLE POWIS.—But don't you remember that passage of six-threes in the Preludes?

MR BAYLIS BOIL.—Shade of Lamartine!

MR PURPLE POWIS.—Lamartine sold his shadow in 1848 to Louis Blanc, who gave it to Victor Hugo, who gave it to Berlioz Hector —

MR BAYLIS BOIL.—I tell you it's all rubbish! —

MR PURPLE POWIS.—Beg pardon—who gave it to Berlioz Hector (hinc the Troyens), who swallowed it. Remember, too, that passage where the violins go up —

MR BAYLIS BOIL (interrupting him).—And then come down?

MR PURPLE POWIS.—Exactly.

MR BAYLIS BOIL.—I tell you it's rubbish. Charon wouldn't ferry it over Styx.

[Noise outside as of wrangling. CERBERUS barks.]

MR PURPLE POWIS.—Oh, that's Sir Caper and Dandy Pitt —

MR BAYLIS BOIL.—Awful bores. Let's go smoke.

MR PURPLE POWIS.—Assuredly. [Exeunt to smoke-room.]

Enter SIR CAPER O'CORBY and MR LAVENDER PITT.

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw!

SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Bedad! I hear the bark of Cerberus.

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! three gentlemen in one.

SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Ap'Mutton has slain Cerberus. Be the hand o' me body!—nobody here.

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! Dweadful!

SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Be the beard of me grandmother!—A nice evening you've made me spend. Arra! thread on me coat tails!

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! No!

SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Be the sinews of th' O'Corby's! I'm still on horseback, bound hand and foot!

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw!

SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—I can't loose bit or bridle.

MR LAVENDER PITT.—No bit, no biddle, no saddle, no girth, no stiups, no spurs. Aw! A wild animal, you know.

SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Bedad! Tied to a wild mare's belly, like Sir Pelcas! Begott!

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! no—horse's back, with thongs. Aw!

SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Next time I see th' Habby, be St Patrick! I'll tie him to th' horse tail.

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! Limner Lyall will do that. Dem-nition!

(Louder crash in smoke-room.)

SIR CAPER O'CORBY (frightened).—Bedad! What's that? Thread on me coat tails!

MR LAVENDER PITT (trembling).—Aw! No! Besides, I have an appointment at the Horse and Stamps—werry pressing.

SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Be the calf of me leg, and I have another. Bedad! at the Moon and Ghoul. I shall rethurn in the condition of an hour.

MR LAVENDER PITT.—And I in less than half an hour, you know. Aw!

[Exeunt both precipitately from Bee and Bottle.]

Enter MUMBO and JUMBO.

MUMBO.—Bere im Corby?
JUMBO.—Bere im Pitt?

(Noise in smoke-room. Smash, as of bottles exchanged. Differences of opinion are clearly suggested. MUMBO and JUMBO run out from different doors, exclaiming—Wagner him come.)

Dr Serpent.—All right. Wagner comes. Our plans are ripe. Keep counsel. Sleep not.

Dr Ghost.—I have not slept since I died, and cannot be laid till Richard brings his box—his Pandora's box.

Dr Serpent.—was dupov. A nice box, with only "Hope" at the bottom, when "Hope" at the best could tell "a flattering tale." Ask Algernon Swinburne what he thinks of that. Nevertheless, the nymph, Chione, was turned into a hawk.

Dr Ghost.—By Minerva—because she proclaimed herself more beautiful than that goddess. Wagner would turn Liszt into a buzzard, if Liszt proclaimed himself more beautiful than that god, and—

Dr Serpent (interrupting him). Which, by the way, reminds me that you promised, if I brought Wagner, you would bring Liszt. I have brought Wagner.

Dr Ghost.—Yes, but you have also brought Rubinstein. Rubinstein plays the piano; Wagner calls it "hammer-music."

Dr Serpent.—There are, according to the prophet Ezekiel, as it were, wheels within wheels. Where Rubinstein is Liszt cannot be.

Dr Ghost (reflectively).—And vice versa?

Dr Serpent.—Exactly. If both came together, St James's Hall would fly off like the palace of Aladdin—

Dr Ghost (interrupting him).—Or the comet of Hallé?

Dr Serpent.—Halley, not Hallé. Hallé was never so far off the earth as that comet. Otherwise, precisely.

Dr Ghost.—Be consoled. I will induce Liszt to come next year, and he shall bring with him a box just as full as Pandora's, but with no "Hope" at bottom.

Dr Serpent.—What will Académus then say about pedals?

Dr Ghost.—Or Athenaeus about "feu sacré?"

Dr Serpent (in haste).—Let's go see 'em both. Mumbo and Jumbo, though cowards, will soon be back—

Dr Ghost (interrupting him).—And you are anxious to witness the result of scrimmage in smoke-room.

Drs Serpent and Ghost.—Ahehiohuh! (Vanish.)

Schluss folgt,

AN UNPUBLISHED MASS BY MOZART.

WE learn from Paris that an interesting and hitherto unpublished MS. of Mozart is in the market. It is his autograph of a Mass composed, about 1777, for the Convent of the Holy Cross at Augsburg, during one of Mozart's visits to his cousin, a bookbinder in that city. The MS. was preserved in the library of the convent till the secularisation of that institute, when it was presented by the librarian to Mozart's relative, who, at his death, left it to his son. From the latter it can with certainty be traced to the present owner, who is ready to part with it on reasonable terms. A contributor to the Revue et Gazette Musicale, who saw the MS., many years ago, says there is no doubt as to its authenticity, and declares it to be a fine specimen of the master's early style. He especially praises the "Domine Deus" and the "Incarnatus." Here is a chance for English collectors!

Richard Wagner.

THE following is the substance of a letter addressed to the Times, of March 3rd, by a correspondent from Munich:—

"Herr Richard Wagner's health has improved. The eminent composer intends paying a visit to England in the course of April. The object of his excursion is the bringing out parts of his Ring des Nibelungen trilogy on the English stage, and he wishes to superintend the performances himself. It is no longer a secret that last year's festivals at Bayreuth were not, from a financial point of view, successful. A large deficit was incurred. Bayreuth will, for the present, have to forego the advantage of beholding the gods and heroes of Walhalla, with their large retinue of followers. By-and-bye Herr Wagner may renew his venture in that town, but the price of admission will be considerably reduced. Having modified his former resolution, he is now ready to sell to German theatrical managers the right of performing the Nibelungen, without insisting upon special conditions. The Hamburg and Leipzig public will soon be benefitted by this condescension. Munich has already witnessed Das Rheingold and Die Walküre, and will shortly be edified with Siegfried and Götterdämmerung. The King of Bavaria, proprietor of the original score, has, it is said, out of consideration for Herr Wagner, withdrawn his objection to the third and fourth sections of the Tetralogy being represented out of his dominions. Wagner wishes to afford German theatres in general an opportunity of showing whether they are ahead of him in scenic and decorative appliances. The indefatigable composer is engaged upon a new opera, Parcival, a counterpart to Lohengrin, which has already earned in England, as well as other countries, well-deserved recognition as a work of art."

This sounds strange after Wagner's recent edict, which will be found at length in another column. A new colour must have been given to possible events. What are the shabby Burgomasters, tradesmen, and householders of the city of the Margrave about? At all events, Herr Wagner may feel sure of a cordial reception in this country. Otto Heard.

MR HENRY LESLIE gave the first of his series of concerts for the present season at St James's Hall, on last Thursday evening week. The room was crowded. One of the principal attractions was J. S. Bach's Motet for a double choir, "Sing ye to the Lord," given for the first time in London, and sung with immense effect. Want of space compels us to defer further particulars till next week.

NAPLES.—The following operas are announced for performance at the Teatro del Fondo between the present date and the end of May:—Saffo, Pacini; Luisa Miller, Verdi; Eliza e Claudio, Mercadante; I Puritani, Bellini; Diana, e la Fata dei Pozzuoli (new), and I promessi Sposi, Petrella; and La Campana dell' Eremitaggio, Sarria.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

A MAN might feel quite as warm and comfortable in a coat made by a village tailor as he would in the most satisfactory garment built by Poole himself; still, if he belonged to the fashionable world, he would not like to walk down Bond Street in such a coat during the height of the season, or don it when he went for a canter in the Row. In such matters the style is as important as the material; perhaps a great deal more so. The same principle appears to influence advertisers in America. They, too, attach great weight to style in their mode of announcing to the world the boons they are prepared to offer, in the shape of professional advice, food, instruction, infallible elixirs, rare opportunities, amusements, businesses, merchandise, and every other conceivable thing under the sun, to their fellow creatures. Here is a specimen of the sort of notification to which we refer, as applied to pianos:—

"He won't do it again, if he knows it. He wanted to surprise her; so, at night, when he came home, he told her he had bought her a very fine piano. 'Is it a Hallet and Davis?' she asked. He told her it was not, and then the chairs began to fly, and the cat got trodden on, and he fled out of the house to back out of his bargain, and pay a visit to Mr Badger, of 13, Sansome Street. He soon got a beautiful Hallet and Davis, and peace once more reigned over the domestic hearth."

Few of Purcell's songs seem to have appeared in a detached form during his life. The collection of his vocal secular music, which has rendered his name famous, was published by his widow under the title of Orpheus Britannicus, two years after his death. It contained the compositions which first rendered his countrymen acquainted with the delight to be derived from music written for a single voice. Previous to Purcell's time, Englishmen had cultivated madrigals and part songs, but, in all songs for one voice only, the effect was produced principally by the words and not the melody; the airs were as misshapen as though, instead of being cast in a regular mould, they had been formed of notes scattered about hap-hazard. "Exclusive admirers of modern symmetry and elegance," observes a biographer, "may call Purcell's taste barbarous; yet, in defiance of superior cultivation and refinement, and of every vicissitude of fashion, through all his rudeness and barbarism, original genius, feeling, and passion, are, and ever will be, discernible in his works, by candid and competent judges of the art."

The following letter, addressed by Spontini to Louis XVIII., in 1814, proves that the composer did not lose much time in striving to profit by the return of the king:—

"Sire,—A foreigner (now one no longer) who has endeavoured by his works to induce France to adopt him, who has consecrated to her for the last fifteen years the tribute of his feeble talents, and who is established in and bound to the country by marriage into a French family, lays his most ardent and dearest good-wishes at your Majesty's feet. While still young I composed, not without some glory, twenty-four operas, fifteen of which were performed in the leading theatres of Italy, and nine in those of France. The Institute of France decreed, by three consecutive decisions, that my opera, La Vestale, merited the grand decennial prize promised by the Government for the best among the musical-dramatic compositions represented in the space of ten years on the stage of the Royal Academy. For two years I directed the buffo Italian opera in Paris, and founded there the 'opera seria.' Under your Majesty's reign France will behold all the arts flourish once more with public felicity. I should, indeed, be happy, Sire, if your Majesty would deign to bestow on me the post of director of your private music (for the concerts) and of Italian serio-buffo opera. This post has always been filled by an Italian, and, under the reigns of Louis XV. and Louis XVI., your august predecessors, five chapelmasters were employed in chapel and chamber service. If serio and buffo Italian opera are abolished in France I would beg leave, Sire, to lay at your feet my humble supplication that I may obtain from your Majesty the direction of the music at the Royal Academy, as I am the only composer in Paris without a place and certain means of livelihood. I shall spend the remainder of my life, Sire, in blessing your happy return, as well as the benefits conferred by you, and in endeavouring to render myself worthy of them; I think I feel my feeble genius rise and increase at the mere notion of my being able to devote its efforts, together with my eternal gratitude, to the chief, so deeply beloved and so long looked forward to, of the august house of Bourbon. I remain, with profound respect, Sire, your Majesty's most devoted subject,

"SPONTINI."

"Rue du Mail, No. 13."

This application was not successful. A few years later Spontini settled at Berlin, where the King of Prussia appointed him Musical Director-General to the Court.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY.—The first concert (54th since the foundation) of this society took place at Langham Hall, on Wednesday, 28th February, and was attended by a large and appreciative audience. In accordance with the objects of the society, F. Schubert's compositions formed the first part of the programme. The instrumental pieces included Grand Trio in E flat, played by Herr Hause (pianoforte), Herr Klein (violin), and Herr Schuberth (violoncello); Rondo from pianoforte Sonata in D major (Miss Kate Whitelaw, R.A.M.); Impromptu, No. 3, for the pianoforte (by Miss Ada Lester); violoncello solo, Herr Schuberth. The songs of the same composer were: "Ständchen" (Herr Irevia); "Sehnsucht" (Mlle Helvert); "Der Wanderer" (Mr Prenton); "Der Neugierige" (Miss Emma Berthold); and "Margherita" (Mme Louise Gage.) The second part was miscellaneous, and opened with a Sonata in B flat (first time) by Röntgen, excellently rendered by Herr Schuberth and Miss Lillie Albrecht. The vocalists were Miss Grosvenor, Mr C. A. White, and those already named in the first part. Miss Grosvenor was well received in the "Lost Chord" (Sullivan). Miss Ada Lester was called upon to repeat the pianoforte solo, "Reveil de Lion." Miss Lillie Albrecht was heartily "called" after Thalberg's fantasia on Mosé in Egitto. Mme Louise Gage's fine voice met with numerous admirers; and the artists who appeared for the first time rendered good service. The second concert, when Schumann's compositions will form the first part of the programme, is fixed to take place on 11th April.

A LARGE audience, including many celebrities of the musical and theatrical world, welcomed the first appearance in public on Wednesday afternoon, at St George's Hall, of Miss Mary Chatterton, at the harp recital given by her great-uncle and instructor on that instrument, Mr Frederick Chatterton. The youthful débutante, who is a daughter of the popular lessee of Drury Lane Theatre, met with a flattering reception, and it may be at once said that her success was as unqualified as it was deserved. Although evidently suffering at first from nervousness, the youthful artist evinced a command over her difficult instrument that at once reflected credit on her veteran teacher, and on the young lady herself for the industry and intelligence that she has evidently brought to bear on her studies. In her performance of an arrangement of the "Carnival of Venice," by the giver of the concert, Miss Chatterton displayed a delicate and precise touch, with a brilliancy of execution that at once placed her on excellent terms with her hearers. Still more favourably received was her rendering of Mr F. Balsir Chatterton's "Fantaisie Brillante," which was heartily encored, the artist, however, substituting a familiar Scotch air, that met with equal recognition. In the concluding number of the concert the pupil and the master made a marked effect in the duet for two harps on themes from Norma, both being warmly applauded at the close. In other respects the concert possessed many interesting features. Mr Chatterton himself played his "Rimembranza d'Italia" and his "Irish Fantasia" in a manner that fully proved that the hand of the master had not forgotten its cunning. Vocal contributions from Miss Ada Patterson, who was encored for her singing of "Comin' thro' the rye," Miss Webster, and Miss Alice Fairman were all favourably received, as was a pianoforte performance by Mr George Forbes. The last-named gentleman and Mr W. Beavan presided at the pianoforte.—Daily Telegraph.

HERR LEHMEYER and his pupils held a pianoforte recital, on Thursday, March 8th. The following were among the pieces given:—Adagio and Scherzo, Beethoven (Miss Williams); Overture to Egmont, a quatre mains, Novelletto, by Schumann (Miss Ling); Andante, Beethoven (Miss Clairmont); Fantasia on Faust, by Leybach (Miss St. Alba.) M. Turner and Mme Bernhardt varied the programme with several songs.

MR G. W. MOORE, the urbane and talented manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, took his annual benefit on Tuesday afternoon and evening in St James's (Grand) Hall, when his popularity was attested by audiences which filled the place to overflowing, and by the "array of talent" that came forward to "assist" him. Misses Farren, Dubois, Chapman, Bromley; Messrs Lionel Brough, Terry, Marius, Hill, Clarke, Righton, Fernandez, J. G. Taylor, Jackson, the Girards, and the Vokes Family, were among the principals, and in addition Mr Leybourne and some other performers from the principal music halls appeared. Mr Moore's songs and the part-singing of his company were especially admired, and applauded "to the echo."

PROVINCIAL.

CHELLENHAM.—The Looker-on informs us that St David's Day, annually observed, with two or three brief intervals, in Cheltenham for nearly half a century by the performance of National Melodies, after a suspension of three years, was revived on Thursday last under slightly altered circumstances, but without abatement of interest or ecclit; as all present can certify. So gay a party had not, indeed, assembled in the Rotunda since its renovation, and pains had been taken to set off its interior to advantage. The concert opened with an overture incorporating Welsh airs, followed by a glee. The vocalists were Mdme Edith Wynne, who sang with all her wonted fire the Welsh song, "Gydar Wawr," in the first part, and "Adieu to dear Cambria," in the second; the enthusiastic applause which the last elicited obtaining, as encore, "The Bells of Aberdovry," in its original language, charmingly accompanied on the harp by Mr John Thomas. Mrs Mathison sang twice in each part of the programme, and was warmly applauded, her rich contralto voice and expressive vocalisation in the "Ash Grove" eliciting a hearty "encore." Mr Lewis Thomas threw all his accustomed energy into the "Harp of Wales" and the "March of the Men of Harlech," which latter, being vociferously re-demanded, he gave, in its stead, "The worth of true friendship." Mr Howells, is fourth vocalist of the party, was new to Cheltenham, and his first appearance created a favourable impression; an excellent tenor voice and careful execution doing fair justice to each of the songs assigned him, in two of which—"Firm as the sea-girt rock" and "The Maid of Llangollen"—he was warmly encored. Mr John Thomas favoured the audience with a harp solo in each act, eliciting rapturous applause by the brilliancy of his execution. Mr J. O. Smith, who conducted with his usual musicianly talent, presided at the piano.

BLACKPOOL.—On March 5th a very successful concert was given in the Assembly Rooms. The principal artists were Miss Carina Clelland, M. Vieuxtemps (violinocello), Mr and Mrs Borowski, Messrs Pycroft and Daly. Mr Grindrod was the accompanist.

THE KENNEDYS' "TWA HOURS AT HAME."—Mr Kennedy and his family gave on Monday night, before a large and sympathetic audience, the first of four entertainments to be presented during the week at the Literary Institute, Edinburgh, and entitled "Twa Hours at Hame." The entertainment consisted of an admirable selection of Scotch songs and stories, glees, and trios, and the manner of their execution left nothing to be desired. Mr Kennedy is acknowledged as the first living exponent of Scottish song, and certainly nothing could have been more thoroughly enjoyable than his rendering of such fine old ballads as "Come, all ye jolly shepherds," or "There's nae luck about the house." The pawky humour and racy action which he threw into the interpretation of "Get up and bar the door, O" and "The wee wee German lairdie," were exquisite; while the dramatic point and artistic completeness with which he told of the expatriated Highlander's love of hills, and firm belief that mountain tops were half-way houses to heaven, or hit off "Saunders M'Glashan's courtship," drew from his auditors round after round of laughter. Miss Helen Kennedy sang "Kind Robin lo'es me" with capital expression; and Miss Marjory, "The Lass o' Humberdale," with delightful sweetness. "The Scottish Blue Bells" was given by Mr David Kennedy with smoothness and finish, and Mr James Kennedy's fine baritone was heard to good purpose in Dibdin's "The lads of the village." The glees and the choruses sung in concert exhibited careful training and due appreciation of the effects of light and shade. The Misses Kennedy played the accompaniments and a set of reels and strathspeys with skill.—Scotman.

LIVERPOOL.—The Societa Armonica, who are in the habit of providing gratuitous entertainments for the benefit of their friends, each season, gave a concert on the 3rd inst. in aid of the funds of the Society. There was a large attendance, and, indeed, the room would probably have been crammed had the concert been more generally announced. The band, under the direction of Mr Armstrong, gave six orchestral pieces, including Schubert's Overture "in the Italian style;" Mozart's Overture to Le Nozze di Figaro; the andante from Haydn's Third Symphony; Romberg's Symphony in E flat, &c.; in all of which they showed careful preparation, and, considerable refinement of execution. The orchestral music was relieved by an excellent quartet of vocalists, viz: Mdme Billinie-Porter, Miss F. Armstrong, Mr T. Foulkes, and Mr W. P. Roberts. Mdme B. Porter was compelled to repeat her two solos; and in "Di piacer" (Rossini), and Arditi's valse, "Il bacio," her fine soprano voice and brilliant execution were displayed to the best advantage. Miss Armstrong gave Rossini's "Di tanti palpiti," and Hatton's "Enchantress" (the latter being re-demanded) with much feeling and genuine expression. Mr Foulkes was liberally applauded in "Sound an alarm" and "The flag that braved," and Mr Roberts had the honour of an encore in "Down among the dead men." The concert altogether gave general satisfaction.

NORWICH.—A concert, exceedingly well attended, was given in the lecture room of the Church of England Young Men's Society, Little Orford Street. The programme comprised a class of music much superior to that usually performed at infinitely more pretentious entertainments. The concert began with the overture to Tancredi arranged as a pianoforte duet, and was exceedingly well played by Mr Arthur Bunnett and Mr G. Hill. Mr Arthur Bunnett succeeded in his next contribution in securing—and well he deserved it—a rich meed of applause by his admirable playing of Heller's "Wanderstunden" and Scarlatti's Sonata in A. The second part commenced with the overture to the Barber of Seville, in which Mr Arthur Bunnett and Mr G Hill again acquitted themselves with great credit. Rode's Concerto, No. 7, for the violin—played by Mr W. Tuddenham—rendered with considerable energy, was an immense success, and obtained an enthusiastic encore. Mr Tuddenham responded to the wishes of the audience by playing a movement from a sonata in E minor. Miss Rayner and Mr Page contributed several vocal pieces with success, the gentleman giving "The Falcon Knight" (written by Mr H. R. Hands, and composed by Mr A. E. Bunnett) capitally. The composition of the young author was exceedingly well received by the audience. Miss Rayner appeared to great advantage in Schubert's "Ave Maria;" and the concert concluded with a concertante duet for piano and violin (Tarantella by Alard), given by Mr A. E. Bunnett and Mr W. Tuddenham, with energy and precision. Great credit is due to Mr Bunnett for the zeal with which he worked in arranging for this concert, and for the tact and taste with which he carried out the duties of conductor and accompanist.

GLASGOW.—On Monday night Mr Carl Rosa's English Opera Company commenced their announced "six representations," when Hérold's Zampa was produced before a numerous audience. The performance—says the Glasgow Herald—was an undoubted success, and fully realised the high expectations which had been raised regarding the appearance amongst us of Mr Rosa's company. The great charm of the performance was the equal balance of every part. From the first to the last bar it was apparent that solo vocalists, chorus, and orchestra were willing to sink all idiosyncrasies and strive for the general result. No one member of the numerous company ever attempted to thrust himself or herself into undue prominence. The "cast" contained the names of Mdle Ostava Torriani, Miss Lucy Franklein, Mrs Aynsley Cook, Messrs Henry Nordblom, Charles Lyall, Aynsley Cook, Muller, and Santley. On his entrée Mr Santley was awarded quite an ovation. He gave the grand scena in the second act capitally, and at the conclusion was rapturously applauded. At the end of each act he was vociferously called for. Mdle Ostava Torriani made a marked impression. Miss Lucy Franklein and Mrs Aynsley Cook were both excellent in their respective parts; Mr Aynsley Cook made his mark, and Mr Charles Lyall was intensely amusing as the cowardly Dandolo. He did not—says the Herald—lose one single point, and therefore his acting and singing had their due effect on the audience.

WIMBLEDON.—The fourth of the chamber concerts announced to be given at the Village Club and Lecture Hall, took place on Tuesday evening, March 6. The vocalists were Miss Adela Vernon and Mr Gerald Henry; and the instrumentalists, Miss Edridge (pianoforte), Herr Pollitzer (violin), Mr Zerbini (viola), and Herr Daubert (violinocello). The concert began with Schubert's trio in E flat (Op. 100, No. 2), capitally played by Miss Edridge (who may be remembered at the Royal Academy of Music as among the best of the pupils of Mr F. B. Jewson), Herren Pollitzer, and Daubert, and concluded with Mozart's Quartet in G minor, played by the same artists with the addition of Mr Zerbini—a good beginning and a good ending. Solos were also played in excellent style in the course of the evening. Miss Edridge gave Mr F. B. Jewson's three charming "Rhapsodies," &c., it need hardly be said (Mr Jewson having been her instructor), with the utmost effect. Herr Pollitzer, whose command over the instrument of his predilection is well known, played the adagio movement from Spohr's 9th Violin Concerto, and Herr Daubert, whose talent is no less acknowledged, a violoncello solo by Servais, ("Le Désir.") The vocalists acquitted themselves to the evident satisfaction of the audience, who duly felt and acknowledged the kindness of Miss Adela Vernon, who undertook, at a short notice, to supply the place of Miss Julia Wigan, unfortunately, too unwell to appear in public. Signor Zerbini accompanied the vocal music.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of Organ Recitals by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 8th:—

Organ Concerto (G major)	Handel.
Air, "Ave, Maria"	F. Schubert.
Allegretto (A minor. Op. 28)	E. Silas.
Prelude on the hymn, "Stabat Mater"	W. T. Best.
Allegro con brio (F major)	W. T. Best.
Variations on an original Air	S. S. Wesley.
(This tune was composed for the Bells of Holdsworth Church—1873.)
Marche Militaire (E flat major. Op. 31)	E. Schulz.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 10th:—

Fantasia (E flat major)	W. T. Best.
Larghetto from the Second Symphony	Beethoven.
Offertoire pour Orgue	Ambrose Thomas.
Allegretto (D flat major)	Schumann.
Allegro con brio (F minor)	Schumann.
(From the Sketches for a Pedal Pianoforte—Op. 58.)
Adagio from the First Organ Sonata	F. Kümstedt.
Chorus, "Jealousy! infernal Pest" (Hercules)	Handel.

FERDINAND HILLER'S NEW SYMPHONY.

The programme of the Ninth Gürzenich Concert, Cologne, contained three Pieces for the Piano; a new Symphony by Dr Ferdinand Hiller; two overtures; an "Abendlied" by Haydn; and three choral pieces by Möhring.

The pianist was Mdle Vera Timanow, of St Petersburg, a pupil of Liszt's and Tausig's. The first piece selected by her was M. Anton Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto in G major, in which she exhibited considerable talent, adorned or marred, according to the various tastes of her hearers, by the peculiarities which characterise the modern school to which she belongs. She was loudly applauded, though, perhaps, entitled to more praise for her rendering of Scarlatti's "Pastorale," and the Intermezzo from Ferdinand Hiller's "Moderne Suite." Taken all in all, her first appearance at the Gürzenich must be pronounced highly satisfactory.

The great attraction of the evening was Dr Ferdinand Hiller's new Symphony. It is another laurel leaf added to the noble wreath which already encircles his brow. The critic of the Kölnische Zeitung thus dilates upon it.

"With his youngest and newest composition, the G major Symphony in four movements, Ferdinand Hiller, celebrated, so to say, a jubilee as a composer. It is exactly fifty years since his Op. 1, a Pianoforte Quintet, appeared in print. In the spring of 1827, young Hiller, with his Pianoforte Quintet in his pocket, accompanied his teacher, Hummel, on a visit to Vienna. The work was performed at an evening party in the Austrian capital, and the celebrated Viennese publisher, Haslinger, who happened to be present, immediately offered to publish it. The master must have experienced a feeling of satisfaction at producing, after a lapse of exactly fifty years, another composition before another evening party, rather larger, it is true, than the first, and at seeing it meet with a reception as joyful and favourable as that which instantly procured a first-class publisher for the early work. But, with this Symphony of his, Hiller has become really young again. His fancy, full of fire and eagerness, without a trace of fatigue, succeeds in presenting his thoughts in a garb ever new, ever more and more richly decked. One thing which strikes us as highly characteristic in connection with this jubilee of Hiller's as a composer, is that, despite his sixty-five years, he has remained a son of the Present; he rules with a certain hand all the modern additions gained for the domain of the orchestra; his melodious argosy sails proudly along with the stream of Time. It appears superfluous to extol Hiller for thoroughly understanding the language of the orchestra and being a perfect master of musical form. And he has not retrograded, as regards the earlier periods of his creative production; on the contrary, it struck us that in no former work have we seen the colours so richly mixed. It is for this reason that we listen with pleasure to his language, whether he abandons himself to sorrowful or desponding thoughts, as in the early motives of the movement; narrates romantic ballads (2nd movement); keeps up a piquant conversation (3rd movement); or, lastly, in the finale, celebrates, with energetic rhythms, the victory over the gloomy mood of the first movement. Everywhere there appears the delicate traits of clever work, and sometimes, also, the varying play of mental colour, which does not love to remain long in one and the same frame of mind. The pictures change rapidly, though the composer's fancy is loath to tear itself away from the full orchestra, especially in the first movement, the second part of which, by-the-bye, is even too prodigal of its gifts; it lavishes them with both hands. The middle of the third movement contains, moreover, a certain stretch of less captivating thoughts. But these are details which scarcely weigh in the balance against a total impression truly flattering for the composer. The masterly treatment of the orchestra excited undivided admiration, to which the public gladly gave the most lively expression; after every number, as well as at the conclusion, the orchestra, likewise, were not to be restrained from paying their tribute of homage to their chief in the form of a clanging flourish."

The Symphony was admirably performed, as were Mendelssohn's "Hebrides," and Spohr's overture to Jessonda. The vocal pieces worthily completed a most excellent concert.

MARCH *

March comes apace, we know him well,
His breath the boisterous gale;
And as he comes he says, "Awake,
Fair lily of the dale."
The primrose and the violet
Have heard the sudden call;
His clarion rings throughout the grove,
And he awakes them all.
In majesty he drives the ship
Upon the troubled sea,
Then, as a lover, comes to woo
The fair anemone.

We hear his shrill voice through the pine,
And think upon the brave;
Our thoughts now travel far away
With those upon the wave.
On high the mother's prayer ascends,
And bright eyes vainly weep,
While, girt with dangers, the beloved
Now rocks upon the deep.
Appealingly we ask for aid—
Oh, then, propitious prove;
Give thy bright flow'rs to deck our paths,
And bring back those we love.

S. P. HOWELL.

* Copyright.

WAIFS.

The Scotsman of the 24th ult. gives a flattering account of the production of Wagner's Flying Dutchman at the Edinburgh Theatre, with Mdle Torriani and Mr Santley in the leading characters—the other parts being sustained by Miss Franklein, Messrs Packard, Aynsley Cook, and Turner. The Scotsman thus winds up its notice:

"This opera is quite as exacting for the players as for the singers; and the orchestra played its part throughout with an accuracy and precision quite beyond what is customary on the Anglo-Italian lyric stage. The score was rigidly adhered to, allowing for the omission of the ophicleide part. Mr Carl Rosa can hardly be overpraised for the pains he has taken to attain so complete a performance. All the scenic effects, except the final apotheosis, were nearly as well given as at the great operahouses of Germany. The two ships were excellent, and a better stage representation of a stormy sea could hardly be possible. The performers, particularly the two principals, were warmly applauded from time to time, and there was a general call at the close of each act."

Those who have heard The Flying Dutchman in London under Mr Carl Rosa's direction can readily endorse every word of the foregoing.

Mdile Mila Rodani is at Milan.

Herr R. Wagner's Lohengrin has been produced at San Francisco.

The Soldene Buffo-Opera company have been playing at St Louis, U.S.

Herr Niemann will sing in April at Liepsic and Cologne, and in May at Hamburg.

There is some talk of producing Glinka's Life for the Czar at the Théâtre-Italien, Paris.

Der Freischütz will shortly re-appear at the Grand Opera, Paris, with Mdle Krauss as Agathe.

The Brothers Thorn are shortly expected in Berlin, where they intend giving a series of concerts.

Herr Glasenapp will publish the second volume of his Biography of Richard Wagner early in April.

The Boston (U.S.) Handel and Haydn Society will give a performance of Handel's Joshua on the 2nd of April.

The first performance of Robert Schumann's Genoveva, at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, is fixed for the 28th inst.

M. Alfred Jaëll, accompanied by the Paul Martin Quartet Party, has been giving concerts at Calais, Lille, and Dunkirk.

Dr Mosenthal has bequeathed to the Society of the Friends of Music, Vienna, all his author's rights from his opera librettos.

A tropical Georgian girl declared she would rather be a black bombazine band on her adored one's hat than live without him.

Up to the present time the subscriptions received for the Monument to the late Félicien David amount to 18,483 francs, 45 centimes.

Signora Lucca, of Milan, has purchased Sig. Sarria's opera, La Campana dell' Eremitaggio, the plot of which is taken from Les Dragons de Villars.

The ball at the Grand Opera, Paris, for the benefit of the distressed operatives of Lyons, was exceedingly brilliant. The receipts amounted to nearly 200,000 francs.

M. F. W. Allard, bandmaster of the 2nd Regiment of the Line, and M. Lambé, bandsman of the 1st Regiment of Guides, have been created knights of the Belgian Order of Leopold.

At the second public performance given by the pupils of the Brussels Conservatory M. Gevaert introduced the experiment, which proved thoroughly successful, of executing compositions by pupils themselves.

Herr Waldemar Bargiel and Professor Richard Wüerst have been elected members of the Royal Academy of Science, Berlin. The nomination of M. Anton Rubinstein as a foreign member did not result in his election.

Balfé's popular song, "Killarney," was introduced to the "Brothers" by Mdme Alice Barth, at a masonic dinner, held at the Freemason's Tavern, on Wednesday last, and met with the entire approbation of the "craft."

A new three-act comic opera, La Courte Echelle, words by M. Rounat, music by M. Membree, is in rehearsal at the Théâtre-Lyrique. The cast includes Mdles Zina Dalt, Parent, MM. Engel, Lepers, Grivot, Labat, and Soto.

The practice of entire companies travelling about is now beginning to find favour in Germany as well as elsewhere. During the month of May the operatic company from the Stadttheater, Hamburg, will perform at the Stadttheater, Breslau.

Mr J. C. Fryer was to commence a short German operatic season, at the Academy of Music, New York. He calls it a grand "Wagnerian Festival," and intends producing Die Walküre, Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, and Der fliegende Holländer.

Cagliostro, the celebrated French "prestidigitateur," who has been "astonishing" the habitués of the Crystal Palace during the past week, is now prepared to accept engagements for private soirées, for which his gentlemanly manners eminently qualify him.

He had been appointed cashier of the bank on account of his strong religious tendencies, and, when he walked of with 10,000 dollars, the shareholders, mostly Episcopalians and Presbyterians, held a meeting, and came to the conclusion that he was a Free-Will Baptist.

A fascination of style and freedom from the objectional element that so often disfigures novels of the Ouida class should—says The Academy—make Vivienne a success. Vivienne is a novel, written by one whose lyrics often appear in The Musical World under the nom de plume of Rita.

A commemorative performance was recently given by the members of the Vienna Society of the Friends of Music, in honour of their late president, Dr Egger. Assisted by their branch societies, the Vocal Association and the Orchestral Association, they executed Cherubini's Requiem. Herr Herbeck conducted.

Miss Catharine Penna has been singing with great success at Leicester, Sheffield, &c. The critics highly praise the sweetness of her voice and her evident good training. "Bishop's song, 'The Mocking Bird,'" says a local journal, "won her a hearty encore, and Balfé's 'Killarney' was a rich display of artistic skill."

A contributor to a Washington paper says the fact is now recognised that Judge Lawson, of Ohio, is the ablest lawyer in America, because he has admitted it himself. Whereupon the Chicago Tribune observes that concessions of this kind are the only ones that can be wrung from the average lawyer, except by due process of law.

Our readers must be familiar with Mason's setting, once very popular, and even now not disused, of the collect, "Lord of all power and might;" but possibly few are aware that the composer was a man of sufficient mark to be styled, after death, a "departed genius." Some particulars respecting him may be found in a volume published more than seventy years ago, by Edward Miller, Mus. Doc., and devoted to the history and antiquities of Doncaster. Mason was then deceased, but his reputation as a poet if not as a musician survived, and Dr Miller rather minutely describes what sort of man he was. From this account it appears that, in addition to his more obvious calling, Mason practised both music and painting. His pictures were bad; but he "performed decently" on the harpsichord, and studied the principles of composition under Dr Miller himself, though with so little effect that only the themes of his anthems, including "Lord of all power and might," are his own. Mason's personal character was not the most attractive. He would patronise young artists for a while and then "cut" them, without the smallest explanation, at the bidding of a favourite servant, who, says Dr Miller, could make him change an acquaintance as easily as a coat. Late in life he married the lady whose monument in Bristol Cathedral, with its touching lines, many of our readers have doubtless admired. His choice of her was due, it is said, to the fact that she spent an entire evening in his company without uttering a word. During the few months of their wedded life Mason became more agreeable, but after her death his moroseness returned. Eccentric to the last, he led the family of an attached friend to believe that his fortune would descend to them, and then, without even mentioning their names in his will, left nearly the whole of it to a man who had been his curate.—Musical Times.

Mr Sims Reeves is announced to appear this evening at the Theatre Royal, Brighton, as Henry Bertram in Guy Mannering, and on Monday evening, as Captain Macheath in the Beggar's Opera. Misses Blanche Cole, Loseby, Rachel Sanger, and Mr George Fox are to be his assistant vocalists, and Mr Sidney Naylor will conduct.

The first novelty at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, after the production of Herr R. Wagner's Walküre, will be the ballet of Sylvia, with the music of M. Léo Delibes. The same ballet will be brought out, also, at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, towards the end of the present month, and the composer will attend some of the concluding rehearsals.

M. Gounod is asserted to be somewhat superstitious, and to attribute a cabalistic significance to certain figures. It is reported that this peculiarity has greatly influenced him in the terms agreed on by him and M. Grus for the publication of Cinq Mars. According to these terms, he is to receive 66,666 francs after the first, and 33,333 francs after the hundredth, representation.

There is nothing particularly attractive about Stratford-upon-Avon, and yet an Englishman scarcely feels that he has done his duty unless he has, at least once in his life, made a pilgrimage to this town, and scratched his name upon the window of the room in which Shakspeare was born. Not only, indeed, do we all love to linger over the spots made sacred by their association with those who have earned an immortal fame, but even the most commonplace articles of daily use acquire an enduring worth if it can only be proved beyond dispute that they have exclusively belonged to the great men of the world. The veritable ring which Haydn always wore when performing or composing would be valued by any musician quite apart from its intrinsic excellence; and we have ourselves recently gazed with the utmost reverence at a few roughly printed notes, merely because they had undoubtedly been engraved by the hand of John Sebastian Bach. And now a relic has come to light which cannot fail to excite unusual interest. Beethoven's pianoforte—the especial favourite of the composer, and upon which he played to the time of his death—has lately passed into the possession of Messrs Hug, the music publishers of Zurich. The keys are said to be "quite hollowed by excessive use;" and when we consider by whose fingers this "hollowing" was effected, the worn old "Tetrachord" instrument must ever evoke a world of thought which no modern "Grand," even by the most eminent maker, can conjure up. Such feelings may be said by the coldly practical to be unworthy of encouragement; but this silent homage to genius is the spontaneous growth of the purely artistic mind; and Messrs Hug must not therefore be surprised if their premises should now be constantly invaded by enthusiastic musicians, who will certainly, during a holiday ramble, contrive to take Zurich in their way to see and hear the pianoforte of Ludwig van Beethoven.—Musical Times.

RIGA.—Shakspeare's Tempest, with Herr W. Taubert's music, is announced at the Stadttheater.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	- 3 0
RINK GALOP	- 4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	- 4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	- 4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	- 3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	- 4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	- 4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	- 4 0
WEST-END POLKA	- 3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	- 3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	- 3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	- 3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	- 3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	- 3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE	- 4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	- 4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	- 3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	- 4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	- 3 0
HARMONIUM	- 3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	- 3 0
. Ditto Ditto Piano duet	- 4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2S. 6D. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
s. d.
OVERTURE	- 3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	- 3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	- 3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	- 2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	- 4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	- 4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	- 3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st ACT, "I'm not the Baron"	- 3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night"	- 3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	- 3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring"	- 4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	- 3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd ACT, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	- 4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	- 3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
...	5 0
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	...
...	2 6
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. Kiko	...
...	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOOSEY & CO.'S

NEW EDITION OF

The Passion

(ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW).

THE PROSE TAKEN LITERALLY FROM THE GOSPEL, AND THE VERSE TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN

BY

JOHN OXENFORD.

THE MUSIC EDITED BY

J. PITTMAN.

PRICE 1s. 6d. CLOTH, GILT EDGES, 3s.

ALSO, PUBLISHED SEPARATELY, THE MUSIC (IN FULL SCORE) OF

THE CORALES,

ACCOMPANIED BY THE WHOLE OF THE TEXT, FORMING A COMPLETE HANDY BOOK FOR THE USE OF THE CONGREGATION.

PRICE 6d. IN PAPER. 1s. CLOTH GILT.

London: BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street, W.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	- 3 0
RINK GALOP	- 4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	- 4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	- 4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	- 3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	- 4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	- 4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	- 4 0
WEST-END POLKA	- 3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	- 3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	- 3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	- 3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	- 3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	- 3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE	- 4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	- 4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	- 3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	- 4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	- 3 0
HARMONIUM	- 3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	- 3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	- 4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2s. 6d. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY
JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
OVERTURE	- 3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	- 3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	- 3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	- 2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	- 4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	- 4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	- 3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron"	- 3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night"	- 3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	- 3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring"	- 4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	- 3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	- 4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	- 3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
...	5 0
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	...
...	2 6
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	...
...	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—ethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 11.

SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1877.

PRICE { 4s. Unstamped.
3s. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT.

March 17. The Programme will include:—Elegiac Overture, composed for his Degree of Mus. Doc. at Cambridge (MS.) (Joachim), first time at these Concerts; Concerto, in A minor, for pianoforte and orchestra (Schumann); Unfinished Symphony, in B minor (Schubert); Serenade, from Longfellow's "Hiawatha," with accompaniment for pianoforte, wood, wind, and horn (H. Gadsby); Largo, for organ, harp, solo violin, violins, and viola (Handel); Overture, La Sirene (Auber). Vocalists—M^{me} Antoinette Sterling, Mr Barton McGuckin. Solo Pianoforte—M^{me} Schumann (her only appearance during the present Series of Concerts). Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Reserved Numbered Stalls, 2s. 6d.; Unnumbered Seats, One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL

FESTIVAL. Friday, June 22, Public Rehearsal; Monday, June 25, Messiah; Wednesday, June 27, Selection; Friday, June 29, Israel in Egypt. Full particulars will shortly be published.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the Immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

The next STUDENTS' ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, open to Subscribers, Members, and Associates, will take place at ST JAMES'S HALL, on SATURDAY Evening, the 24th inst., at Eight o'clock.

There will be complete Band and Chorus, formed by the Professors and the late and present Students, and the Choir of the Royal Academy of Music. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN.

The Programme will include Schubert's Mass in E flat (first time of performance in London).

Admission, One Shilling. Tickets, at 2s. 6d. and 5s., to be obtained at the Institution, and at St James's Hall.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.
Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street,
Hanover Square, London.

SATURDAY NEXT.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT has the honour to announce that her FOURTH MATINEE MUSICAL will take place (by kind permission) at 59, LOWNDES SQUARE, Belgrave, on SATURDAY next, March 24th, at Three o'clock. Vocalists—M^{me} Louise Gage, M^{me} Enriquez, and Signor Garcia. Violoncello—Herr Schuberth. Pianoforte—Miss Lillie Albrecht. Röntgen's Sonata, for piano and violoncello, will be performed (for the second time in England), the Andante con moto and Allegro vivace, by Miss Lillie Albrecht and Herr Schuberth, and the Piano Solos will consist of: Fugue in E minor, ending with Grand Choral, Op. 35 (Mendelssohn); Studies from Book 25, No. 20 (for Sixths), and 21, Allegro non tanto, and Scherzo in B flat minor, prestissimo con fuoco, Op. 31 (Chopin); Rigoletto (Liszt); Study for Chords in E sharp major (Thalberg); and Finale (by desire) "The Blue Bells"—Miss Lillie Albrecht. Conductor—Mr CHARLES E. STREPHEN. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; Family Tickets (to admit three) and Programmes at Messrs Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, and of Miss LILLIE ALBRECHT, 38, Oakley Square, N.W.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY.—President—SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Eleventh Season, 1877. The Next SOIREE, WEDNESDAY, 21st March, and the Next CONCERT, WEDNESDAY, 11th April (Schumann's Compositions forming first part of programme). The Soirees and Concerts of the Society and Branches afford excellent opportunities for young rising Artists to make their début, and for Composers to have their works introduced. Full Prospectus on application, by letter, to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., care of Messrs D. DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR GEORGE F. GEAR'S FIRST CONCERT, ST GEORGE'S

HALL, TUESDAY Afternoon, March 20, at Three o'clock. M^{me} Edith Wynne, M^{me} Patey, and Mr Edward Lloyd, Harp—Herr Oberthür; Violin—Herr Wiener; Violoncello—Herr Daubert; Pianoforte—Mr G. F. Gear. Conductors—Mr GANZ and Mr G. F. GEAR. Stalls, 7s. and 5s.; Balcony, 3s. Tickets may be obtained at the Office, St George's Hall; or of Mr G. F. GEAR, 66, Seymour Street, Portman Square, W.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, 27, HARL STREET, W.

On MONDAY, April 2, 1877, at Five o'clock p.m. will be read by W. A. BARRETT, Esq., Mus. Bac., Oxon., on "The Musical in England." Chair taken at 4.30 p.m. CHARLES K. SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.
24, Sutherland Gardens, W.

METROPOLITAN AND CITY POLICE ORPHANAGE.

Patron—Her Majesty the QUEEN.—EIGHTH ANNUAL GRAND VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT, which will, with the permission of Colonel Henderson, C.B., Commissioner of Police, be given in Aid of the FUNDS of the ORPHANAGE, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on FRIDAY next, March 23, at Eight o'clock. Vocalists—M^{me} Edith Wynne, Miss Banks, and Miss Emily Mott; Mr Sims Reeves, Mr John Ohild, Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Winn, Mr Walter Clifford, and Mr Lewis Thomas. Solo Instrumentalists: Pianoforte—Miss Ellen Bliss. Flute—Mr David Keppel. The Band of the "A" Division of Metropolitan Police. Bandmaster—Mr W. Dickenson. Conductors—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR and Mr F. J. HUNT. Reserved Sofa Stalls, 7s.; Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 2s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets at Austin's Office, St James's Hall, Piccadilly.

MR HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR, TUESDAY Evening,

March 20, at Eight o'clock, SACRED and SECULAR MUSIC. M^{me} Patey, M^{me} Varley Liebe, Mr Sims Reeves, Herr Henschel. Tickets, 7s., 3s., 2s., and 1s., at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, and all Publishers.

A GENUINE PETRUS GUARNERUS VIOLONCELLO.

One of the finest yet in existence.

Estimated by the late Mons. Vuillaume, in Paris, at the value of £300.

WE also Recommend the STRINGED INSTRUMENTS of our own make, of which we supplied several to the Royal Operahouse, in Berlin, giving the greatest satisfaction, and as speciality:—our Violins, Violoncellos, &c., after the models of the great masters—Stradivarius, Amati, Maggini, &c., the excellence of which we can prove by testimonials from the most celebrated artists.

THE BROTHERS WOLFF,

MANUFACTURERS OF STRINGED INSTRUMENTS,

CREUZNAOH, Nr. BINGEN (PRUSSIA).

"CLOUDS AND SUNSHINE."

MR OBERTHÜR will play his admired Harp Solo, "CLOUDS AND SUNSHINE," at Mr G. F. Gear's Morning Concert, St George's Hall, on Tuesday next.

BENEDICT'S ANDANTE, AND CHOPIN'S POSTHUMOUS MAZURKA.

MRS CLIPPINGDALE, M^{me} MATILDE BAXTER, and MR WM. GANZ will play the admired Arrangement by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT of his ANDANTE and CHOPIN'S Posthumous MAZURKA, for four performers on two grand pianofortes, on April 3, at Langham Hall.

"THE NAIADES."

MADAME ALIDA GASSIER will sing WELLINGTON GUERNSEY's Waltz-Aria, "THE NAIADES" and MARIANI's Bolero, "I AM AN ARAB MAID," at Langham Hall, on April 3rd next.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE PERREN will sing ASCHER's popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on the 26th March, at Greenwich, and on the 3rd of April, at Langham Hall.

M^{lle} IDA CORANI having returned to Town, requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Opera or Concert be addressed to her Agent, Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

M^{me} ERNST (Soprano) requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR CHARLES ABERCROMBIE (Tenor), of St James's

Hall and the Royal Aquarium Concerts, Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St James's, requests that all applications for Terms and ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio, Opera, or Concert, be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY (his Agent and Business Manager), care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, S.W.

THE CELEBRATED CAGLIOSTRO.

PRIVATE SOIRÉES of CAGLIOSTRO (Prestidigitateur).
For Terms apply to MAURICE DE FRECE, HARRIS & Co., 15A, Catherine Street, Strand, W.O.

MR ARTHUR SHELLEY (ARTURO GARDA), after several years' career in Italy, has accepted an Engagement as FIRST TENOR, Imperial Italian Opera Company, and makes his Debut at the Gaiety Theatre, Glasgow, in the Traviata, on Tuesday, 20th inst. Letters respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Italian or English Opera, Oratorio, or Concerts—Gaiety Theatre, Glasgow.

MESSRS CARRODUS, V. NICHOLSON, DOYLE, and E. HOWELL will return to Town on the 24th inst, on the termination of the Quartet Concerts in Scotland.

MR WELBYE-WALLACE (of the Crystal Palace and Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester, &c., &c.) having Returned from Abroad, can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Opera, or Oratorio. All Communications to be addressed to his Agent, Mr R. D'O'LY CARTER, 9A, Craig's Court, Charing Cross, S.W.

MDME MARIE BELVAL begs that all Communications be addressed to her at 7, Cavendish Place, Cavendish Square, W.

MDLLE IDA CORANI has returned to Town after her successful Provincial Tour as Prima Donna with the Carl Rosa Opera Troupe.

MR FREDERIC WOOD (Primo Tenore), on Tour with the Wilhelmj Concert Party. All Letters to be addressed, care of Messrs HODGE & ESSER, 6 and 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MR SHAKESPEARE requests that all Communications concerning ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., be addressed —6, Howick Place, Victoria Street, S.W.

MDME ENRIQUEZ begs that all communications be addressed to her at No. 5, OAKLEY SQUARE, N.W.

MR WILFORD MORGAN requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to his residence, 18, Surrey Street, W.O.

MR GERARD COVENTRY (Tenor), having returned to Town from his Provincial Tour, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios or Concerts. Address—Care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

ORGANIST Wanted for St Luke's, Kentish Town. Gregorian Service fully Choral. Competent to train Choir; good salary. Apply to the VICAR, St Luke's Vicarage, Osney Crescent, N.W.

YOUNG LADIES of 15 to 22 Years, of Dutch Parents, residing in England, with really good voices or musical abilities, intending to follow an artistic career, Lyric or Dramatic, wishing to compete for a SCHOLARSHIP, as PENSIONNAIRE of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, are requested to communicate, by prepaid letters, with Mr O. VAN DER DOES, Royal Commissary of the Institute of Pensionnaires of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, 92, Sea Street, The Hague, Holland.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS
FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depot for Signor ANTONIA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Solists.

25, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.
Price List free on application.

THE MONTHLY MUSICAL RECORD.—The cheapest High-class Paper on Music. Yearly Subscription, 2s. 6d. post-free. Years 1871 to 1876 (vols. 1 to 6) bound, each net 3s. "Intelligible and dispassionate criticisms and reviews, analyses of interesting compositions, and a like determination to discountenance the fictitious either in art or its practice; these are the qualifications of the paper."—Morning Post. AUGKNER & Co., 88, Newgate Street, and 31, Regent Street.

Sung by Mr EDWARD LLOYD, and Just Published.

THE RINGLET. Song. Poetry by TENNYSON (by permission). Music by DESMOND L. RYAN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

English Glee and Madrigal Writers.

By W. A. BARRETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.S.L., &c.

PRICE 2s. 6d.

W. REEVES, BOOKSELLER, 185, FLEET STREET,
LONDON, E.C.

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.—All the new and beautiful Songs, Ballads, &c., sung by this distinguished company of Vocalists are now published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess, from whom they may be obtained by the Music-trade and the public. Permission to sing any of the Songs contained in Messrs Moore and Burgess's repertoire is always freely accorded on application to the Manager. It is not necessary to obtain a licence to sing these songs at private meetings and soirées.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SONGS and BALLADS of the day are those sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS at ST JAMES'S HALL. The words of all these songs are written by the most eminent authors, and the music composed by the most celebrated musicians of the age, including Henry S. Leigh, E. L. Blanchard, Frank Vizetelly, Charles Dunphie, J. R. Thomas, W. Meyer Lutz, John Hobson, &c.

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTREL SONGS.
The following new and charming Songs and Ballads are just published by the Proprietors, Messrs Moore and Burgess:—

Riding in a Pullman car.
Alone.
Come where the tangled beeches grow.
My Darling's Last Smile.
Sad sounds the harp now.
Friendship, Love, and Wine.
Let each speak of the world as he finds it.
Sing me the songs that I loved long ago.
The Piquet.

The Wild, White Rose.
A boatman's life for me.
My Lily.
Sing, dearest, sing.
Many weary years ago.
Return of the Exile.
Glory or the Grave.
The Alpine Hunter.
Heavenly Voices.
Gentle Flowers.
The Buckles on her Shoes.
The Flight of the Birds.

May be ordered through any Musiceller, or obtained direct from the Publishers, St James's Hall, post free, One and Sixpence.

Post free, One and Sixpence.

SING ME THE SONGS THAT I LOVED LONG AGO.

Composed by W. MEYER LUTZ. One of the most beautiful and tuneful Ballads introduced by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS for some time past. Now being sung with immense success at ST JAMES'S HALL. Can be ordered through any Musiceller; or obtained from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FLIGHT OF THE BIRDS.—An entirely new and charming Ballad. Words written by HENRY S. LEIGH, Esq. Suitable for Alto, Tenor, or Soprano voices. Now being sung by the MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS, at ST JAMES'S HALL, with extraordinary success. Can be ordered of all Musicellers; or obtained direct from the Manager of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St James's Hall.

THE FOLLOWING NEW and BEAUTIFUL SONGS are being sung at ST JAMES'S HALL with marked success:—"Sing me the songs that I loved long ago," "The Flight of the Birds," "The Piquet," and "Sing, dearest, sing." The greatest successes ever achieved by the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. Can be ordered through all Musicellers; and of the Publishers, Messrs Moore and Burgess, St James's Hall. Post free, 1s. 6d.

THE GUITAR.—Mme SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant instrument, is in town for the Season. For Lessons and Concerts address—22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

SIMPSON & CO.'S

IMPROVED HARMONIUMS.

FROM £5 5s. Five Octaves. Best make. Warranted.
Nothing BETTER OR CHEAPER made. Lists post free. Trade supplied.

TO COMPOSERS wishing to PUBLISH.—Music Engraved, Printed, and Published in the best style at unusually low prices. Estimates free on receipt of MS. SIMPSON & Co., 33, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Published This Day.

THOU ART MY DREAM. New Song. By CARL ZOELLER. Sung every evening at the Agricultural Hall, by Mr TEMPLE, with distinguished success. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Published This Day.

NEW WALTZ BY CARL VÖGLER.

SONGS OF THE ELBE WALTZES. For the Pianoforte. By CARL VÖGLER. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

JOACHIM AT CAMBRIDGE.

(From the "Times.")

Cambridge, March 8.

The Senate House presented an animated appearance this afternoon, in consequence of the announcement that the honorary degree of Doctor in Music, granted by Grace of the Senate last May to Herr Joachim, would be conferred on that renowned artist. The floor of the building was occupied by members of the Senate and a large number of ladies. The galleries were, as usual, assigned to the undergraduates. Two o'clock was the hour fixed for the Congregation, and, with the punctuality usually observed in University proceedings, the Vice-Chancellor, accompanied by the Esquire Bedells, entered, his appearance being greeted with applause. But the observed of all observers was Herr Joachim, who, arrayed in the scarlet robes of a doctor, was quickly recognised. A slight interval occurred in consequence of some formal Graces having to be approved and some supplicants for degrees passed by the Senate, and the impatience of the undergraduates was more than once manifested by inane observations addressed to the officials. The routine business completed, the Public Orator, Mr J. E. Sandys, of St John's College, preceded by the Deputy Esquire Bedell, Mr E. A. Beck, of Trinity Hall, was formally introduced to Herr Joachim, and, advancing about midway up the Senate House, Herr Joachim standing on his right hand, he introduced that gentleman to the Senate in an eloquent Latin speech. At the commencement of the oration, which was delivered throughout in a most effective manner, there were indications on the part of the undergraduates that it would be utterly inaudible except to a favoured few, for a running commentary of senseless observations commenced, and some bronze coins were insultingly thrown before the Public Orator. But the good sense of the majority of the undergraduates prevailed over the boisterous conduct of a few, and, after the opening sentences, the speech was uninterrupted. The allusions which elicited applause were those relating to Amalie (Weiss) Joachim, the noted contralto referred to as Eurydice, to Haydn, Walmisley, Sir W. S. Bennett, Professor Macfarren, and Herr Brahms. By special request the speech of the Orator has been printed and circulated, and we append it:—

"Dignissime domine, domine Procellarie, et tota Academia:—

"Quae triginta abhinc annis in hac ipsa curia, coram Alberto Principe Cancellario nostro admodum defendo, coram ipsa Regina nemini nostrum non dilecta, hunc, vixdum e pueris egressum, eximios cantus fidibus modulantem audivit; eadem Academia virum, per omnem Europam inter principes totius artis musicae iam diu numeratum, hodie reducem salvere iubet. Hodie nobis redditus est Orpheus—utinam ipsa etiam adesset Eurydice; nunc iterum, ut poetae verbis utar quem Cremonae vicina genuit Mantua, Academi in silvis Orpheus

'obloquitur numeris septem discrimina vocum, iamque eadem digitis, iam pectine pulsat eburno.'

Quid dicam de illis qui inter fautores tanti ingenii olim exstiterunt, de viris sempiternae memoriae Mendelssohno et Schumanno? Nobis autem tanquam triplici vinculo hospitii coniunctus est Regiae Academiae Artium apud Berolinenses Professor, trium deinceps Professorum Cantabrigiensium amicus, primum Thomae Attwood Walmisley, deinde Wilhelmi Sterndale Bennett, denique illius qui nuper horum sacrorum antistes a vobis est creatus,

'τὸν περὶ Μοῦσας ἐφίλησε, δίδου δ' ἀγαθὸν τε καὶ κέρως, ὀφθαλμῶν μὲν ἄμπερσε δίδου δ' ἡδεῖαν δοῖδην.'

Tantis igitur gloriatur praeceptoribus ars illa, quae in solitudine consolatur, in turba delectat vitaeque communis societatem incundior reddit; quae fessos recreat, aegrotantibus, si non ipsam dare salutem (sicut olim insanientem Hebraeorum regi), auxilium tamen aliquatenus ferre hodie conatur; quae ipsum Dei cultum adiuvat, et intimos animi affectus exprimit, ipsa intima numerorum cantumque nixa scientia. Quid autem si ars tanta Musarum nomine vere digna, in hac etiam Musarum domo quasi in ordinem redacta atque via quadam et ratione alumnis nostris tradita, inter severiora nostra studia sedem suam aliquando vindicabit? Quid si inter tot 'tripodas, praemia fortium,' novam quandam laureolam Apollini Musagetæ dedicare volueritis? Interim huic Apollinis ministro quem ipsum prope appellaverim Arcitenentem, huic interpreti certe divinorum in arte sua virorum Sebastiani Bach et Ludovici Beethoven; qui magnus ipse vates magnorum vatum memoriam non sinit interire; hanc lauream nostram Apollinarem, hunc titulum Doctoris in Musica, donare licet; qui honos nunquam antehac ab ulla Academia Britannica habitus est alienigenae, uno illo excepto, qui nascentis mundi primordia immortalis cantu consociavit, Iosepho Haydn,

'At enim ἄλκιρον ἐπ' εὐτυχίᾳ μολεῖ Φοῖβος λακχεῖ, τὰν καλλιφθογγῶν κῆδραν θλαύνων πλήκτρῳ χρυσέῳ. Gravatur hodie abesse popularem huius viri, alterum Musarum Teutonicarum decus, virum in difficillimo musicae genere facillimum, Iohannem Brahms. Quamquam autem ipse fato iniquo procul retentus est, carmen illius egregium quod 'fatorum' nuncupatur vesperi audietis; audietis etiam novum opus, quo non modo ceteros omnes sed se ipsum superasse dicitur. Post tot triumphos nemo negabit tanto viro consentaneam esse requiem. Ceterum quo maiore animi aegritudine illum absentem desideramus, eo elatiore gaudio praesentem salutamus Iosephum Ioschiam."

Amid deafening plaudits, Herr Joachim was led to the Vice-Chancellor's chair by the Public Orator. Dr. Atkinson rose, and in the usual Latin formulary admitted him to the title of Doctor in Music.

The rehearsal held to-day at the Guildhall provided a fair opportunity of estimating in some degree the new music prepared for the commemorative concert in the evening. It may be said at once that the entire programme is worthy the occasion, and creditable to those who direct the proceedings of the Cambridge University Musical Society. This society, now in its thirty-third year, is one of the mainstays of art in a town, perhaps, not altogether prone to bestow over-serious attention upon music in the abstract. For twelve years and more the programmes were in a large measure orchestral—symphonies, overtures, concertos, &c., forming the staple attraction, though glees, madrigals, and part-songs were also included. Mendelssohn's Antigone, however, produced in 1866, created a taste for choral music of a high order. This was followed the year after by the Edipus in Colonnos of the same master; and thenceforth choral music, as represented by the recognised great composers, became an indispensable feature. It was not, however, until 1872, when the late Sir Sterndale Bennett occupied the Chair of Music in the University, that ladies were allowed to join the undergraduates as "performing associates" of the society; and this important innovation was celebrated a year later by a performance of that distinguished musician's May Queen, and as necessary sequel by J. S. Bach's cantata, My spirit was in heaviness, Bennett's Woman of Samaria, the "German Requiem" of Brahms, Handel's Acis and Galatea, Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion," Schumann's Paradise and the Peri, &c. That the reform in this particular direction has acted largely for good is on all sides admitted; and if anything were needed to establish the fact, the admirable execution of Brahms' Schicksalslied ("Song of Destiny"), which, in honour of the great modern German composer, who was expected to take the degree of "Mus. Doc." in company with his close friend in art, Herr Joachim, and whose absence has caused marked disappointment, is awarded a conspicuous place in the programme of the evening. This remarkable setting of one among the most notable of Hölderlin's poems was made known to English amateurs by Mr August Manns, exactly two years since, at one of the Crystal Palace Saturday performances, to which we are indebted for so many things that, while deserving all publicity, might still for a long time have remained unknown to us.

The orchestra engaged for this eminently musical celebration, numbering between fifty and sixty exccutants, the majority from London, is one of irreproachable quality. It comprises ten first violins, headed by Mr A. Burnett, a thoroughly experienced chef d'attaque; eight second violins, six violas, four violoncellos, four double basses, three trombones, four horns, two trumpets, a contrafagotto (or double bassoon)—an instrument employed by Beethoven in his fifth (C minor) symphony—and, not forgetting drums, the usual complement of "wood." The force, numerically, is quite sufficient for the hall, the sonority and acoustic properties of which will be more satisfactorily tested to-night, when, notwithstanding the high prices of admission (a guinea and half a guinea), an audience is expected that will completely fill it.

The pieces to be heard for the first time this evening are a symphony in C minor, by Herr Brahms, and an overture in G minor, by Herr Joachim, the newly elected "Doctor in Music." The symphony has already been played at Vienna, where it is criticised in diverse manners, but, on the whole, warmly eulogised. The overture, written expressly for the occasion, may stand for Herr Joachim's credentials, just as the "Oxford Symphony," once familiarly known as "Letter Q" (as not belonging to the "Saloman" set), stood for Haydn's. Of course, such tried masters would not be asked to prove their claim to the distinction conferred upon them through the medium of a probationary exercise; but all honour is due to Herr Joachim for the feeling which prompted him to write an exceptional work in the circumstances. That his overture is a composition of which any modern composer would be proud, may safely be affirmed even at the present moment. It is an elegiac "in memoriam" of Heinrich von Kleist, the patriotic and dramatic poet, whose career was as ill-starred as his aspirations were pure and noble, and whose unhappy end is, in his own country, to this day a theme capable of evoking the strongest sympathy. How deeply Herr Joachim has entered into his subject, and how strikingly, in a musical sense, he has treated it, there will be time enough to show. Doubtless, Herr Johannes Brahms, had he not altered his resolution, at the eleventh hour, of coming to receive the highest honour musical England is able to confer upon an eminent foreigner, would equally have contributed something new, in acknowledgment of the mark of esteem offered him. At the same time, it is no small thing for the Cambridge University Musical Society to boast that, as they were the first to produce in this country the Faust music and pianoforte concerto of Schumann, so are they again the first to make us acquainted with such a grand and elaborate work as the C minor symphony of Brahms, to which, as to the elegiac overture of Herr Joachim, further reference will have to be made. The other pieces contained in the programme of this evening are Beethoven's violin concerto (played by Herr Joachim), two excerpts from J. S. Bach's sonatas in C (also by Herr Joachim); and last, not least, the overture entitled The Wood Nymph, by Sterndale Bennett, about which, after its performance at the Leipzig Gewandhaus Concerts, Schumann wrote in such glowing terms. As Sterndale Bennett at one time occupied the Chair of Music in the University now filled by Professor G. A. Macfarren, it was only just that on such an occasion some important work from his pen should be introduced; and the programme would have been still more complete and satisfactory had the name of his worthy successor been also represented.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)

11 P.M.

The concert to-night in the Guildhall was a brilliant success. The audience was not less enthusiastic than numerous. Dr Joseph Joachim, as might have been expected, was the hero of the evening. On appearing in the orchestra he was greeted with uproarious applause. This was renewed with increased warmth after his magnificent performance of Beethoven's concerto, which he never, even in his happiest moments, played better. Herr Joachim's new overture in commemoration of Heinrich von Kleist was also a success as complete as it was well deserved. This he conducted himself, as he also did the new symphony in C minor by Herr Brahms, which was so finely played from beginning to end that it is a pity the composer himself had not been there to hear it. Two movements from one of the solo sonatas of John Sebastian Bach were also given by Herr Joachim, the last of which being clamorously asked for again, the great virtuoso good-naturedly returned to the platform, but, instead of repeating the movement or substituting another, as was hoped, he showed his open watch to the audience, and retired amid mingled laughter and applause.

Mr C. V. Stanford, organist of Trinity College, conducted all the pieces except the two new works directed by Herr Joachim, and the spirited performance of Sterndale Bennett's overture, The Wood Nymph, was creditable alike to him and the orchestra. The "Song of Destiny" was also well executed, the chorus having evidently studied their separate parts with earnestness.

The concert was altogether a success, and among the audience were many well-known connoisseurs and professors from London and elsewhere—a compliment evidently intended for Herr Joachim, upon whom the degree of Musical Doctor had been conferred—an honour never granted to a worthier recipient.

STANZAS FOR MUSIC.

The setting sun o'er the waving corn,
On the hill which looks over the sea,
And the soothing sound of the breakers, borne
In the ocean breeze by me,
Whilst the skylark's song in the evening chill,
Echoes faint, through the corn-waving breeze, o'er the hill.
Or musing, a placid summer's night
Dreamily into the black
Of the death-silent wood, where the moon trembles light,
On the shadows demoniac,
And the air seems alive with the pure emotion
Of a few musicians at their devotion.
O! that my soul could sail in the sighs,
Hear, nay, feel the beat
Of a throbbing heart, to sympathise
With a rapture so tender, so sweet.
O! for the wondrous joy divine
Of a love-lighted face upturn'd to mine!

P. H. S. W.

THE CAMBRIDGE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

Whether scientific researches as to pitch and vibrations, &c., have been of much use to musicians may seem doubtful. But that science and art may co-operate to their mutual benefit, the Cambridge Festival—for to that name last week's gathering is fully entitled—has proved triumphantly. English scholars of widest repute have delighted to honour a foreign artist; and more elegant and melodious Latin has seldom been heard than the speech delivered in honour of the new graduate, Dr Joseph Joachim, at the Senate House, Cambridge, last Thursday week. Of the ceremony of conferring the degree the daily papers have given a full account. Your readers will be more immediately interested in the concert given by the University Musical Society on the evening of the same day. The lion's share, both of work and honour, fell naturally to the new graduate, who played Beethoven's concerto, and two movements for violin solo by J. S. Bach, also conducting Brahms' new symphony and his own elegiac overture, an admirable piece of musical workmanship, conceived, moreover, in a truly poetic spirit. Everyone knows that Joachim is the first violinist living, and ought to know that, as a conductor, he has few equals. If to those who were present at the concert alluded to his conception seemed to be more inspired, his tone grander and fuller even than usual, those who had not that privilege may feel inclined to explain the phenomenon from the natural excitement of the occasion. I therefore merely state my own private opinion to that effect. Joachim's reception was, as a matter of course, most cordial; and if, as Schiller says somewhere, "one ought to weigh votes, not only to count them," even the great violinist must have been gratified by the applause of such an audience as that at Thursday week's concert.

I do not feel called upon to enter upon detailed criticism of the new works produced, especially as both will shortly be heard in London. It will be better to allude briefly to the condition of musical art in Cambridge itself as evinced on the present occasion. The chorus of the University Musical Society is, upon the whole, worthy of all commendation. The beauty and power of the male voices is especially noticeable, a welcome proof of the growing taste for music amongst the undergraduates. The rendering of Brahms' most difficult "Song of Destiny" cannot be praised too highly, the ticklish staccato passages descriptive of the "dashing" (not "dropping," as the Rev. Mr Troutbeck tamely transcribes it) of water from cliff to cliff, especially being attacked with unflinching energy. To a considerable degree this result is, of course, due to Mr C. Villiers Stanford, the conductor of the society. As a leader of the orchestra Mr Stanford evidently lacks experience, and the performance of Sir Sterndale Bennett's enchanting overture, The Wood Nymph, was somewhat wanting in refinement and colour. But the "Song of Destiny," as was said before, does all possible credit to the energy and presence of mind of the conductor. Mr Stanford, it ought to be added, is the author of an overture and incidental music to Tennyson's Queen Mary, and the visitors of the Crystal Palace Concerts will soon have an opportunity of judging of his gift as an orchestral writer.

To sum up, the Cambridge Festival was a decided success, socially no less than musically; for the refined and cordial hospitality of the University was worthy of its ancient fame, and will live in the pleasant recollection of the numerous visitors.

F. H.

VIENNA.—The Italian operatic season opened with La Sonnambula, Mdme. Adelina Patti and Signor Nicolini sustaining the two principal characters. The lady met with an enthusiastic reception. Herr R. Wagner's Walküre was produced at the Imperial Operahouse on the 6th inst., with the following cast: Brunnhilde, Mad. Materna; Sieglinde, Mdle Ehnn; Fricka, Mad. Kupfer; Siegmund, Herr Labatt; Wotan, Herr Scaria; and Hunding, Herr Hablawetz. Neither expense nor trouble has been spared in getting it up. The scenery has all been designed and painted expressly by Herr Hofmann; the accoutrements, weapons, and costumes are from the designs of Professor Döpler. Herr Hans Richter conducted. Yesterday, the 16th inst., at the concert given in aid of the Beethoven Movement, the Abbate Franz Liszt was announced to conclude his professional career as a pianist. He was to play Beethoven's E flat major Symphony and the Choral Fantasia. In order to enable all classes to attend the Abbate's farewell, the managing committee arranged a very varied scale of prices of admission.

DR JOACHIM.

(From "Mayfair," March 18th.)

Strange are the ways of fate. When nearly forty years ago, at an out-of-the-way place in Hungary, Joachim's parents bought the first twopenny fiddle for their precocious boy, they little thought that the simple instrument would ultimately serve as "open sesame" to the highest honours of a great English University. Such, however, has been the case. At a quarter past two on Thursday afternoon, the German violinist became an English Doctor, and with remarkable dignity entered upon his new duties under not altogether untrying circumstances. It is not every one's nervous system that can support the strain of facing a large assembly of distinguished scholars and mischievous undergraduates while his own merits are expounded in an eloquent Latin oration. Playing half-a-dozen violin concertos is nothing compared with it.

But if Joachim's self-possession is worthy of all praise, Cambridge also was equal to the occasion. Compared with those of the sister University, Cantab manners are remarkably mild, and in the present instance the students behaved with the utmost propriety, enlivening the scene with harmonious pipings and cheering lustily the distinguished personages present. Amongst the latter only Robert Browning, Professor Macfarren, Signor Garcia, Mr W. S. Broadwood, Sir Julius Benedict, Mr J. W. Davison, Mr Arthur Chappell, and Messrs Manns and Grove of the Crystal Palace may be mentioned here. The reception of the new Doctor himself was, it need hardly be added, most cordial. The ceremony of conferring the degree is not without impressiveness. Modern gentlemen look rather awkward in red gowns with ermine capes; but there is about the dress and the speeches and the bows and genuflections, a taste of antiquated grace which well accords with the place and the occasion.

In his elegant Latin speech the Public Orator of the University, Mr Sandys, regretted the absence of Johannes Brahms, the celebrated German composer, for whom also the honour of a degree had been intended. Brahms at first accepted the invitation, but ultimately changed his mind, for reasons best known to himself. He had, however (to make up for his personal absence), sent his new MS. symphony in C minor, and this work formed the pièce de résistance of the brilliant and crowded concert given by the University Musical Society in honour of the occasion. An important choral piece by the same composer, called "The Song of Destiny," was included in the programme, and the gracious manner in which these works of the ungracious absentee were received does credit to the good feeling of the Cambridge public. But the honours of the evening were naturally reserved for the new graduate who appeared in his double capacity as composer and virtuoso. The "Elegiac Overture," by Joachim, first performed at last evening's concert, is an admirable specimen of orchestral writing, full of finely balanced instrumental effects, and by no means devoid of pathos and melodious intensity. For the display of his executive skill Joachim had appropriately chosen the violin concerto by Beethoven, the first work he played in England when thirty-three years ago he made his début at the Philharmonic Society under Mendelssohn's auspices. The beautiful overture, The Wood Nymph, by the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, completed the interesting programme. The two last-mentioned works were creditably conducted by Mr Stanford, the organist of Trinity College, who with Joachim alternately wielded the bâton. Mr Stanford also was the leader of the chorus of the Society in Brahms' "Song of Destiny," the enormous difficulties of which were attacked by the singers with an energy deserving of, and commanding, success. But I will not trouble your readers with any more musical criticism. Brahms and Joachim's new works will be heard in London, and there will be time then to enter into details. We are here in the midst of a festival, the social aspects of which are of no less interest than the artistic. Looking last night at the crowd of distinguished men and beautiful women, at the eager, handsome faces of the undergraduates, many of them of the best blood in England, I could hardly believe myself in the same country where, a hundred years ago, a foreign fiddler stood socially a little above a mountebank. Lord Chesterfield would not have acknowledged any difference between the two; and when, much later even than that, the widow of the brewer, Thrane, married an Italian singer of repute, her friends lamented over her disgrace. Now-a-days the mésalliance would probably lie the other way. But the high social esteem in which distinguished musicians are held in our time is fully explained by the considerable and still growing taste for the Art itself amongst us. Never since the days of Queen Elizabeth has music formed so important a part of the education and amusements of the better classes; and the times are, let us hope, past for ever, when wits thought it clever to ignore the difference twixt "tweedledum and tweedledee."

Returning from the abstract to the pleasantly concrete, I ought to mention that to-night a banquet takes place at Trinity, when Joachim will for the first time dine in Hall. The Fellows of that College and the members of the University generally have offered to their London visitors the most cordial hospitality; and it is only a feeling of discretion that prevents me from mentioning the names of gentlemen who would blush at seeing an acknowledgment in print of what to them appears the most ordinary kindness.

Cambridge, March 9.

Joseph Joachim.

(From the "Graphic,")

This admitted chief of living violinists is Hungarian by birth. His native place was Kitee, a small village near Presburg, whence his family removed to Pesth, where, in early childhood, he showed so strong a disposition for music that he was placed under Szervaczinsky, orchestral director at the theatre, who first gave him instructions on the instrument his perfect command of which has earned him such renown. Here young Joseph, after two years' application, first appeared in public. From Pesth he went to Vienna, where he was so fortunate as to obtain lessons and friendly advice from the esteemed professor Böhm, to whom many eminent violinists, Ernst and Mayseder among the number, were indebted for similar advantages. After four years' residence in the Austrian capital, Joachim went to Leipzig, with the hope of earning further experience through the counsels of Ferdinand David, who, however, finding he had nothing to teach him, was too ready to make him a companion in his own especial studies. At Leipzig the young musician not only practised harmony and composition with the well-known contrapuntist, Moritz Hauptmann, under whom he made remarkable progress, but was soon on terms of intimacy with Mendelssohn, which continued to the end of that illustrious composer's life. He was the constant companion of Mendelssohn, who spoke of him in the highest and most affectionate terms, instigating his first visit to London, and furnishing him with letters of recommendation to Sterndale Bennett and other men of influence. Joachim arrived in London during the spring of 1844; and the attention of amateurs and professors was soon drawn to the extraordinary talent of the boy-violinist, who (born in 1831) was at this period in his thirteenth year. He had already made a great impression by his performance of Spohr's Scena Cantante at the "Società Armonica" (conducted by Mr. Forbes), before his friend and patron, Mendelssohn, came to London, to conduct the Philharmonic Concerts. At one of these, under Mendelssohn's direction, he played Beethoven's violin concerto, introducing cadenzas of his own, with such success, and such enthusiastic applause, that from that moment he shared with Mendelssohn himself the honours of the musical season.

About Joseph Joachim's subsequent career in England it would be superfluous to say much. He returned to us, successively, in 1847, 1849, 1852, 1858, and 1859, on each occasion bringing with him something that raised him as a composer higher and higher in the opinion of connoisseurs. From 1859, when he joined the Monday Popular Concerts, instituted in that year by Mr Arthur Chappell, a season has rarely passed without the coming of the great violinist and musician being looked forward to as an event of high importance. How much his splendid playing, his extended repertory, and his invariable adherence to the pure standard of art, which from a mere youth he raised up for himself, has served to promote the material interests of these concerts, and to win for them the honourable position they now occupy, is generally known. Had Joachim done nothing more than familiarise our intelligent musical public with the later quartets of Beethoven, with many things of Bach which had previously met with scant recognition, and with the works of the now reigning star of Germany, Johannes Brahms, he would have entitled himself to the consideration of all those who look upon art as a serious thing. It must not be supposed, however, because Bach and Beethoven are his authors of predilection, that Herr Joachim's wonderful power of "reproducing"—a term applied by Herr Wagner, Abbé Liszt, and their satellites in a manifestly wrong sense—is limited to these masters. The contrary has been proved by his admirable readings of others—not only of his new favourite, Brahms, but of Handel, Mozart, Cherubini, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Spohr, &c., his sympathy for whom is equally unquestionable.

With the honours accorded to Herr Joachim in his adopted country, Germany, we have no space to deal. Enough that he enjoys a consideration there such as few executive artists have enjoyed before him. He has been at various periods Concertmeister and teacher, with David, at the Leipzig Conservatory (1848); Concertmeister, with Liszt, to the Duke of Weimar (1849); and Concertmeister and solo-player, with the exclusive direction of the King's orchestra, at Hanover (1851). He is now in a position to do more for music than he was ever enabled to do previously, being director of the "Hochschule für Musik"—executive department—at the Berlin Royal Academy of Arts, where he is also permanent member of the Senate. Here his example and precept are of incalculable value, inasmuch as the appointment of professors in his department is left entirely to his suggestion—submitted, of course, to the approval of the Minister for Education, an approval which has on no occasion been withheld. The combined purposes of the "Hochschule" are thorough musical education and model performances of works by the great masters.

As a composer, Joachim has chiefly directed his attention to instrumental music. To give a list of his various works would exceed the limits of what is intended for a brief memoir; but the "Concerto in the Hungarian style" may be fairly cited as his chef d'œuvre, combining, as it does, the impressions of his early days with the complete mastery he has obtained, both as executant and producer, over all the secrets of his art. This concerto, in its way, is unique, and has, not without good reason, been placed in juxtaposition with the violin concertos of Beethoven and Mendelssohn. The degree of "Doctor in Music" at Cambridge University was conferred upon Herr Professor Joachim on Thursday, for which ceremonial he wrote an elegiac overture, in memoriam of Heinrich von Kleist, the patriotic but unhappy dramatist.

THE GARDEN OF ROSES.*

In a garden of roses while straying,
And plucking a bud from each tree,
In my ear a sweet voice would keep saying—
"Save one little rosebud for me!"

And as every fresh flow'ret I gathered,
I heard the same voice in my ear,
Saying, "Save me a rosebud, I pray thee,
No matter how drooping or rare."

In my mem'ry I well had engraven
The sound of that voice long ago,
So I gathered the fairest of flowers,
The brightest in gardens that blow!

And I placed it where softly she slumbered,
Beside the old church on the hill;
And though years all my cares have out-numbered,
I give her the brightest bud still.

For I loved her in childhood, ere sorrow
Had dimmed her bright eye with its frown,
And I'll meet her where garlands unfading
Her pure angel forehead shall crown.

And each flow'ret which here I have given,
Though now it has faded from sight,
Will re-open more beauteous in Heaven,
Immortal, and fadeless, and bright.

H. MELVILLE.

* Copyright.

MR HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

Amongst the few who interest themselves in the progress of the musical art among us, Mr Henry Leslie holds a prominent position. The concerts of his justly famous choir embrace a wide field. Glees, madrigals, and part-songs—all partaking of a purely national character—are brought forward side by side with the works of foreign masters, and the taste for this kind of song is thereby fostered even more essentially than by the Catch and Glee clubs of yore. Mr Leslie's choir may challenge comparison the world over, and, fortunately, he is able to command the highest results from the means at his command. The experience of twenty-one seasons, no less than the popularity of his concerts, are proofs of this. At the first concert of his twenty-second season, Mr Leslie produced a motet for double choir, "Sing ye to the Lord," by John Sebastian Bach, the first public performance of the work in England. In Peters' edition of Bach's motets this (No. 6) is called "Der 149 Psalm"; and it is, perhaps, the finest in the published collection. The motet is divided into four movements. Allegro moderato, "Sing ye to the Lord;" chorale, "Like as a father bendeth;" poco allegro, "Praise ye the Lord;" and allegro vivace, "Hallelujah!" The movements likely to please the majority of tastes are the chorale—the motive of which is identical with our "Old Hundredth," and the final "Hallelujah—a masterly specimen of four-part fugal writing. The study of so elaborate a work must have necessitated numerous and careful rehearsals, and we hear that the choir has gone through no less than forty. The difficulty of the work must excuse certain discrepancies evident on Thursday last; but the singing of the basses was beyond praise, and the manner in which the pitch was kept up was remarkable in the absence of instrumental support. The motet was well received; and we hope to hear it once again, at least, during the present season. The programme, interesting as a whole, included choral works by Palestrina, Mozart, Henry Smart, Mendelssohn, Bennett, Fesca, Pearsall, Morley, A. de Gaul, and Henry Leslie, encores being awarded to Fesca's madrigal, "Down in a flowery vale," and Morley's "My bonny lass." The soloists were Miss Robertson, Miss de Fonblanque, and Mr Edward Lloyd. Miss Robertson's soprano voice and facility were favourably exhibited in the aria, "Sciogli l'inno Dei Profeti," from Graun's Der Tod Jesu, and the valse from Gounod's Mireille (neither of them, by the way, of any intrinsic value). Miss de Fonblanque made a successful début. Her voice is a mezzo-soprano with good lower notes, and she has obviously studied in a legitimate school. Miss de Fonblanque selected for solos "Fac ut portem," from the Stabat Mater, and "O mio Fernando," from La Favorita, both of which were favourably received; she also joined Miss Robertson in "The Fan," by Mr Henry Leslie. Mr Edward Lloyd sang "Cujus Animam," a new song by Mr Leslie, "Always," and Gounod's "Maid of Athens," in his usual finished style. The hall was filled in every part.

A COMPLAINT.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Referring to your notice of that admirable young vocalist, Mme Marie Belval, she writes a letter in your journal of last week complaining of her not being noticed as singing a song by Mr W. Ganz, "My Mother's Song." That lady ought to rest satisfied with the pleasing notice of her concert, and the part she accomplished. Mr Ganz's name, as composer and performer, is down seven times in her programme—in all conscience enough. My object in writing this letter is to protest against appropriating the title of a popular song of mine—"My Mother's Song"—published over twenty years back, the words written by my old friend, Wellington Guernsey. What would Mr Ganz say if I appropriated his titles, "The Nightingale's Trill," and "Love hailed a little maid," to other words? Or if I selected a few bars of music from Richard Wagner's Tannhäuser, or Lohengrin, and worked them into a "Qui vive" Grand Galop, a title which every dance writer of music for the last half century has taken? I protest against the title of Mr W. Ganz's song—"My Mother's Song."—I am, sir, yours truly,

JOSEPH P. KNIGHT

(Composer of "She wore a wreath of roses," "Rock'd in the cradle of the deep," "The Sailor Boy's Dream," &c.).

Bristol, 12th March, 1877.

THE NORFOLK AND NORWICH FESTIVAL.

(From the "Norwich Argus.")

No. 2.

Having last week discussed the altered conditions under which the Norwich Festival of present days may be said to be held, it now behoves me to take into consideration the various changes and modifications which, in my opinion, the circumstances demand. In offering these suggestions I need scarcely remark that they are the result of careful and anxious inquiry into the whole subject, naturally actuated by no other motive than an earnest desire to prevent, if possible, the decay and ultimate collapse of a most worthy musical institution. I may further add that I have been materially assisted in my efforts to arrive at the best practical conclusions by one whose authority on Festival matters is of the very highest value.

I think I have shown that your Festival must no longer depend for its success on the aid it receives from the county families, and the question consequently arises, To whom shall we turn to obtain support from in their place? In answer I can only say, to the people of Norwich themselves. If your prices have hitherto been prohibitive, they must no longer be so, that is all. As a proof of the truth of this I have but to assert the well-known fact that of late years the cheap concerts have been the ones to bring the most receipts into the treasury. Another query then comes, How will it be possible to appeal more than we do to popular tastes without lowering the standard of the performances? This difficulty I propose to meet by a complete re-arrangement of the performances, their number, and the days on which they are held. To begin with, it has long been evident that by inaugurating the Festival on the Monday evening and carrying it on almost without cessation until the Friday, the whole affair is much too long. The reasons for this are obvious. It gives no time for adequate rehearsals, the artists are exhausted before half their work is done, and their terms are much higher because of the length of the engagement, while I submit that there is really not a public sufficiently large and rich to justify so prolonged a scheme. I therefore propose the curtailment of the latter in a way that will serve to consolidate its attractions, render its execution more perfect, and diminish the cost to a very appreciable extent.

In the first place, the Festival should not begin till the Tuesday night, with the usual cheap oratorio, which has always paid so well. This later commencement will have enabled your conductor to hold full rehearsals with band and chorus on the Monday, and again on the Tuesday morning (this time with the soloists)—hitherto an impossible, though, of course, urgently necessary preliminary. On the Wednesday morning a large high-priced audience should be ensured by the performance of a new sacred work of importance—the great gun of the Festival. I may here parenthetically repeat that a production such as this must always without fail be made. It is, in fact, one of the primary points for consideration, since novelty is the almost sole means by which aid and attention can be secured from extraneous sources for the Festival as a musical institution. In the evening the usual ballad concert would take place, but the prices must not be higher than on the previous evening, and the hall must be arranged (as, indeed, it should be throughout the meeting) with a view to the attendance of a large body of the general public rather than a majority of guinea or half-guinea seat-holders. On the Thursday morning I suggest that no performance should be given at all, for the reasons that the second morning concert never pays, and that the interval will give the performers time to rest before continuing their work. In the evening, a grand attractive concert might be given, the first part consisting, say, of a new cantata by a first-rate composer, and the second part, of a judicious sacred selection. As a matter of course the Messiah would follow on the Friday morning, and here the Festival proper would end. Thus far you would have had five performances, and I may safely say that if four out of these paid fairly well, the success of the Festival would be assured. You have on the Tuesday and Wednesday evenings and Friday morning three essentially attractive concerts to draw the general public with, and those on the Wednesday morning and Thursday evening are the only ones to which, conscientiously speaking, you may hope to bring your county families and gentry (who are constantly hearing the standard works elsewhere) in anything like paying numbers. It has beyond doubt been proved at former Festivals, that if three or four out of the whole week's concerts pay well, a good balance is the result; the others, then, can only be a dead loss, and, as they in nine cases out of ten consist of hackneyed works, what earthly use can there be in giving them?

I now come to the event with which the Festival always concludes, viz., the ball. For several years this affair has been, instead of a brilliant success, a dead loss. Like all the other attractions, it used to be of much rarer occurrence in years gone by, and the county folks were wont to flock to it in large numbers, whereas now very few of them attend, and these do not like to do so because of having to meet the mixed company who only lend their aid and presence to this particular portion of the week's festivities. As a matter of profit and to give éclat to the meeting the ball is all very well, but the moment it becomes a pecuniary loss it no longer has any raison-d'être. My proposal is to replace it, and thus further appeal to the people of Norwich by a thoroughly popular concert, which shall afford attractions of irresistible calibre. This would be much more likely to add a large lump to the receipts than the ball, the loss of which the best people would certainly not miss, and the grumblings of the others might pass unheeded. With this additional concert there would be altogether six performances, for three if not four of which the prices should be such as would make them accessible to your townsfolk generally. It cannot be gainsaid, either, that the character of the programmes, while offering comprehensive attractions, should still be in every respect as high and classical as has been the case up to the present time. Here I must draw to a close for this week, and shall in my next endeavour to point out some other respects in which the Festival arrangements stand in need of amendment.—Norwich Argus, March 3rd.

GRAUN'S PASSION MUSIC AT ST GABRIEL'S, PIMLICO.

Whatever future historians may say of the Church in our day, apathy and coldness will not be laid to its charge. Most people will acknowledge that music has nobly seconded this awakening of the Church, and, wherever reverence and a high standard of musical excellence are combined, a large congregation is the result. Services of this character, also, have an influence in another direction. The best musicians are attracted and encouraged to turn their genius towards Church music, and publishers are ready to lend their aid. We have no less than five settings of music on the subject of the Passion of our Lord. Bach's great work (St Matthew's Passion), now annually sung at St Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday in Holy Week, and St John's Passion, by the same composer, familiar to us through the performances at St Ann's, Soho, on the Fridays in Lent; then Haydn's Passion (Last Seven Words), becoming deservedly more popular as a church service; Gounod's setting of the same subject, which, as it can be sung without accompaniment, will find a home in churches where orchestral instruments might be objected to; and, lastly, Graun's Passion (Der Tod Jesu), almost unknown in England. Of this work and the performance at St Gabriel's, Pimlico, we wish especially to speak. Graun was contemporary with Handel, both dying in 1759. He was of a musical family, and there are in the library at Berlin several manuscripts by his brother, Augustus Frederic. Graun's residence in Italy greatly influenced him in favour of the Italian school; and, on his return to Germany, he became popular with those who considered the native school too severe. At this time Italian opera was much in vogue, and Graun devoted his chief energies in this direction; he also, like his contemporary Hasse, both acting and singing in his own works. The cantata under notice is regarded as his greatest composition. Published in 1760 at Leipsic, it has enjoyed a popularity denied to many works of equal value. Its chief merit lies in the choruses, which are effective and easy to execute. Some of the subjects are, however, familiar to musicians versed in the music of the period, and yet unacquainted with Graun. The solos are long, florid, and of high range, written to satisfy voices of the most flexible nature, and therefore unfitted for the Church at penitential seasons. These can, however, be omitted without detriment to the narrative. The cantata would then be of moderate length, and might be sung with effect as an anthem. The original words are by Ramler, and the Rev. J. Troutbeck has been very successful with the English adaptation. Much praise is due to the organist, Mr Marcellus Higgs, and the choir of St Gabriel's Church, Pimlico, for having brought this work to a hearing, for, we believe, the first time in London. The choruses were sung by a well-balanced choir of sixty voices, and the accompaniments were cleverly played on the organ by Mr H. M. Higgs. The soprano solos were entrusted to a little boy, who sang with ease and skill; and the tenor and bass solo music was equally fortunate in exponents who never seemed to lose sight of the devotional part of their tasks. From a musical point of view the service was in every department praiseworthy, while the reverent behaviour of the congregation was ample proof that these services do good work, when conducted in a matter befitting the occasion.—Musical Times.

MAGDEBURG.—The new opera Die Rose von Woodstock, by Herr Bennewitz, has been favourably received at the Stadttheater. It is agreeably distinguished for new and original melody.

JOHN OXENFORD.

(From the "Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.")

Requiescat in pace. As those words were uttered by the priest for the last time over the coffin which was almost hidden from sight by the loving tribute of flowers that had been laid upon it, there was not one of those who stood by the grave of John Oxenford but must have muttered "Amen!" from his heart. Never did a man who had for so long a time wielded that weapon—the edge of which is so apt to cut both him who uses it and him on whom it is used—the critic's pen—leave behind him so few enemies and so many friends; friends not only in name, but in heart; friends who felt, as that coffin was lowered into the vault, that a void which never could be filled was left for them among the noblest pleasures of this life. "Glorious John," as those who knew him best delighted to call him, was no mere "good fellow;" no mere boon companion, whose absence from one's table or fireside leaves a blank indeed, but one easily filled in the course of time. He was a man to be intimate with whom was truly a privilege. More learned men there doubtless are; men as widely read there may be; men who were better talkers there may have been; but there is not, and I doubt if ever there was one who, to deep and wide knowledge of books, added so much unaffected modesty, so kindly an appreciation of others, and such a genial love of mankind. To many the fact that he had been for the last eighteen months a Roman Catholic was a surprise; yet there never was a man who embodied in himself, as far as literature was concerned, the purest essence of catholicity; that large-minded, big-hearted love of all books, learned or playful, heavy or light, foreign or native, grand or humble, as John Oxenford did. When I hear him spoken of, or see him written of, as a "mere playwright," or "theatrical critic," I wonder what acquaintance those who so speak or write can have with the literature of their own or any other European country. I should have thought that any aspirant to a "pass" in any of the numerous examinations now so virulently prevalent, would not be able to mention less than four names of those to whom we owe the introduction of the study of German literature into this country. Of these four, John Oxenford, no less than Coleridge, De Quincey, and Carlyle, is certainly one. The same pen which wrote with such humorous indulgence and marvellous clearness a notice of the last new play, which was intended to amuse the town, would be employed the very next hour on an erudite article, treating of some rare old book, for the Saturday Review, or would be translating the obscure phraseology of some German Lied into melodious and intelligible English verse. Though he read both the Latin and Greek classics with as much ease and avidity as young ladies read novels—though within a few weeks of his death, when he was suffering from great exhaustion, I found him amusing himself by working out abstruse algebraical problems—there never was a man less a pedant than John Oxenford. I have often been immensely amused by the tone of contemptuous patronage with which young philosophers of the present day would receive the name of Oxenford, regarding him from the supreme height of their arid priggism as a mere scribbler for the press. These are the young gentlemen who never read any novels but George Elliot's, who are always bored if they go to a play, except it be of the fleshly burlesque type, which, being within the range alike of their sympathies and their understandings, they can descant upon, of course purely from the æsthetic point of view. For such persons and for "swells" John Oxenford had a decided antipathy; in their society he was silent and uncomfortable; but even against them, much as he disliked them, he uttered nothing worse than the most good-humoured satire. I do not think he could ever have known how to sneer—of malice he was incapable. The very last time I was with him, scarcely a fortnight before he died, he alluded to some injury that had been done him, not with the shallow indifference of one who would fain appear hardened against the buffets and stings of this world, but with that cheerful gentleness inherent in his great-hearted nature, with which he invariably met all ill-natured attacks, from whatever quarter. He had been, in the opinion of many of his friends, a free-thinker for a great part of his life, but he certainly had the habit of true charity, which many Christians find it so hard to acquire. To the last he worked on, though towards the end of his life his strength failed him; yet scarcely a week passed but he contrived to write some words for music, or to translate French and German songs. Sometimes he was able to accomplish a review—generally of some classic, all the new editions of which he studied with the warmest interest. It was pleasant to see his face brighten as he compared the school editions of the present day with those which existed when he was a boy. He rejoiced to see his favourite authors introduced to the young under such favourable circumstances. His library contained few bound volumes and fewer rare editions. If he devoured books, he digested them too. He loved them for the nourishment they contained, and cared little how they were dressed.

Many and of various classes were the mourners round his grave. Busy men gave up their precious time in order to pay the last tribute of respect and affection to one who, fully conscious that knowledge was power, had ever used the one with gentle forbearance, the other with noble modesty.

F. M.

ST JOHN'S HOSPITAL.

A reading of the Antigone of Sophocles, with Mendelssohn's music, was given on Saturday evening in the concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music, on behalf of St John's Hospital for Diseases of the Skin. The arrangements made were adapted to secure an efficient result, as will at once be understood when we say that Miss Evelyn and Mr Ryder undertook to recite the drama, and that Mr Alfred Gilbert conducted a chorus of one hundred voices, together with an orchestra chiefly selected from the Crystal Palace band. But, unfortunately for the benevolent object in view, the public did not respond to the extent which might reasonably have been expected, looking at the acknowledged attraction held out, and St John's Hospital, we fear, has reaped little benefit from a very laudable effort. The fact, however, that attention is now called to the existence and claims of the charity may ultimately be of service, and obtain some of the help required. The performance of a work so familiar as Antigone scarcely demands extended remark. It will be credited that such an elocutionist as Mr Ryder did all that was possible for his share. Miss Evelyn infused much real pathos into the words of the unhappy heroine; the final scene, in which Antigone appears, being specially effective, and earning hearty recognition. As regards the musical portion of the entertainment, little fault could be found save in the accompanied recitatives, where a want of unity only obtainable through careful rehearsal, was occasionally observed. All else did credit to every one concerned, especially to the conductor, Mr. Gilbert, and the soloists, Messrs Greenhill, Wallace Wells, Hempel, and Stanley Smith, whose rendering of the delicious quartet, "O Eros," showed real taste. The most striking effect in the performance was created by the grand Hymn to Bacchus, a splendid execution of which evoked loud applause.

MADRID.—M. Ambroise Thomas's Mignon will shortly be performed by the Italian company at the Teatro Real with the following cast: Mignon, Signora Virginia Ferni; Philine, Signora Reigl; Federico, Signor By; Wilhelm, Signor Stagno, Lothario, Signor Belval; Læsto, Signor Fiorini; and Jarno, Signor Orus.

Popular Concerts.

(RETROSPECT.)

There was no novelty, but a great deal of excellence, in the programme of Monday last, not a single item being without attraction of the highest class. We need scarcely stop to demonstrate this as regards the opening work, Beethoven's Quartet in F major (Op. 59), the first of the set, dedicated to Count Rasoumowski, in which the mighty master's genius appears at once most exalted and most intelligible. Mendelssohn's remark that this quartet, with its successor in F minor, are the most "Beethovenish" of all Beethoven's works, may be accepted as perfectly true. In them, more than in the more abstruse compositions characteristic of his so-called "third style," do we see, perhaps, the highest development of marvellous gifts, according to the rules of art. The extraordinary second movement, as will readily be understood, made the greatest effect from its very original construction, but the entire work, beautifully played by MM. Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Piatti, left a deep impression. Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Quartet in B minor (Op. 3) came at the end of the programme, played by the same artists—Herr Ries excepted, who was replaced by Mr Franklin Taylor—with equal facility and power. Beauty of another order from that of Beethoven shines here, but beauty nevertheless, of high degree and most fascinating description. The Scherzo, a real Mendelssohnian gem, never fails to delight all amateurs, and those who refused to stay and hear it on Monday night could hardly have known what pleasure they declined to enjoy. Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 7) was the pianoforte solo, played, if in no very striking, yet thoroughly correct, fashion by Mr Taylor, and the second part opened with Brahms' now famous and popular "Liebeslieder-Walzer," Misses Marie Krebs and Agnes Zimmermann being at the pianoforte, with Miss Sophie Löwe, Miss Helene Arnim, Mr Shakespeare, and Mr Pyatt as vocalists. Having already discussed these charming trifles at adequate length, there is now no need to say more than that they were received, as they should be, with unqualified approbation.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

On Feb. 28 the concert for the benefit of the unfortunate Lyonnais workpeople was a success, thanks to the efforts of La Société Musicale, L'Orphéon de Boulogne, a new brass band, under the conductorship of M. Picard, styled "L'Union Symphonique," and the singing of M^{me} Louis Fontaine and M. Delorme. The Salle was crowded, all being there by invitation of the committee, while a plate at the door was well filled by the invités. On Monday next a similar concert, with the same object in view, will be given.

Since last I wrote, Le Jeu de l'Amour et du Joseph Houzard, La Grande Duchesse de Boulognestein, Jean, Jeannette et Jeanneton, Les Jurons de Cavillac, Le Sourd, and (for the benefit of M^{lle} Noailles, an old favourite in Boulogne) Barbe Bleue have been given, as well as a laughable little drama in two acts, entitled La Fille du Clown. M^{lle} Noailles, who undertook the part of Boulotte in Barbe Bleue, was warmly received. She was presented with a handsome bracelet from her fellow artists and five bouquets from the public. The season at the Salle Monsigny is drawing to an end. The house will be closed from March 25 till June 30.

On Sunday afternoons, for the last three months, lectures on popular subjects have been given in the Salle des Concerts. Last Sunday's attracted many of the "musical world." The subject was "Les philosophes sur le théâtre." M. Platrier, a professor at the local college, was the lecturer. After alluding to the stage philosophers, Aristophanes, Molière, and Pellissier, M. Platrier read extracts from the works of these authors, and commented especially on Le Mariage forcé, from which he read the scene between Panrace and Sganarelle, recalling to his audience how well the same had been interpreted at a benefit given by the brothers Coquelin last autumn in this town. He also mentioned Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, Les Femmes savantes, &c. From the works of Pellissier he selected Le Cerf, from which he read extracts, giving the plot (a political one), bringing in, as a burlesque, the names of Jean Jacques Rousseau and Voltaire, and terminating with a letter from the latter to Pellissier, in which he gave the Cerf inventor a lesson, "How to walk uprightly."

Boulogne-sur-Mer, March 14, 1877.

X. T. R.

ROTTERDAM.—A new opera, Van Dyck, by Herr Adolf Müller, has been successfully brought out here.

GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.

The Two Foster Brothers is the title of the very newest fancy at that merry little hall where fertility of invention is united to facility of accomplishment. Given Mr Gilbert A'Beckett to write the book, and Mr. Alfred Cellier to idealise the subject with graceful melody, the latest entertainment could scarcely stray far out of the beaten track. If it were ever inclined to do so, certain it is that Miss Leonora Braham with her tuneful comedy, Mr. Corney Grain with his power of characterisation, and both Mr Alfred Reed and Mr Law with their disciplined sense of humour, would soon restore the old harmony and completeness. The Two Foster Brothers is, as regards its subject-matter, a little more farcical and full-flavoured than the generality of the German Reed entertainments, its humour is of a rougher order than usual, and far-seeing persons may see in this upsetting of conservative order and rigid simplicity a certain sign of the times. A few years ago it would have been considered strange indeed if Mrs German Reed had boldly announced her intention of substituting farce for fancy; but now, with a stroke of the magician's wand, farce is presented of a pattern which would have delighted theatrical audiences at the time when "A Rough Diamond" was produced, and Mr Buckstone delighted them with Cousin Joe. The two brothers now held up to ridicule are as unlike as they well can be. The one is a London exquisite; the other a Somersetshire farm labourer. The one is dressed by Poole; the other hides the difficulties of his attire with a smockfrock. Apparently for the sake of a comic reversal, by which Mr Corney Grain shall wear a smockfrock, patent leather boots, and a chimney-pot hat, and Mr Alfred Reed shall dawn upon the audience in all the full-blown dignity of a comic countryman dressed for a country fair, the old, well-worn, never-to-be-despised dramatic refuge of children changed at nurse is resorted to. In order, in fact, to create a thread of dramatic interest, the baronet becomes a ploughman, and the agriculturist turns out an aristocrat. The complications arising are inevitable, but amusing. The baronet feeds the pigs with cream, and "Our Jem," commits himself to the most outrageous solecisms; and, when the audience has laughed sufficiently, the changed cradle incident is, as usual, declared to be erroneous, and matters end as peaceably as they began. All the members of the company took the greatest pains not to strain the farcical incidents beyond their legitimate end, and all, as usual, worked carefully and well. Mr Alfred Reed and Mr Law were funny without exaggeration. Mr Corney Grain gave a capital bit of character as a bored exquisite, and Mrs German Reed with Miss Leonora Braham, endeavoured to win the subject back to the idyllic fields where it would have found a welcome companion in Mr Alfred Cellier's music. Occasionally the melody appeared to pine for a more sympathetic subject, although it must be fairly confessed that the eccentricity was congenial to the audience as it stood. It is fairly open to question, however, whether this rapid hurry in the direction of competition with the theatres is altogether judicious. The light operas, the musical romances, the chamber comediettas given with such success by Mrs German Reed and her company can be found in the same perfection nowhere else. Farce-acting may be looked for elsewhere, and from artists trained for the purpose. What verses of society are to the literature of the drawing-room, Mrs German Reed's Entertainment is to the amusement of the public.

JOHN OXFORD'S DRAMATIC WORKS, &c.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—In the last number of the Musical World you insert a list of John Oxford's dramatic works on the authority of the Era. Allow me to state that there are many more I could name which were not in that list, amongst others, the very popular opera of Robin Hood, produced at Her Majesty's Theatre; his dramatic cantata, The Sleeper Awakened; and his translation of Bürger's romantic poem, Lenore—all three composed by Professor G. A. Macfarren. Your obedient servant,

WELLINGTON GUERNSEY.

DR W. A. BARRETT'S LECTURES.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR MR EDITOR,—Allow me to thank Mr D. Baptie for his kind and courteous note. The report from which he gained his information concerning my lectures was not correct. By a slip of the pen I am styled Mus. Doc., I am at present only Mus. Bac. I am also made to say that Webbe wrote 107 glees. I said published (of course, in his own time). As my lectures are now printed, your esteemed correspondent may be glad to have the opportunity of reading my words as I spoke them. I am, yours truly,

W. A. BARRETT.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

LAST CONCERT BUT ONE OF THE SEASON.
THE THIRTY-THIRD CONCERT.

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 19, 1877.

To commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.

QUARTET, in A minor, Op. 29, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Schubert.
SONGS, {" Old German Spring Song" } ... Mendelssohn.
{" Rhenish Popular Song" }

Mr BARTON MCGUCKIN.

FANTASIA, in C major, Op. 17, for pianoforte alone—Mme SCHUMANN ... Schumann.

PART II.

SONG, "I'll sing thee songs of Araby"—Mr BARTON MCGUCKIN ... F. Clay.
SERENADE TRIO, in D major, Op. 8, for violin, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Beethoven.
Conductor ... Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 17, 1877.

To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET, in F, No. 2, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Mozart.
TOOCATA, in C major, Op. 7, for pianoforte alone—Mlle MARIE KREBS ... Schumann.
LIEBESLIEDER-WALZER, Op. 52, for four hands on the pianoforte, and voice parts ad libitum—Pianoforte—Mlle MARIE KREBS and Miss AGNES ZIMMERMANN; Vocalists—Mlles SOPHIE LOWE and HELENE ARNIM, MM. SHAKESPEARE and PYATT ... Brahms.
PRELUDE and FUGUE, in E minor, for pianoforte alone—Miss AGNES ZIMMERMANN ... Mendelssohn.
TRIO (MS. by desire), for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mlle MARIE KREBS, MM. JOACHIM and PIATTI ... Balfe.

EXTRA CONCERT.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, MARCH 21, 1877.

To commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET, in E flat, Op. 127, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Beethoven.
SONG—Herr HENSCHEL ... Beethoven.
SONATA, in C major, Op. 53, dedicated to Count Waldstein, for pianoforte alone—Mme SCHUMANN ... Beethoven.
SONG—Herr HENSCHEL ... Beethoven.
QUARTET, in F, Op. 123, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. JOACHIM, L. RIES, STRAUS, and PIATTI ... Beethoven.

ARABELLA GODDARD.

MADAME ARABELLA GODDARD'S RECITAL (prior to her departure for Paris), at ST JAMES'S HALL, FRIDAY AFTERNOON, March 23. Tickets and programmes at the usual agents; and of BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

THE LAST BALLAD CONCERT.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

THE LAST BALLAD CONCERT, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY next, at Eight o'clock. Artists—Mme Edith Wynne, Miss Frances Brooke, and Antoinette Sterling; Mr Sims Reeves, Mr Maybrick, and Mr Edward Lloyd. Pianoforte—Mme Arabella Goddard. The London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr Fred. Walker. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 1s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 4s. and 2s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets of Austin, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

DR HEAVYBODY.—Richard Wagner was born at Leipsic, in 1813. He is 63 years of age. An oratorio by him was performed at the Gewandhaus (according to Herr Dorn), but has never since been heard. Wagner also composed two operas, in 1833 and 1836, about which no one seems to know anything. He was successively music-director of the theatres of Magdeburg, Königsberg, and Riga. At the last-named town he composed his opera, Rienzi, which, produced at Dresden in 1842, first made him talked about. He had a large black dog, with inflated nostrils.

NOTICE.

With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive four pages extra, and again, from TIME TO TIME, as expedient.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1877.

Episodes on Change.

DR SHIPPING.—Did you ever hear Wagner's overture to Polonia?
DR QUINCE.—No; but I've heard his overture to Rule Britannia.
DR SHIPPING.—Which do you like of the two?
DR QUINCE.—Polonia. Did you ever hear Rule Britannia?
DR SHIPPING.—No; but I've heard Polonia.
DR QUINCE.—Which do you prefer?
DR SHIPPING.—Rule Britannia.

[Exeunt severally, perplexed.]

A Variation.

At the Moon and Ghoul, Ilminster.

DR DAY.—How did you like the new quartet at the Pops?
DR NIGHT.—Of Brahms!

DR DAY.—Of Brahms?

DR NIGHT.—In B flat?

DR DAY.—In B flat.

DR NIGHT (mysteriously).—Humph!

DR DAY.—Why Humph?

DR NIGHT.—I liked the andante, although there is a variation which is no variation.

DR DAY.—A variation no variation? Where?

DR NIGHT.—After the fantasia-episode, beginning five in a bar—where it goes into D.

DR DAY.—Explain.

DR NIGHT (in a sepulchral tone hums the theme):—

DR DAY.—That's the theme—

DR NIGHT.—The five-four fantasia goes thus (hums irregularly):—

DR DAY.—That's no variation, Son of Darkness!

DR NIGHT.—Child of Light! I said not that it was.

DR DAY.—Imp of obscurity! Evolve!

DR NIGHT.—Eye of the Universe! Behold! (Unfolds a writ on vellum parchment):—

Vellum Parchment.

Thunder and lightning. Voice of MR AP'MUTTON in the far.

VOICE OF MR AP'MUTTON.—Go to the Bee and Bottle. A scrimmage comes. O! where's Flosshilde! Polkaw! Polkaw! Ere thou writ'st verse, learn from the "divine Williams" how to scan! (Thunder, lightning.)

DR DAY.—By the keel of the Java!—the voice of Ap'Mutton! Poor master! Once translated, now returned to earth, a-seeking for Flosshilde? By Gilmore and the Boston Festival!—this beats Franconian Bayreuth! By Cosima and Ricciardo! By Arabellissima and Josephus Gulielmus Wirkksamemittel!

DR NIGHT (sepulchrally).—Of what ravest thou?

DR DAY.—The variation.

DR NIGHT.—It is no variation.

DR DAY.—Thou liest!

DR NIGHT.—How? Cave canem!

DR DAY.—I am Diogenes. I will throw a lamp upon it from out my tub.

DR NIGHT.—Throw, and illumine.

DR DAY.—Dark gnome of Erebus! Alberich Secundus! I will transpose the theme from F to D (hums theme, in D):—

DR NIGHT.—Thou one-eyed Argus! Thou Polyphemus metamorphosed! This is no variation—

DR DAY (interrupting him).—Ne sutor ultra crepidam. Pardon me. Thou know'st nothing of the metamorphosis of themes.

DR NIGHT.—Dannreuther me no Dannreuther. Fransiscus Huefferus says it is all wails and buskins. Galimatias!

DR DAY.—Huefferus be impaled! Listen! (Hums, in different parts of his voice):—

DR NIGHT.—How many voices have you got? You are now tenor, now soprano, again tenor, &c.

DR DAY.—Look at the vellum parchment writ on. There you will see polyphony. I do but imitate the several parts which in sequence constitute the melody. The polyphonic arrangement forms the variation.

Terrific cyclone—thunder, lightning, water-spout, torpedos, &c. Voice of MR AP'MUTTON, nearer and nearer:—

VOICE OF MR AP'MUTTON.—Hang polyphony! Wagner comes! Liszt may follow. Go to Bee and Bottle. I'll lend you my tarnkap: you will hear scrimmage. Ask Wagner about Flosshilde for me. You shall have Welgunde and Wogelinde between you. I have Wotan's spear and Siegfried's sword. Begone! or ware the wrath of Ap'Mutton! I am cast of an eye, and wear a mantle blue. I will stick swords into ash-trees.

A fierce and troublous hurricane. Wraith of FRANCIS HUEFFER.

VOICE OF AP'MUTTON (in the far).—Awast! (Tarnkap falls with a crash through roof of Moon and Ghoul. Wraith absconds.)

DR NIGHT (shivering).—Allons. Entrons par le Piémont.

DRS DAY and NIGHT put their heads jointly in tarnkap, and in the twinkling of an eye, find themselves at the Bee and Bottle.

Apparition of DRS SERPENT and GHOST.

DR SERPENT (hissing).—Here's Night!

DR GHOST (feeling white).—Here's Day!

DRS GHOST and SERPENT.—Let's slope!

[Vanish.]

DR DAY.—Nobody come?

DR NIGHT.—No! by th' owl of Minerva!

Enter MUMBO and JUMBO.

MUMBO.—Am scrimmage over?

JUMBO.—Guess it am.

MUMBO.—Who dat?

JUMBO.—Him Dr Day. Whom dat oder?

MUMBO.—Him Dr Night.

JUMBO (trembling).—Gollowallagolla! De doo am gither!

MUMBO (perspiring).—Allogtallawollog! Go baccy room—no more scrimmage!

JUMBO.—Ahjajahsh!—

(Noise in smoke-room—smashing of plates, throwing bottles, report of pistols, screams from landlord and barmaid—evident dissension—cries of Wagner! Liezt! Brahms! Joachim! &c.)

MUMBO and JUMBO (in convulsions).—Wagner him come!

[Exeunt precipitately by separate doors.]

DR DAY.—Five in a bar!

DR NIGHT.—Like Brahms!

(Terrible noise from smoke-room—Colonel Twist, Dr Shivers, Mr Baylis Boil, Mr Purple Powis, Sir Capor O'Corby, and Mr Lavender Pitt rush out, in angry dissension, Sir Capor dealing blows right and left with his shillelagh.)

DR DAY (perplexed).—Heu cauda!

SIR CAPOR O'CORBY.—Bedad! Who are those Philistines? Be the hand o' me body, let 'em thread on me coat-tails!

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! No. It's Day and Night.

SIR CAPOR O'CORBY.—Smithereens! I hate 'em both. I'd mix 'em thegither—small quantity o' Day and large quantity o' Night. Thread on my skirts! Balingarry me beard!

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! No. They are quiet fellows.

SIR CAPOR O'CORBY.—Cornudgeons, begorrt!

MR LAVENDER PITT (taking him aside).—Calm yourself—you've had the best of the argument about Mazeppa. What more do you want? Twist, Shivers, Boil, and Purple are no longer conscious—they are non compos, in short, and—

SIR CAPOR O'CORBY (interrupting him).—But Day and Night! Be the bludgeon of Hercules—

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Be quiet, or the landlord will come up—

SIR CAPOR O'CORBY.—I don't care a sthraw about old Jollycastle—

MR LAVENDER PITT.—But Miss Kate Jollycastle?

SIR CAPOR O'CORBY.—Bedad! you've hit it—you've hit—(falls on sofa, and begins to snore.)

MR LAVENDER PITT (to DRS DAY and NIGHT).—Gentlemen, I advise you, not having the honor, Aw! of your immediate acquaintance, Aw! to get away as soon as possible. When fuvious he is wevy fuvious. Aw! He'll wake soon. Aw!

DR DAY (aside to DR NIGHT).—What say you to Tarnkap, and Ilminster?

DR NIGHT.—By all means.

MISS JOLLYCASTLE playing on the piano in the landlord's sanctum.

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw!

DRS DAY and NIGHT (putting on Tarnkap).—To Ilminster! At the Moon and Ghoul, Ilminster.

DR DAY.—The Fates be praised! We can talk soberly here. (rings).

Enter WAITER.

DR NIGHT.—Brandy and soda!

DR DAY.—Soda and brandy!

DR NIGHT.—Here's a coil!

DR DAY.—All along of a tetralogical Mazeppa. Wagner comes to-morrow!

DR NIGHT (in a "monumental" tone).—And when goes hence?

Enter WAITER with brandies and sodas.

WAITER.—Both asleep! I'll drink 'em myself. [Exit.]

DR DAY (dreaming):—

DR NIGHT (dreaming):—

DR DAY (muttering in his sleep).—Heu!

DR NIGHT (muttering in his sleep).—Cauda! Curtains.

Bach's "Passion of St. Matthew" and Beethoven's "Mount of Olives."

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—New editions of the above-named masterpieces have just been issued by the house of Boosey & Co. For more than one reason they are entitled to consideration. The death of John Oxenford has excited curiosity about his literary labours, the variety and extent of which were almost unknown to the outside world. Few are aware that the accomplished scholar, distinguished poet, and greatest of critics had occupied much of his leisure time in turning the librettos of operas and the books of oratorios into sterling English. Yet, during his later years, Oxenford busied himself earnestly with this especial kind of work; and, to cite only one example, his translation of Lohengrin is an effort of which any scholar might feel proud. Wagner, if he understood English as well as he understands Mediaeval Teutonic, would not have disdained to own it. I have in my possession a letter from Oxenford (who had then just finished his translation), containing these words: "I know nothing about the music of Wagner, but I can affirm positively that he is a great poet." The most recent examples of Oxenford's talent in the direction to which I refer are literal versions of the texts of Bach's St Matthew Passion and Beethoven's Christus am Olberge (Christ on the Mount of Olives)—issued by the firm of Boosey & Co. A careful perusal of both has persuaded me that they far surpass anything else in their way that we possess. In early life, absorbed in studies of another kind, Oxenford, though really fond of music, paid little or no attention to the productions of the masters whom Schumann eloquently describes as "looking down upon us from among the stars." Nevertheless, he has often said to me—"I wish I had spent as much time in informing myself about these giant oratorios, symphonies, and other things, of which you speak so often, and with such reverence. I, too, should have loved them. But I go to the opera,* and come away from Lucrezia humming:—

&c.

"while you go to the opera, and are always humming a tune from Guillaume Tell—something like this":—

"

&c.

As Oxenford grew in years—though one of the greatest humorists of our time—he, who looked at all things literary and philosophical from a serious point of view, began to take more and more interest in the works of the old musicians; and his connection with the house of Boosey & Co. has led to important results. The editions of Bach's Passion of St Matthew and Beethoven's Mount of Olives are not the least valuable of his labours in this direction. The English translations are as masterly as they are close to the originals; and, with Mr Josiah Pittman's careful supervision of the musical text, they may be safely recommended to the attention alike of amateurs and musicians.

Otto Reard.

MILAN.—Signor Petrella's new opera, La Fata di Pozzuoli, will be brought out in the summer at the Teatro Carcano.

* Oxenford was then the musical critic of the Times.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

MADAME ARABELLA GODDARD is to play the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's sonata, The Maid of Orleans, at her recital on the 23rd inst. Better late than never. It was written expressly for her, and is dedicated to her. Moreover, its gifted composer used to say, over and over again—"She is my Joan of Arc!" The remainder of Mme. Goddard's programme is irreproachable—worthy of a distinguished artist, worthy of one who, when she chooses to play her best, is the greatest of living pianists.

ONE great attraction of the Italian Opera, London, in 1723 was Signora Cuzzani. Previously to her public appearance, she sang before the Prince and Princess of Wales, who were greatly delighted with her. She was engaged at the then enormous salary of £2,000 a-year, on the presumption that she would prove a great success. Nor were the managers disappointed, for they were enabled on the evening of her second performance to demand and receive four guineas for each single ticket. The following epigram was published immediately after her début :—

"If Orpheus' notes could woods and rocks inspire
And make dull rivers listen to his lyre,
Cuzzani's voice can, with far greater skill,
Rouse death to life, and, what is living, kill."

The fact of the lady's having inspired the epigram proves that her singing must have been better than the epigram itself.

GAY wrote his well-known ballad of "Black-eyed Susan," upon Mrs Montford, the celebrated actress and contemporary of Colley Cibber. After her retirement from the stage, love and the ingratitude of a bosom friend deprived her of her senses, and she was placed in a lunatic asylum. One day, during a lucid interval, she asked her attendant what play was to be performed that evening, and was told it was Hamlet. While on the stage, she had always been exceedingly popular as Ophelia. The recollection struck her, and, with the cunning so frequently allied to insanity, she eluded her keepers and made her way to the theatre. She remained concealed until Ophelia enters for the mad scene, then, pushing past the lady who was playing the character, she went on the stage and gave a most marvellous representation of the scene. She was Ophelia herself, to the amazement of performers and audience. When she had made this last effort she exclaimed: "It is all over." She was forthwith conveyed back to her domicile, where she died a few days afterwards.

GLUCK possessed a warm patroness in Marie Antoinette. He was admitted to her toilette, and she never ceased talking to him. One day she inquired whether he had nearly concluded his opera of Armida, and whether it pleased him. Gluck calmly replied, with his German accent, "Madame, it will soon be finished, and will really be sublime." His opinion, thus roundly expressed, was, as we know, corroborated by the public.

ACCORDING to M. Wekerlin, the learned librarian of the Paris Conservatory, Gluck, when desirous of exciting his fancy and of transporting himself to Taurus, Sparta, or Erebus, required to be seated in the middle of a field, where, under the canopy of heaven, exposed to the rays of the sun, with his piano before him, and a couple of bottles of champagne by his side, he wrote the two Iphigenias, the complaints of Orpheus, and the daring love of Paris. Sarti, on the contrary, preferred a large, empty room, lighted in a lugubrious fashion by a single lamp hanging from the ceiling. He could never hit upon a musical notion except late at night and amid profound silence. Sacchini could compose only with his Dulcinea near him, while his cats and kittens were gamboling around. Paisiello, when composing, always lay in bed. Thus he wrote Nina, Il Barbiere di Siviglia, the Molinara, and other works. To extemporise, and afterwards develop in less than four hours, an entire act of Giulietta e Romeo, all Zingarelli needed was to read a passage from a Latin classic, or a Father of the Church. Anfossi had a brother of great promise, who died young. This composer could not write except when surrounded by capons, sausages, and ham. Haydn roamed about the seventh heaven of invention without moving from his chair, but always attired in a court suit. [A very, very old story, M. Wekerlin!—D.P.]

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

THE winter evenings, or rather the pleasant Friday evenings "At Home," of Mrs Charles Eley came to an end last Friday. Her elegant salons and splendid music-room will be closed for a long time—far too long a time indeed for those who have had the pleasure of spending many pleasant hours in "perfect harmony," and listening to "sweet melody." The fine organ on which Mrs Eley discourses so eloquently and the sweet voices of many fair amateurs will be silent for a time, but not forgotten. Mrs Charles Eley will in a few days leave her charming residence for the Continent in search of new inspirations for next season. S. L.

M. ALEXANDRE GUILLMANT (organist of the Church of the Trinity, Paris) gave a recital on the great organ at the residence of Mr N. J. Holmes, Primrose Hill Road, on Saturday afternoon, March 10. M. Guilmant's performance of the following pieces was marked by all his well-known talent (and he was unanimously called upon to repeat the Allegretto from his fifth book of L'Organiste Pratique) :—Prelude in E flat (J. S. Bach); Funeral song; Offertoire for Easter; Choral; Allegretto; and Fuga, Alla Handel; Fifth Book of L'Organiste Pratique, dedicated to Mr N. J. Holmes (Guilmant); Choral with Variations; Sixth Sonata (Mendelssohn); Improvisation; First Meditation; and Fugue in D major (Guilmant).

PROVINCIAL.

NOTTINGHAM.—Mr W. Pyatt's second concert, with the artists of the Monday Popular Concerts, St James's Hall, London, took place on Thursday, March 1st, in the Albert Hall. The artists were Herr Joachim, Herr L. Ries, Mr Zerbini, and Mdle Marie Krebs. Miss Agnes Larkcom was the vocalist, and Sir Julius Benedict conducted. The following is the programme :—Part I.—Quartet in D major, Op. 64, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Haydn); Song, "Orpheus with his lute" (Sullivan); Sonata in F major for violoncello (Marcello); Song, "Berceuse" (Gounod); Toccata in C major (Schumann). Part II.—Prelude, Bourrée, Minuet, and Gavotte, in E major, for violin alone (Bach); Andante in E major, and Scherzo in A minor (fragments of an unfinished quartet), for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Mendelssohn); Song, "I have been with the rose" (Balfe); Trio in D minor for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Mendelssohn). The success of the concert—says the Nottingham Journal—is a matter of congratulation, as it shows a marked improvement in the musical taste of Nottingham. The hall was full, and the audience appreciative. Mr Pyatt's efforts to raise the standard of musical taste have been successful. There were no "shivering subscribers" in the hall last evening, the arrangements for preventing draughts and securing the comfort of those present having been well attended to under Mr Pyatt's direction.

BRIGHTON.—From the Sussex Express we learn that Mr Kuhe and Mr Carrodus have been playing at the Aquarium concerts with success. Mr Wilford Morgan was the vocalist. "He is one of the comparatively few singers who succeed in drawing large audiences at the Aquarium evening concerts, and his success will probably induce the management to retain his services. His engagements hitherto, in our opinion, have been too 'few and far between.' Mr Wilford Morgan has not yet appeared in Brighton at any but the Aquarium concerts, but we have been so favourably impressed by his efforts that we hope Mr Kuhe and other of our local entrepreneurs, in addition to the Aquarium management, will give us the opportunity of hearing him often."

LEEDS.—On Thursday, March 8, Dr Spark delivered his lecture on "The Vocal Music of the Victorian Era" in St Simon's School, Ventnor Street. A more striking proof of the popularity and appreciation in which Dr Spark is held could not be given than by the large and appreciative audience. The Rev. Thomas Whitby (the vicar of St Simon's) occupied the chair, and made a characteristic speech in introducing Dr Spark, who was received with enthusiasm. Misses Jeannie Taylor, Kennedy, Messrs Nunns and Dodds, were the vocalists who assisted in the "illustrations" of the lecture, which was listened to with great interest. At the conclusion a vote of thanks to Dr Sparks was proposed by the Rev. Mr Whitby, and seconded by Mr Lee.

MAIDSTONE.—The final entertainment this season in connection with the Literary and Mechanics' Institution took place at the Maidstone Corn Exchange. The vocalists were Miss Marian Lynton (soprano), Miss Janet Clayton (mezzo-soprano), Miss Gertrude Lawes (contralto), Mr Willbye Cooper (tenor), and Mr Stanley Smith (bass); and the instrumentalists: Herr Rosenthal (solo violin), and Mr Michael Watson (solo pianoforte). The vocalists acquitted themselves to the satisfaction of the audience, and the instrumentalists no less so. Mr Watson was admired for his performance of a waltz ("Sabrina") of his own composition, and Herr Rosenthal for Leonard's "Souvenir d'Haydn," and his expressive "rendering" of the slow movement from Spohr's ninth concerto. The entertainments throughout the season have proved very successful, and the committee may be congratulated upon a genuine success.

COSTANTINO DALL' ARGINE.

The above composer, who had especially distinguished himself for his ballet music, died on the 1st instant at Milan. He was only thirty-four. He made his first dramatic essay about ten years ago with a little opera, I due Orsi, the libretto of which was founded on one of Scribe's old vaudevilles, L'Ours et le Pacha. He then conceived the strange notion of re-setting Il Barbiere di Siviglia, and, what is more, of dedicating the score to Rossini, who, in reply, sent him the following letter:—

"I think I am bound to inform you that I received your amiable letter of the 2nd inst. Your name was by no means unknown to me. So far from this being the case, some time ago the fame of the brilliant success you achieved with I due Orsi found its way to my ears; I can, therefore, not help being pleased at your holding me in some slight esteem, since you are kind enough (though you consider it very audacious on your part!) to dedicate to me the work to which you are now putting the last touches.

"The only thing I consider superfluous in your charming letter is the word audacious. I certainly did not consider myself audacious when I set to music, in twelve days, after Papa Paisiello, Beaumarchais' graceful subject. Why should you be audacious, then, for resolving, after more than half a century, on again writing the music of a Barbiere?

"A short time since they performed Paisiello's version at a Paris theatre. Sparkling as it does with spontaneous melodies and dramatic spirit, it obtained great and merited success. Much polemical strife and much discussion have been excited by it, and are still going on, between the admirers of the old and those of the new music. You must be guided (at least, such is my advice) by the ancient proverb, which says: 'Between two pleaders, a third derives the advantage.' Believe me when I say: I hope you will be such a third. May, then, your new Barbiere prove as successful as I desire, and achieve imperishable glory for its author and the native land of us both. Such are the wishes entertained for you by the old man born in Pesaro and named "As I said above, I shall be pleased to accept the dedication of your new work, and beg you to receive beforehand my thanks.

"Passy, 8th August, 1868."

The new Barbiere, however, did not prove successful, and, after two or three performances, disappeared for ever. The author seemed somewhat discouraged, and, renouncing, temporarily at least, opera, turned his attention to ballet. In the space of seven or eight years he wrote the music of some twenty works of this kind. It was especially remarkable for its rhythmical qualities, its vivacity, and its elegant instrumentation. Among his ballets we may mention Amina, Il Diavolo a quattro, La Comargo, Madamigella D'Heilly (in collaboration with Sig. Paolo Giorza), La Devadacy, La Battaglia di Legnano, Il Diavolo zoppo, Zelia, Nisa e Saib, Loreley, and Nerone.

Dall'Argine was a conductor as well as a composer. While officiating very lately in the former capacity at Mantua, during the first performance of La Contessa d'Amalfi, he was struck down at his desk by an apoplectic fit. He was taken up in an almost dying condition, and conveyed home. He recovered, however, and went to Milan for the purpose of superintending the rehearsals of his new ballet, Nerone, at the Scala. He died in that city on the 1st instant, as previously stated.—Revue de la Musique.

COPYRIGHT IN SONGS.—At the Lord Mayor's Court, last Saturday, before Mr W. Brandon, an action was brought by Messrs Sprake & Palmer, music publishers, Islington Green, to recover solatium from Mr W. Sutton, a printer, of the Old Bailey, for an alleged infringement of copyright in certain music-hall songs, to which the defendant pleaded a denial of the allegation in the record. Defendant admitted that he had sold some 5,000 copies of the songs in a book for a penny the volume. The plaintiffs had been obliged to protect their property from similar piracies on previous occasions. The Jury considered that plaintiffs had established their ground of action, and gave them a verdict for ten guineas. The Deputy Judge also granted an injunction against defendant.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

St James's Hall was densely crowded on Wednesday, when the "last but one" of the present season of Mr John Boosey's London Ballad Concerts was given. The extraordinary popularity these concerts have attained is due to the admirable way in which they are conducted, to the artists who assist, and to the judicious selection of music allotted to them. Mesdames Edith Wynne, Antoinette Sterling, Cave Ashton, Messrs Maybrick, Beckett, Shakespeare, and Sims Reeves were at their posts, and in "full song," earning applause and "encores" to their hearts' content. Mad. Arabella Goddard was the pianist, and obtained the honours her exceptional talent invariably commands. Mr Sydney Naylor accompanied the vocal music.

The Popular Concerts.

*Which is the fittest day, do you say
For our classical music? Monday,
Saturday, Wednesday, every day?
Fashion has only to lead the way;
Shoddy will imp it—who shall say nay?
Refinement will follow in due course,
And genius and talent be none the worse.*

I would not be thought invidious in wishing God-speed to the "Higher Development," until such time as the educated classes can bring as much enthusiasm in support of an entertainment for them as do the lower classes for the Christy Minstrels, &c. &c. The prophetic soul of the poet foretold the era of Daily Pops.

Bentley & Welford.

THE PRIMROSE.

A child of storm,
Of frost and snow, of winds that rage,
Art thou! Thy fragile form,
Pale primrose, speaks thy tender age.

At thy chill birth,
The sun doth hide his face in frown;
Refusing to the earth,
Delights that should thy birthday crown.

No birdie sings,
To hail thy first glad, hopeful, smile;
The wind, with rude, fierce wings,
Thy natal-chant doth howl the while.

No sister-bloom
Now greets thee with a welcome kiss;
All is wrapt in gloom;
Alone, thou art a thing of bliss.

A pioneer
Art thou of sunny summer time
A messenger so dear,
That speaks of coming joys sublime.

Pattering feet
Draw near to seek thy grassy dwelling;
Lips, fresh and rosy, meet
To kiss thy blossoms gently swelling.

Like spirit bright
From earth escaped to regions blessed,
Thou com'st from winter's night,
In simple robe of pureness dressed.

Though doom'd to fade,
And leave ere summer's joys appear;
Thy requiem shall be played,
By sweetest minstrels of the year.

March 12th, 1877.

P. G.

ROME.—Strauss's Reine Indigo has been performed at the Valle.

BARCELONA.—Aida has been produced at the Liceo.

NICE.—A new opera, Il Tribuno, by Signor Capellini, a young Venetian composer, is announced as shortly to be produced here.

PESTH.—The company from the Komische Oper, Vienna, have performed Le Roi l'a dit, by M. Léo Delibes.

GRENOBLE.—The local Philharmonic Society and the band of the Artillery, stationed here, took part the other day in a service celebrated in memory of M. Bertini, the composer and pianist. A special feature in the programme was a Funeral March composed for the occasion by M. Magnier, the Artillery bandmaster.

Acrostic.

I ove went upon his way
 D ne day in early spring ;
 U nkind the north wind's sting,
 I nclement bleak the day.

 S ere were the leaves and brown,
 A ll silent groves and bowers.
 I ealously winter's frown
 A ffrighted early flowers.

 R uefully Love looked round,
 R ested as if spellbound,
 E re he with foot so fleet
 T rod on the barren ground,
 T o see a sweet March violet spring forth beneath his feet.

March 14th, 1877.

Pastor Fido.

WAIFS.

Handel's Joshua has been given at Salem, U.S.

Mr Theodore Thomas has been giving concerts in Boston.

Cincinnati merchants employ lady collectors with fair results.

M. Fechter's daughter will appear in Mignon at the Opéra-Comique.

Speaking of a fop, Lavender says: "To my mind, he dresses not wisely, but too well."

Mr George F. Gear will play a sonata for the pianoforte of his own composition at his matinée, on Tuesday night. (Bravo!)

Messrs Carrodus and Howell, assisted by Messrs Nicholson and Doyle, have been giving "quartet concerts" in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and other cities in Scotland.

The report of the Committee on the proposal of M. Mention to levy a tax upon pianos has been laid before the French Chamber of Deputies, and is adverse to the proposal.

Mdlle Albani's benefit at the Théâtre-Italien, Paris, is announced for the 20th inst. The opera will be I Puritani, for which a new tenor, Signor Marini, has been engaged.

Herr Ignaz Brüll has accepted invitations to take part in concerts at Stuttgart and Frankfort. His opera, Das Goldene Kreuz, was brought out on the 6th inst. at the first named town.

The Paris theatres have been subjected to searching visits from constituted authorities, to see that all precautions prescribed by the police against fire have been scrupulously carried out.

The first portion of M. Sapin's theatrical library has been brought to the hammer. M. Wekerlin purchased some lots for the Paris Conservatory, and M. Nutter for the Grand Opera.

M. Capoul will be in London on the 21st inst. His place in Victor Massé's opera of Paul et Virginie at the Théâtre-Lyrique will be taken by M. Engel, already once his substitute.

M. Girardet sustains the part of Father Joseph in M. Gounod's new opera of Cinq Mars. It was to have been confided to M. Obin, but did not quite suit that gentleman's voice. The first performance is fixed for to-day, the 17th inst.

A jack-knife genius in Richmond, Indiana, we are informed by the Boston Courier, has made a violin out of an old maple bedpost and the cover of a dry-goods box. An increased mortality among cats has attended this development of home industry.

The Mayor of Bordeaux has written to thank M. Faure for the performance given by the celebrated baritone in aid of the poor of the town and of the commonwealth of actors at the Grand-Théâtre. The receipts of the performance exceeded 13,000 francs.

The production of M. E. Reyer's opera, La Statue, at the Théâtre-Lyrique, has been postponed from the 15th of the present month to the 15th November. M. Vizenini has engaged to bring out the Jean de Nivelle, by M. Léo Délibes, and Le Feu, by M. Guiraud.

Among the replies to an advertisement of a music committee for "a candidate as organist, music teacher, &c.," was the following:—"Gentlemen, I noticed your advertisement for an organist and music teacher, either lady or gentleman. Having been both for several years, I offer you my services."

Señor de Sarasate and M. Anton Door have been very successful on the concert tour they are making together. They were exceedingly well received in Gratz and Trieste. From the last named town they were to proceed by way of Agram, to Pesth, where they intended giving two concerts.

The share due to the Society of Authors, Composers, and Music Publishers, on the receipts of the ball at the Grand Opera, Paris, for the benefit of unemployed operatives of Lyons, amounting to 8,535 francs, 50 centimes, was handed over to the Maréchal de MacMahon for transmission to the Mayor of Lyons.

Mdlle Heilbron, after singing three times at the Théâtre-Italien, will sustain, in the early part of next month, the principal female character in the new work Le Bravo, by MM. Blavet and Salvayre, at the Théâtre-Lyrique. The other artists are Mdlle Berthe Thibaut, MM. Bouhy, Duchesne, Caisso, Gresse, and Bonnefoy.

A few days since, as M. Halanzier was driving in his carriage along the Rue de la Paix, the horse took fright and ran up against the railings of the Vendôme Column. The vehicle was dashed to pieces. Some difficulty was experienced in extricating M. Halanzier. When this was effected, it was found that he had received no injury.

Mr John Oxenford, the eminent dramatic author and critic, who was born in 1812, was originally intended for the legal profession; but the success of his early literary efforts encouraged him to devote himself entirely to literature. He was the author of numerous translations, dramas, melodramas, comedies, and farces, and the manner in which they were constructed bore evidence to his comprehensive knowledge of the languages and dramatic literature of France, Germany, Italy, and Spain. Besides other works which exhibit signs of high scholarly attainments, he translated Eckermann's Conversations with Goethe, the Autobiography of Goethe, Jacob's "Hellas," illustrations of the home history of the ancient Greeks, and Kuno Fischer's Bacon; and he wrote largely on the subject of German literature, both general and philosophical. He was also a graceful lyrical writer, as his numerous songs and opera libretti attest. Throughout a long series of years he contributed to a variety of daily, weekly, monthly, and quarterly journals, and for thirty years was the chief dramatic critic of The Times. His excessive kindness of disposition, however, made him often pass a lenient judgment upon productions which were by no means tenderly dealt with by others; but though, to the superficial reader, his criticisms might seem to contain nothing but eloquent eulogy, it has been well remarked that those who "read between the lines" could have little difficulty in arriving at an opinion worthy consideration.—Graphic.

(For Music.)

TO MR AND MRS W. H. HOLMES.*

Dear friends I find you still agree,
 While other folks are yawning,
 To rise, like "early birds," to work
 Melodious in the dawning.

In balmy days of summer time,
 Pray let me give this warning,
 That all who can, may rise betimes,
 To taste the breath of morning:

'Tis then the air is heav'nly sweet!
 And crystal clear at dawning,
 Before the sun has risen quite,
 At four o'clock i' the morning,

The finest birds their sonnets sing
 Then, 'neath their leafy awning,
 The sparrows pert are silent still,
 At four o'clock i' the morning;

Then rise! who will, while rosy beams
 The hills are all adorning,
 There's pleasure still, for young or old,
 At four o'clock i' the morning.

* Copyright.

J. C. B.

DEATH.

On the 15th March, at the residence of his youngest daughter, Madame Bodda Pyne, GEORGE PYNE, in the 88th year of his age.

(Lines for Music.)

GOLDEN SUNBEAMS.*

When the sky frowns dark and low'ring,
Oft we feel a shud'ring dread,
That so vain are all our strivings,
It were better we were dead.
All at once a gleam of sunshine
Scatters all the darkness—then
Angel voices seem to whisper—
Mortal, hope and strive again.
Golden sunbeams, brightly shining,
Bid the heart forget its wees.
Hope dispels each vain repining
When the sunlight warmly glows.

See the bride, with trembling footsteps,
Treads the church's gloomy aisle,
When the rain with dreary patter
Seems to banish ev'ry smile;
Till, at last, the clouds receding,
Phœbus, clad in radiance bright,
Cheers the hearts of bride and bridegroom
With his beams of glorious light.
Golden sunbeams, &c.

E'en at last when years advancing
See us stretch'd on couch of pain,
And we lie in doubtful wond'ring
If we e'er shall rise again.
As we ponder, thro' the lattice
Comes a bright and golden ray,
Silent messenger from heaven,
Herald of the coming day!
Golden sunbeams, &c. LEWIS NOVRA.

* Copyright.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE"

L'É PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Sung by Mdlle CHRISTINE NILSSON at her Concert in St James's Hall. The Music by J. W. DAVIDSON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVIDSON. Sung by Mdlle ZARÉ THALBERG at the Floral Hall Concerts (Royal Italian Opera). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SWEET VILLAGE BELLS. Poetry by the late DESMOND RYAN. Music by J. W. DAVIDSON. Sung by Mdlle SOPHIE LOWE at the Monday Popular Concerts. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

ASSIS SUR LA VERTE COLLINE. ("THE WISH.") Paroles et Musique de M. WHITE. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MOMENTS HEUREUX. Etude pour le Violon (sans Accompagnement) ou Piano seul, Composée, et dédiée à son Maître, M. PROSPER SAINTON, par F. J. AMOR (de Salisbury, en Angleterre). Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW EDITIONS.

"LA GAYOTTE DE VESTRIS." Arrangée pour piano... 2s.
"LE RAJAH DE MYSORE." Fantaisie sur l'opéra de O. Lecocq... 4s.

Par ALPHONSE LACOMBE.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TWO SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

"THE TEST." Words by ADA... 4s.
"A GENTLE WORD." Words by S. CHAMPION... 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE HUNTER. Song. The Words by W. C. BRYANT. The Music by E. RHYLOFF. (Sung with great success by Mr G. H. SNAZELLE.) Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

SERENADE MORESQUE.

(FROM THE OPERA "SALVATORE ROSA.")

THE ENGLISH WORDS BY MARIA X. HAYES.

The Music by MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WHEN ALL IS HUSHED. Song. The Words and Music by LILLIE ALBRECHT. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW HARP MUSIC.

ENGLISH MELODIES.

Arranged for the HARP SOLO.

By CHARLES OBERTHUR.

Book 2 contains: "The Beggar Girl"—"It's my delight on a shiny night"—
"Oh dear, what can the matter be?"
Book 3 contains: "A lovely lass to a Friar came"—"Come, lasses and lads"—
"The hunt is up."
Book 4 contains: "The Green Lanes of England"—"The Merry Milkmaids"—
"The College Hornpipe."

Price 5s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street; and STANLEY DUCAS, WEBER & Co., New Bond Street.
Vienna: CARL HASLINGER, qm Tobias.

L A RISPOSTA. Canzoncina. Parole di F. RIZZELLI. Musica di M. WHITE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

LIST OF CHARLES OBERTHÜR'S COMPOSITIONS.

HARP SOLOS.

	s. d.
"SOUVENIR DE LONDRES." Fantaisie et variations brillantes, (Dedicated to Parish-Alvare), Op. 26 ...	6 0
"LA MÉLANCOLIE" de François Prume. Transcription. Op. 29 ...	3 0
"SOUVENIR DE BOULOGNE." Nocturne ...	5 0
"UNA LAGRIMA SULLA TOMBA." Di Parish-Alvare. Elegie. Op. 38 ...	6 0
"TROIS MELODIES RELIGIEUSES." Op. 52 ...	3 0
"THE GIPSY GIRL;" "The Troubadour;" "The Blind Girl." Op. 53 ...	3 0
"THE NUN'S PRAYER." Op. 54 ...	3 0
"LA CASCADE." Etude caractéristique. Op. 57 ...	3 0
"WHEN THE SWALLOWS FLY TOWARDS HOME." Song by Abt. Transcription. Op. 61 ...	2 6
"ON WINGS OF MUSIC." Transcription of Mendelssohn's Song. Op. 63 ...	2 0
"EUGENIA." Etude caractéristique. Op. 92 ...	4 0
"WENN ICH EIN VÖGELIN WAR" {Three characteristic melodies. Dedicated to Her Grace the Duchess of Wellington. Op. 105 ...	3 0
"VIRGO MARIA" {Three characteristic melodies. Dedicated to Her Grace the Duchess of Wellington. Op. 105 ...	3 0
"MARTHA." "Last Rose of Summer." Fantaisie brillante. As performed by the Author before Her Majesty Queen Victoria. Op. 116 ...	6 0
"AU RIVE DE LA MER." Impromptu. Dedicated to Mrs Tollemache. Op. 117 ...	5 0
"LA GRÂCE." Impromptu. Op. 128 ...	3 0
"LA SYLPHIDE." Morceau caractéristique. Op. 150 ...	3 0
"MÉDITATION." A musical sketch. Op. 163 ...	4 0
"THOU ART SO NEAR, AND YET SO FAR." Transcription of Beethoven's popular song. Op. 168 ...	3 0
"HOME, SWEET HOME." Transcription ...	4 0
"A FAIRY LEGEND." Op. 182 ...	4 0
"SOUVENIR DE LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR." Fantaisie facile. Op. 183 ...	3 0
"PARTANT POUR LA SYRIE." French National Song ...	3 0
"SERENADE." Berceuse de Charles Gounod. Transcription ...	3 0
"AU BORD DE LA MER." Nocturne ...	3 0
"AIR RUSSÉ." Transcription. (Dedicated to Marie Baronne de Bocklin.) Op. 207 ...	4 0
"CAVATINA." de l'opéra "Freischütz" ...	3 0
"CLOUDS AND SUNSHINE." A Musical Illustration. Op. 219 ...	5 0

HARP AND PIANO.

"ORFÈRE DE L'OPERA 'NORMA.'" Easy Duet ...	3 0
"REMINISCENCES ITALIENNES." Op. 81 ...	4 6
"MARTHA." Introducing the "Last Rose of Summer." Op. 56 ...	5 0
"CAVATINA." From "Robert le Diable" ...	4 0
"LA PRIÈRE." Nocturne. Op. 62 ...	5 0
"SIX OF MENDELSSOHN'S 'SONGS WITHOUT WORDS.'" Op. 81 ...	10 0
"THREE" Ditto Ditto Op. 96 ...	5 0
"BEETHOVEN'S SONATE PATHÉTIQUE." Op. 86 ...	10 6
"LUCREZIA BORGIA." Grand Duo. (Dedicated to Lady Arbuthnot.) Op. 88 ...	10 0
"LES HUGUENOTS." Grand Duo de Concert. Op. 107 ...	12 0
"HOMMAGE À WEBER." Grand Duo brillante on Weber's "Freischütz." Op. 126 ...	10 0
"DON GIOVANNI." Grand Duo ...	8 0
"DUO BRILLANTE on Verdi's 'Trovatore.'" Op. 143 ...	8 0
"LA FILLE DU REGIMENT." L'Ehho de l'opéra, No. 2. Op. 148 ...	6 0
"CONCERTINO." (Dedicated to the Right Hon. the Countess of Dunraven.) Op. 175 ...	15 0

(This work has been performed by the Author, with the full Orchestral Accompaniments, in all the principal Continental towns with immense success.)

"OBERON." Grand Duo brillante ...	7 6
"SERENADE." Berceuse de Charles Gounod ...	4 6
"MARCHE TURQUE." From Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" ...	4 0

TWO HARPS.

GRAND DUO. On Meyerbeer's "Huguenots." Op. 197 ...	12 0
--	------

* The Duets marked thus (*) have been performed by Madame Arabella Goddard and the Author at concerts in London and on the Continent.

TWO HARPS AND TWO PERFORMERS ON ONE PIANOFORTE.

"EMERALDA." Quartet on popular Irish airs. (American Edition) ...	10 0
---	------

VIOLIN AND HARP.

"SOUVENIR DE SCHWALBACH." Nocturne. Op. 43 ...	5 0
"LA PRIÈRE." Nocturne. Op. 62 ...	4 0
"LE PAUVRE PETIT SAVOYARDE." Romance sans paroles ...	2 0

(The same pieces may be had for Flute, Clarinet, or Violoncello, instead of the Violin part, and also with Piano accompaniment.)

PIANO SOLOS.

"TROIS ÉTUDES MELODIQUES." 1. Le Désir; 2. Romance; 3. L'Invitation ...	2 0
"THREE CHARACTERISTIC MELODIES." 1. "Wenn ich ein Vögelin war;" 2. "Serenade;" 3. "Virgo Maria." Op. 10. (Dedicated to her Grace the Duchess of Wellington) ...	3 0
"A FAIRY TALE." Impromptu. Op. 160 ...	2 0
"SI DOUX ET CHER." Poésie musicale. Op. 197 ...	3 0
"UNE FEUILLE D'ALBUM." Impromptu ...	3 0
"TWO MELODIES." 1. "I saw thee weep;" 2. "Eifenregen" ...	4 0
"BUNTE BLÄTTER." 1. "Traumbild;" 2. "Geisterschwörung;" 3. "Frohsinn." Op. 218. (Dedicated to Madame Arabella Goddard.) (Leipzig Edition) ...	3 0
"TONBILDER." Drei musikalische Skizzen. 1. "Barcarolle;" 2. "Réverie;" 3. "Auf der Parade." (Dedicated to Mrs Henry Wyld.) (Leipzig Edition) ...	3 0
"DREI CLAVIER STÜCKE." 1. "Serenade;" 2. "Melodie masurque;" 3. "Wär ich bei dir." Brunswick-Litolf. ...	3 0
"ESPAGNOLLA." Bolero ...	3 0
"CHANT D'AMOUR." ...	3 0
"ROYAL ACADEMY PICTURES." Musical Illustrations to pictures by W. P. Frith, E.A., J. Pettie, E.A., and A. Maclean ...	4 0
"GISELLA." Impromptu ...	3 0

VOCAL.

(SONGS WITH HARP ACCOMPANIMENT.)

"HER IMAGE." Op. 50. German and English words ...	2 0
"THE MOON IS GLEAMING." German and English words ...	3 0
"SERENADE." "O! were I the moonlight." Op. 177. German and English words ...	4 0
"JE VOUDRAIS ÊTRE." Romance. Op. 190 ...	4 0

SONGS WITH PIANO ACCOMPANIMENT.

"MY LOVE IS LIKE A DAMASK ROSE." Sung by Herr Pischbeck ...	2 6
"ART THOU THINKING OF ME, BELOVED?" ...	2 0
"TROOPER'S SONG." (Reiterated, by Herwegh.) German and English. Op. 48 ...	2 6
"IN THE GOLD IN THE HEART." Op. 49. German and English ...	2 0
"PEERING O'ER THE HILL." Romance from the Operetta, "The Spirit of the Harts" ...	2 0
"O WERE MY LOVE THE FRESH RED ROSE." ...	2 6
"DREI DEUTSCHE LIEDER." (Dedicated to Madame Sonntag.) Op. 72 ...	4 6
"GOLDEN DAYS." "Golden days where are they?" (Adelaide Proctor) ...	3 0
"LOVE LIKE ME." Words by Wellington Guernsey ...	3 0
"WHO TOLD HER? WAS IT THE BIRD?" ("The Discovery.") German and English ...	3 0
"THE ROSE AND THE RING." A Romance. Words by Dr J. F. Waller ...	4 0
"MY PEARL." German and English words ...	2 0

CONCERTED VOCAL PIECES.

"THE KNIGHTS OF THE CROSS." Trio for Soprano, Tenor, and Bass. (As sung at the Author's concert in London by Madame Clara Novello, Mr Beethoven, and Mr Weiss.) Score ...	2 0
German and English Parts ...	2 0
"AVE, MARIA." ("Give ear, O Lord.") Motet for Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Solo and Chorus. (Sung at the Royal Albert Hall. A Cheap Edition of the Chorus Parts is published also at 1d.) ...	1 0
"THE LXXI PSALM." ("Exaudi Deus.") For Solo voices and Chorus, with Harp and Organ Accompaniment. Score ...	5 0
Harp part ...	2 6
Chorus parts ...	each 0 6
"ARABY'S DAUGHTER." ("Lallah Roushik"). Trio for Two Sopranos and Contralto ...	2 6

To be obtained by Order, at all Booksellers, in Town and Country.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer" - - - - -	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata - - - - -	4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE - - - - -	4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ - - - - -	4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA - - - - -	3 0
RINK GALOP - - - - -	4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE - - - - -	4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps - - - - -	4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP - - - - -	3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo" - - - - -	4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES - - - - -	4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES - - - - -	4 0
WEST-END POLKA - - - - -	3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA - - - - -	3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA - - - - -	3 0
BIG BEN POLKA - - - - -	3 0
LILLIAN POLKA - - - - -	3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA - - - - -	3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE - - - - -	4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS - - - - -	4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO - - - - -	3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET - - - - -	4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato) - - - - -	3 0
HARMONIUM - - - - -	3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE - - - - -	3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet - - - - -	4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2S. 6D. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.
"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
	s. d.
OVERTURE - - - - -	3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day" - - - - -	3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away" - - - - -	3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat - - - - -	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill" - - - - -	2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever" - - - - -	4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly" - - - - -	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee" - - - - -	4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me" - - - - -	3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F - - - - -	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron" - - - - -	3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE - - - - -	3 0
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night" - - - - -	3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country" - - - - -	3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met" - - - - -	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F - - - - -	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring" - - - - -	4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you" - - - - -	3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C - - - - -	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine" - - - - -	4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be" - - - - -	3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F - - - - -	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing" - - - - -	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F - - - - -	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand" - - - - -	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	5 0
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	2 6
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET,

A LIST OF THE WORKS OF Sir William Sterndale Bennett, PURCHASED AT THE RECENT SALE OF

MR. LAMBORN COCK,

BY

ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

	s.	d.
First Concerto in D minor	8	0
Andante from the same	3	0
Second Concerto in E flat	9	0
Third Concerto in C minor	8	0
Romanza from the same	3	0
Fourth Concerto in F minor	8	0
Barcarolle from the same	4	0
Preludes and Lessons, composed for the use of Queen's College, London. Complete	10	6
The same work in two parts	each	6 0
Le papillon (No. 5 of above)	3	0
Aria (No. 19 of above)	3	0
L'allegro (No. 23 of above)	3	0
Zephyrus (No. 25 of above)	3	0
Il penseroso (No. 26 of above)	3	0

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

Andante from the First Concerto	4	0
Scherzo from the First Concerto	4	0
Romanza from the Third Concerto	4	0
Barcarolle from the Fourth Concerto	4	0
Three Diversions, Op. 17	6	0
Or, in separate numbers, No. 1, 2s.; No. 2, 2s.; No. 3, 3s.
Twelve Melodies. Arranged by W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT, in two books	each	6 0

ORGAN.

Barcarolle from the Fourth Concerto Arranged by Dr. STEGGALL	4	0
Andante Cantabile from Op. 17. Arranged by Dr. STEGGALL	3	0
Andante Cantabile from Op. 17. Arranged by Dr. GARRETT	3	0

HARMONIUM.

Four Favourite Melodies. Arranged by W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT.. .. .	2	0
--	---	---

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, HAYMARKET.

Mr MAPLESON has the honour to inform the Patrons of, and Subscribers to, HER MAJESTY'S OPERA that the Season will begin on SATURDAY, 28th APRIL, 1877.

THE FOLLOWING ENGAGEMENTS HAVE BEEN ENTERED INTO:—

Mdme CHRISTINE NILSSON,
Mdle CAROLINA SALLA (her first appearance in England),
Mdle MILA RODANI,
Mdle MATHILDE NANDORI (her first appearance in England),
Mdle ELENA VARESI,
Mdle ALWINA VALLERIA, Mdme TREBELL-BETTINI, Mdme TJETJENS.
Signor FANOELLI,
Signor MILLET CABERO (his first appearance in England),

Signor TALBO (his first appearance),
Signor CARRION (his first appearance in England), Signor RINALDINI,
Signor GAYARRE (his first appearance in England),
Signor GRAZZI,
Signor TAMBERLIK (his first appearance at Her Majesty's Opera).
Signor ROTA, Signor DEL PUENTE, Signor GALASSI, Signor MEDINI,
M. GONNET,
Signor BROCCOLINI, Signor BORELLA, M. FAURE.

Director of the Music and Conductor Sir MICHAEL COSTA.

During the Season the following Works will be produced:—

GLUCK's Opera, "ARMIDA" (first time in this country). The Italian translation by Salvatore Marchesi. Armida, Mdle Tietjens (her first appearance in that character).

ROSSINI's "OTELLO." Desdemona, Mdme Christine Nilsson (her first appearance in that character these seven years); Iago, M. Faure; and Otello, Signor Tamberlik.

CHERUBINI's Tragic Opera, "MEDEA." Medea, Mdle Tietjens (her first appearance in that character these seven years).

WAGNER's Opera, "THE FLYING DUTCHMAN." Senta, Mdme Christine Nilsson (her first appearance in that character); and Vanderdecken, M. Faure (his first appearance in that character).

Selections will be made from the subjoined Repertoire:—

"Roberto il Diavolo" Meyerbeer.	"Don Pasquale" Donizetti.	"Faust" Gounod.
"Lucrazia Borgia" Donizetti.	"Rigoletto" Verdi.	"Il Trovatore" Verdi.
"La Traviata" Verdi.	"La Figlia del Reggimento" Donizetti.	"Fidello" Beethoven.
"Il Barbiere di Siviglia" Rossini.	"Catarina" Auber.	"Il Flauto Magico" Mozart.
"Gli Ugonotti" Meyerbeer.	"Talismano" Balfe.	"Semiramide" Rossini.
"Le Nozze di Figaro" Mozart.	"Marta" Flotow.	"Der Freischütz" Weber.
"Lucia di Lammermoor" Donizetti.	"La Favorita" Donizetti.	"Dinorah" Meyerbeer.
"Il Don Giovanni" Mozart.	"Ballo in Maschera" Verdi.	"Lohengrin" Wagner.
"Norma" Bellini.	"La Sonnambula" Bellini.

Maestro al Piano Signor LI CALSI.
First Violin Solo Mons. SAINTON.
Chorus Master Mr SMYTHSON.
Organist Mr WILLING.
The Costumes by Miss ANSELL and Mr COOMBS.

Stage Manager Mr E. STIRLING.
Maitresse de Ballet Mdme KATTI LANNER.

The Furnishing, Upholstery, &c., &c., has been placed entirely in the hands of Messrs MAPLE & CO., of Tottenham Court Road.

The SUBSCRIPTION will consist of THIRTY NIGHTS, and the TERMS will be as follows:

Boxes on the Third Tier for Four Persons	30 Guineas.	Orchestral Stalls each	28 Guineas.
" " Second " " "	60 "	Reserved Dress Circle Seats "	18 "
" " First " " "	100 "	Reserved Amphitheatre Stalls "	12 "
" " Grand " " "	200 "	(First or Second Rows) "
" " Pit " " "	180 "

ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

Application to be made to Mr BAILEY, at the Box Office under the Portico of the Operahouse, Her Majesty's Theatre, which is open daily from Ten to Five; or to Mr MITCHELL, Messrs LACON & OLLIER, Mr BUBB, Messrs CHAPPELL, Bond Street; Mr A. HAYS, Royal Exchange Buildings; Messrs KEITH, PROWSE, & Co., 48, Cheapside; Mr OLLIVIER, Old Bond Street; and Mr S. HAYES, 201, Regent Street.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 14.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), April 7, will be performed
DONIZETTI's Opera, "LA FAVORITA." Mme Scalchi; Mlle Cettine; Signor Gradani; Signor Bagaglio; Signor Rossi; and Signor Gayarre (his first appearance in England). Conductor—Signor VIANESI.
On MONDAY next, April 9, "GUGLIELMO TELL." Mlle Bianchi.
On TUESDAY next, April 10, "LA FAVORITA." Signor Gayarre (his second appearance in England).

On THURSDAY next, April 12 (in lieu of the subscription for the last Tuesday of the Season), "DON PASQUALE." Mlle Marimon (her first appearance this Season).

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.
The Box Office under the portico of the theatre is open from Ten till Five.
Pit tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 6s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT. THIS DAY, at Three o'clock. The Programme will include:—Overture, Eymont (Beethoven); Symphony No. 1, in C minor (Mendelssohn); Suite for the Piano-forte and Orchestra (Raff), first time of performance; Danse des Pirates et des Jeunes Filles (Reber), first time. Vocalists—Mme Ostmann-Goldberg (her first appearance), and Mr Hollins (his first appearance). Solo Pianoforte—Mr Franz Hummel (his first appearance). Conductor—Mr A. MANN. Reserved Numbered Stalls, in Area and Gallery, Half-a-Crown; Area or Gallery Seats (Un-numbered), One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL. Friday, June 22, Public Rehearsal; Monday, June 26, Messiah; Wednesday, June 27, Selection; Friday, June 29, Israel in Egypt. Full particulars will be shortly published.

WAGNER FESTIVAL.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL, MAY 7, 9, 12, 14, 16, 19.

WAGNER, CONDUCTOR.

WILHELMJ, LEADER of ORCHESTRA.

DANNREUTHER, Conductor of Rehearsals.

THE PROGRAMMES will consist of SELECTIONS from the following Operas:—"Tannhäuser," "Lohengrin," "Der Fliegende Holländer," "Rienzi," "Die Meistersinger," "Tristan und Isolde," "Der Ring des Nibelungen." Orchestra of 200 Instrumentalists. Vocalists from the Bayreuth Festival.

PRICES of ADMISSION to each Concert:—Private Boxes, from 5 Guineas; Amphitheatre Stalls, 1 Guinea; Arena Stalls, 15s.; Balcony (first three Rows), 15s.; other Rows, 10s. 6d.; Orchestra, 5s.; Organ Gallery, 5s.; Gallery, 2s. 6d.; which may be had at the Royal Albert Hall; of the usual Agents; and of

HODGE & ESSEX, Directors,

Chief Ticket Office, 6 and 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

Conductors—Dr WYLDE and Mr GANZ.

FIRST CONCERT, SATURDAY next, April 14th, at Three o'clock. The programme will include Rubinstein's Ocean Symphony; Wagner's Prelude to the Mastersinger; Von Niernberg; and Huldigung's March; Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, in A minor; and Raff's Ode au Printemps. Pianist—Mrs Beesley. Vocalist—Mlle Emilia Chionini. Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Area Stalls, 5s.; Balcony Stalls (Front Row), 7s.; Balcony, 3s. Admission, One Shilling. May be obtained at Chappell's; Austin's; and the usual places.

ALEXANDRA MUSICAL BOX (Title Protected and Registered). Ornamental wood case, machine made, with the following 13 popular Melodies and Tunes:—Safe in the Arms of Jesus—Jesus of Nazareth passeth by—Sicilian Mariners' Hymn—Lo, He Comes with Clouds—Home, Sweet Home—The Minstrel Boy—Auld Lang Syne—The Keel Row—My Little Bunch of Roses—Tommy, make room for your Uncle—Fair Shines the Moon to-night—Silver Threads among the Gold—The Union Jack of Old England. Forwarded securely packed and carriage paid to any address on receipt of a Post-office Order, value 3s. 8d., payable at General Post-office to JOHN LEWIS & Co., 122, Wick Road, Hackney, N.E.

RAILWAY BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION,

FOR THE RELIEF OF

Railway Officers and Servants, their Orphans, Children, and Widows, when in Distressed Circumstances.

INSTITUTED MAY, 1858.

PATRONS—

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, K.G.
HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF SUTHERLAND, K.G., HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS, THE DOWAGER MARCHIONESS OF WESTMINSTER, THE RIGHT HON. LORD COLVILLE, THE RIGHT HON. LORD WOLVERTON, JAS. ASHBURY, Esq., M.P., E. BEDFORD, Esq.

President—His Grace the Duke of SUTHERLAND.

Grand Evening Concert.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE CHARITY.

ON WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 1877.

AT THE TOWN HALL, SHOREDITCH.

The Committee have the honour to announce that a GRAND EVENING CONCERT, for the Benefit of the Institution, will be given at the TOWN HALL, Shoreditch, when the following Artists have kindly promised their assistance:—

MADAME PATEY,

Miss ALBERT, Mrs J. CLIPPINGDALE,

Mr BARTON MCGUCKIN, Miss ELSTOFF, Mr WALTER MACFARREN, Mr JOHN CHESHIRE.

ASSISTED BY A SELECT CHOIR OF 60 VOICES.

CONDUCTORS:

MR. J. CLIPPINGDALE.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN.

Doors open at Seven o'clock. Commence at Eight o'clock p.m.

Numbered and Reserved Stalls, 5s.; Numbered and Reserved Area, 2s. 6d.; Balcony, 2s. Admission, One Shilling.

MONDAY NEXT.

LANGHAM HALL, 43, GREAT PORTLAND STREET.—In Aid of Mrs Weldon's Orphanage, MONDAY Evening, April 9, 1877, at Eight p.m. Mr Charles K. Salaman in the Chair. MRS WELDON'S THIRTY-SECOND SOCIAL EVENING. "The Two Paths; or, Conservation and Restoration." Mr Charles Lunn will deliver a Lecture on the above, illustrated by the Children from Mrs Weldon's Orphanage. To be followed by Free Discussion. Reserved seats, 5s.; unreserved, 2s. 6d. Admission, One Shilling.
* This Essay, of which Mr Charles Lunn has presented the Copyright to the Orphanage, will be published, with additional remarks and an account of the Soirée by the MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, 39, Great Marlborough Street, Regent Street, London. Price One Shilling.

THE MUSICAL ARTISTS' SOCIETY.—The NINTH TRIAL of NEW COMPOSITIONS will take place on SATURDAY Evening, April 14, at the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC. ARTHUR O'LEARY, Hon. Sec.

84, New Bond Street.

BALFE'S NEW TRIO in A, Played by MARIE KREBS, JOACHIM, and PIATTI, at the Saturday Popular Concerts, will shortly be published, STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

THE BACH CHOIR.—TWO CONCERTS, at St JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY Evening, April 11, and WEDNESDAY Evening, April 22, at Eight o'clock. At the first Concert, John Sebastian Bach's great Mass, in B minor, will be performed for the third time in England. Artists—Mme Lemmens-Sherrington, Mme Fatey, Mr W. H. Cummings, and Signor Foll. Principal Violin—Herr Straus. Organist—Mr Thomas Pettit. Conductor—Mr OTTO GOLDSCHMIDT. Sofa Stalls and Front Row in Balcony, 10s. 6d.; Reserved, 7s.; Unreserved Seats, 5s.; Admission 3s. Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond Street; Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street; and Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

HERR LEHMEYER begs to announce to his Pupils and Friends that he will give TWO CLASSICAL EVENING CONCERTS, on THURSDAY, 10th of May, and 14th of June, at the LANGHAM HALL, on which occasion he will be assisted by the most eminent Artists of the Season. Tickets, One Guinea; 10s. 6d.; 5s.; to be had of Herr LEHMEYER, 7, Store Street, Bedford Square.

BY SPECIAL DESIRE.

HERR SCHUBERTH begs to announce that he will give a MATINEE MUSICAL, at LONDONDERRY HOUSE, Park Lane (by kind permission of the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry), on SATURDAY, 14th April, 1877, to commence at Three o'clock. Further particulars will be duly announced. Tickets, One Guinea; may be obtained at Messrs D. DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY, BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, HARLEY STREET, W. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. ELEVENTH SEASON, 1877. The Next Meeting for Vocal and Instrumental Practice will take place on WEDNESDAY Evening, April 4th. The SECOND CONCERT (55th since the formation of the Society), at the LANGHAM HALL, on WEDNESDAY Evening, April 11th (R. Schumann's Vocal and Instrumental Compositions, forming the first part of Programme). The Society's Concerts and Soirées afford an excellent opportunity for rising Artists to make their Débuts in public, and Composers to have their works introduced. Full Prospectus and further particulars on application to

H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec.

MOZART AND BEETHOVEN SOCIETY. President—The Marquis of LONDONDERRY. Vice-President—Herr SCHUBERTH. The NEXT SOIRÉE will take place on MAY 1st; and the SIXTH CONCERT at the LANGHAM HALL, on WEDNESDAY Evening, May 16th.

"I NAVIGANTI"

MISS ROBERTSON, Mr JAMES SAUVAGE, and Mr HENRY POPE will sing RANDEGGER's Trio, "I NAVIGANTI" ("THE MARINERS"), at Birkenhead, April 11; and Chester, April 12.

"THE BEACON."

MISS FLORENCE WYDFORD will sing WELLINGTON GURNEY's popular Romance, "THE BEACON," at The Horns, Kennington, next Wednesday Evening.

"THE HUNTER."

MR G. H. SNAZELLE will sing REYLOFF's new Song, "THE HUNTER," at Brixton, April 10; and Greenwich, April 12.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MRS JOHN CHESHIRE will perform ASCHER's Popular Fantasia on the Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at Birmingham, on the 19th April.

BENEDICT'S ANDANTE AND CHOPIN'S POSTHUMOUS MAZURKA.

MRS J. CLIPPINGDALE, Miss ALBERT (pupil of Sir Julius Benedict) Mr WALTER MACFARREN, and Sir JULIUS BENEDICT will play this admired Arrangement by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT of his ANDANTE, and CHOPIN's Posthumous MAZURKA, for four performers on two grand pianofortes, at the Grand Concert for the Benefit of the Railway Benevolent Institute, at the Shoreditch Town Hall, Wednesday, the 25th April.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR BARTON MCGUCKIN will sing (by desire) ASCHER's Popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" and Sir JULIUS BENEDICT's Aria, "NULLA DA TE;" at the Grand Concert, given for the Benefit of the RAILWAY BENEVOLENT FUND, in the Shoreditch Town Hall, April 26th.

"ROCK ME TO SLEEP."

MADAME ELSTOFF will sing BENEDICT's popular Song, "ROCK ME TO SLEEP," at the Grand Concert, given for the Benefit of the Railway Benevolent Institution, on the 26th inst., at the Town Hall, Shoreditch.

MR WELBYE-WALLACE will sing in the Duet, "LOVE AND WAR," with Signor Foll; "ELY MAVOURNEEN" (Benedict); "THE MAID I LOVE" (Hatton); and "ON WINGS OF SONG" (Mendelssohn), at Huddersfield, April 13.

MR FREDERIC WOOD (Primo Tenore), on Tour with the Wilhelmj Concert Party. All Letters to be addressed, care of Messrs HODGE & BAKER, 6 & 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

SIGNOR BEVIGNANI begs to announce his Arrival in Town for the Season.—46, Aconia Road, St John's Wood.

THE MONTHLY MUSICAL RECORD.—The cheapest High-class Paper on Music. Yearly Subscription, 2s. 6d. post-free. Years 1871 to 1876 (vols. 1 to 6) bound, each net 3s. "Intelligible and dispassionate criticisms and reviews, analyses of interesting compositions, and a like determination to discountenance the fictitious either in art or its practice; these are the qualifications of the paper."—Morning Post. AUGNER & Co., 86, Newgate Street, and 31, Regent Street.

MR T. HARPER, having relinquished his post as Principal Trumpet and Cornet at the Royal Italian Opera, can accept ENGAGEMENTS in town and country during the ensuing season.—25, Brecknock Crescent, N.W.

MISS ELENA NORTON, Soprano Vocalist (composer of "The Rose and the Ring"), is open for ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c., &c. Address, care of DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or to Mr D'Oyley Carte, 20, Charing Cross.

MDLLE IDA CORANI having returned to Town, requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Opera or Concert be addressed to her Agent, Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davidson & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME ERNST (Soprano) requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davidson & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR CHARLES ABERCROMBIE (Tenor), of St James's Hall and the Royal Aquarium Concerts, Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St James's, requests that all applications for Terms and ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio, Opera, or Concert, be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY (his Agent and Business Manager), care of Messrs Davidson & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, S.W.

MR WELBYE-WALLACE (of the Crystal Palace and Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester, &c., &c.), having Returned from Abroad, can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Opera, or Oratorio. All Communications to be addressed to his Agent, Mr E. D'OYLEY CARTE, 2a, Craig's Court, Charing Cross, S.W.

MR SHAKESPEARE requests that all Communications concerning ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., be addressed —6, Howick Place, Victoria Street, S.W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MDME MARIE BELVAL begs that all Communications be addressed to her at 7, Cavendish Place, Cavendish Square, W.

MDLLE VICTORIA BUNSEN begs to announce her Arrival in London from her successful Continental Tour. Letters respecting Concerts, Soirées, and Singing Lessons, to be addressed care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

RICHARD WAGNER'S "DER RING DES NIBELUNGEN."

SOLE EDITIONS OF VOCAL SCORES.

"DAS RHEINGOLD," in 4to	net	16s.
"DIE WALKÜRE"	20s.
"SIEGFRIED"	24s.
"GÖTTERDÄMMERUNG"	28s.

Complete Original Text in German, 1 vol., 12mo, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, 5s.
English Translation, by ALFRED FORMAN, in 1 vol., 12mo, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, 5s.

SOLE EDITION OF VOCAL SCORE.

"DIE MEISTERSINGER VON NURNBERG," Oper in 3 akten, in 4to net 23s.
Original Text in German, 12mo, paper, net, 1s.

Catalogues of Richard Wagner's Works, and Arrangements of the same, post-free on application,

PUBLISHED BY

SCHOTT & CO., 159, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

"VOLE MON OISEAU."

PENSÉE FUGITIVE POUR PIANO.

Par IGNACE GIBSONE.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Third Edition.

A FIRST BOOK ON THE

THEORY OF MUSIC.

BY LOUISA GIBSON.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE, MARCHIONESS OF LORNE.

Adopted in the South London Musical Training College, and in various High Schools in London and the Provinces.

LONDON:

WEBBES & CO.; NOVELLO & CO.; WHITTAKER & CO.

AND OF THE AUTHOR, LEATON TERRACE, PLYMOUTH.

Price, boards, 3s.; stiff paper, 2s.; postage, 2d.

THE BRASS BAND CONTEST.

Come, listen to me, and a story I'll sing
About a Band Contest which took place last spring,
And the fun and the frolic the adventure did bring,
A twelvemonth ago now come Easter.
The folks in the neighbouring town sent a bill,
With a note, "If your band wish to play, then please fill
Up the spaces in blank, just to say what you will Concerning this contest at Cleaster."

Now Cleaster's a city some ten miles away,
A junction for Durham, Leeds, Bridlington Bay,
Through which some four hundred trains pass ev'ry day,
Of all sorts—goods, cattle, expresses.
They cultivate music of every kind,
They sing and play pieces, both coarse and refined ;
In short, they're a people in no way behind
The age, as perhaps each now guesses.

Ev'ry year they give prizes of various sums,
Silver cups, plated cornets, gilt bâtons, and drums,
To the finest Brass Band, from wherever it comes,
Provided the playing is decent.
We had often desired to be down on their list,
But somehow or other the chance we had missed ;
They passed us, as if we did never exist,
Though we'd gained some good laurels but recent.

At last we'd received the long looked-for invite ;
We filled up the form, and despatched it all right,
And at once began practising that very night,
So eager we were for the prizes.

We sent to De Lacy for all the best tunes ;
We bought a new tenor sax, two bombardoons,
A slide alto trombone, that shined like full moons,
In the clear winter's sky, as each rises.

So soon as the factory bell told us to cease, [grease,
And we'd washed ourselves clear from the slubber and
We met at the sign of "The Fox and the Geese,"
And sat in a ring round the table.

When Bumbly-foot Harry gave word for to start,
We blew hard at Haydn, Beethoven, Mozart,
Until ev'ry man knew the lot off by heart,
And to play without music was able.

Not to weary you all with a troublesome tale,
Know, we met for improvement each night without fail ;
After practice each man took his one gill of ale,
And straightway went home without staying.
The winter flew past, and the buds 'gan to burst,
And the throats sang blithely by cypice and hurst,
And still we ground on as we had done at first,
To make sure of a good place in playing.

At last the long looked-for day opened up bright,
We'd scarce slept a wink through the whole of the night,
So eager we were to show Cleaster our might,
And to come back all loaded with laurel.

We hired a waggon, with two pair of greys,
Each one took his instrument lapped in red baize ;
Our coats had red trimmings, our caps were red glaze,
Like sealing-wax melted, or coral.

We start. As our neighbours collected to cheer,
And to wish us good luck, Johnny Smart from the rear
Threw a slipper, which hit Bumbly-foot on the ear,
And caused him to fly in a passion.

He soon calmed himself, and we clattered away,
With confidence singing, so happy and gay ;
Ne'er doubting a bit but we should win the day,
We entered the town in good fashion.

We got to the place where the tents were set out,
And when we had time just to look round about,
Sure ne'er in your life did you see such a rout,
Or hear such a comical shindy.

There were brass bands from all the towns twenty miles round,
All blowing at once as they came on the ground,
Each trying the best who could make the most sound,
All the time full discordant and windy.

At last the bell rung, and the judge took his seat,
And the bands were set out in good order complete,
And the humming of voices alone the ears greet,
As each waited the call of the numbers.

The judge knew the bands by the figures they held,
And not by their titles or place where they dwelled ;
As the tickets were drawn from the hat ; then soon quell'd
All the talkers as if sent to slumbers.

Our ticket was "six," we were drawn to play first,
And we set ourselves out in the plan we'd rehearsed,
And till told to begin our impatience we nursed,
With our instruments ready for blowing.

A thundering cheer made us all feel elate,
And angered the other bands who had to wait,
And to guess by our playing what would be their fate,
If they worse than us should be showing.

We first played a Chorus from Handel's Messiah,
And then a strange piece at the judge's desire,
After that the bombardon performed "Obadiah,"
And other new music-hall ditties.

Upon which our first horn made a few observations,
Which the cornet replied to with frantic gyrations,
And the piccolo whistled a few variations,
Like frolicsome gambols of kitties.

How the other bands got on I can't tell you now ;
Enough that the day ended up in a row,
For the pride of the lot had that day low to bow—
We had won the first prize in a canter.

Our foes said our playing was nothing but fudge ;
A mistake had been made, and that they wouldn't budge
Until the award was reversed by the judge,
Whom they made an endeavour to banter.

But a truce was patched up, and the bands stood apart,
To play altogether a piece off by heart,
All waited in silence the signal to start,
As was usually done at conclusion.

But the anger long smothered broke out in a flame ;
And while some bands were silent at loss of their fame,
Some played "Hallelujah," some played "Same old game,"
And all marched away in confusion.

At length to the station with fury they hie,
And each tried his neighbour in noise to outvie,
And from blows came to words, and in words did deny
The right of a triumph to other.

Soon words grew to deeds, and then cornets did clash
Against arms, breasts, and shoulders ; and now with a daah
A mighty bass tuba comes down with a smash
On the head of the drummer's big brother.

The fray was now fierce, and the shout and the cry
Was mixed with wild blasts from defeated ally,
And the blowing off steam from the engine hard by,
And the shriek of the whistle for starting.* [straight,
Cornet bells were pulled off, curly saxhorns stretched
Drum heads were all burst, and cracked many a pate,
When the voice of Joe Jolly cried : "Make for the gate
And I'll set the foemen a-smarting."

Joe's coat was ripped up, and his red cap was gone,
His shirt and his waistcoat to ribbons were torn,
His eyes swell'n and blacken'd, yet darted forth scorn
At our rivals, through whom he was rushing.
"Make the gate, make the gate !" still he cried in his
"And leave me alone with the foe to engage !" [rage,
No words we could say did his fury assuage,
As we fell back, each other near crushing.

How nobly he stood, and how nobly he fought,
I cannot now tell but must leave it to thought,
Suffice it, in safety our waggon we caught,
As the enemy fled from him howling.
The slide of his trombone he lost in the fray ;
He had bought a few pints of gray peas on his way, [spray,
Through the mouthpiece these missiles he'd scattered like
And they stung like small shots used in fowling.

Thus ended the day, and thus opened our fame, [lame,
Though 'twas won at the cost of some bruised and some
All our instruments spoilt, all our clothes torn to shame,
On that memorable Monday last Easter.
The first prize we gained, and that was our pride,
And a salve for our wounds, and a solace beside.
So now you know all that to us did betide
At our first brass band contest at Cleaster.

March 26th, 1877.

B.

* I wonder if Wagner got the idea for some of his scoring from a like adventure.—PRINTEN'S DEVIL.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The Opera season began on Tuesday night with Un Ballo in Maschera. There was a brilliant attendance; and, in accordance with custom, the opera was preceded by the National Anthem, sung by the chorus, and accompanied by the orchestra.

It is now seventeen years since, in the summer of 1861, Mr Mapleson produced Verdi's re-setting of Auber's Gustave III. during a brief season, at the Lyceum Theatre, with Mdle Tietjens, Meadames Gassier and Lemaire, M. Gassier, Signors Giuglini and Delle Sedie (three of whom alone survive) in the cast. About a week later it was brought out by Mr Gye at Covent Garden, with Meadames Penco, Miolan-Carvalho, and Nantier-Didié, Signors Mario, Graziani, Tagliafico, and Zelger in the leading characters. The opera at once became popular, and, while Auber's superior work is utterly neglected, retains its popularity up to this moment. The fact is by no means surprising, inasmuch as Un Ballo in Maschera comprises some of the liveliest and most dramatic music ever composed by the "Minstrel of Busseto," whom Rossini used condescendingly to style, "Le dernier des Romains." Although spun out into four acts, it is never once tedious, Verdi well knowing how to take advantage of a plot so happily conceived and well laid out as that prepared by Eugène Scribe, in 1853, for his renowned compatriot. Verdi has treated the subject more epigrammatically than Auber, and for this reason it is better suited to the requirements of the Italian operatic stage. The vocal and instrumental parts, moreover, abound in melody, melody from the pure Verdi spring, scarcely a phrase of which could be mistaken for any one else's than his—another claim to popular sympathy. Enough, however, has been said on frequent occasions about the music of Un Ballo in Maschera, which, although it has never been able to enlist unanimous opinion in its favour to the same extent as its precursors, Rigoletto (1851), the Trovatore and Traviata (both composed in 1853), may perhaps, as far as original invention goes, be placed side by side with any of the three.

There was no innovation in the distribution of characters on Tuesday. We had again the clever and always serviceable Mdle D'Angeri, as Amelia; Mdle Scalchi, with her rich and ample contralto, as the Sorceress, Ulrica; Mdle Bianchi, as the sprightly Court Page, Oscar; Signor Pavani, a more than acceptable tenor, as times go, as the Duke; Signor Graziani, as Renato (the first Covent Garden Renato, by the way); with Signors Capponi and Scolaro, as Angri and Armando, chief conspirators. This, at the commencement of the season, before the arrival of the "stars," was by no means a cast to be underestimated. On the contrary, it was for the most part in a high degree efficient; and, in fact, the performance generally, under the direction of Signor Viamesi, was remarkably good—well balanced and effective throughout. Mdle D'Angeri not only sings the music assigned to Amelia with uniform facility but acts the part with true intelligence. She was particularly happy in the third act, in which Amelia has a very conspicuous part to play—comprising a long dramatic soliloquy, a love duet with Riccardo (the Duke), and a trio with Riccardo and Renato, where the unsuspecting husband comes to warn his master that conspirators are at hand, bent upon his assassination, little imagining that the lady confided to his care by the Duke is his own wife. Throughout this scene Mdle D'Angeri showed both earnestness and feeling; and, if she could divest herself of certain peculiarities militating against the unfettered command of voice indispensable to the attainment of anything like perfection in the vocal art, her singing would have been no less irreproachable than her acting. One already so far advanced as Mdle D'Angeri should advance still farther; and there is little cause to doubt that she will. Signor Pavani, as the Duke, was precisely what we have already known him. He is intelligent both in a vocal and histrionic sense, and with less restricted means might become thoroughly acceptable. Whatever this gentleman does he does conscientiously and, according to his resources, well; which cannot invariably be said of others more physically gifted. That Signor Graziani was welcomed as an old and deserving favourite may well be credited; and, indeed, his voice has lost none of its mellowness and telling character. For this he has to thank a legitimate method of delivery of which he was early possessor, and which he still retains. In the soliloquy "E sei tu," with its melodious continuation, "O dolcette perdute," he sang with all the studied expression for which he is noted, and, as usual, obtained an "encore." What little there is set down for Ulrica was sung by Mdle Scalchi, as always, admirably. There could not be a more sprightly page than Mdle Bianchi, who was forced to repeat both her airs—"Volta la terrea" (Act 1), in which Oscar describes to Riccardo the gifts of the sorceress, and "Saper vorreste," when the mischievous youth perplexes Renato at the masked ball. Both encores were fully merited—although, together with that accorded to the ingenious and characteristically dramatic quintet, "E scherzo od è follia" (Act 2), in the scene where the Duke goes to consult the fortune-telling Ulrica, they unduly prolonged the performance. Chorus and orchestra rendered what was allotted to them as zealously as could be desired, and a "first night" little if at all open to criticism may be recorded.

The opera on Thursday evening was Fra Diavolo, with Mdle Bianchi as Zerlina, and M. Capoul (his first appearance at Covent Garden) as the Brigand Chief. About this, more next week. Enough at present, that listening to such music was like quaffing a draught of fresh spring water after a prolonged and wasting thirst. Let your Dannreuthers, &c., get rid of Auber—if they can!

MADAME ARABELLA GODDARD.

At Mad. Arabella Goddard's last recital in St James's Hall previous to her departure for the Continent, the audience was not a very large one; but those amateurs of first-class pianoforte playing who were absent missed a genuine treat. Our great English pianist has seldom exhibited the variety of her powers to better advantage. Her programme was full of interest, comprising excerpts from Bach, Handel, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin, Stephen Heller, Rubinstein, and Sterndale Bennett, every piece being a characteristic specimen of the composer whose name it bore. Bach's Fantasia con Fughetta in D, and Handel's Suite de Pièces in D minor, served to show Mad. Goddard's proficiency in the "old school," a school which, represented by such veritable pioneers of art, must be ever new. The fugues in each instance were given with the clearness indispensable to a proper understanding of such music; and this was as apparent in the rapid fugue of Bach as in the graver one of Bach's contemporary. The late Sterndale Bennett's sonata, entitled The Maid of Orleans, intended by our distinguished English composer expressly for Mad. Goddard, to whom it is dedicated, was looked forward to with interest, she never having hitherto essayed it in public, although in her absence it has been played by several artists of note. Her reading and execution of the sonata from beginning to end were such, it may fairly be assumed, as would have satisfied the author himself, whose music, by the way, Mad. Goddard has introduced more frequently in public than any other pianist. Avoiding details, we may point to the third movement, "Joan of Arc in Prison," as an exemplification of adagio playing in every respect faultless. The author has marked this "adagio patetico," and there was all the pathos required, with, what is just as desirable, no touch of exaggeration. The other movements of the sonata were to match. We must pass over the remainder of the programme with the mere remark that the pieces by Mendelssohn were his three very difficult "Posthumous" studies; and that the pre-eminently beautiful Fantasia-sonata in G was selected to represent Schubert. The excerpts from Schumann, Chopin, and Heller were all played con amore by Mad. Goddard; who, moreover, dashed off the group of pieces by Anton Rubinstein as readily as if they presented no difficulties whatever. In the Impromptu, especially, with her small hands and supple fingers, she brought out as much thunder from the keys as the redoubtable Moldavian virtuoso himself.—Graphic.

VIENNA.—The second Philharmonic Concert opened with an overture to Romeo and Juliet, by Tchaikowsky. In spite of the careful execution, the work found here no sympathetic response. In the first place, the pretentious title was an injury to it, justifying great expectations, which remained very much unsatisfied. With such a labyrinth of shrill, glaring sound, without any proper pith and substance, one paints no Shakespeare.—"Leipziger Signale," Jan. 1877.

MR GYE'S PROSPECTUS.

(From the "Times.")

The prospectus issued by Mr Gye to his subscribers and the public, for the 31st season of the Royal Italian Opera, is likely to afford almost unqualified satisfaction. Before referring to general arrangements, it is as well to glance at what yields in importance to no other "item" in a document of the kind—viz., the novelties, or quasi-novelties, intended to enlarge the established repertory, which now comprises no fewer than fifty works at immediate disposal of the management. In the list of projected addenda we find the names of five operas new to the Covent Garden stage, two of which, moreover, are altogether new to this country. The Vêpres Siciliennes, which heads the catalogue, was composed by Verdi, then in the meridian of his career, for the Paris Opera, during the time of the International Exhibition (1855), when it was produced with Sophie Crùvelli in the chief character (Hélène). Four years later, an Italian version was given at Drury Lane Theatre, under the management of Mr E. T. Smith, Mdlle Tietjens taking the part of Hélène (now Elena), and the late Signor Mongini that of the principal tenor (Henri). Awaiting some fresh work from the pen of the composer of Aida, who just now seems inclining rather towards sacred and instrumental than towards purely dramatic music, Mr Gye could hardly have hit upon a wiser expedient than the revival of the Vêpres Siciliennes, to which the fact of Mad. Adelina Patti's assuming the character of the heroine will impart exceptional interest. Next on the list we find another revival, in the shape of an Italian adaptation of Otto Nicolai's comic opera, Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor, which, it may be remembered, was presented in 1864, at Her Majesty's Theatre in the Haymarket, under the direction of Mr Mapleson (Signor Arditi being conductor), with Mdlles Tietjens and Bettelheim, Signor Ginglini, M. Gassier, and M. Junca in the cast. The title then selected for it was Falstaff, under which Balfé, many years previously, had brought out an opera on the same subject, at Her Majesty's Theatre, when Mr Lumley was director and Mr (now Sir Michael) Costa, conductor—the personage of the amorous knight being appropriately represented by "the great Lablache." The Falstaff of Nicolai was received with such marked favour that it is difficult to understand why it should not have remained a permanent feature in the repertory. Mr Gye's prospectus does not mention the distribution of the dramatis personæ; but it might easily be guessed from a glance at his company of artists. In any case this other revival—now re-christened Le Vispe Comari di Windsor—will be looked forward to with as much pleasure as the one just cited. Il Vascillo Fantasma, next on the list, will at once be recognised as another Italian version of Der Fliegende Holländer, first produced in Italian at Drury Lane, in 1870, during the brief directorate of Mr George Wood, with the sensational title of L'Olmdese Dannato, and but recently, it is almost needless to add, under the more familiar one of the Flying Dutchman, by Mr Carl Rosa at the Lyceum—the English version, from the pen of Mr J. P. Jackson. Mr Gye having already presented Lohengrin and Tannhäuser to his patrons, it was doubtless hard to resist completing the triad by the addition of Wagner's other more practicable work. Further than this, the unanimous praise accorded, both by Wagnerites and non-Wagnerites, to the Elsa and Elizabeth of Mdlle Albani, made it almost a sine quâ non that the gentle, fate-struck Senta should swell the catalogue of that accomplished lady's Wagnerian portrayals. The first of the two operas, unknown to the English public, is Santa Chiara, composed, many years since, by the Duke of Saxe Coburg-Gotha, whose earliest work, Castila, was produced at Her Majesty's Theatre as far back as 1852, with Meadames Charton and De la Grange, Signor Calzolari and De Bassini, in the cast—all famous singers of their day. Santa Chiara was first heard at Coburg, in 1854, and, the year following, was performed at the Opéra Impériale, in Paris, under the title of Sainte Claire. The original libretto, by Mad. Birch Pfeiffer, is founded upon a Russian legend. The Czarewitch, Alexis, son of Peter the Great, being impressed with an idea that his wife, the Princess Charlotte, of Austria, is implicated in a conspiracy against him, administers to her, at supper, what he imagines to be a poisoned beverage. This dose, however, is not poison, but merely a narcotic, supplied by a friendly doctor, who has deceived the Czarewitch; and, just as her guilty husband, at the funeral State ceremony, is about to place a coronal of white roses on her brow, the Princess mechanically raises her hand, as if in menace. The appalled Alexis, persuaded that it is an avenging spirit, falls senseless to the ground. When prayers for the departed have been offered up, and the mournful train is out of sight and hearing, the Princess returns to consciousness, the same friendly doctor, the last to remain, conveying her, in disguise, from the Palace to a shelter beyond reach of discovery. The Princess ultimately seeks refuge at Naples, where, by her virtues and good deeds, she obtains so high a reputation for sanctity that the people call her "Santa Chiara." To Naples, moreover, "by a curious coincidence," the Czarewitch, in disgrace with his Imperial sire, also repairs for safety—followed, as it may be surmised, by two officers of the Czar, with orders to arrest him for high treason. Alexis is confronted in the streets of Naples, close by the religious house to which Santa Chiara has given her name. Armed with sword and dagger, the Czarewitch is apparently bent upon some dark purpose. On being summoned to surrender by one of the officers charged with his arrest, he prepares to defend himself; but no sooner are swords crossed than a figure clad in white appears before him, uttering, in sepulchral tones, the words, "Thou must die, Alexis!" Filled with horror at the accents of a voice which he recognises as that of the wife he believes to have murdered, Alexis staggers back, overcome, and stabs himself with his dagger. The sequel need not be told. The foregoing is but a skeleton of the plot, which has other characters and incidents to diversify it. The chief of the officers despatched by the Czar to arrest his son, for instance, is in love with the Princess Charlotte, whom he met at Vienna before she became the wife of the Czarewitch, but to whom he has never spoken. This, of course, supplies what, time out of mind, has been looked upon as super-essential to opera. On the whole, the drama is interesting, and the music, we have reason to believe, superior to that of Castila, its precursor from the same pen. About the Nero of M. Rubinstein, which is to be produced next season at the Théâtre Ventadour, it will be time enough to speak when it appears. That it will speak for itself, trumpet-tongued, may be taken for granted by those acquainted with the antecedents of the composer of the Maccabées. We may add that "three at least" (why not four at once?) of the foregoing operas are to be presented.

A mere glance at Mr Gye's engagements for the season will suffice. The orchestra and chorus are as heretofore, Signors Vianesi and Bevignani again sharing the conductorship between them. The list of prima-donnas comprises the names of Madame Adelina Patti, Mdlles Albani and Zaré Thalberg, besides those of Mdlles Bianchi, Marimon, D'Angeri, and other favourites. Mdlle Scalchi is once more chief contralto; M. Capoul, Signors Nicolini, Marini, and Carpi, &c., are among the tenors; M. Maurel, Signors Graziani and Cotogni head the barytones, Signors Baggiolo, Capponi, and Ciampi the basses. This would already form a highly-efficient company. The names of several artists, as yet unknown to our public, however, are added. Among these we find two tenors—Signors Gayarre and Tamagno—both enjoying a certain Continental repute. The difficulty that prevented Signor Gayarre from coming to London, in consequence, if we may credit protests, of his having pledged himself both to Covent Garden and Drury Lane, would seem to be surmounted; although we again see his name announced in the prospectus just advertised by Mr Mapleson, for the forthcoming season at Her Majesty's Theatre. Signor Tamagno's appearance this year depending upon the results of an appeal to a superior Court, against a verdict recorded in favour of the Covent Garden director, Mr Gye shows good faith in warning subscribers that the advent of that gentleman "cannot" for the present "be relied on." As we know nothing about the new singers announced, we merely cite their names:—Madame Rioca, Mdlles Avigliana, Eva de Synnerberg (her first appearance on the stage), Sonnino, Dotti, De Riti, Emma Sarda, and Signor Caracciolo—six ladies and one gentleman. It is to be hoped that out of the seven some may be found serviceable. Two new dancers are announced—Mdlles Helena and Laura Reuters, besides the clever Mdlle Girod. Mr Carrodus retains his post as principal violin in the orchestra, Mr Betjemann that of leader of the ballet, and Mr Pittman that of organist; the leading "scenic artists" being Messrs Dayes and Caney. In these respects no improvement could be desired. That old public favourite, Signor Tagliafico, by the way, instead of figuring, as for years gone by, as stage vocalist, is now appointed stage manager. We have nothing to add, except that Mr Gye's prospectus invites all the more confidence inasmuch as he announces simply what it is his intention to do, without comment of his own, discreetly leaving that task to the public.

THE OPERA AT BERLIN.

(Correspondence of the "Daily Telegraph.")

The chief novelties of the Berlin musical season have hitherto been operative—Schumann's Genovefa, Goetz's Taming of the Shrew, and an opera called Hernan Cortes, by an author whose name escapes me for the moment. The last-named work is one that would appear to far greater advantage in several essential respects upon the sawdust of a circus than upon the boards of a Royal Opera House. There is much more powder burnt in it than is compatible with the comfort of singers in a strictly unventilated theatre, and the presence of large numbers of horses upon the stage in one of the most important scenes interferes materially with the equanimity of lyrico-dramatic artists; besides which, no obligato accompaniment is less suitable to the human voice than that of hoofs percutating planks out of time. Hernan Cortes is very noisy, smoky, and pretentious; you will never, I think, be troubled with it at Covent Garden or Drury Lane. The Taming of the Shrew is the production of a gentleman whom circumstances over which he has no control will prevent from ever writing another opera; for he has succumbed somewhat prematurely to the common lot of humanity—a circumstance which, I am bound to say, many music-lovers here regard as providential, inasmuch as it affords the public the surest of all guarantees against the future infliction upon it of any more operas from his pen. Der Widerspenstigen Zähmung is, on the whole, the ugliest work I have ever had the misfortune to listen to, not even excepting Tristan und Isolde, which, until I heard Mr Goetz's opera, I would have freely backed, to the extent of my worldly possessions, for sheer uncompromising hideousness, against the monstrosities hitherto perpetrated by any composer, dead or living. In The Shrew, as in Tristan, one staggers once or twice across a desert of cacophonies into a tiny oasis of melodic phrasing—the rest is sand, dry, burning, and bitter. The music of Genovefa is "full of excellent differences," as may well be believed, considering who was its author; nevertheless, the opera, as such, is a failure—at least, so the professional critics are all but unanimous in pronouncing it.

The Berlin novelties have not, as you will probably infer from the foregoing paragraph, been startling successes; but our season has been characterised by at least one conspicuous triumph, or rather series of triumphs, resulting from M. de Hülsen's judicious and timely engagement of Miss Minnie Hauk as prima donna assoluta. This accomplished artist has appeared before the public in several of the most difficult rôles of the Hofoper repertoire, and has manifested a versatility of talent and wealth of physical resources to which the Berlin public, since it mortally offended and irretrievably lost Pauline Lucca, has been altogether unaccustomed. Miss Hauk has electrified Berlin in the very parts for the impersonation of which it, but a few years ago, worshipped Madame Lucca, and in which countless signal failures have been achieved by candidates for popular adoration during the dismal interval between Pauline's indignant rupture of her engagement and Miss Hauk's appearance on the Royal boards—e.g., Zerlina, Cherubino, Gretchen. She has also sung, and sung magnificently, the knotty and ungrateful rôle of Katharine in The Shrew, and has enraptured crowded houses, such as rejoice the managerial heart, by the most dexterous vocalisation imaginable in La Figlia and Le Domino Noir. K.

HAMBURG.—Herr Goldmark's opera, Die Königin von Saba, has proved unusually successful at the Stadttheater.

MEINING.—Wagner paid a short visit here recently as a guest of the reigning Duke. At a Court Concert he conducted a new orchestral work of his own, entitled "The Idyll of Siegfried."

MILAN.—Sig. Piusuti's new opera, Mattia Corvino, has been successfully produced at the Teatro Della Scala. The composer was called on more than fifteen times the first night. The principal parts were confided to Signora De Giulio Borsi, Signori Sani and Villani. The theatre is now closed.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS. (RETROSPECT.)

As the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Beethoven occurred on the 26th of March, a concert was given on Saturday, the 24th, with a programme drawn exclusively from the works of that composer. Its most important feature was a really "grand" performance of the third symphony, which first bore the title "Napoleon Bonaparte," and is now universally known as the "Sinfonica Eroica." There were, besides, the "Choral Fantasia," the pianoforte part in which was undertaken, not for the first time, by Mme Arabella Goddard, and the "Thirty-two variations on an original theme in C minor," played, also not for the first time, by the same lady, as solo. The other purely instrumental piece was the shortest and least pretentious of the four overtures composed for the opera, Leonora. This, for a long period after Beethoven's death, generally accredited as the first of the three in C major, has, of recent years, on the strength of trustworthy evidence, been accepted as really last of the four, any one of which, as expediency suggests, may be chosen for prelude to Fidelio. Hearing it performed so admirably as on the present occasion, under the direction of Mr August Manns, amateurs unacquainted with its three companions might be tempted to ask, "What more could Beethoven have desired as overture to his single opera?" The new place it now occupies by general consent completely shatters the arguments employed by Schumann, in his fanciful theory of "the acorn gradually expanding to an oak," in the successive growth of "Leonora No. 2" out of "Leonora No. 1," and of "Leonora No. 3" (the "oak") out of "Leonora No. 2." Others, however, besides Schumann, have been deceived; and, in fact, it is difficult even now to understand how such a colossus as the "No. 3," which we all know so well, could have preceded, instead of following, an effort of pretensions so comparatively inferior, having recourse, moreover, in some instances, to the same materials, and avowedly intended to illustrate the same subject. Here Beethoven has furnished an enigma not easy to solve. In other respects, the least ambitious of the three Leonora overtures—traditionally so-called, though the name of the opera was changed to Fidelio before the last could have been written—is a masterpiece. An "Elegy" for vocal quartet (Misses Mary Davies and Reimar, Messrs H. Guy and H. Pope), composed in 1811, in memory of the Countess Pasqualati; and selections from Fidelio, including the Quartet in Act I, the Trio in the Dungeon scene, and the grand choral finale, completed a programme worthy the occasion.

BACH'S MATTHEW PASSION AT ST PAUL'S.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—On Tuesday, 27th of March, occurred one of those special musical services which must perforce impress the mind of every earnest and thoughtful attendant at our metropolitan cathedral. The mere effect of the mass of the people, the reflection on the infinite variety of their hopes, fears, joys, sorrows, and thanksgivings, stirs the mind and heart with responsive sympathy. The manner of performance of the music matters not so much as the fact of the music being there. It would, perhaps, be impertinent to inquire who was the originator of these services; but it should be a deep and intense joy to him (or her) to see and hear the expression of happiness which pervades the entire congregation. It is to be hoped that the most austere and rigid adherents of precedent will (in their hearts) admit that such Tuesdays in Holy Week do not militate against but rather redound ad majorem gloriam Dei.

POSEIDON.

MUSIC-HALL SONGS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—May I ask, with reference to a recent law case concerning the copyright of comic songs, how plaintiffs could reasonably allege that they were injured by the act of defendant, in assisting the circulation of said songs. I have no wish to make reference to the legal aspects of the case, but I merely call attention to the common sense view of the subject, and, as a matter of fact, I cannot see that the plaintiffs were in any way compromised in consequence of their songs being made "more vulgar" by increasing their circulation. The allegation is contradictory, "vulgarity" and "popularity," in this instance, being convertible terms. A great deal might be said about popular taste in encouraging such songs; but my object is attained in pointing out the absurdity involved in the case referred to.—Yours, &c., AMATEUR.

THE NEW SYMPHONY BY BRAHMS.

(From the "Times.")

The Crystal Palace concert on Saturday afternoon (the 31st) was interesting in more than one respect. It was especially interesting on account of a performance, creditable alike to Mr Manns and his orchestra, of the "Cambridge Symphony," by Herr Johannes Brahms. This symphony, though not, as has been stated, composed in consideration of the honour proffered to the author on the part of the Cambridge University, was performed on the occasion of the degree of Musical Doctor being conferred upon his friend and worthy fellow-musician, Joseph Joachim, who showed himself sensible of the distinction, and whose actual presence, as conductor and performer, gave éclat to the ceremonial. Indeed, but for the symphony in C minor being made the feature of the evening concert at the Guildhall, nobody would have bestowed a thought upon Herr Brahms. That, considering the few rehearsals Herr Joachim was able to obtain, the new work was well played and received with more or less warmth, our readers have been made aware. Mr Manns was enabled to command more frequent and serious preparation; and, with the exceptional means at his command, it is not surprising that the performance at the Crystal Palace (unlike that of Herr Joachim's Elegiac Overture) should, in detail at least, have surpassed its predecessor. Closer familiarity with the symphony in no way tends to alter, or indeed to modify, our early impressions of its worth. It is assuredly a noble production, in which the dignity of art is upheld from first to last, while the hand of a practised master is everywhere apparent. That Herr Brahms is a highly-cultivated musician, the most highly cultivated, perhaps, in an abstract sense, his favoured country can just now boast, all must admit. But whether he is absolutely a musician of genius, even after this last and most ambitious specimen of his art-work (the "German Requiem" excepted), is not so easy to decide. In the C minor symphony we recognise every quality belonging to profound scholarship; all the earnestness that reveals lofty purpose and a disdain for mere "effect;" glimpses of melody, here and there, too genuine not to be accounted beautiful; much fancy; expression not infrequently as deep as it is apparently spontaneous; a wonderful richness in the combination of instruments, with a view to the production of colour and contrast; a command of orchestral resources, in short, such as only a few musicians have been able to acquire, together with other desirable qualifications towards the realisation of that which should be perfect art. At the same time, Herr Brahms, to judge him by the symphony in C minor—unlike Mendelssohn, of whom Cherubini said, "Il dépense trop de son étoffe"—seems to us to make a great deal too much out of little. As an instance of this, we would point to the first allegro (in C minor), prefaced by a slow introduction, in which two of the chief themes of the succeeding movement are foreshadowed. Here the materials are hardly of sufficient weight to support the lengthy and elaborate development to which they are submitted; so that, in consequence of overwrought treatment, the general impression left by the movement is one of comparative dryness; and this despite passages of real energy and occasional snatches of melody, like bits of sunshine through a prevalent atmosphere of gloom. The second movement, andante sostenuto (in the remote key of E major), is beautiful from first to last; full of tender, graceful melody, constructed upon a very expressive theme, and developed with masterly continuity. Here the episodic matter is everywhere of proportionate interest. The third movement, un poco allegretto e grazioso (A flat), is built upon a quaint theme in five-bar measure, which might well pass for a national melody. This has a second part (in B), which serves as alternativo, or "trio." The whole without being very original, or in other respects remarkable, is extremely pretty, and, together with the andante which precedes it, forms an agreeable resting place between the first and last sections of the work. The finale, believed to have been written years later than the other portions of the symphony, is unquestionably the most striking of the four movements into which it is divided. The exact meaning of the long introduction, in the minor key, with its pizzicato passages, for stringed instruments, we are not as yet able to estimate at its value; but from the very commencement of the allegro, in the major, with its broad and ample theme, first given out by the stringed instruments, attention is arrested, and interest goes on increasing, step by step, to the end. The second theme is happily contrasted with the first; and the various episodic phrases are to match. The movement is long, but its interest never for an instant flags. It may be urged, that we are too often led in the course of this finale to expect climaxes never actually attained; but we seldom miss finding recompense in something new; and when we reach the much desired peroration it answers all expectation by its splendour. The coda, where the time is increased to "più allegro," is glorious, and brings to a triumphant end a great, though unequal, work. We have reminiscences here and there, it is true, of the theme upon which the finale of Beethoven's Choral Symphony is constructed, and of much of the contrapuntal working out of the last movement in Mozart's so-styled "Jupiter;" but the entire structure is not the less substantial and consistent. If enthusiasts for Brahms would not persist in saying—"Here is a finale to be placed side by side with the finale of Beethoven's C minor, and that of Mozart's 'Jupiter,'" the work of Brahms might fairly claim the highest consideration on its own account, as something largely conceived and effectively accomplished. We have hinted that the performance was excellent; and the applause which Mr Manns had to acknowledge at its conclusion showed plainly how the audience were of the same opinion. That the symphony in C minor will hold a permanent place in the Crystal Palace programmes, cannot admit of a doubt. The bright and symmetrically built overture to Cherubini's Faniska opened the concert, which was brought to an end by the pretty ballet airs from M. Gounod's Reine de Saba. The vocalists were Miss Emily Thornton (her first appearance), who, in songs by Mozart and Benedict, made a favourable impression, and Mr Edward Lloyd, who gave Mozart's "Dalla sua pace" and Mr Sullivan's ballad, "Sometimes," in his most finished style. A young pianist, Miss Dora Schirmacher, played Mendelssohn's second concerto (D) with so much spirit and intelligence that she may be said to have made her position at once. Miss Schirmacher has an elastic touch, a legitimate tone, and great fluency of execution. If she continues to study with earnestness she has every chance of winning a prominent position in her art. The audience recalled her with enthusiasm.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

Programme of Organ Recital by Sir Herbert Oakeley.

SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1877.

(a) Chorale, "Christus lag in Todesbanden" ...	} Bach.
(b) Motet, for double choir, "Ich lasse dich nicht" ...
(c) Chorale, "Dir Jesu, Gottes Sohn" ...	} Bach.
Overture, "Amen, dico tibi: hodie mecum eris in Paradiso" ...
"Tu di grazia dei sorgente" ...	} (Passion.)
"Eli! Eli! Iamma Sabathani!" ...
"Perché m'hai derelitto?" ...	} Mozart.
Chorus, "Dies iræ, Dies illa" ...
Solo and Quartet, "Tuba mirum spargens sonum" ...	} (Requiem.)
Chorus, "Rex tremendæ majestatis" ...
Quartet and Chorus, "Blest are the departed" (Die letzten Dinge) ...	} Spohr.
Armonia Religiosa, "Silver Trumpets" ...
Quartet and Chorus, "I waited for the Lord" ...	} Mendelssohn.
Choruses, "Worthy is the Lamb" and "Amen" (Messiah) ...
	Handel.

LEIPSIC.—The twenty-first Gewandhaus Concert, last of the season, took place on the 22nd March.

BRUSSELS.—Aimé Maillart's Lara, first produced at the Paris Opéra-Comique, the 21st March, 1864, has been performed at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, after being allowed to remain unrepresented a considerable period. With the exception of Kalid, by Mad. Galli-Marie, the other parts are not well rendered.

DEATHS.

On March 30th (Good Friday), at 5, St George's Place, Brighton, CHARLES NEATE, Esq., aged 93.

On April 1, at 27, Portland Road, Netting Hill, MARY ANN, the beloved wife of CHARLES H. PURDAY, in her 79th year.

With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive four pages extra, and again, from TIME TO TIME, as expedient.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1877.

Differences of Opinion.

Eyell

DR SPIDER.—Come along. Let's take tickets at the C. P.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—I don't want to go to the C. P. There's Raff.

DR SPIDER.—Raff me no Raff. It's Rubinstein. Come!

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Rubinstein? That's worse. I won't go.

DR SPIDER.—You must.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—When?

DR SPIDER.—Saturday, April 21st.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—What do they give?

DR SPIDER.—All Rubinstein.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Blow me if I go.

DR SPIDER.—There's the Ocean symphony, &c.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—I don't like the Ocean symphony. I heard it at the Hanover Square Rooms.

DR SPIDER.—Ah! but the Crystal Palace is different.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Do they give it in the Aquarium?

DR SPIDER.—No. In the concert-room.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Then I won't go.

DR SPIDER.—Why?

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Because it's out of place away from the Aquarium. It's Aquarium music; and without Aquarius looking on, it's nothing. Besides, Aquarius rises in January, and sets in February, and you speak of April. Moreover, Rubinstein don't like Wagner. He says, that is not his creed. Wagner will fail.

DR SPIDER.—I agree with Rubinstein, and don't like Wagner.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—I like Wagner, and don't agree with Rubinstein.

DR SPIDER.—You must come all the same, and take tickets for the Crystal Palace, or G. G. will be angry.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Bother G. G.; he brings in Tschaikowsky, Grieg, Raff, and Co.—friends of Academus. I detest them all. Give me a quartet by Ignace Pleyel, if I can't get Wagner. There's no medium. Pleyel and Wagner say what they mean. The others don't. Meaning nothing, they have nothing to say.

DR SPIDER.—Well, if you won't go to the Crystal Palace on Saturday, April 21, you shall come to the Bee and Bottle, where an amateur orchestra is to play Mazeppa.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Ah! Impossible! I will go to "Ocean."

DR SPIDER.—Come then, or we shall have back places.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Further off the better. Can't I get a place where I shall be deaf?

DR SPIDER.—Nonsense. Rubinstein plays a concerto of his own, and conducts the rest of the performance.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—And August Manns?

DR SPIDER.—Conducts the concerto.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—O Gemini! I'll go to the Bee and Bottle.

DR SPIDER.—Not if I know it. Besides, you will hear "higher development."

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Wrong notes?

DR SPIDER.—Yes; but dealt with a giant's fist.

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—Parce mihi!

DR SPIDER.—Come! Where's your purse?

SIR FRANCIS FLY.—I've left it in my studio.

DR SPIDER.—Let's go and fetch it. (Drags off Sir Francis Fly.)

At the Bee and Bottle.

SIR FLAMBOROUGH HEAD (solus).—I wonder if Spider and Fly take tickets for the Rubinstein Concert? This Ocean is a deep work. It takes no end of line to fathom. (Tries to fathom.)

Enter SIR CAPEER O'CORBY and MR LAVENDER PITT.

Eyell

SIR CAPEER O'CORBY.—Bedad! Sir Flamborough is in a reverie!

MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! yes.
 SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Will he thread on me coat tails?
 MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! no.
 SIR FLAMBOROUGH HEAD (enthusiastically).—Dear boys, you come to Rubinstein on Saturday fortnight?
 MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw!
 SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Be the hand of me body! Not a bit of it.
 SIR FLAMBOROUGH HEAD.—Why?
 MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! He don't like Ocean.
 SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Bedad? Not I. If it were mixed with potheen—
 MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw!
 SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Aurora was daughter of Hyperion, and—
 MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw! certainly.
 SIR FLAMBOROUGH HEAD.—What's that to do with Rubinstein?
 SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Arrah! Ask Dr Hueffer.
 MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw!

Great noise in smoke-room.

Enter MUMBO and JUMBO.

MUMBO.—O! 'em go play Mazeppa.
 JUMBO.—'Em go play Mazeppa in smokey room.
 MR LAVENDER PITT.—Aw!
 SIR CAPER O'CORBY.—Bigott!
 SIR FLAMBOROUGH HEAD.—My stars! this is unexpected.

Enter DR SPIDER and SIR FRANCIS FLY.

DR SPIDER and SIR FRANCIS FLY.—What's the row?
 SIR FLAMBOROUGH HEAD.—They are about, much to my surprise—

MUMBO and JUMBO.—'Em go play Mazeppa.
 DR SPIDER and SIR FRANCIS FLY (in agony).—Mazeppa?
 SIR FLAMBOROUGH HEAD (anxious to be off).—Mazeppa!
 MUMBO and JUMBO.—'Em go play— [Exeunt omnes.]

Enter MAN WITH UMBRELLA.

MAN WITH UMBRELLA.—So—no one here. They're all mad about Mazeppa. (Great noise in smoke-room—first chord of 'Mazeppa.') So—they've begun. I'll leave my umbrella. (Puts his umbrella in a corner, and takes Sir Flamborough Head's.) So—this is better. This is the fourth I've picked up since the Mazeppa meetings at the Bee and Bottle. (Tremendous noise in smoke-room.) Aye, Mazeppa goes on. Long live Mazeppa! I hear the voice of Sir Caper. Aye, I must get me another old 'un for exchange. So—I'll ring for waiter (ring), and slope before he comes.

[Exit with SIR FLAMBOROUGH'S umbrella and MR LAVENDER PITT'S parasol. [Schluss folgt.]

THE following appears in an Italian paper of tolerably wide circulation:—

"From Sig. Giovanni Paloschi's Annuario Musicale we learn that the month of April is remarkable for the birth of Niccolò Zingarelli, Naples, 1752; Ludwig Spohr, Brunswick, 1784; Giuseppe Tartini, Pirano, 1692; Carlo Coccia, Naples, 1782; Theodor Döhler, Naples, 1814; Father Giambattista Martini, Bologna, 1706; Friedrich von Flotow, Teutendorf, 1812; Emile Prudent, Angoulême, 1817; Vincenzo Fioravanti, Rome, 1799; Claudio Merulo, Correggio, 1533; Alessandro Rolla, Pavia, 1757; Giovanni Battista Rubini, Romano, 1795; Félicien David, Cadenet, 1810; and for the death of Gaetano Donizetti, Bergamo, 1848; Charles de Bériot, Brussels, 1870; Carlo Coccia, Novara, 1873; George Frederic Handel, London, 1759; Sigismund Thalberg, Naples, 1871; Tommaso Traetta, Venice, 1799; Giacomo Antonio Perti, Bologna, 1756; Johann Baptist Cramer, Kensington, 1858; Henri M. Berton, Paris, 1844; Henry Bishop, London, 1855; and Giuditta Pasta, Lake of Como, 1865."

Of course, Sig. Giovanni Paloschi (whoever he may be) is ignorant that an English musician who, with three or four exceptions, possessed a genius more remarkable than any named in the foregoing catalogue, was also born in April. We refer to William Sterndale Bennett, born on April 13th, who surely ought not to have been forgotten in such a record. True, he was only an Englishman—a Yorkshireman—which with Italian, French, and German bibliographers does not count.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

THE LATE MR OXENFORD.—A number of the friends of the late Mr Oxenford met recently, in a private room at the Queen's Theatre, to consult as to the best means of perpetuating their respect for his memory. It appears probable that the memorial will take the form of a bust or statue, to be placed in the vestibule of Drury Lane Theatre. The movement was started by Mr F. A. Marshall, author of False Shame, and the committee consist of Mr Bancroft, Mr Davison, Mr Elgood, Mr Gruneisen, Mr James, Mr Hare, Mr Hawkins, Mr Irving, Mr A. B. Kelly, Mr Murphy, Mr Thorn, Mr Godfrey Turner, and Mr Edmund Yates.

M. GAYARRE, the ubiquitous tenor, makes his first appearance this evening, at the Royal Italian Opera, as Fernando (or Ferdinando—les deux se disent), in La Favorita.

THE French papers announce the speedy arrival of Mdme Arabella Goddard in Paris. Her public performances are to be under the auspices of the eminent house of Pleyel-Wolff. Her first concert is to be with orchestra.

GOOD NEWS.—Miss Minnie Hauk, the darling of the Berlin "Hofoper," is expected in London next month. This accomplished dramatic vocalist has not been heard in London since, as a very young girl, she appeared, under Mr Mapleson's direction, at Her Majesty's Theatre.

MR AUGUSTUS HARRIS, son of the well-remembered Augustus Magnus—né Augustus Maximus—for so many years the right-hand minister of Mr Gye, made his début at the Criterion Theatre last Saturday night, in the sparkling new three-act piece by Mr J. Albery, and achieved a success which promises well for his future career on the dramatic boards. He acted, indeed, with all the ease and nonchalance of an experienced "stager."

SOUTH IN THE NORTH.—We gladly welcome Mr South to the North. His opera company is a capital one, as any one who has visited the Prince's, Bradford, during the present week will testify. He puts the operas on the stage so well that he eminently deserves the title of "the sunny South." His great card is Miss Alice May. She is May both in name and nature. May songsters do not sing more sweetly. May flowers do not look more bright. In fact, it is always May with her and with those around her, and we shall be glad to meet her again, either in May, June, July, or any other month.—The Yorkshireman.

THE French Government budget for the new financial year contains provision for the following subsidies to the State theatres:—The Opera, 800,000 francs; Français, 240,000 francs; Opéra-Comique, 240,000 francs; Lyrique, 200,000 francs; and the Odéon, 60,000 francs. The reports respecting these national places of entertainment represent that they are fulfilling their functions satisfactorily.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

MR HORTON C. ALLISON, the pianist and composer who won the first prize at the Leipsic Conservatoire, and who recently had conferred upon him the degree of Bachelor in Music at the University of Cambridge, gave a pianoforte recital at the Bow and Bromley Institute on Saturday week, respecting which the Tower Hamlets Independent writes: "A new variation to the usual weekly organ recital took place in the form of a pianoforte recital by Mr Horton C. Allison, a most talented pianist. Two bright and sparkling compositions of his own, viz., Canon and Fugue and Tarantella in A minor, were warmly received and loudly applauded. Amongst other pieces of the programme were Handel's 'Harmonious Blacksmith,' selections from Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Macfarren, and others. A Hungarian Dance by Brahms was well received, and the recital concluded with a valise by Chopin, and a selection from the airs in Gounod's opera Faust."

PRINCESS'S CONCERT-ROOM.—The zither may never be as popular an instrument in this country as it is among the people of the Austrian provinces, but that is no reason why its peculiar charm should be altogether lost to us. Certain effects of a wonderfully sensitive and piquant character belong to it, and can be produced in no other way. Those, therefore, who come under the influence of its attraction are fortunate in having at hand such professors as Herr and Mme Schulz, by whom a concert was given, chiefly for the purpose of displaying the instrument. The gentleman, a master of its resources, was heard in a solo on themes from Lucia, as well as in several concerted pieces, all of which met with a warm reception. But the chief feature was a quartet founded upon Der Freischütz, played by the concert-givers, with the assistance of Mrs Edwin Cutler and Mr Warrens. Here the distinctive features of the zither were exhibited in pleasing combination, and an encore was a matter of course. The concert was otherwise interesting for the harmonious solos of Mr Hoyte, one of our ablest organists, the pianoforte solos of Mrs Burmester and Mr Wilford, and the performance of Brahms' Liedeslieder Walzer, in which the pianists just named were associated with Mme Schulz, Miss Vivian, Herr Trevis, and Herr Volk.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT'S fourth Matinée-Musicale took place in Lowndes Square, on Saturday, March 24. A doubt had been entertained as to the possibility of so young an artist achieving successfully the varied compositions announced; but the result proved how admirably Miss Albrecht had mastered the difficulties she had undertaken. Mendelssohn's Fugue and Chorale in E minor (her first solo) were played throughout with the precision and emphasis required. Chopin's study in "Sixths" (No 20), deserves special mention for the faultless manner in which it was rendered. The same composer's Scherzo in B flat minor and Liszt's "Rigoletto," being very different styles of composition, displayed the delicacy of touch and brilliancy of execution Miss Albrecht so eminently possesses. A study in E sharp (Qy. flat?) major, by Thalberg, could hardly have been better played. A brilliant arrangement by herself of "The Blue Bells of Scotland" concluded the most successful concert Miss Albrecht has yet given. We must add that a sonata by Röntgen, for piano and violoncello, was well rendered by Miss Albrecht and Herr Schubert. Mme Louise Gage, who possesses a very fine voice of extensive range, sang well, though somewhat nervously, "E tu non sai," "Di tanti palpiti," "The Lost Chord," and a new song by Miss Lillie Albrecht (recalled). Mme Enriquez, whose pure contralto voice and admirable method stand her in such excellent service, gained fresh laurels for the expressive manner in which she gave "Lascia ch'io pianga," "He thinks I do not love him," and "Sad heart," (Miss Gabriel), re-called. Signor Gustave Garcia was in capital "form." His voice was heard to advantage in "Hai gia vinta," "Non più andrai," and the "Vagabond." Mr Ch. E. Stephens conducted in his usual able manner. The concert was a marked success, and the audience filled the spacious saloons. Miss Lillie Albrecht played all her solos without book.—A. B.

MR AND MRS JOHN CHESHIRE gave a concert on Tuesday evening at the Langham Hall. Herr Liebe (violinist) played two pieces, accompanied by Mr Ganz, and was greatly applauded. Mrs J. Cheshire played a variety of pianoforte compositions, "popular" and "classical." After Liszt's fantasia on airs from Rigoletto, she was warmly applauded.

Mrs Cheshire also accompanied her husband in Parish Alvars' Concerto for the harp, and joined Mrs Clippingdale (of the Royal Academy of Music), Miss Madeline Cronin, and Mr Ganz in Sir Julius Benedict's arrangement, for four performers on two pianofortes, of one of Chopin's posthumous mazurkas, preceded by a charming Andante movement of his own composition. Mr John Cheshire played several pieces, including a romanza and rondo from a concerto by Parish Alvars, some of his own compositions, and, with his pupil, Miss Zoe Lowe, Mr John Thomas's duet for two harps, "Scenes of Childhood," obtaining for the latter a hearty re-call. Mr Cheshire also accompanied Mme Liebhart in "The harp that once through Tara's halls." Mme Auguste Roche sang Mr Cheshire's new song, "The wither'd violet," and with Mr W. H. Pearson, a duet, "We're bound, my lads, nine leagues away," from the same composer's cantata, The Buccaneers. Mme Alida Gassier gave Signor Mariani's bolero, "An Arab flower," and Mme Liebhart, Mr Ganz's "Love hailed a little maid," which the audience compelled her to repeat. Miss Helen Arnim was also called upon to repeat Mr Francis Berger's "Thou still art left to me." Miss Jessie Royd sang, with Signor Caravoglia, "Quanti amori," and the latter, a new song by D. H. Macfarlane, "Peace or War" (encored). Mr Alfred Baylis gave Mr Roedel's "Sing again" with taste and expression, and Mr W. Clifford, Gounod's "Maid of Athens," accompanied on the harp by Mr Cheshire. Signor Gustave Garcia in "Hai gia vinta" (Mozart), and Mr W. Wallis Moylan, in Mozart's "Qui sdegno" earned good opinions. Mr J. H. Pearson asked the question "Tell me, Mary, how to woo thee" so naturally, that the audience called him back to the platform, to enquire, no doubt, whether he had received an answer. The "conductors" were Messrs Ganz, W. Layland, Alfred Gilbert, Parry Cole, and Francesco Berger.

PROVINCIAL.

BRADFORD.—That Miss Alice May should please the people of Bradford in opera-bouffe is not strange, but that she should be received as she was by them on Good Friday in sacred music is another proof of this talented lady's versatility. Miss May sang "Angels, ever bright and fair," which she was compelled to repeat. She also sang "I know that my Redeemer liveth" in true Handelian style. The Observer praises her for singing "with much tenderness and feeling," also for "not overloading the sacred airs with ornaments, as many do." The concert did credit to the company, which opened in Nottingham on Easter Monday.

CAMBRIDGE.—The following was the programme at the last Wednesday popular concert of the Cambridge University Musical Society (March 7):—Quintet for pianoforte and strings in A minor, Op. 107 (Raff), Messrs C. V. Stanford, C. F. A. Williams, W. H. Blakesley, H. M. Bower, and F. O. Bower; Song, "An die Musik" (Schubert), Mr G. F. Cobb; Pianoforte Duets, Todtentanz (Dance of Death), and 2nd Humoresque in Waltz form, Op. 181 (Raff); Andante and Scherzo, from a Serenade, for four hands (C. V. Stanford), Messrs J. A. Fuller-Maitland and C. V. Stanford; Song, "Du bist wie eine Blume" (Rubinstein), Mr G. F. Cobb; Sonata for two Violins and Pianoforte, No. 1 in C major (Bach), Messrs C. F. A. Williams, W. H. Blakesley, and C. V. Stanford.

LEICESTER.—The New Choral Society's last concert took place in the Temperance Hall. The first part consisted of Mme Sainton-Dolby's sacred cantata, The Legend of St Dorothea, conducted by M. Sainton. Performed for the first time in Leicester, it was done full justice to by the society, and the principal singers—Miss Julia Wigan, Miss Cummings, Mr E. Lloyd, and Mr Thurley Beale. Miss Wigan displayed to advantage an agreeable, expressive, and powerful soprano voice; Miss Cummings made a very favourable impression; Mr Lloyd added another to his numerous successes here, and won an enthusiastic encore for "Sweet Saint! forgive me now;" and Mr Thurley Beale gave general satisfaction. The unaccompanied trio, "Forsake me not, O God," by Miss Wigan, Mr Lloyd, and Mr Beale, a beautiful specimen of vocal writing, was finely sung, and much applauded; and the "Triumphal March," by the band, was spiritedly played, and warmly received. The second part of the programme was Beethoven's Engedi (Mount of Olives), also performed here for the first time, under Mr C. Hancock, Mus. Bac., conductor of the society. Miss Wigan, in the trying music of the Prophetess,

* This semi-humorous specimen of programme-music consists of an introduction and a continuous series of twelve short waltzes, each named after some age or state of man, and each concluded by the "Death Motif," which is first heard in the introduction. The order is as follows: the "Child," the "Youth," the "Man," the "Greybeard," the "Warrior," the "Shepherd," the "Coquette," the "Prude," the "Rich," the "Poor," the "Cripple," and the "Pedant."

exhibited the same excellent qualities as in Mme Sainton's cantata; Mr Lloyd conquered the difficulties of the arduous part of David most successfully; and Mr Beale was highly acceptable in the music of Abishai. The varied and characteristic choruses were sung in a highly creditable manner. The audience was numerous.

LIVERPOOL.—The Philharmonic Society, under Sir Julius Benedict, gave their last concert for the season on Tuesday evening. Among the principal works were Sir Sterndale Bennett's overture, The Wood Nymphs; Rietz's Third Symphony; a violin concerto by Max Bruch; Sir Julius Benedict's overture, The Enchanted Forest; and his Romance for violin, harp, and piano. "We were more than ever struck"—says the Daily Post—"by the grace and delicacy of feeling which characterises Sterndale Bennett's writings on hearing his overture. There is no straining after effect; not only are the subjects spontaneous, but their treatment seems in all cases to be that most happily in accord with their sentiment, the best fitted to give them the most ample expression. The execution was worthy of the work, each department of the orchestra apparently being bent on contributing to its satisfactory interpretation. The violin concerto afforded that finished artist, Herr Straus, an opportunity of appearing to great advantage. Sir Julius Benedict's overture is highly romantic in idea and very musicianly in treatment. The introduction (which re-appears at the close) is powerfully scored, and is as mysterious and weird as the theme suggests; whilst the second movement, with its graceful melody, is a very charming contrast to the gloomy episodes in the forest ride. This was the best played work of the evening. The Romance for violin, harp, and piano, by Sir Julius Benedict, is, like everything emanating from him, melodious and graceful. The subjects generally are divided between the violin and pianoforte; whilst the latter, as also the harp, are employed in characteristic passages of accompaniment. Herr Straus, Mr Streather, and Sir Julius Benedict, the executants, left nothing to desire. Mlle Tietjens and Mr Barton McGuckin were the vocalists. The lady was in splendid voice, and the gentleman made a highly favourable impression. Sir Julius Benedict not only conducted with great care and spirit, but in the pianoforte accompaniments to some of the songs displayed the taste and delicacy which are his distinguishing characteristics as a pianist."

DUNDEE.—Mr Kennedy and his talented family gave the first of two entertainments before an audience that quite filled the body of the Kinnaird Hall. Such an attendance at this season, when music has been making extraordinary demands in Dundee for public support, and on a night the most inclement this month has brought us, affords the most convincing proof possible of the enduring hold which these national artists have, through their entertainments, on the public taste of this town. Not that such proof was needed, for it is long since Mr Kennedy, with his two daughters—the one by his singing, the others by their playing—took possession of the Scottish hearts of this community; only it shows how familiarity with what is good and true in the exposition of national life and character as set forth in these entertainments, and as now diversified by the talents of his family in their exquisite part singing, has served but to deepen the public interest. Yesterday we referred to the dramatic character of Mr Kennedy's entertainments, and now we hear of Professor Blackie saying the other day that whatever is not dramatic is stupid. There are many people, however, who are quite pleased with music when it falls on the ears as a succession of sweet sounds. In the matter of Scotch songs we know of nothing more insipid or stupid than that class of art which confines their varying sentiment to the narrow limits of tune and time. It is just here that Mr Kennedy stands the unrivalled Scottish artist. With him all the mechanism, so to speak, of the music is subservient to the one great purpose of disclosing the heart of a song. He brings his subjects forward as living realities. Character and situation are truthfully portrayed, and the consequence is that he engages the intellect as well as the emotions of his audience. And the talents of his family seem bent on the same errand. Their solo and part singing partake of the same dramatic spirit. Hence, to our mind, the exquisite pleasure and the educational virtue found in these entertainments. Comparing one man of renown with another in the same line of art, we found the late Wilson charming his audiences with his polished style of vocalising. His Scotch songs came forth externally dressed to perfection. You admired them as you would fair ladies at a fashionable assembly, without knowing what they were in their inmost beings. With Kennedy you soon forget his excellence of voice and his perfect management of the art of singing, and look on men and women at home in their everyday garb, and feel they are human beings, with hopes and fears, feelings and virtues, like others, and in them see yourself. We cannot notice the details of this entertainment, for each individual effort had its own special interest, to speak of which would entail special notice. But, seeing that the audience showed its very marked approbation of the glee singing, particularly of "Blow, gentle gales," we must record the fact and endorse its verdict. It was, indeed, the perfection of concerted singing, and richly deserved the hearty re-demand elicited from all parts of the hall.—Dundee Advertiser.

YOUTHFUL HEROISM.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

Holiday-making is apt to be saddened by the frequent occurrence of fatal accidents. Excursion trains break down, or run into each other. Ferryboats may capsize, and, above all, amateur oarsmen are apt to come to grief in their river excursions. On Saturday, for example, a shocking boat disaster took place at Teddington Weir. Two young gentlemen, whilst rowing just above the lock, got caught by the swift rush of the ebb tide then dashing over the weir. They were swept through the weir paddles, their boat was smashed, and they themselves were carried away by the current. The painful occurrence, however, furnished the opportunity of a singular display of boyish pluck and heroism. When the body of one of the young men was seen floating down stream, a lad about twelve or fourteen years of age, the son of Mr Chappell, of Weirbank Road, happened to be playing on the lawn of his father's house, which abuts on the river. Catching a glimpse of the drowning man he boldly plunged into the water to save him. The youth must have been a fearless swimmer to successfully buffet the strong current. This boy and a visitor at the father's house, a Mr Wilkinson, made an unavailing attempt to rescue the drowning man, and only managed to escape his fate with the utmost difficulty. Still, though their efforts were not rewarded with success, we cannot refrain from complimenting them on their spontaneous display of generous daring. A boy who at the age of twelve will leap into a surly ebb-tide of the Thames at a moment's notice, and risk his own life to save that of a fellow-creature, has in him the making of a man of mettle. Bravery never goes out of fashion in England, and a lad like this will not seek for honour in vain when in after-life he grows old enough to tread the stern path of manhood's graver duties. It augurs well for the strength of our national fibre that we can find heroes amongst our very children. If such gallant deeds be done by our boys, what may we not expect from them when, as men, our country may need them "to seek the bubble reputation even at the cannon's mouth?"

Cable Canon.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—It has come to my knowledge that a German musician, calling himself Alfred Weber, and being a clarinet player, is going about with an open letter supposed to be written and signed by myself to various distinguished members of the musical profession, enticing them to subscribe money in order that (as he says) he may have sufficient funds to enable him to return to Germany, and that Herr Joachim, Signor Piatti, and other artists, have already been duped, and have given him money on the strength of this letter. I, therefore, as a means of stopping this gentleman from carrying on his pursuit, beg to address these lines to the members of the musical profession, through your powerful medium, and most emphatically to say that I have never given a letter to such a person, nor do I know him. As I am a governor and subscriber to the German Society of Benevolence and the Society of Foreigners in Distress, I have always given the proper printed letters of recommendation of these societies (after due inquiries) to poor foreign musicians, and these excellent charities have either paid for them the passage money to return to their native country, or otherwise assisted them, after their cases have been properly investigated.—I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

WILHELM GANZ.

126, Harley Street, March 29th, 1877.

ALTENBURG.—The opera of Galilei has been successfully performed here. The composer, a personage of high rank, who has adopted the pseudonym of Herr G. Dahlwitz, was present incognito at the last rehearsal and the first performance.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

The concert given by Messrs Nurdin & Peacock, of Wells Street, Oxford Street, for the benefit of the Cheesemongers' Benevolent Institution, was one of those very munificent gifts offered to Charity, through her handmaid Music, which link philanthropy with art. Projected and carried out on the basis that the Cheesemongers' Institution was to benefit by the entire receipts, and that Messrs Nurdin & Peacock pay all expenses, the promoters of other charitable concerts have had an example set them which it is hoped will meet with imitation. With a generosity that cannot be too highly commended, Messrs Nurdin & Peacock have also thrown a veil over their expenditure; but the results of their undertaking cannot be disguised, for the charity is likely to benefit to the extent of upwards of a thousand pounds. The causes of the entrepreneurs' success were numerous, for not only was a good day selected for an appeal to the friends of an excellent institution, viz., a general holiday, but the services of those popular artists, Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdme Patey, Signor Foli, and others of note were secured, whilst the direction of the music was entrusted to that experienced conductor and accompanist, Mr Wilhelm Ganz, with whom was associated the always efficient Mr Pittman. These attractions were heightened by the announcement that Mdle Chiomi, who has achieved great fame in Italy, would make her début in London on the occasion. An entertainment so varied and excellent could not fail to command the required number of guests. Mdle Chiomi, English by birth, and artist by instinct as well as by culture, sang with all the fluency of an Italian and the charm of her own nationality, besides displaying a voice of unusual sweetness, and yet so telling that every sound was effective in the great hall. Messrs Nurdin & Peacock's undertaking was crowned with success, and a noble institution and a gifted artist were brought prominently before the public.—Echo.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our Correspondent.)

I have still something to tell you about music in Manchester, though the winding up of the musical year is at hand. Our season, of course, cannot clash with yours; for, in addition to other not less important reasons, many of the best supporters of the Manchester concerts are from home in spring and summer, and a summer audience differs considerably from a winter one.

Mr Hallé's season concluded very brilliantly. He himself played at his last concert Schumann's Concerto and Beethoven's Waldstein Sonata. The orchestra played, among other things, Beethoven's 7th Symphony, and Brahms' Liebesslieder Walzer were sung for the first time in Manchester by Mdles Friedländer and Vontrimm, Messrs Shakespeare and Pyatt, with Messrs Hallé and Hecht at the pianoforte. Mr Hallé, I hear, is now enjoying a well-earned holiday with his family in Italy, but he will be here to conduct the next Gentlemen's Concert on the 28th April.

There have been two of these subscription concerts (the Gentlemen's) since my last letter. One was a classical chamber concert, at which Messrs Hallé, Joachim, and Piatti played; at this also Herr Henschel made his first appearance in Manchester, and seldom has an unknown singer produced so great an impression. At the other, on Thursday last, two popular favourites appeared; and, notwithstanding the attraction of the Compton benefit performances at the Theatre Royal, the concert hall was crowded, tickets having been in great demand. At this you will not be surprised when I tell you that Mdle Tietjens was the singer and Mdme Arabella Goddard the solo instrumentalist. Mdle Tietjens sang "Bel raggio," two of Schumann's songs, "Kathleen Mavourneen," and "The Minstrel Boy." The popular prima donna was in splendid voice, and how she sang all these pieces it would be superfluous to say. It is equally unnecessary to tell your readers how admirably Mdme Arabella Goddard plays Weber's Concertstück; one even ceases to be surprised at the grace, delicacy, and finish of this accomplished lady's execution. In addition to the Concertstück, Mdme Goddard played selections from Mendelssohn, Kalkbrenner, and Thalberg. At this concert Sullivan's Symphony in E was admirably played, and the work is favourably noticed in the local papers. A Notturmo-Canon for orchestra by M. Kettenus was another interesting addition to the programme of the concert, which Mr Ed. Hecht conducted.

A successful concert of glee and choral music was given last Thursday by Mr Hallé's choir for the benefit of a local charity; and, in addition to the choral music, songs and concerted pieces were admirably sung by members of the choir. On the following evening Smart's Bride of Dunkerron was given by the Athenæum Musical Society to a very large audience.

Since my last letter we have had a visit from the Carl Rosa Opera Company. They gave thirteen performances at the Theatre Royal, including a morning performance of The Flying Dutchman, and the audiences were large at nearly every one of them. The operas were The Water Carrier, The Flying Dutchman (four times), Fidelio, The Bohemian Girl (twice), Maritana, The Porter of Harre, The Lily of Killarney, and The Siege of Rochelle. All these operas were ably supported by Mdle Torriani, Misses Gaylord, Franklein, and Yorke; Mrs Aynsley Cook; Messrs Santley, Nordblom, Packard, Lyall, Celli, Aynsley Cook, and others; and the band and chorus, under Mr Rosa's able direction, did good service on every occasion. The performances were additionally interesting, this being probably the last time Mr Santley will be heard in Manchester as a member of the Carl Rosa company.

To-night Herr Rubinstein will give his second recital in the Free Trade Hall. Here is the programme:—

1. Sonate (A flat) Polacca (Weber). 2. Momens Musicales (Schubert), and Kreisleriana (Schumann). 3. Fantaisie, Nocturne, Valse Impromptu, and Etude (Chopin). 4. Miniatures: Près du vaisseau, Menuet, Sérénade, Valse Allemande, and Tarantelle (Rubinstein).

You will be glad to hear that the receipts for the Compton benefit performances at the Theatre Royal on Monday evening were upwards of £900. Mr Jefferson as Mr Golightly and Mr Santley as Tom Tug were the heroes of the evening.

APRIL*

Fair April, by thy skies,
Thy drooping tearful eyes,
Thy sunbeam's play when young leaves first appear,
The sparkling waterfall,
And cuckoo's welcome call,
Proclaim to all around that thou art here.

Thou'rt like a gay coquette
On whom the heart is set,
And fair thou art, but fickle art thou too;
One moment all in tears,
A bright smile next appears;
Yes, a gay coquette, and she is like to you.

But the nightingale's sweet song
The tender leaves among,
Thou bringest to entrance us like a spell;
For this one gift alone,
We hasten to make known,
With all thy faults we like thee very well.

* Copyright.

S. P. HOWELL.

BRINLEY RICHARDS IN WALES.—We read in the Western Mail (Cardiff) as follows:—

"The ovation received by the great composer at Dowlais on Good Friday was in every sense honourable to the music-loving people of Dowlais and to Mr Brinley Richards. The large hall was crowded to excess, and the entertainment pronounced one of the best ever held there. Great as the welcome hitherto, Dowlais, in hearty enthusiasm, has eclipsed all other places. On Saturday Mr Richards and party proceeded to Hirwain, and, on arrival at the station, found a large number of respectable inhabitants with an excellent brass band, prepared to receive them. From station to town the band played capitally, and just before arrival at the hotel gave 'Ap Shenkyn' with taste and spirit. Mr Brinley Richards, moved by this thoroughly Welsh reception, gathered the band in a circle and gave them the history of that famous air. In the evening, at the close of a loudly applauded performance, the vicar expressed a hope that when next Mr Richards came to Wales it would not be as Brinley Richards, Esq., but as Sir Brinley Richards. On Monday he appears at Merthyr, when, by special request, Mr David Bowen, the eminent tenor, will sing Arthur Sullivan's 'Once again,' Mr Richards accompanying."

WAIFS.

A shocking accident took place at Teddington Weir last Saturday afternoon. Mr F. W. Holroyd and Mr Whitfield, from London, hired a boat at Thompson's boathouse at Richmond, and went for a row up the river. When they were near Teddington Weir, just above the lock, they came in contact with a steam launch. The tide being on the ebb, the water was rushing over the weir with great velocity, and the unfortunate young men were speedily drawn through the weir paddles. The boat was smashed, and a scene of great excitement ensued. J. Sadler, the well-known sculler, and others put off in boats from Messenger's ferry, but the current was so strong that they found it difficult to make headway against the stream. In the meantime, a very young gentleman, named Chappell, about twelve or fourteen years of age, son of Mr Thomas P. Chappell, of Weir Bank, Broom Road, whose lawn abuts upon the river near the weir, was, with his sister and a visitor at the house (Mr Wilkinson) attracted by the cries for assistance. Seeing one of the young men floating rapidly down the river, without a moment's hesitation, both Master Chappell and Mr Wilkinson plunged into the stream, which was running at a dangerous rate. Their courageous attempts to save the victims, however, failed, and they themselves with great difficulty got on shore again, in a thoroughly exhausted condition.

A thorn in the bush is worth two in the hand.

Johann Strauss is nominated member of the Legion of Honour.

Why is a man who marries an heiress a lover of music? Because he marries for-tune.

Mr Gye, director of the Royal Italian Opera, returned to town, from Paris, on Saturday.

Dr Verrinder gives the first of a series of organ performances at the Royal Albert Hall to-day.

The latest problem for civil engineers is to make one of the keys of a piano fit the lock of a canal.

The Municipal Council of Paris have subscribed 250 francs towards the tomb of the late Alfred Holmes.

The Queen's Theatre, Edinburgh, was burnt down early on the 4th inst. Luckily no lives were lost.

The Ladies' Swedish Vocal Quartet have been giving concerts at Venice, Florence, Rome, and Naples.

Mr Brinley Richards has been giving lectures on "National Music" in various towns in South Wales.

On Saturday last the nightingale was heard in Clapham and Roupell Parks for the first time this spring.

Professor Emilio Serrano y Ruiz, of the Madrid Conservatory, has set to music an Italian libretto, Mitridate.

The Leipzig police lately arrested a false Johann Strauss, who had announced two concerts at the Centralhalle.

When grown-up people predominate at a juvenile party, the latter may be characterised as badly adult-erated.

The bands of the various regiments stationed in Paris have commenced performing, as usual, in the public gardens.

Herr von Hülsen, Intendant-General of the Prussian Theatres Royal, has received the Order of the Crown, first class.

Though Signor Petrella lies in a weak state, hopes are entertained of his recovery. The King has forwarded him 1,000 lire.

Signor Ferri has been replaced by Signor Gardini, as manager of the Imperial Italian Operas at St Petersburg and Moscow.

The shareholders of the Komische Oper, Vienna, have, offered M. Offenbach 100,000 francs a year to act as manager of their theatre.

The Committee of Liquidators will shortly put up for sale the Teatro Dal Verme, Milan, at the price of 800,000 lire. It cost 985,000.

Charles Marchal, who distinguished himself as an artist by painting Alsatian scenes, has committed suicide in Paris. Failing sight had caused mental depression.

Mr Wilford Morgan has just completed a sacred cantata, entitled Christian the Pilgrim, the libretto founded on Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," by Mr Arthur Matthiason.

A commemorative tablet has been affixed to a house in the Rue des Deux-Portes-Saint-Sauveur, Paris, where Goldoni, the Italian dramatist, past the last days of his life.

A Minnesota Editor came into his own office to advertise for a lost dog, and such the power of advertising that the lost dog walked in while the advertisement was written out.

Le Grand Frédéric, a new operetta, words by MM. Goudinet, Saint-Albin, and Prével, music by M. Ch. Lecocq, will be produced in October at the Théâtre des Variétés, Paris.

The late Signor Dall'Argine composed fifty-six ballets and four operas, besides a great deal of dance music for the piano. Two of his operas have never been performed or published.

The King of Italy has conferred the Order of the Italian Crown upon Dr Emil Naumann, to mark his appreciation of that gentleman's book, Italianische Tondichter (Italian Composers).

After killing Signora Volpini with yellow fever at Havannah, the telegraph performed the same kind service for Signora Urban, also. Fortunately, the latter lady is no more dead than the former.

The Royal National Eisteddfod, to be held in the ancient castle of Carnarvon, is fixed for the 21st and three following days in August. Mdm Edith Wynne is to be "National" vocalist.

There is no truth in the report of the death of Mdm Volpini, who will be remembered seven years ago as one of the favourite artists at Her Majesty's Theatre, in the Haymarket, when M. Gounod's Mirella was produced.

Rossini's Stabat Mater was recently performed, under the direction of M. Darnault, at the Church of St Roch, Paris. The principal singers were Mesdes Borghi-Mamo, Engalli, MM. Bouhy and Bosquin. The orchestra numbered sixty instrumentalists.

A new feature has been introduced into some of the country schools of America. When one of the girls misses a word, the boy who spells it gets a kiss. Several, says the Boston Courier, are forgetting all they knew about spelling, while the boys improve rapidly.

The Municipal Councils of Marseilles and Le Havre have refused to vote the usual annual grant for the Grand Théâtre in each town, in neither of which, consequently, will there be an operatic season next winter, unless the members of the Councils change their minds, a fact not regarded as probable.

The continental papers again refer to the Telephone, or musical telegraph, the patent of which has been acquired by M. Strakosch. We are furthermore told it is that gentleman's intention to give in Paris a series of concerts, which, thanks to his magic wire, will be heard simultaneously in all the large cities of the two hemispheres.

M. Ambroise Thomas is said to have withdrawn his Françoise de Rimini from the Grand Opera and taken it to the Théâtre-Italien, where Mdm Nilsson will sustain the principal character during the International Exhibition of 1878. M. Gounod, also, is reported to have transferred his Polyeucte from the Grand Opera to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden.

Among the presents offered to the Emperor of Germany on his birthday was a collection of autographic manuscripts, including two quintets by Spohr, a pianoforte piece by Thalberg, a grand air for full band by Weber, and a symphony by Schubert. The most curious part of the collection, perhaps, consists of four volumes containing all the sketches for Beethoven's Eighth Symphony.

On the 27th ult., after the third act of Rigoletto, the American students in Paris made Mdle Albani a present of an album bound in Russian leather, with silver corners, containing a hundred coloured drawings and water-colour sketches by Meissonnier, Gérôme, Baudry, Dubois, &c. Mdle Albani thanked the enthusiastic donors, who were presented to her by the manager.

La France, noticing that the crowds at the Easter services in the churches were never greater, observes that they are attracted by habit, curiosity, decorations, and music, and that there is nothing in these congregations to contradict the decadence of the Catholic sentiment lamented by the Bishop of Poitiers, who asserts that the respectable classes will not send their sons to take orders.

In the month of April the following works were performed for the first time:—Missa Solennis, Beethoven, Vienna, 1824; Stringed Quartet, Verdi, Naples, 1873; Dinorah, Meyerbeer, Paris, 1859; Jean de Paris, Boïeldieu, Paris, 1812; Les Martyrs, Donizetti, Paris, 1840; Oberon, Weber, London, 1826; Miserere, Donizetti, Vienna, 1843; Le Prophète, Meyerbeer, Paris, 1849; Iphigénie en Aulide, Gluck, Paris, 1774; Il Ventaglio, Raimondi, Naples, 1831; Macbeth (revised), Verdi, Paris, 1865; Die Jahreszeiten (The Seasons), Haydn, Vienna, 1801; Les Danaïdes, Salieri, Paris, 1784; Roméo et Juliette, Gounod, Paris, 1857; L'Africaine, Meyerbeer, Paris, 1865; Le Nozze di Figaro, Mozart, Vienna, 1786; Christus am Oelberge, Beethoven, Vienna, 1803.

The once celebrated singer, Caroline Unger, has just died in Florence. Born at Vienna, in 1700, it was in that city that she began to study singing, but her talent was more particularly developed in the school of Domenico Ronconi, at Milan. She made her first appearance at Vienna, in 1819, as Cherubino in Le Nozze di Figaro, and then travelled through Italy, where her success was very great. She was not heard in Paris till 1833, and remained only one season. It was she who had the honour of first taking the contralto solo in Beethoven's Choral Symphony, under Beethoven's own direction, in 1822, at Vienna. In 1840, she retired from the stage, and, after marrying M. Sabatier, settled at Florence. A large portion of her fortune was spent in charity.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1482. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE"

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

English Glee and Madrigal Writers.

By W. A. BARRETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.S.L., &c.

PRICE 2s. 6d.

W. REEVES, BOOKSELLER, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Dépôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists.

25, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.

Price List free on application.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL."

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, St ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

Recently published, in 8vo, price 6s.

MUSICAL INTERVALS & TEMPERAMENTS. AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE.

With an Account of an Enharmonic Harmonium exhibited in the Loan Collection of Scientific Instruments, South Kensington, 1876; also an Enharmonic Organ exhibited to the Musical Association of London, May, 1875.

By R. H. M. BOSANQUET,
Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

Published This Day.

"IL TROVATORE."

A BRILLIANT FANTASIA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

COMPOSED BY

FRANZ ROZENFELD.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Published This Day.

"IN SHELTERED VALE."

(KARL FORMES.)

POPULAR GERMAN SONG. ARRANGED FOR A BASS VOICE.

By FRANK D'ALQUEN.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"IN A VALLEY FAR AWAY;"

(MAURYA VAWN ASTHORE.)

BALLAD.

Composed by ELENA NORTON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

FRANCESCO BERGER'S PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

"LA BONNE BOUCHE," Valse de Concert	4s
"UNSPOKEN THOUGHTS"	4s.
"L'ETOILE DE MA VIE"	4s.
"CONSOLATION"	3s.
"A SLUMBER SONG"	3s.
"TROISIEME TARANTELE"	4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

FRANCESCO BERGER'S VOCAL COMPOSITIONS.

SIX SONGS FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

1. "FALLEN LEAVES," Song for Contralto... Poetry by OWEN MEREDITH	4s.
2. "CLEANSING FIRES," Do. for Mezzo-Soprano ... ADELAIDE PROCTOR	4s.
3. "WAYWARD WIND," Do. do. ... GEORGE MOORE	4s.
4. "TO AN ABSENTEE," Do. do. ... THOMAS HOOD	4s.
5. "THE STRAY LEAFLET," Do. do. ... AMELIA B. EDWARDS	4s.
6. "DON'T WHISTLE NEAR THE DOOR," Do. do. ... JAMES ONIONS	4s.

THREE SACRED SONGS.

1. "THY WAY, NOT MINE, O LORD"	3s.
2. "LIGHTEN OUR DARKNESS"	3s.
3. "BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK"	3s.

Composed by FRANCESCO BERGER.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TRANSCRIPTIONS OF FAVOURITE SCOTCH AIRS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By EMILE BERGER.

"FLORA MACDONALD'S LAMENT" and "KENMURE'S ON AND AWA"	4s.
"HUNTINGTOWER"	4s.
"THOU BONNIE WOOD O' CRAIGIE LEA"	4s.
"THE FLOWERS OF THE FOREST"	3s.
"THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE"	4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THREE EASY FANTASIAS for the PIANOFORTE.

No. 1. "ROB ROY, MACGREGOR, O"	2s.
2. "ROBIN ADAIR" ("EILEEN AHOON")	2s.
3. "O DEAR, WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE?"	2s.

Composed by R. F. HARVEY.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	3 0
RINK GALOP	4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	4 0
WEST-END POLKA	3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE	4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	3 0
HARMONIUM	3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2S. 6D. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

		Price.
		s.	d.
OVERTURE	- - - - -	3	0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	- - - - -	3	0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	- - - - -	3	0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	- - - - -	3	0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	- - - - -	2	0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	- - - - -	4	0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	- - - - -	3	0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	- - - - -	4	0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	- - - - -	3	0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	- - - - -	3	0
8. FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron"	- - - - -	3	0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE	- - - - -
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night"	- - - - -	3	0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	- - - - -	3	0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	- - - - -	3	0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	- - - - -	3	0
13. DUET, "See him glaring"	- - - - -	4	0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	- - - - -	3	0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	- - - - -	3	0
15. FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	- - - - -	4	0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	- - - - -	3	0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	- - - - -	3	0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	- - - - -	4	0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	- - - - -	4	0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	- - - - -	3	0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	5 0
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	2 6
	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOOSEY & CO.'S

NEW EDITION OF

The Passion

(ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW).

THE PROSE TAKEN LITERALLY FROM THE GOSPEL, AND THE VERSE TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN

BY

JOHN OXENFORD.

THE MUSIC EDITED BY

J. PITTMAN.

PRICE 1s. 6d. CLOTH, GILT EDGES, 3s.

ALSO, PUBLISHED SEPARATELY, THE MUSIC (IN FULL SCORE) OF

THE CORALES,

ACCOMPANIED BY THE WHOLE OF THE TEXT, FORMING A COMPLETE HANDY BOOK FOR THE USE OF THE CONGREGATION.

PRICE 6d. IN PAPER. 1s. CLOTH GILT.

London: BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street, W.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 15.

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
6d. Stamped.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), April 14, will be performed MEYERBERG's grand Opera, "LES HUGUENOTS." Mlle d'Angeri, Mlle Marimon, Mme Scacchi; Signor Capponi, Signor Cologni, Signor Baggiolo, Signor Sabater, Signor Gayarré (his first appearance in that character in England). Conductor—Signor VIANESI.

On MONDAY next, April 16, DONIZETTI's Opera, "LA FAVORITA." Mme Ricca (her first appearance on the stage in England), Mlle Cottino; Signor Graziani, Signor Baggiolo, Signor Rossi, Signor Gayarré (his fourth appearance in England).

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office under the portico of the theatre is open from Ten till Five. Pit tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT. THIS DAY, at Three o'clock. The Programme will include:—Overture, Jessonda (Spohr); Pianoforte Concerto in A flat (Hummel); Quartet in E minor (Verdi), played by the whole orchestra of strings by special consent of the composer, first time in England; Pianoforte Solos; Overture, Leonora, No. 2 (Beethoven). Vocalists—Mme Lemmens-Sherrington; Mr Bywater. Solo Pianoforte—Herr Pauer. Conductor—MR AUGUST MAXIS. Reserved Numbered Stalls, Half-a-Crown; Unnumbered Seats, One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—RUBINSTEIN CONCERT (Rubinstein's first appearance in London this season). The Directors have much pleasure in announcing that they have made arrangements with M. ANTON RUBINSTEIN for a GRAND INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL CONCERT, at the Crystal Palace, on SATURDAY, April 21, at Three o'clock. The programme will comprise Symphony (six movements), Ocean; Finale to the Second Act of The Maccabees, with Arioso for alto, and Duet for soprano and alto; Second Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra; Overture, Dimitri Donskoy. M. Rubinstein will conduct the whole of the above, with the exception of the Concerto, and will, in addition, play three Solo pieces, viz.:—Notturmo, Scherzo from Sonata No. 3, and Caprice. Vocalists—Mlles Friedlander and Arnim. Stalls may now be had, price 5s., 3s. 6d., and 2s. 6d. Admission to the Concert-room, One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL. Friday, June 22, Public Rehearsal; Monday, June 25, Messiah; Wednesday, June 27, Selection; Friday, June 29, Israel in Egypt. Full particulars will be shortly published.

THE BACH CHOIR.—SECOND CONCERT, St James's Hall, WEDNESDAY Evening, April 25. John Sebastian Bach's Cantata on Luther's Psalm, "Ein feste Burg," first time of performance; Handel's Coronation Anthem, "The King shall rejoice;" an Eight-part Motet (Sir W. Sterndale Bennett); Palestrina's "Sanctus," from the Missa Papa Marcelli; and Nils Gade's Cantata, Comala, for the first time in England. Mme Lemmens-Sherrington, Mlle Gowa, Mlle Riego, and Mme Patey; Mr W. H. Cummings and Herr Henschel. Principal Violin—Herr Straus; Organist—Mr Thomas Pettit. Conductor—MR OTTO GOLDSCHMIDT. Stalls and Front Balcony, 10s. 6d.; Reserved, 7s.; Unreserved, 5s. and 3s. Tickets of Stanley Lucas, Weber, & Co., 84, New Bond Street; Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond Street; Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street; usual Agents; and Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

MONDAY NEXT.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, St James's Hall, APRIL 16. at Eight o'clock. BRAHMS' NEW SYMPHONY. Violinist—M. Paul Viardot (his first appearance). Vocalists—Mlle Thekla Friedlander and Mr Shakespeare. Conductor—MR W. G. CUBINS. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Reserved Seats, 7s.; tickets, 5s. and 2s. 6d. Tickets of Stanley Lucas, Weber, & Co., 84, New Bond Street; usual Agents; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

MR W. T. BEST will give his next RECITAL on the GREAT ORGAN, at "THE HALL," Primrose Hill Road, Regent's Park, on WEDNESDAY, April 18, at Four o'clock, when he will play the following pieces:—Fantasia, with Chorale, in G major (H. Smart); Adagio, in B major (G. Merkel); Organ Concerto, in G minor (Handel); Pastorale and Fugue (W. T. Best); Andante con Variazioni, Septuor (Beethoven); Sonata No. 2, in C minor (Mendelssohn); Organ Paraphrase of Rossini's Preghiera, "Giusto Ciel" (W. T. Best); Echo, and Fugue in B minor (Bach); Overture to the Oratorio, The Last Judgment (Spohr). Tickets, 3s. each; at Austin's, Piccadilly, and all the usual ticket agents. These Recitals will take place each Wednesday during the Season.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, HAYMARKET.

THE SEASON will begin on SATURDAY, April 28, 1877. The Full Prospectus of the Season's Arrangements may be had on application to Mr BAILEY, at the Box-office under the Portico of the Opera-house, Her Majesty's Theatre, which is open daily from Ten to Five.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of

Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

The EASTER TERM will commence on MONDAY, the 23rd inst., and will terminate on SATURDAY, July 21.

Candidates for admission (bringing music they can perform) will be examined at the Institution on Thursday, the 19th inst., at Eleven o'clock.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, London.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, 27, HARLEY STREET, W.

THIRD SESSION, 1876-7. SIXTH MONTHLY MEETING, on MONDAY, May 7, 1877, at Five o'clock precisely. A Paper "On the Gymnastic Training of the Hand for performing on Keyed Instruments," will be read by STEPHEN S. STRATTON, Esq., of Birmingham. CHARLES K. SALAMAN, Hon. Sec. 24, Sutherland Gardens, W.

SIGNOR BONETTI has the honour to announce that his MATINEE-MUSICALE will take place on FRIDAY, April 27, at 10, WESTBOURNE STREET, Hyde Park, W. (by kind permission of Mr and Mrs Arthur Levy), to commence at Three o'clock precisely, when he will be assisted by the following artists:—Mlle Ida Corani and Mad. Mathilde Ziméri, Miss Purdy, and Mme Alba (first appearance); Signor Bettini, Mr Trelawny Cobham, Mr S. Heilbut (amateur), and Mr W. Shakespeare; Signor Federici, Signor Bonetti, and Signor Zoboli. Pianoforte—Mrs Elizabeth Beasley and Signor T. Mattel. Tickets, One Guinea; to be had of Signor BONETTI, 1, Mornington Road, Regent's Park, N.W.

RICHARD WAGNER'S

SOLE EDITIONS OF VOCAL SCORES, IN 4TO.

"DER RING DES NIBELUNGEN":
"Das Rheingold" ... net 16s. | "Siegfried" ... net 24s.
"Die Walküre" ... 20s. | "Götterdämmerung" ... 28s.
Original German Text, 1 vol., 12mo, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, net, 5s.
English Translation, by ALFRED FORMAN, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, net, 5s.
"DIE MEISTERINGER VON NURNBERG." Vocal Score ... net 28s.
Original German Text, 12mo, paper, net, 1s.

Catalogues containing Transcriptions, Arrangements, and Original Works of Richard Wagner, post free on application.

SCHOTT & CO., 159, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

GOUNOD'S "CINQ-MARS." (Opéra), en Quatre Actes.

POÈME

De PAUL POIRON et LOUIS GALLET.

VOCAL SCORE IN 8VO, PRICE 20s. NET.

SCHOTT & CO., 159, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

ALEXANDRA MUSICAL BOX (Title Protected and Registered). Ornamental wood case, machine made, with the following 13 popular Melodies and Tunes:—Safe in the Arms of Jesus—Jesus of Nazareth passeth by—Sicilian Mariners' Hymn—Lo, He Comes with Clouds—Home, Sweet Home—The Minstrel Boy—Auld Lang Syne—The Keel Row—My Little Bunch of Roses—Tommy, make room for your Uncle—Fair Shines the Moon to-night—Silver Threads among the Gold—The Union Jack of Old England. Forwarded, securely packed and carriage paid, to any address on receipt of a Post-office Order, value 3s. 8d., payable at General Post-office to JOHN LEWIS & Co., 122, Wick Road, Hackney, N.E.

DALE'S NEW TRIO in A, Played by MARIE KREBS, JOACHIM, and PIATTI, at the Saturday Popular Concerts, will shortly be published. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street,

AN URGENT APPEAL.

IN a small lodging, without the means of paying for it, without furniture, and only bread to eat, with scanty and insufficient clothing, are at this moment the FAMILY of the late MR HOWARD GLOVER, the musical composer, son of the celebrated actress, Mrs Glover. He left England nine years ago with a family of 12 young children to better his fortune in the United States. He never earned, however, more than a bare subsistence, and on his death in November, 1875, his wife and children were plunged in deep embarrassment. They struggled on in New York, until at last they were sent home by the charity of the British Consul. The ages of the children now range from eight to 21, and, consequently, if some aid is given, there is a prospect of getting situations which will enable them to keep themselves and their mother. The eldest son is a scene painter, but has been for the last few days engaged on journeyman painter's work. A large West-end house has promised to take one of the daughters, and there are prospects of placing the others—some in a theatre, some at the opera. In the meantime a sum of money is absolutely indispensable, if they are to be rescued from the worst sufferings and the most horrible temptations of poverty. Under these circumstances an appeal is made to the best sympathies of the public and the patrons of music and art to come to the rescue of an unfortunate family, absolutely wrecked. They are known to be most excellent and deserving. Donations may be sent to MITCHELL'S Library, 33, Old Bond Street.

THE MUSICAL ARTISTS' SOCIETY.—This Evening. NINTH TRIAL OF NEW WORKS, at the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, to commence at 7.45. ARTHUR O'LEARY, Hon. Sec.
84, New Bond Street, W.

MISS PURDY'S MORNING CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY, May 9, at ST GEORGE'S HALL, W. Full particulars will be duly announced.—35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

HERR LEHMEYER begs to announce to his Pupils and Friends that he will give TWO CLASSICAL EVENING CONCERTS, on THURSDAY, 10th of May, and 14th of June, at the LANGHAM HALL, on which occasion he will be assisted by the most eminent Artists of the Season. Tickets, One Guinea; 10s. 6d.; 5s.; to be had of Herr LEHMEYER, 7, Store Street, Bedford Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY, BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, HARLEY STREET, W. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERT. ELEVENTH SEASON, 1877. The Next Meeting for Vocal and Instrumental Practice will take place on WEDNESDAY Evening, April 4th. The SECOND CONCERT (55th since the formation of the Society), at the LANGHAM HALL, on WEDNESDAY Evening, April 11th (R. Schumann's Vocal and Instrumental Compositions, forming the first part of Programme). The Society's Concerts and Soirées afford an excellent opportunity for rising Artists to make their Débuts in public, and Composers to have their works introduced. Full Prospectus and further particulars on application to
H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec.

TO ORGANISTS.

AN ORGANIST and Choirmaster is WANTED for St John's Church, Yeovil. Salary, £50 per annum. The Office is now vacant. Applications and testimonials to be sent to Mr F. W. RAYMOND, Ilex House, Yeovil.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR SIMS REEVES will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at Mr W. Pyatt's Grand Ballad Concert, at the Exhibition Palace, Dublin, on Friday, May 4.

"SABRINA."

MR MICHAEL WATSON will play his new Valse de Concert, "SABRINA," at Farnham, April 23; Bolton Gardens, May 2; and Langham Hall, May 23.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MRS JOHN CHESHIRE will perform ASCHER'S Popular Fantasia on the Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at Birmingham, on the 19th April.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR BARTON MCGUCKIN will sing (by desire) ASCHER'S Popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" and Sir JULIUS BENEDICT'S Aria, "NULLA DA TE," at the Grand Concert, given for the Benefit of the RAILWAY BENEVOLENT FUND, in the Shoreditch Town Hall, April 25th.

BENEDICT'S ANDANTE AND CHOPIN'S POSTHUMOUS MAZURKA.

MRS J. CLIPPINGDALE, Miss ALBERT (pupil of Sir JULIUS BENEDICT) will play this admired Arrangement by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT of his ANDANTE, and CHOPIN'S Posthumous MAZURKA, for four performers on two grand pianofortes, at the Grand Concert for the Benefit of the Railway Benevolent Institute, at the Shoreditch Town Hall, Wednesday, the 25th April.

"ROCK ME TO SLEEP."

MADAME ELSTOFF will sing BENEDICT'S popular Song, "ROCK ME TO SLEEP," at the Grand Concert, given for the Benefit of the Railway Benevolent Institution, on the 25th inst., at the Town Hall, Shoreditch.

FOR SALE.—A Superior Gothic-build CHANCEL ORGAN, in English Oak Case; 19 gilt front speaking Pipes; Foot Pedal and Side Blower; Dulcian, Flute, and Treble Stops, Bass, Diapason Stops, and Principal Organ. Suitable for Chapel or Library. Apply, by letter, to B., 19, Stookwell Park Road, S.W.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT will play this Afternoon (Saturday), at Herr Schubert's Matinée-Musicale (by permission of the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry), Park Lane, Liszt's PARAPHRASE DE CONCERT on "RIGOLETTO."

MR FREDERIC WOOD (Primo Tenore), of the Wilhelmj Concert Party, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs HOBBS & EASEY, 6 and 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MDME LOUISE GAGE (Contralto) is open to ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c. Address, Mdme Louise GAGE, No. 17, Holland Road, Kensington, W.

MR T. HARPER, having relinquished his post as Principal Trumpet and Cornet at the Royal Italian Opera, can accept ENGAGEMENTS in town and country during the ensuing season.—25, Brecknock Crescent, N.W.

MISS ELENA NORTON, Soprano Vocalist (composer of "The Rose and the Ring"), is open for ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c., &c. Address, care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or to Mr D'Oyley Carte, 20, Charing Cross.

MDLLE IDA CORANI having returned to Town, requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Opera or Concert be addressed to her Agent, Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME ERNST (Soprano) requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR CHARLES ABERCROMBIE (Tenor), of St James's Hall and the Royal Aquarium Concerts, Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St James's, requests that all applications for Terms and ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio, Opera, or Concert, be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY (his Agent and Business Manager), care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, S.W.

MR WELBYE-WALLACE (of the Crystal Palace and Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester, &c., &c.), having Returned from Abroad, can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Opera, or Oratorio. All Communications to be addressed to his Agent, Mr R. D'OYLEY CARTE, 9A, Craig's Court, Charing Cross, S.W.

MR SHAKESPEARE requests that all Communications concerning ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., be addressed—6, Howick Place, Victoria Street, S.W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MDME MARIE BELVAL begs that all Communications be addressed to her at 7, Cavendish Place, Cavendish Square, W.

MDLLE VICTORIA BUNSEN begs to announce her Arrival in London from her successful Continental Tour. Letters respecting Concerts, Soirées, and Singing Lessons, to be addressed care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

A PUPIL of Signor SCHIRA and of Signor LAMPERTI (of Milan) is desirous of giving LESSONS in Italian and English Singing to Lady Pupils, either at their residences or at her own. For Terms, apply to Mdme BERTINI, 62, Harley Street, London, W.

M. ALEXANDRE, of Paris, the Harmonium Manufacturer, WISHES to CONCEDE the entire MONOPOLY and SALE in ENGLAND of his new and important IMPROVEMENTS in HARMONIUMS, ALEXANDRE ORGANS, &c. He will be in London during the present month of April, when the instruments may be heard, the improvements examined, and terms discussed. M. Alexandre, intending only to pass two days in London, begs that any person desirous of treating for the purchase will communicate by letter addressed to him, to the care of Messrs MICHAEL ABRAHAM & ROFFET, Solicitors, 8, Old Jewry, London. M. Alexandre will then indicate the day and address in London where he may be seen.

THE MONTHLY MUSICAL RECORD.—The cheapest

High-class Paper on Music. Yearly Subscription, 2s. 6d. post-free. Years 1871 to 1876 (vols. 1 to 6) bound, each net 3s. "Intelligible and dispassionate criticisms and reviews, analyses of interesting compositions, and a like determination to discountenance the fictitious either in art or its practice: these are the qualifications of the paper."—Morning Post. AUGENER & Co., 86, Newgate Street, and 31, Regent Street.

MR IGNACE GIBSON begs to inform the Profession that the following SONGS, of his Composition, can be Sung in Public without any Claim being made against them for so doing.

"AS YESTERDAY I WAS SPINNING" Published by Hutchings & Romer.
"THE PHANTOM BARK" Metzler & Co.
"ACROSS THE SEA" Duncan Davison & Co
"MY LADY SLEEPS"
"THEY PART NO MORE" Cunningham Bossey & Co.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

The "Ring des Nibelungen."

(By Telegram, from our Special Correspondent.)

BAYREUTH, Aug. 21, 1876.*

RICHARD WAGNER's great undertaking has been successfully inaugurated. The entire stage-play has been gone through, from Das Rheingold to the Götterdämmerung, from the stealing of the treasure by Alberich the Niblung to the ultimate result of the curse that waits on it in Siegfried's death, Brynhild's self-sacrifice, the ring's restoration to its pristine guardians, the destruction of Walhalla, and the eclipse of the gods. The materials upon which Wagner has built his four-days' drama, obtained from the Scandinavian Eddas, the Völsunga Saga of purely Icelandic origin, the German Nibelungen Lied, and other sources, have been so frequently explained, and the characters and incidents of his drama so fully set forth, that it would be useless now to enlarge upon either. Nor is it necessary to enter into a new inquiry about the reasons which induced the art-dramatist of the future to select such a faded, out-of-the-way town as Bayreuth for erecting his theatre, or to attempt a fresh description of the edifice itself, which assuredly does not strike by the comeliness of its exterior, the aspect whereof, contrasted with the beauty of the undulating scenery round about it, is singularly uninviting. With regard to the arrangements of the interior there are conflicting opinions. That the sinking of the orchestra and the invisibility of the players creates a strange, weird impression, enhanced by the darkening of the auditorium, cannot be denied, any more than that the orchestra (120 strong, with Herr Richter as conductor, and Herr Wilhelmj—"Siegfried of the Fiddle," as he is styled here—as leading violin, or chef d'attaque) is one of the most splendid and thoroughly well-trained body of instrumentalists ever assembled for the achievement of a difficult task. Many, however, not so completely bitten by Wagnerism as to look upon whatever Wagner says and does, proposes and carries out, as perfect, would like to hear that orchestra, if only for once in a way, under other conditions, for, harmonious as is the general effect it produces, the one special and always welcome effect of "brilliance" is seldom realised. Then the players themselves, in this scorching Midsummer weather, are forced to go through their unceasingly arduous labours in their shirt-sleeves—divested, in fact, of every not indispensable article of raiment. How little this is to their taste need hardly be insisted on. They are really to be pitied, because resolved to carry out their pledge to the master until the very end; but it is well understood that no temptation will ever induce them to come together again under similar circumstances, and without their aid a repetition of the model performances which have attracted the curious from almost every part of the globe would be simply impossible. Wagner, it is urged (by "Philistines," of course, for those who are not Wagnerites absolute are "Philistines" to a man), has overdone the thing and killed the goose; he should have gone more leisurely to work, and attained his end by slow and sure degrees. This opinion, however, is hardly supported by actual facts, and more than probable issues. Wagner could never have astonished the throng of pilgrims to Bayreuth as he has fairly astonished them by any other conceivable means. He has for the moment gained his point, and may inscribe "Victory" on his banner. Already we hear rumours of Siegfried and Die Walküre at Vienna, and of the whole tetralogy, including Das Rheingold and the Götterdämmerung, at Munich. The last rumour is not at all unlikely to be substantiated, the king being always a staunch upholder of the poet-musician and his doctrines. Although his Bavarian Majesty (for reasons much discussed) was not present at the first and second series of performances, he not only attended all the rehearsals, but has signified his intention of returning to Bayreuth next week expressly for the third. Another objection has been raised against the internal arrangements of the theatre, à propos to the obscurity in which the audience are plunged (by burning the lamps at the lowest) from the first notes of the first orchestral prelude to the descent of the curtain at the end of every act. Many who had obtained books of the dramas, and even scores of the music, to peruse in the course of the representations, were disabled from making any use of them—as regards the scores, by the way, much to the comfort of those who might happen to be their near neighbours; but Wagner discountenances all such aids, insisting that musicians shall make themselves acquainted with his scores, and amateurs read his librettos, if "librettos" they can appropriately be termed, before the performance; so that they may come to the theatre fully prepared to follow and understand. He will have nothing seen but the stage, nothing heard but what the orchestra plays and the singers declaim. Talking, even whispering, among the audience is not to be tolerated, even sneezing and coughing being quasi-misdemeanours. Applause is immediately put down, and—need it be added?—flirtation is hors de combat. (What would our opera-goers say?) Calls before the curtain are forbidden by Wagner—who, nevertheless, broke his own self-imposed law after the performance of Götterdämmerung, by appearing in answer to a summons quite unanimous. Taking advantage of the occasion to address his German patrons, he ended a brief speech with words to this effect—"You have now an art; show that you desire an art"—which, affording reasonable cause of offence to many among the countrymen of Mozart and Beethoven, were explained away at a banquet on the following evening. For this rejoicing the composer had convoked his artists and particular friends to the "Wagner Restoration"—the public generally being admitted at five marks a cover, enough to pay the whole cost of the banquet. In the speech of the evening, Wagner declared that it was not his intention to say he had given art to Germany, but that by a combination of arts in the drama he had furnished his country with a new art—his art, the art he laid claim to have originated. The explanation, though somewhat hazy, was enthusiastically accepted. In the Ring des Nibelungen we have doubtless something, both as regards drama and music, unlike anything, if not superior to anything, ever known till now—bearing little or no resemblance, it should be understood, to Tannhäuser, or even to Lohengrin. Wagner, however, aspiring to a commixture of all the arts, lays equal stress upon the painting and architectural design of his stage-scenes; but, if judgment may be founded upon what is to be witnessed at Bayreuth, it must be said that these accessories have by no means come up to the intended mark, presenting, indeed, very little that is new, and nothing that has not been equalled, nay, surpassed in any or all the leading European theatres. The ambitious, somewhat boastful, art-mingler should bestir himself in this matter, or his universal supremacy will incur the risk of being very generally disputed. To compare, for example (looking at home), what has been done from time to time, in the way of scenic and spectacular magnificence, at the Royal Italian Opera, with what has been so very long preparing at Bayreuth and elsewhere for Bayreuth, would be exceedingly unjust to our own great establishment. What Wagner may justly claim as having effected for his famous stage-play is of no small importance; he has made all his actors, from the highest personages in the drama to the humble members of the chorus, and even of the dumb subordinates look, gesticulate, and be moved as if they were, to a man and woman, personally interested in whatever is being said or done by the leading performers, never even glancing at the audience, in fact ignoring the audience altogether. From this a wholesome lesson might be learned by all stage-managers. The result is everywhere admirable, and to it no trifling share in the success of the performances is owing.

Among the four dramas which compose the Ring des Nibelungen, that which seems to best suit all tastes is decidedly Siegfried, and our theatrical managers who meditate still further researches into the Wagnerian treasures will do well to bear in mind that Siegfried may be most easily separated from the context, there being explanations in the course of the play sufficient to account for all the chief characters and incidents. Besides which, musically as well as dramatically, it is everywhere full of life and spirit. Siegfried is, perhaps, the finest character Wagner has delineated; and, to judge by the music, he is as deeply in love with his hero as with his heroine, the noble, unselfish Brynhild, the woman who (Wagner's way of dealing with such matters) becomes the self-elected sacrifice and atonement for all the misdoings of others. Die Walküre, too, is of absorbing interest, and the music contains a great deal that is characteristic as well as a great deal that is impassioned and beautiful; but its unhappy motive must always stand in the way of ready acceptance. Das Rheingold is too mystic, and Götterdämmerung, apart from what precedes it, would be scarcely intelligible.

* Delayed in transmission.

Bayreuth is still in a ferment. As many strangers as went away after the first series of performances returned for the second, and there can be little doubt that the third will be successful in proportion. Wagner is here a demi-god, and his house, "Wahnfried," the observed of all observers.

Grover Roores.

(By Telegram.)

Wurzburg, Aug. 23.†

P.S.—I should tell you that on my way to Bayreuth I met, at the Crown Prince Hotel, Wurzburg, two groups, of three gentlemen each, the first three furiously advocating Wagner's claims to demi-deification, the others as stoutly maintaining that he was a poor mortal like the rest of us. I sketched them on the spot; and here they are:—

Wagnerites.

Anti-Wagnerites.

Anti-Wagnerites.

Wagnerites.

On my way from Bayreuth, a fortnight later, I again met them, at the Stork and Janissary, Bamberg, and was surprised to find from their somewhat noisy disputations, that the Wagnerites had become Anti-Wagnerites, and vice versa. I sketched them again on the spot, as you will see. Ask Bishop Watson, my jovial-hearted fellow-traveller, and he will tell you all about it.—G. R.

[We must confess that our special correspondent has not made himself master of the secret of expeditious telegraphing. We shall take care how we entrust Mr Grover Roores with another such important duty. His telegrams have taken eight months in reaching us. Dr Cheese and Alderman Doublebody have whispered abroad that the jovial brothers Drexel, of the comfortable Hotel de Russie, Frankfort-on-the-Maine, had something to do with it, and that it took Mr Roores eight months to sketch the six heads. Why wert thou not there?—O Lyall!—Theophilus Quizz.]

† Also delayed in transmission.

A Strange Story.

To Dishley Peters, Esquire.

SIR,—Travelling last August to Bayreuth, I stopped on my way at Frankfort, with my friend Alderman Doublebody. At the Hotel de Russie (Drexel Brothers) we saw a specious-looking gentleman, who, by the tone of his conversation (violent at times—eloquent always,) we took for a confirmed Wagnerite. For want of anything else to do, I sketched his physiognomy, which I append. (Look to the left):—

Wagnerite.

Returning from Bayreuth we met the same gentleman at the same hotel, whom, judging by his conversation (violent at times—always eloquent) we took for a confirmed Anti-Wagnerite. I again sketched him as I then saw him. (Look to the right):—

Anti-Wagnerite.

By the likeness of the appearance thereof I judged that he had turned his back on Wagner. Explain it as you please, but believe me yours always,

Stilton Cheese (P.D.)

[“Metamorphosis of Cheeses”—that is all—D. P.]

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Since the opening night at Mr Gye's theatre Fra Diavolo and La Favorita have been given, each performance presenting some new feature of more or less interest. Fra Diavolo is now verging on its half century of existence, and yet the music wears no sign of age, and the melodies sound as fresh and spontaneous as ever. Thanks to Auber's own co-operation in re-modelling his work, substituting accompanied recitative for spoken dialogue, and introducing new set pieces where occasion offered, it is now quite as much in its element on the Italian stage as on the French, and, as few will be inclined to question, a valuable addition to the repertory. The most important interpolations—viz., the couplets of the brigands, Beppo and Giacomo (taken from a one-act opera called Actéon), the trio in which Fra Diavolo joins his confederates (from Les Chaperons Blancs, a three-act opera, produced in 1836, the same year as Actéon), and the saltarello, which imparts unwonted animation to the last act—fall naturally into their places, and each being characteristic of the situation, while in no way sensibly interfering with the progress of the story, must be regarded as a welcome supplement. The actual "cast" of Auber's opera differs from that of last season, inasmuch as we have a new Fra Diavolo and a new Zerlina. We may say without preamble that the Zerlina achieved a well-merited success. Mdlle Bianchi enters thoroughly into the spirit of the part, and her Innkeeper's Daughter is distinguished no less for agreeable ingenuousness than sprightly bearing. The couplets in the scene where Zerlina innocently entertains the supposed Marquis with a portrayal of the character and exploits of Fra Diavolo do not, it is true, lie conveniently for her voice, although she gives point enough to the narration. But in the famous scene of the bedchamber, where the guileless maiden, on the eve of her wedding, unsuspecting of intruders, contemplates, not without satisfaction, her face and figure in the looking-glass, the music suits her thoroughly, and her singing is quite on a par with her acting, both being really excellent. Mdlle Bianchi would do well to give the air, "Or son sola" as Auber has written it ("encore" notwithstanding), in lieu of substituting for the repeat of the melody something else from another opera (Haydée), strangely at variance with the rest, and altogether unsuited to the personage of Zerlina. We are aware that Mad. Bosio used to reject the original song, for a bravura air, belonging to Le Serment, which, from the lips of Zerlina, was preposterous; but Mad. Bosio was a great singer, and great singers frequently take great liberties—instance, for example, Mad. Adelina Patti, who entirely spoils the significant last words of the Queen in Les Diamans de la Couronne, by the interpolation of a piece of vocal display no less unmeaning. Mdlle Bianchi should go on in her own quiet way, and gradually, by legitimate steps, reach the position she has so fair a chance of winning. The first appearance of M. Capoul created less excitement than had been anticipated. In fact, this gentleman at Covent Garden is precisely what he proved himself at Drury Lane—an actor and singer of the accepted modern French type, with no glimpse of the Italian school of training. We are inclined to think, moreover, that Fra Diavolo, though a reprobate of the first stamp, is a character demanding more vigour and manliness than it is in the idiosyncrasy of the popular French tenor to supply. M. Capoul is above all sentimental; and where he has not (as in Faust) a large amount of sentiment to deal with, he is hardly at his best. The most striking point, for example, in his Fra Diavolo was the scene where the Marquis courts "Miladi" through the medium of that exquisitely tuneful barcarolle, "Per riveder la bella" ("Le Gondolier fidèle"). Nothing could be more gracefully expressive than his delivery of this; and each interruption of its cadence, in agreement with the dramatic exigency of the situation, deprived his hearers of a veritable pleasure. In the lengthy and trying soliloquy of the last act, too, where the Brigand Chief sums up the history of his adventures for his own special gratification, M. Capoul showed much power of voice, a mastery of the gradations of force, considerable mimetic art, and enduring stamina, for which he was duly rewarded by loud applause and a "call." His weakest effort was in the second barcarolle, "Agnes la Zitella" ("Agnes la Jouvencelle"), which in the old days, when Fra Diavolo used to be mixed up with all sorts of deleterious ingredients, was familiarly known among us as "Agnes, beautiful flower." In this, sung in the bed chamber of Zerlina, approximate to that of "Milord" and "Miladi," Koburg (Rocburg, or Alcaash—les trois se disent), by force of abrupt contrasts and ineffective alterations of the text, one of the purest and loveliest melodies ever written, was partially spoiled. The refrain, "Non m'odi amico" ("Ami, n'entends tu pas?"), was at first given so loudly that it is difficult to believe the English lord and his spouse would not have been roused to inquire what was the matter, and then in tones so soft as would not have awakened a mouse. This ordinary expedient, however, created no impression, and the consequence was that one of the most beautiful pieces in the opera passed off coldly. In the two trios that follow M. Capoul both acted and sang admirably, and was especially happy in the interview, when, by a false tale, Fra Diavolo raises the jealousy alternately of the English lord and the valiant Brigadier Lorenzo. At the same time there can be no doubt that M. Capoul is an acquisition of value to Mr Gye's company, and that we shall see him often in parts more completely suited to his style. About the other characters little need be said. For a dry "Milord," Signor Ciampi would be a very good "Milord," except for his "gagging," and for the fact that he will not allow his comrades, "Miladi" especially, represented by Mdlle Scalchi with her accustomed talent, to sing, without repeated utterances to himself in incongruous English, as though not a soul among the audience of the Royal Italian Opera understood one word of Italian. Hamlet's instructions to the players should be carefully perused and studied by this vivacious gentleman. We are aware that Ronconi used to take similar liberties now and then, but Ronconi was a genuine humourist, and much might be pardoned him. Signor Sabater (Lorenzo) gave his one air very well, and the two Brigands, who, in the bedroom scene are obstreperously offensive, were otherwise impersonated with such unctuous drollery by Signor Tagliafico and Capponi that the comic duet in the last scene, where they counterfeit the voice and words of Zerlina, obtained an encore quite unanimous. Beppo, we understand, is the only part in which Signor Tagliafico will appear during the season. This is to be regretted, for the fun of which he is in his own way a master becomes more and more rare. The performance generally of Auber's music, under the direction of Signor Bevignani, was all that could be desired, from the picturesque overture (the march, "allegro maestoso," in which, however, might have been taken a little slower) to the end. Nothing could be better than the dancing of Mdlle Girod, as leading personage in the saltarello.

Signor Gayarre, the Spanish tenor, has at length made his appearance before an English audience. His reception on Saturday night, in the same part which will recall the still vividly-remembered leave-taking of Mario, was nothing short of enthusiastic. Comparisons, always inadvisable, would be here wholly out of place, inasmuch as, in their general employment of vocal resources, no two singers could differ more essentially than Signor Mario and Signor Gayarre. We may say at once, however, that the Spanish tenor has ample means at command, and for the most part uses them to excellent purpose. His voice is one of rare quality, of considerable range, and seemingly equal throughout its compass. His command of the mezza voce is noticeable, as also his power of graduating tone. His higher chest notes, however, are the most rich and powerful; and this leads him now and then, in climax, to display them in excess, as if the end of any particular phrase must necessarily be more prolonged and louder than all that precedes it. Signor Gayarre shows a quasi leaning towards the "tremolo," which of recent years has been the besetting sin of vocalists, not only French and German, from whom it is inseparable, but even Italians, who would appear to have abandoned that system of early and assiduous study formerly placing them above all contemporary singers, and in which—it is difficult to know why—they have only found equals among our own English artists, from Braham and Inledon to Sims Reeves and Santley. But with Signor Gayarre the indulgence in the fault we mention is so slight that, more especially in soft passages, it becomes rather agreeable than otherwise. His higher tones, when he gives them out with emphasis, seem all to come from the chest. Apart, moreover, from his voice and method, Signor Gayarre possesses qualities of essential importance as a lyric comedian. He has a good presence; his gestures are natural, graceful, or dignified as occasion requires; and he is clearly a proficient in the histrionic art. From his first entry he made a strong impression, which went on increasing to the end. His delivery of the romanza, "Un angelo," in the scene where Ferdinando unfolds his history to the chief monk, Baldassare, was given with a fervour that immediately raised the interest of his audience; and, in his subsequent interview with Leonora at the Palace, the impression was heightened, the beauty of his middle tones and his easy control over them being specially admired. During the course of the second act Ferdinando has nothing to do; but in the third comes the trying scene where the victorious captain of Alphonso's armies, enraged at the indignity to which he is submitted in return for the valuable services he has rendered, casts his sword and honours at the feet of the King, the hand of whose cast-off mistress he proudly disdains to accept. In a vocal sense the new tenor proved himself equal to the situation, but in a dramatic sense hardly so. Here, however, the actor is entrusted with as important a part as the singer—more important, indeed; and here the lover of Leonora should, for the time, be forgotten in the outraged hero. That Signor Gayarre should not have done exactly all that is indispensable for the adequate presentment of such a situation bodes nothing detrimental to his future career. He is young, and has years before him for devotion to the higher cultivation of his art; and, if we are not greatly mistaken, he is likely to use them to good purpose. In the last scene—that of the Monastery of San Jacopo di Compostella, where Ferdinando obtains his final interview with the already dying and repentant Leonora—Signor Gayarre again aroused the audience to enthusiasm, his impassioned delivery of the truly pathetic air, “Spirto gentil,” or “Angiol d’Amore” (as it is diversely translated from the French text of Royer and Gustave Waëz), literally, as the conventional phrase is, “bringing down the house.” The final duet with Leonora would have been equally effective had Signor Gayarre followed the example of his partner, Mad. Scalchi, and allowed the rapturous melody to go on unimpeded. Enough, however, may be gathered from what has been said to convey the fact that the new tenor, with his fine qualities and occasional defects weighed in the balance, achieved a brilliant success, and is likely to be one of the stars of the season. Of course, before more confidently adjudging his merits, we must be guided, not only by a second performance in the Favorita, but by the impression he may create in his next part, which, if we are rightly informed, is to be that of Raoul de Nangis—another crucial test. Mad. Scalchi, whose progress is more and more remarkable, was the Leonora; and some of our opera-going readers may not have forgotten that it was she who had the honour of playing the same character, in July, 1871, when, at the Royal Italian Opera, Mario bade farewell to the scene of his many triumphs. Signor Baggiolo, too, the Baldassare of Saturday night, was also the Baldassare on the same memorable occasion. It is enough to add that Signor Graziani, not for the first time by many, took the ungrateful part of Alphonso IX., and that the Inez was Mdle Cottino. Signor Vianesi was conductor, and the performance generally was highly effective.

The operas since have been Guillaume Tell (Monday); La Favorita—for the second appearance of Signor Gayarre (Tuesday); and Don Pasquale—for the first appearance of Mdle Marimon (Thursday). The Huguenots is announced for this evening.

A NIGHTMARE OF COPY AND MORAL RIGHT.

SPECTRE.—I am the Shade of Branngardt! I have a tale.—OTHER.—Unfold!—SPECTRE.—My peace is broken in pieces! My peace of mind—my “Waldesranschen.” (Sings)

The body-snatchers came,
And made a snatch at me,
’Tis hard this kind of game
Wont let a body be!

OTHER.—I thought they had died out.—SPECTRE.—(Sings)
I deemed the last of all my cares
Would end with my last minute!
But if they went to their last home
They did not stay long in it!

OTHER.—What has this to do with “Waldesranschen”?—SPECTRE.—Knowest thou a man with soul so dead, that never to himself hath said—“This is my ‘Brooklet Whispers’”?—OTHER.—Yes, Fritz Schlegel; but he took it from the “Canto del Ruscetto” of Brocca, who took it from Steinweiss’s “Murmuring Rills.”—SPECTRE.—’Tis note for note my “Waldesranschen”! They trade on dead men’s ribs.—OTHER.—Well then, go.—SPECTRE.—I have been.—OTHER.—Who did you see?—SPECTRE.—(Sings)

’Tis weeks since last we met!
And I hope may meet again,—
I was referred to mine uncle.—OTHER.—There are no brokers!—SPECTRE.—No! nor a man who answers to the surname, Schlegel! Woe unto us! (Sings)

You think the worst of all your cares
Shall end with your last minute,
But when you reach your final home
You’ll quick be roasting in it!

You’ll hear no “Brooklet whispers” there,
Nor see the “Murmuring rills,”
The “Song of Brook” shall silenced be
By fire that never kills.

Epitaph.

To Odipus.

A diligent mathematician, who would seek consolation in Differential Calculus and Conic Sections; would read himself to sleep with Proclus, Plotinus, and other Platonic commentators, to keep up his familiarity with this special kind of Latin; would be found absorbed in Persius, Tibullus, or Propertius in an omnibus, &c. Name him.

Opfing.

MR MAPLESON’S PROGRAMME.

After some hesitation as to where Mr Mapleson should find a temporary home for his performances this season, the new house in the Haymarket has been fixed upon, and “Her Majesty’s Opera” is once again to be located in Her Majesty’s Theatre. The prospectus, already issued, informs us that the season will be a short one—of thirty nights, and that the house will open on the 28th inst. Without preliminary flourish the same official document comes directly to the point, on the strength of a list of singers with whom “engagements have been entered into.” From the department of first ladies it suffices to single out Mdle Tietjens, Mesdames Trebelli-Bettini and Christine Nilsson, at once to enlist attention. To the names of these distinguished artists are added those of two others unknown to London—the first being Mdle Carolina Salla, a young dramatic soprano, now performing in Paris, at the Théâtre-Lyrique, the other a Mdle Mathilde Nandori, of whom we are unable to give any account. Few will regret to welcome back so practised an artist as Mdle Varesi, or an aspirant so young, attractive, and promising as Mdle Mila Rodani, both of whom, in addition to Mdle Valleria, are announced. Among the tenors who have yet to win their spurs in England we observe Signor Gayarre, which, considering that he played the hero of La Favorita on Saturday and Tuesday evenings at the Royal Italian Opera, and is to play in the Huguenots to-night, requires an explanation which will best come from Signor Gayarre himself. Two other tenors are named, of whom we have never heard till now; while a third, Signor Carrion, is, if we are not mistaken, a son of the at one period highly-esteemed Italian vocalist who bore the same name. That the services of Signors Fancelli and Rinaldini are again secured will surprise no one; while the engagement of the veteran Tamberlik may surprise many, though none, we believe, disagreeably. Tamberlik was last here in 1869, during the period of “coalition” between Messrs Gye and Mapleson. A strong array of baritones and basses completes the catalogue, the names of Signors Rota, Del Puente, Galassi, Medini, and, last, not least, M. Faure, being conspicuous among them. Nothing is said bearing reference to orchestra and chorus, except that M. Sainton is to be leading violin, Mr Smithson chorus-master, and Sir Michael Costa “director of the music and conductor.” With regard to the repertory, besides selecting from twenty-five operas already familiar to the company, it is intended to add Gluck’s Armida (adapted by Salvatore Marchesi), in order to allow Mdle Tietjens an opportunity of assuming the character of Tasso’s and Quinault’s seductive enchantress. Rossini’s Otello is to be revived for Nilsson, Faure, and Tamberlik; Cherubini’s Medea for Tietjens; and what will perhaps excite more interest than anything else, Wagner’s Ollandese Dannato (Flying Dutchman), with Christine Nilsson as Senta and Faure as Van der Decken. If all these pledges are fulfilled there will be little to complain of. To musicians and connoisseurs the largest amount of interest is likely to attach to Gluck’s Armida, first produced in Paris close upon a century ago (September, 1777—at the Académie Royale de Musique).

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Programme of Organ Recital by Dr C. G. Verrinder.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1877.

Overture, Egmont	Beethoven.
Romance from the opera Azor & Zemira	Spobr.
Concerto in G minor	Handel.
Allegro Pomposo	Smart.
Scena	Guilmant.
Orchestral Prelude and Fugue	Mozart.
Andante from the 4th Symphony	Mendelssohn.
Grand Schiller March	Meyerbeer.

BARCELONA.—The Teatro del Liceo, re-opened on the 1st inst., with Aida, Signora Singer sustaining the principal part.

MILAN.—The Teatro Dal Verme will shortly re-open with La Vestale, to be followed by Il Giuramento, Ruy Blas, and a new opera, of which the name has not transpired.

PARIS SCRAPS.

(From our Parisian Scrapper.)

Since his accession to the managerial throne at the Salle Favart, M. Carvalho has been intent on proving that he belongs to the class of mortals who, as the poet informs us, do more than command, who deserve, success. He has done both. The gratifying results of his energy, skill, and perseverance are already visible in the reviving popularity of the theatre over which he presides. That popularity will, doubtless, be much increased by the new lyric drama, which he has just produced, and which is entitled Cinq-Mars, in four acts and five scenes, words by MM. Paul Poirson and Louis Gallett, music by M. Charles Gounod.

In choosing Alfred de Vigny's well-known romance as a basis for their libretto, MM. Poirson and Gallett enjoyed all the advantage to be derived from a telling title. But, on the other hand, they had to contend with serious difficulties in the treatment of the subject. It was impossible within the limits of four acts, the greater part necessarily left for the music, to include all the characters of Alfred de Vigny, while any idea of giving aught save a general notion of the motives animating the actors in the drama was out of the question. Thus, the Queen and the Cardinal, two of the most prominent personages, are omitted. The King becomes a mere passing shadow. To fill up this gap Father Joseph is thrust into the foreground, and thus obtains an importance bearing some likeness to the abnormal size which frequently renders the hands the most striking features, if I may employ such a quasi bull, in photographic portraits. The upshot of all this is that for those acquainted with the romance, the libretto appears somewhat unsatisfactory and rapid; the mutilation to which a favourite literary masterpiece has been subjected rendering them to a certain extent incapable of appreciating the music. As for those entirely ignorant of the novel, the effect of all this cutting and slashing is to render their comprehension of the libretto a matter of extreme difficulty. The initiated do not require to be told that this is a pity. A fact considered weighty enough to be bruited about in connection with Cinq-Mars is that M. Gounod was no more than three weeks in composing the music. When M. Carvalho succeeded M. Du Locle at the Opéra-Comique, ten years had elapsed since the composer of Le Médecin malgré lui, Philémon et Baucis, Faust, Mireille, and Roméo et Juliette had produced anything on the lyric stage. One of the first steps taken by M. Carvalho was to ask for a new work from the musician with whom he had achieved such triumphs at the old Théâtre-Lyrique in days gone by. The librettists immediately set to work. In a month they were ready. In three weeks, or, more correctly speaking, six-and-twenty days, afterwards, M. Gounod had completed the score. Particular stress has been laid upon this feat. In my opinion wrongly. When discussing any work of art, the main point should be the merit of the work, and not the period consumed in its production. In instances of this kind I cannot but revert to Lucilius, who—

"In horâ sæpe ducentos,

Ut magnum, versus dictabat, stans pede in uno ;"
nor can I forget the next line wherein Horace remarks:—

"Erat quod tollere velles."

That M. Gounod should in so short a time have composed Cinq-Mars is wonderful; but, had he taken twice as long, he might, perhaps, have composed something better. That is my reason for not agreeing with those who attach unusual value to the rapidity with which the composer accomplished his task.

Overture, in the acceptance given to the word by musicians, there is none. In its place, we have a short introduction, terminating with a funeral march, which foreshadows, as it were, the tragic termination of the opera. The first act is laid at the Château of the Maréchale d'Effiat, mother of Cinq-Mars, as the latter, summoned by the great Cardinal, is about to start for the Court. Here is a good opportunity of which the librettists have availed themselves for introducing a double chorus;

"A la Cour vous allez paraître."

Then comes a duet, the "Duo du Livre," between Cinq-Mars and De Thou. The point here is the perusal by the two friends of a passage, which, in the words: "Ils furent aussitôt frappés du même glaive et leur sang se mêla dans le même tombeau," announces their own fate. "Ainsi soit-il!" is their comment, repeated by Father Joseph, the "Eminence grise," despatched by the Cardinal to bid Cinq-Mars hasten to the King, and inform the Princess Marie de Gonzague that she is destined to become Queen of Poland. This sudden intelligence gives the two young people courage to confess the passion long latent in their breasts, and, after a cantilena,

"Nuit resplendissante et silencieuse," sung by the Princess, bearing a family likeness to the air which Marguerite warbles at her window, in Faust, the lovers sing a duet, the principal phrase in which:

"Faut-il donc oublier les beaux jours envolés?"

is happily conceived.

The second act is divided into two scenes. In the first we perceive Cinq-Mars on the pinnacle of happiness, having gained the King's favour and obtained his consent to marry Marie Gonzague. Especially worthy remark is a chorus sung by the Courtiers—

"Ah! Monsieur le grand écuyer, Permettez que l'on vous salue" full of spirit and caustic humour. Its only misfortune is that it reminds one of the chorus, "Vous voyez si je suis un ami" in Les Huguenots. Once more Father Joseph appears—charged by the Cardinal to say that, any promise of the King's to Cinq-Mars notwithstanding, the Princess Marie must marry the King of Poland. Here follows a trio which concludes scene one. In scene two, we are in the house of Marion Delorme, witnessing a ballet, à la Watteau, the music written in the style of the period. This is succeeded by the scene of the conspiracy, culminating in the line:—

"Sauvons le roi, sauvons la noblesse, et la France."

In the third act we have a hunting chorus, with a good deal of blowing of horns. The gem of the act, and perhaps of the opera, is the trio, "Ah! Venez que devant l'autel," for Marie de Gonzague, Cinq-Mars, and De Thou. There is, also, an air for Father Joseph, who comes to inform the Princess that the only chance of saving Cinq-Mars, to whom she has been secretly married, is a separation from him and a union with the King of Poland. The luckless girl consenting, is affianced in presence of Louis XIII. to her Royal suitor:

The fourth act transports us to the Château de Pierre-Encise. First comes a duet between Cinq-Mars and De Thou, lying under sentence of death. This is succeeded by a duet between Cinq-Mars and the Princess, one phrase of which, is sung in turn by tenor and soprano. The whole winds up with a finale, comprising the funeral march of the prelude, and a canticle, on the prophetic words read by the two friends in the first act. The canticle brings the piece to an impressive conclusion.

"A ta voix le ciel s'est ouvert,"

The performance was generally good. Considering that Mlle Chevrier is a beginner, she did extremely well. She possesses a pleasing exterior and sings very nicely, but this does not suffice for such a part as Marie de Gonzague. Managers in the receipt of pecuniary grants from the State ought to be subjected to certain conditions, one being that they should not allow novices to appear. I have no doubt that, in time, Mlle Chevrier will hold a respectable, if not an eminent, position in her new profession; but common sense suggests that the fate of Cinq-Mars should never have been, to a certain extent, entrusted to a young lady whose experience, the fruit of long practice in the provinces, did not offer some guarantee that the confidence reposed in her would be justified. Mlle Chevrier's efforts have, it is true, been crowned with more success than anyone had a right to expect—but the risk was imminent. Mad. Franck-Duvernoy, in a part (Marion Delorme) not suited to her, sang effectively in the second act. Mlle Philippine Lévy was an admirable singing Shepherd, of the Dresden China type, in the divertissement, which owes much to Mlle Marquet's dancing. The new tenor, M. Dereims, has a good stage presence. His voice is pleasing but not strong. De Thou found an able representative in M. Stéphane, transformed, for the nonce, from a tenor into a baritone. M. Giraudet gave importance to the part of Father Joseph. M. C. Lamoureux rendered yeoman's service with his orchestra, and M. Heyberger with the chorus. The dresses are in the best taste; the scenery is good. In a word, Cinq-Mars is, at least, a succès d'estime, but by no means a work likely to add to M. Gounod's repute as a dramatic composer.

ROME.—Signor Boito's Mefistofele has been performed at the Teatro Apollo. The composer had twenty-four calls. (!)

ST JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S
Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his SEVENTEENTH Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the following Afternoons:—

FRIDAY, May 4, 1877.
FRIDAY, May 11, "
FRIDAY, May 18, "
FRIDAY, May 25, "

FRIDAY, June 1, 1877.
FRIDAY, June 8, "
FRIDAY, June 15, "
SATURDAY, June 23, "

As on several previous occasions, Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, during the following Series, will introduce Concerted Music into his programmes, each Recital to terminate with one of Beethoven's Trios for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. In addition to the three Trios, in E flat, G and C minor, Op. 1, the two in D and E flat, Op. 70, and the Grand Trio in B flat, dedicated to the Archduke Rodolphe (Op. 93), presented in chronological order, the Variations on the air, "Ich bin der Schneider Kakadu," Op. 131a, and the Variations in E flat, Op. 44, will be included—the latter for the first time. The programme on every occasion will contain a work by Johannes Brahms, comprising, among other compositions, the Quintet in F minor, the three Quartets for pianoforte and stringed instruments, the Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello; the Trio for pianoforte, violin, and horn; the Sonata in F sharp minor, for pianoforte, solus, &c. The remaining items will be selected from the works of masters universally recognised as "classic," as well as from those by distinguished representatives of the modern school. Mr HALLÉ will play Schubert's Fantasia in C major, Op. 15; Schumann's Fantasia in the same key, Op. 17; "Kreisleriana," Op. 16; "Davidbundler Tanze," Op. 6; and "Soñes Mignonnes" ("Carnaval"), Op. 9; Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor, &c., &c.

For the concerted pieces, Mr HALLÉ has secured the co-operation of M^{me} NORMAN NEBUDA and Herr LUDWIG STRAUS (violin), Herr FRANZ NEBUDA (violoncello), and other eminent Artists. With their aid he hopes to impart to his programmes such variety as may afford satisfaction to his many and constant supporters.

Each Recital will occupy two hours in performance—commencing at Three o'clock and ending at Five p.m.

The customary analytical notices will accompany the programmes.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

	For the Series.	Single Tickets.
Sofa Stalls, numbered and reserved	£2 2 0	£3 7 0
Balcony	1 1 0	0 3 0
Area		0 1 0

Subscriptions received at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Ollivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse, & Co., 48, Cheapside; Hay's, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

Subscribers wishing their Seats reserved are requested to notify their intention to Messrs Chappell & Co., on or before Monday, May 1.

DEATH.

On April 6, at Kidlington, near Oxford, ALEXANDER ROBERT REINAGLE, in his 78th year.

With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive four pages extra, and again, from TIME TO TIME, as expedient.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1877.

Episodes on Change.

DR SHIPPING.—You have heard Gayarré at Gye's?

DR QUINCE.—Yes.

DR SHIPPING.—Do you like him?

DR QUINCE.—Yes.

DR SHIPPING.—I have not seen him; but Mapleson has engaged Gayarré, whom I heard at Buenos Ayres.

DR QUINCE.—Do you like him?

DR SHIPPING.—Yes.

DR QUINCE.—I wonder if he is as good Gayarré?

DR SHIPPING.—I've no idea. I shall go in for Gayarré.

DR QUINCE.—I shall go in for Gayarré.

[Exeunt severally, to Russian and Turkish.]

IN our last impression we quoted an article about Gysi, from that spirited new journal, Mayfair. This led to such fierce and wide-spread discussion, that we are induced now to quote an article about Wagner, from the same leaf:—

"Whatever the financial and artistic success of the Wagner concerts at the Albert Hall may be, they will not pass by without making a good deal of noise in more than one sense. It is a favourite custom with modern critics to compare great singers and composers with celestial luminaries. Wagner undoubtedly belongs to the stars of first magnitude, but he is not, like Mozart, or Handel, or Mendelssohn, a planet of quiet and sustained beauty for everyone to worship and admire; rather may he be likened to an enormous comet lighting up the heavens with fierce splendour, and portending storm and earthquake and internecine war.

"Signs of the latter have preceded his promised arrival by more than a month. Friendly voices have been raised in the English press greeting his advent, but the spirit of enmity and predetermined fault-finding has become equally noticeable, and a prominent daily contemporary has not thought it beneath its dignity to revive an absurd story of a pair of kid gloves put on at the wrong moment and with sinister purpose. Is not a quarter of a century time enough to forget and forgive? And besides, what is there much to forgive? Wagner is said to dislike Mendelssohn's music, and to have pronounced that fact in a manner more emphatic than dignified. He may, in that respect, have shown want of judgment and tact, but has that anything to do with the value and beauty of his own music? Is he the only great artist who refused to acknowledge another creative mind antagonistic, or not akin to his own? Did not Mendelssohn dislike Schumann's music, and Schumann Wagner's, and did not Cherubini speak of Beethoven's with a contempt that in a smaller man would have been as ludicrous as in him it was deplorable. And yet nobody has dared to assert with regard to these composers that narrowness of vision in particular cases implied want of original creativeness; rather the reverse.

"It may be said with some show of truth that Wagner himself has provoked much of the hostile feeling shown towards him from the very outset of his career. He likes the fight for the fight's sake, and a phrenologist would no doubt discover a beautiful development of the 'combative bump' on the composer's cranium. Wagner's wholesale attacks on fellow composers and conductors, on theatrical managers and singers and critics, and 'The Jews' in general, are but too notorious, and, what is worse, the master's idiosyncrasies have been grotesquely exaggerated and repeated, ad nauseam, by a herd of imitators. Much as all this may be deprecated it ought not to be forgotten on the other hand that Wagner's polemic has done immense service in clearing the atmosphere of theatrical life. There are, of course, candid worshippers of things existing, who see in the modern operatic stage the best possible of dramatic developments in the best possible of worlds. But persons less endowed with the enviable gift of optimism have long deplored the increasing want of rhyme and reason in the libretti of our days, combined with a coarseness of musical and spectacular effects at which Gluck and Mozart would have shuddered. To such observers Wagner's charges appear just, although too sweepingly applied, and they are willing to remember that the slaying of a singer like Marsyas was not thought unworthy the god of light and song.

"As regards more especially Wagner's intended visit to this country, it would be most advisable for friends and foes to sink all personal considerations for a season. We shall have to deal with the composer and conductor, not with the critic. However much the latter may have sinned or been sinned against, this is not the time for further offence or resentment. The most primitive duties of hospitality and generosity ought to damp our critical ire. For Wagner's music, it must be borne in mind, will appear to disadvantage on the occasion we speak of. It is all but inseparably wedded to dramatic action, and the concert-room for it is a land of exile. The Albert Hall, moreover, has not as yet established its reputation for acoustics, and whether the Music of the Future will be able to rouse its echoes to harmonious concord remains to be seen. On the other hand there will be a splendid opportunity for dispelling an old and deeply-rooted prejudice. Wagner's antagonists are apt to account for the undesirable but equally undeniable success of his works, wherever they are adequately put on the stage, by what they are pleased to call the spectacle, refusing to acknowledge the difference between beautiful and picturesque scenery, introduced with poetic intent, and the coarse pageantry of the ordinary operatic stage. This spectacle they allege to be the essence of Wagner's art, the music being only a kind of accidental accompaniment without sufficient melodious stamina to support a separate and independent existence. This opinion will be set at defiance by Wagner's appearance at the Albert Hall, and this boldness alone ought to be sufficient to secure for his music, what English critics have hitherto been slow in granting, a fair judgment on its own merits."

It is to be devoutly wished, in spite of the foregoing, that there will be menaces or splitting of craniums.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

THE Emperor of Germany has received, as a present from some well-meaning amateur, a collection of autograph MSS., comprising, among other things, the four volumes of sketches made by Beethoven for his symphony in F (No. 8); a symphony by Schubert (who seldom made sketches); two quintets by Spohr; and pieces by Weber and Thalberg. As the Emperor lays no pretensions whatever to a knowledge of music, it is hard to guess why the well-meaning amateur should have confided such treasures to His Majesty, instead of to some public library or museum. Possibly that may still be their ultimate destination.

THE MS. copy of an unpublished three-act opera, called Jean de Chimay, composed by Auber in his early time, twelve years before his Séjour Militaire was produced at the Théâtre Feydeau (1813), has been presented to the Bibliothèque de Brussels. It was written when the great French musician was on a visit at the Chateau Chimay, where he was always hospitably received. As Auber was born in 1784, he can scarcely have been more than seventeen when employed upon this opera. It is not impossible that the original MS. may be obtained for the library of the Paris Conservatoire, whose valuable collection of MS. scores of Auber would, by so interesting an addition, be rendered still more complete.

TO-DAY we are promised, at the Crystal Palace, three hours with Anton Rubinstein, the entire programme being made up from that composer's music, he also being pianist and conductor. This is a severe test—too severe, we think, in the present instance.

SPEAKING of Mad. Catalani in connection with a concert given by her at Liverpool in 1822, the critic of a local paper says: "Such was the torrent of sound she emitted at one moment, that the glass globules pendant from the central chandelier were powerfully agitated and struck against each other."

THE late Dr Edward Rimbault left, at his death, an unpublished Cantata, which will shortly be issued by Messrs Curwen & Sons. The words, selected from various poets, relate the incidents of country life during the seasons of the year; and the music, in the old English style, is said to be melodious and genial.

THE other day a lady and gentleman were listening very attentively to Hector Berlioz's music, at one of M. Colonne's Châtelet Concerts. "That is fine," remarked the lady; "what is it?" "My dear," replied the gentleman, after a glance at his bill, "it is La Damnation de Faust." Then, assuming the air of a connoisseur, he added: "Like Gounod's Faust, it is taken from a novel by Werther, a German writer, with whom you are acquainted."

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

MISS ALISON LEIGH gave an evening concert at Seymour Hall, Portman Square, on Tuesday, April 10. Miss Leigh, Miss Amy Harold, Miss Barton, Mr King, and Mr Balfour sang various pieces, Mr Ch. J. Bishenden, being encored in the "Village Blacksmith," substituted "The Outlaw," after which he was twice "called." Mr Bishenden also sang, "Thus saith the Lord" (Messiah), which he repeated, and joined Mr Balfour in "The Lord is a man of war." The concert gave much satisfaction. Herr Schuberth conducted.

MIDDLE ST GERMAINE'S soirée musicale, in aid of the building fund of St John the Baptist, Kensington, took place at her residence, 44, Holland Road, on Wednesday evening, April 4th. Middle St Germaine accompanied all the songs and part-songs given by her pupils, who did ample justice to their able instructress. "Charity," part-song by Rossini, and "The Reapers" (Pinsuti), were well sung by the ladies of Middle St Germaine's class. The scena from Il Trovatore, "The Miserere," by Mrs Stretton (amateur), and Mr Strong, in conjunction with the ladies of the class, was loudly applauded. John Barnett's "Magic Wove Scarf" (trio) sung by Mrs Stretton and Messrs Strong and Connery, produced a marked effect. Mr Connery was loudly called after "The King's Highway," for which he bowed his acknowledgment. Randegger's trio, "I Naviganti," capitolally sung, completed the vocal part of the concert. The Misses Allitsen, although announced in the programme, were unable to appear through indisposition. Miss Lillie Albrecht, who gave two solos, the Scherzo in B flat (Chopin), and Döhler's Fantaisie on Guillaume Tell, with perfect taste and brilliant execution, received genuine applause. The evening was altogether a success.—A. B.

PROVINCIAL.

AXMINSTER.—On Thursday evening, the 5th April, a concert of an attractive character took place in the boys' room, at the Board Schools, assisted by many amateurs with the musical members of the Axminster Literary and Musical Society. The pianoforte playing of Miss Shapley, pupil of Mr F. B. Jewson, at the Royal Academy of Music, was the feature of the evening. The brilliant execution of Miss Shapley, especially in Thalberg's "Home, sweet home," charmed the audience, and in two compositions by F. B. Jewson, "Twilight" (Nocturne) and "Alexandra" (Valse Brillante) the young artist won golden opinions. Mr Webber conducted. The arrangement of the room was excellent and decorations admirable. The concert was in aid of the funds of the Axminster Cricket Club. The room was completely filled.—PULMAN.

BRIGHTON.—Mr Staniforth (organist of St Margaret's Church, Brighton) gave his annual concert in the Dome Assembly Rooms, on Wednesday evening, April 4. The vocalists were Miss Catherine Penna (her first appearance in Brighton), Mr Wilford Morgan, Mr Frank Elmore, and a choir of about fifty voices. The instrumentalists were the band of the 20th Hussars and Mr Worsley Staniforth, organist. Miss Catherine Penna sang Rossini's "Una Voce" in splendid style, and a hearty call was awarded to her. In the second part she achieved equal success in Benedict's "Skylark." In her own composition, "Absence," and in Bishop's "Bid me discourse" she also obtained hearty applause. Her début was a decided success. Mr Wilford Morgan was deservedly called after "My Sweetheart when a boy."

LEEDS.—Herr Wilhelm's concert party, under the direction of Messrs Hodge & Essex, have been here. The Hungarian violinist made a great "hit." His playing was much admired. The Yorkshire Post praises him highly, and also compliments the vocalists, especially Miss Allitsen, whose rendering of Mr Hullah's "Three Fishers," obtained a unanimous encore. Herr Niemann was the pianist, and his performances were duly appreciated.

WALTHAM (Essex).—A musical entertainment was given with success in the Literary Institution, on Easter Tuesday, by Miss Isabel Ferguson and Mr J. B. Balfour, entitled "English Songs—Old and New." Several ballads, well sung by both vocalists, had to be repeated.

GREENOCK.—The Choral Union gave Mendelssohn's oratorio, St Paul, on Friday evening, April 6, to an audience that completely filled the Town Hall. The solo vocalists were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Emily Done, Mr Thurlay Beale, and Mr Charles Abercrombie, whose "style and method are both good"—says the Greenock Telegraph—"and his voice of considerable power and purity. His singing of 'Men, Brethren, and Fathers!' and the following recitatives, were artistic and finished. Mr. Cole was the leader; Mr Pouller, organist; and Mr Cross, conductor. The choruses were, with a few exceptions, well sung by the members of the Choral Union.

UXBRIDGE.—The last concert of the Choral Society was given in the public rooms on the 5th inst. The artists were Mrs Osgood, Mr Barton McGuckin, Signor Federici, Mr L. Szczepanowski (violin), Mr T. Mountain (harmonium), and Mr J. Walsh (pianoforte). The choir, consisting of 120 voices, sang with great precision several of Handel's choruses, and, in the second part, various madrigals, choruses, and part-songs. Mr Henry Leslie's "Lullaby," Schumann's "Gipsy life," and Smart's "Stars of the summer night," being particularly well rendered. The solo vocalists were all very successful. The more noticeable "numbers" were "I know that my Redeemer liveth" and Gounod's "Ave, Maria," by Mrs Osgood; "But thou didst not leave," by Mr McGuckin; and "There is a green hill" (Gounod), by Signor Federici. M. Szczepanowski created quite a sensation in the andante and finale of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, and was joined by Messrs Mountain and A. D. Miles in the entr'acte from Gounod's La Colombe, arranged as a trio for violin, harmonium, and pianoforte. Mr A. D. Miles conducted.—A. D. M.

THE LATE WILLIAM CHANNING.

This celebrated scenic artist, after a painful and wasting illness of about seven months, died, at Leith, on Saturday, the 31st March. He was born about the beginning of the present century, and studied at Covent Garden under the famous Zara, from whose instructions he profited much, and acquired that felicity of execution for which he was subsequently distinguished. In after life he passed many years in Edinburgh, and painted scenery under several managers in turn—Murray, Black, and Wyndham—his labours there being highly appreciated. He was a man of good social qualities, well read, genial, and an enthusiast in his own profession, while he also appreciated poetry and music. From 1845 onwards, for several years, he and Mr Sam Bough, R.S.A., worked together as scenic artists, and till the last hour of his life remained warm friends. The funeral took place on Tuesday, the 3rd inst., at Warriston cemetery, when there were present the following gentlemen: W. N. Robertson, Esq., of Maturatta House, Edinburgh (brother-in-law of Mrs Channing), Mr D. Baptie (brother-in-law of deceased, who was chief mourner), Sam. Bough, Esq., R.S.A., the Rev. Mr Strong, Mr A. Wilson, and a few personal friends and neighbours of the deceased. The service was impressively read by the Rev. Mr Strong, after which the party sorrowfully broke up, having paid the last tribute to the memory of William Howard Channing.

MISS MELLER.

(Communicated.)

A young lady pianist, Miss Clara Meller, from London, has been attracting the attention of the musical critics in Leipsic, where she has made successful débuts at a matinée, and at a concert at the Gewandhaus. She again appeared at the Euterpe Concert in that town on the 27th February, after fulfilling engagements in company with Mme Peschka Leutner, where she was most favourably received, the Continental papers speaking in high terms of her talent. The Leipsic press are loud in her praise, especially of her rendering, without the aid of notes, Beethoven's concerto in G major.—[Why "without the aid of notes?" What good purpose can that serve? —D. P.]

Wasku and Habe x.

What a wonderful man is Chatterton!
What a deal he must have to patter on!
To manage three Theatres right off the reel,
And keep, ready wigged, three Judges of Appeal!

To Sutherland Edwards, Esq.

Benwell.

THE CLIFFORD DRAMATIC CLUB.

A very numerously attended performance, under the immediate patronage of the Duchess of Richmond and Gordon, was given by the members of this club, on Saturday, the 7th inst., at St George's Hall, Langham Place, for the benefit of the Ladies' Industrial Society, 11, Porchester Street, Hyde Park. The programme included the farce of "Matrimonial. A Gentleman," etc., by J. V. Bridgeman, first produced at the Olympic with Mr Compton in the principal part; a Selection of Music; and H. J. Craven's drama of Miriam's Crime. The farce went off very well, Mr H. J. Levett rattling amusingly through the character of Chintip, while Miss L. Clare was pretty and arch as Jenny. The other personages found more or less able representatives in Mrs James Davey, Messrs James Davey, A. R. Fishbourne, A. Stanley, W. H. Malony, and —, the gentleman officiating as prompter, who, though "lost to sight," as far as the audience were concerned, was evidently "to Memory dear," when Memory happened, as was too frequently the case, in the farce, to fail those who had not studied sufficiently to please her. A pleasing feature in the Musical Selection was the rendering of Hatton's quartet, "Good Night, Beloved," and "The Hemlock Tree," by Messrs Ratcliffe, Mills, Curtis, and Treherne. So favourable was the impression produced by these gentlemen that their non-appearance to sing two more quartets set down for them in the bill caused general regret. The solo vocalists, Mdle Ester Marini, Mdle Gabrielle Rubini, Miss Emily Laing, and Mr Reginald Soppitt, gave several songs with taste and feeling, and received in return loud and frequent marks of approbation. Biles and Scumley, the two principal male characters in Miriam's Crime were entrusted respectively to Messrs A. Stanley and W. Leighton, who fully justified the confidence placed in them by their fellow members, and the applause bestowed on them by the audience. Mr Stanley's make-up and acting as Biles were redolent of genuine humour, and provoked continuous roars of laughter. As Scumley, Mr W. Leighton displayed a distinctness of conception and power of realisation which rendered his impersonation vivid and impressive. His make-up, like that of Mr A. Stanley, was excellent. Mr R. Tyser acquitted himself creditably in a task—that of playing a lover—which is far more difficult than the uninitiated suppose. His Bernard Reynolds, though, perhaps, too subdued, was gentlemanly and effective. Mr Hugh Marston was a good representative of Hufin, the family lawyer, and Mr J. Levett was very funny as Daniel, a servant, who, with the richest of brogues, is always denying his Hibernian nationality.

In consequence of a domestic bereavement in the family of Mrs G. Belmore, Mrs Leigh Murray undertook, at a few hours' notice, the part of Miriam West. In handbills distributed about the Hall, the management requested "the kind indulgence" of the audience for the lady "in attempting a rôle so entirely out of her line," but the request was entirely superfluous. Mrs Leigh Murray not only was letter-perfect, notwithstanding the short notice, short enough to have made even an outfitter quail, but played the character as none but an accomplished actress could, and as though she had spent weeks in its elaboration. There was not the slightest trace of haste or uncertainty. The picture she presented of the heroine was worked out with a vigour and force of emotion, tempered by the most feminine gentleness, and an attention to the nicest gradations of light and shade, which held the audience captive, and fairly surprised those who had never before seen Mrs Leigh Murray in such a part, and were, therefore, ignorant of the varied nature of her talent. Such persons must have had some difficulty in believing that the lady who on Saturday last enlisted all sympathies as Miriam West was the lady who but a short time since had been representing for months a personage so diametrically different to Mr Craven's heroine, namely: the ill-natured, calumnious, back-biting Mrs Crossley Beck at the Prince of Wales's, and by her true and unobtrusive art merging her own pleasant individuality in the peculiarly disagreeable and aggravating idiosyncrasy of the highly objectionable female in question.

Miss Clara Lee was another lady who, at the same short notice, kindly came to the assistance of the distressed Cliffordiana, and by her clever, lady-like acting in the farce lent importance to a part, that of Emily, hardly worthy of her.

COLOGNE.—Mad. Pauline Lucca lately played a star engagement of three nights at the Stadttheater, the operas being Aida, Les Huguenots, and Il Trovatore. In consequence of her success, she was engaged for another night, appearing as Mignon in Ambroise Thomas's opera of the same name. During her stay, she received a deputation from Brussels, asking her to accept a post of professora in the Conservatory of that city. She declined the proffered honour, having resolved to retire altogether from public life, Hauptmann on Wagner.*

In the concert of Schröder-Devrient several interesting things were given; among others, the overture to Ruy Blas by Mendelssohn, and scenes from the opera Rienzi by Richard Wagner, which he himself directed. In Wagner's music I have found far more of stretching and straining than of solid satisfying matter. One cannot judge, to be sure, of the effect of a whole opera after a few single pieces; but the kind of music is very manifest in them, and that pleases me not; it is, again, the unmusical kind, which clings to the expression of the single details, which, where joy and sorrow are the subject, holds the two apart and seeks to express each musically by itself. That is setting things to music as the watch-makers understand it, when they speak of setting a watch in oil, where every peg is tipped with oil. But the words should be set to music as one sets a fish into the water, taking them out of the dry and separating element of the understanding into the mediating, fluid element of feeling. That is how the Italians do it, and those artistically related to them, like Mozart and Spohr—who will not take it ill of me that I count them among these. When we speak of Italians we are not to think only of Donizetti and Bellini, but of Raphael, Leonardo and Titian—of the finest flowers of art.—(1842.)

Tannhäuser has been given three times here. The applause was still undecided in itself; not that it was not loud; but one hears even in the clapping of hands whether it comes from a sure or doubtful feeling of applause. The future alone can make it clear. I heard the opera on its first performance, had also heard it several years ago in Dresden, where it was very well given; but just as little here as there was I at the end of it in such a mood as one ought to be after a good work of art—in a harmonic, satisfied mood. Such music costs the hearer a continual strain. An opera on which the composer has laboured for months we have to hear through in three hours; he has had hours and days of recreation in the course of it, but to us is granted not a moment; the hearer also needs some rest, some intermission, but he does not find it in such a work, which keeps on steadily without any moments of repose. The Hymn of the Pilgrims, which returns so often in the opera, might have formed a moment of repose, against which the more passionate moment would be set off in stronger relief; but even this hymn is tortured both in melody and harmony, and seems given to the chorus singers only to put them out of tune. It is perhaps designed to express the contrition and remorse of the pilgrims; but this was hardly the place to make that prominent; a quiet element might have come in here quite fitly in a poetic and artistic manner. Even the song of the shepherd boy, after the first impassioned scene in the Venusberg, is only a melodic, or an unmelodic, curiosity; and it is very improper in the youngster, after he has taken notice of the pilgrim procession and has kneeled down, to intrude his piping (Schalmeygedudel) into the pauses of the choral strain.—The minstrels' contest, with its continuous declamatory 4-4 measure, is now and then very tedious. In the third act, the long recited narrative of Tannhäuser, about the result of his pilgrimage to Rome, is also not a fortunate dramatic moment. Musically many things in Lohengrin have pleased me better than anything in Tannhäuser. There we have some choruses of most beautiful sonority. Yet Lohengrin as a whole must be fatiguing in a high degree. But it is meant and done in earnest; the whole man is in it throughout; and that is respectable. The poetic element certainly is very significant; but there is wanting an artistic element to bear up freely the impassioned subject-matter which so weighs upon us, which, being without form, as bare realism oppresses and torments us. When one comes out of a drama or an opera feeling as if bruised and crushed, there is something not quite right about it.—(1859).

BERLIN.—Manfred, with Schumann's music, has been produced at the Royal Operahouse with decided success. Herr Radecke was the conductor.

RAPALLO (Liguria).—The theatre here was recently burnt to the ground. During the fire the landlord, Signor Rainuffo, was seen to enter the building and disappear amid the flames and smoke. A shudder ran through the crowd. What could be his motive? Had he determined, driven mad by his loss, to commit suicide, or had he bravely risked his life to save that of a fellow-creature? The anxiety of all present was intense. Luckily, it was not very prolonged. In a few minutes Signor Rainuffo emerged triumphantly from the incandescent mass. The pent up feelings of the multitude found relief in a ringing shout. He had rescued his—crash-hat.

* From Hauptmann's Letter to Spohr—translated for Dwight's Boston Journal of Music.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

"The play is o'er, the curtain drops,
Slow falling to the prompter's bell.
The tired actor looks around
And makes his bow to say farewell!"

or, in other words than those of the great author of Vanity Fair, the theatrical season at Boulogne-sur-Mer was brought to a close on Sunday the 25th March. Benefits were in vogue during the last month of the season. One which was very well attended was for the Lyonnais workpeople. The pieces given since my last letter were Jeanne, Jeannette et Jeanne-ton, Barbe Bleue, La Mendiante, Les Enfants, Le Supplice d'une Femme, and two clever "local pieces," Une Scandale de Boulogne and Une Fable de la Fntaine. On Monday, March 26th, the artists took the theatre on their own account, and gave Les Deux Aveugles, Le Supplice d'une Femme, Scandale de Boulogne, a miscellaneous concert, and last, not least, a "Tombola," a prize in the shape of a live sheep (!) which was won by "a small child" in the pit. There have been several concerts and "Tombolas" in the town for the benefit of the poor Lyonnais workpeople. I wonder some of you English do nothing for their benefit. Make a committee of ladies and "gentlemen of the long robe," who all wear silk, and get up a good concert! Eh?

M. Quettier of this town has taken the Salle des Concert, Rue Siblequin, and is giving "Conférences sur le Théâtre" three times a week. The first was on "Les Medecins au temps de Molière," illustrated by the play of Le Malade Imaginaire, Trombalcasa and Cerette en Prison were also given. These entertainments will make a "passe-temps" during the three months' recess.

For the information of visitors to Boulogne, the tickets for the season at the Etablissement des Bains, admitting till January, 1878, to concerts, balls, &c., if taken before May 1st, are 20 fr. (16s.) each. After that date, 30 fr. will be charged; but monthly and fortnightly admission tickets in proportion will be issued—a step in the right direction. Let us hope the Direction will be better carried out this season.

X. T. R.

Boulogne-sur-Mer, 4th April, 1877.

BALFE'S TRIO IN A.

(From the "Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.")

The name of Balfe is dear to all who take interest in the cause of English art, and the trio (in A major) for piano and strings served to show that, independently of his facility and brilliancy as a composer of operas, he possessed the power of creating "abstract" music, capable of satisfying the demands of severe criticism. His trio contains the usual four movements, all of which are conspicuously melodious and well-written, and one of them (the scherzo) so bright and sparkling that it was enthusiastically encored. In style, the trio approaches rather to Haydn and Mozart than to the work of such modern lights as Rheinberger and Brahms. It is free from affectation and eccentricity, and pleases at once. Balfe has something to say, which may be neither recondite nor transcendental in its scope, but is worth listening to, and is clearly told. It is the fashion with a few soi-disant critics to prefer the mysterious compositions which "can only be thoroughly comprehended and enjoyed after four or five auditions." But if art of this kind be unquestionably long, it is equally certain that life is short, and the majority of mankind must be pardoned if they cherish the opinion that it is wiser to partake of enjoyments that are immediate, facile, and obvious, than to undertake a series of expeditions in search of treasures whose existence may possibly be doubtful. The best music is not that which is at first repugnant, though afterwards acceptable, but rather that which pleases when first heard, and unfolds fresh sources of delight at every hearing. Without claiming this rare kind of distinction for Balfe's A major trio, it may be said of it that it is a bright, melodious, and satisfactory work, which must always be heard with pleasure, and add to the reputation of its composer.

NANTES.—Hamlet has been performed at the Grand-Théâtre, the expense of the scenery being defrayed by the town.

DREFF.—M. Bias, the new manager of the Casino, is erecting a theatre, close to the sea, to form part of that establishment.

BRUSSELS.—In consequence of a slight illness, Mad. Christine Nilsson was compelled to defer her engagement at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, and to reduce the number of her performances from six to three. She is announced to appear this evening.

MUSIC IN CATHEDRALS.

At the usual monthly meeting of the Musical Association, held at 27, Harley Street, Cavendish Square, Mr W. A. Barrett read a paper on "Music in Cathedrals." He said that he wished to offer a few suggestions for the continuation of that long-needed improvement in the use and management of cathedrals which had been so happily inaugurated of recent times, and he could only regret that they did not originate with the cathedral authorities, but were accepted as necessities arising from external pressure. The present time was one in which music and musicians were receiving a worthy recognition, commensurate with their position and profession. Musicians had earned the right to speak, and could command some attention for what they had to advance. After alluding at some length to the unsatisfactory manner in which choristers and lay clerks were treated in most cathedrals, he said that the precentors at cathedrals should be laymen and professional musicians, skilled in the knowledge of music. He would not, however, exclude a truly competent clerical precentor, one who had graduated in music at his college, for instance, but the office should not be held by an amateur, whether clerical or lay. With regard to the character of the music, he considered that every style of good music of all ages should be represented at one time or another during the year, but some preference should be given to that which was expressly written for the use of the Church over that which was a mere adaptation from one popular composer or another. The introduction of adaptations had led to a system of prolonging sentences and fitting certain expressions with corresponding scale passages with a very unsatisfactory result. That process of word-worrying was irritating in the extreme. In fact, the art of cathedral singing was lost, and chorus singing had taken its place. Vocalisation had given place to vociferation. Writers of cathedral music wrote theatrical and sensational—not emotional—stuff, knowing that it commanded the market, and until the right-minded composers could obtain a hearing the gaps in church music would be filled by those who spoilt a good cause for their own profit. Music, which formed so important a part in the services of the Church, until lately had hardly received the attention or encouragement which it deserved and demanded. Musicians had begun to perceive that sentimentality with regard to their art was a ridiculous fancy, and that they had a right to be recognised as members of an industrial community who, having to meet certain claims of society, in their turn made demands which society must admit. The time was surely though slowly coming when works of art, furnished for the service of the Church, would become a source of great emolument, if not a fountain of honour, to the producer. A cathedral musician should be able to devote the whole of his talents to the service of the Church. He should not be compelled, as all were, to eke out existence by what were frequently undignified shifts. In conclusion, he remarked that they might do as they could for the elevation of music in cathedrals, but, until cathedral composers learnt to employ the liberty allowed them with a less degree of license than at present, the works of the old writers would stand as memorials of reproach for ill-used talents, and our cathedral music would go down to posterity, if not as a sorrow and a shame, at all events as nothing in the way worthy of their extended and extensive knowledge of the art of music. The proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to Mr Barrett.—Morning Post.

The Tripart "Signale" on Raff.

The fifth Euterpe Concert, on December 12th, had for its principal numbers: the Concerto in G minor, for string orchestra, two obbligato violins, and an obbligato violoncello, by Handel; the symphony, Lenore, by Raff; and the fantasia for piano, chorus, and orchestra, by Beethoven. The writer of these lines heard Raff's Symphony for the first time. His impression of it is about as follows: the first movement seems, in matter and in form, to belong to the best and most enjoyable that Raff has produced. The second movement (andante) has a very fair beginning, but in its further development grows more and more diffuse and rambling, and leaves at last an oppressive sense of irksomeness. The third movement (March) is, to our taste, somewhat vulgar, and offers only in its middle part some weak amends for its vulgarity, nay, almost triviality. Finally, the fourth movement—the direct musical illustration and description of Bürger's ballad, while the other movements are only occupied with the bliss of love and the separation of Leonora and Wilhelm, that is to say, with what precedes all that is contained in the poem—was to us one of the severest musical visitations that we have yet experienced; the rawest materialism and realism is here displayed, and the composer shrinks not from the most hideous, if only he may thus illustrate musically his underlying subject in the most drastic manner.—(Signale, January, 1877.)

BRAHMS' SYMPHONY.

The last concert at the Crystal Palace was remarkable for the production of the symphony, by Herr Brahms, about which, since its first performance at Cambridge, under the direction of Herr Joachim, there has been so much talk. As the only work of its form hitherto given to his art by the eminent composer, there has been naturally a great deal of curiosity connected with it. That curiosity will have more chances than one of being indulged; for, in addition to the recent performance at the Crystal Palace, there is another close at hand by the Philharmonic Society. Mr August Manns had taken infinite pains in preparing the symphony for the Crystal Palace audience; and we cannot call to mind a more admirable first performance of a long, elaborate, and difficult new piece—a performance, indeed, most creditable to everyone concerned. We find no reason to modify our early opinion as to the merits of this work; the first movement still appears to us spun out and somewhat laboured, the andante beautiful throughout, the third movement (allegretto grazioso) quaint and pretty, though verging on the commonplace, the finale, from the commencement of the allegro to the very end, a masterpiece—the whole rather the offspring of wonderful talent and acquirement than the inspiration of genius. Time will show.—Graphic.

HAUPTMANN ON RUBINSTEIN.*

I.

We have now the Russian Rubinstein here, who has let us hear a symphony called Ocean, a piano fantasia with orchestra, and a trio. These things were very imposing, and have received great applause. Ocean wallowed and floundered about a great deal; but if one is to find fault with that, he will make nothing out of it. Less floundering was the fantasia, but also less interesting. The trio is quite civilised, brilliant, easy to listen to, and euphonious, like altogether another man, escaped from the sea storm, refreshed, restored, his toilet made and entering a parlour. What does not please me in the compositions as a whole is, that with the unclearness, the intrinsic value seems to decrease; that when the mists are scattered the country is less beautiful than we may have imagined it before. But Rubinstein is a man of talent and an enormous player; few will be able to play his things after him.—(1855.)

II.

I take no pleasure in such compositions. So many of our young composers have had no poetic, harmless childhood in their art; they began in a state of desperation, with the Lost Paradise; and where are any reminiscences of the un-lost to come from, such as recur so often and so beautifully in Beethoven's very last and most despairing things, like echoes from the "fernen Geliebten" in the full bliss of the past. Instead of this we now get only dry disgust and loathing of all that is real, a haughty egotistical mood, which has and can have no faith in itself, but would fain persuade itself and others that there is something in it. What is not overstrained seems to them flat and insignificant; beauty, in their art doctrine, is a thing of no account. The finest art material, for which every other art may envy Music—TONE—is so tortured and so crushed by them that it can only shriek and whimper. And so we get an unmusical and toneless music; and what in earlier compositions has seemed dry and crabbed, now comes to us as paradisaically mild, compared to what we have to hear in the newest compositions.—(1855.)

TO AN ABSENT A.R.A.*

Oh! I fain would pay
Some tribute, this day,
To one who is absent,
But nought can I say—
Then feeling best shows
How his music still flows
O'er my memory now,
As when heard that last day.
Like some quiet brook,
As it glides from its nook,
And wanders through meadows,
With summerlike song;
While o'er its smooth face
Each reflection finds place,
Like thoughts in that music,
When winding along.

When wildly, my soul,
Those melodies roll,
They waken thine echoes,
Like waves of the sea,
When breaking, they pour
On the rough-beaten shore,
Against rocks that before
Were as silent as thee!
And oft in my dream,
Like violets they seem,
Which shed a sweet odour,
Though pluck'd from the stem;
His music again,
Like those roots which remain,
Shall spring, with fresh flowers,
In the covert like them.

* Copyright.

J. C. B.

* Letters of Hauptmann translated for Dwight's Journal of Music.

WAIFS.

Those who attended the first performance of Mr Gye's season found Covent Garden Theatre as worthy as ever to be the home of the most luxurious of all entertainments. Perhaps we should have said more worthy than common, inasmuch as every portion of the house, from the lobby to the gilded ceiling, showed that the hand of the restorer and decorator had passed over it. Even in such a matter as this there is an art—of which, by the way, Mr Gye ranks a master, on the strength of the fact that he tries to please even the eye that wanders from the stage, and always succeeds.—Daily Telegraph.

Signor Petrella, the well-known operatic composer, is dead.

The Italian papers assert that Signor Schira is engaged on a new grand opera for Mme Lucca, of Milan.

The Countess Delphine Potocka, née Countess Komar, a pupil and friend of Chopin's, died on the 3rd inst. in Paris.

Stella di Santa Lucia, by Sig. Testa, is the title of a new opera shortly to be produced at the Teatro Sannazaro, Naples.

The first performance of M. Massenet's Roi de Lahore at the Grand-Opéra is announced for Wednesday, the 18th inst.

Herr Schubert will introduce, to day, his new duo for violoncello and piano at his matinée musicale, at Londonderry House.

M. Maton has left the Ecole Duprez, where he held the post of accompanist, and founded a similar institution of his own.

A four-act opera, Gilles de Bretagne, has been accepted by M. Vizenini at the Théâtre-Lyrique, the music by M. Kowalski.

A two-act opera, Pépita, words by M. Nutter, music by M. Delahaye, was read last week to the artists of the Opéra-Comique.

The fiftieth anniversary of Beethoven's death was generally observed by special performances at the theatres throughout Germany.

Herr Niemann is announced to give three performances at the Stadttheater, Cologne. He has selected his three best characters, Rienzi, Lohengrin, and Tannhäuser.

Meyerbeer's Etoile du Nord has been performed at the Globe Theatre, Boston, U.S., by the Kellogg Opera Company, Miss Kellogg sustaining the part of the heroine.

Herr Leopold Auer, who produced so favourable an impression at a Leipsic Gewandhaus, will give concerts, in conjunction with Herr Carl Reinecke, at Königsberg and Riga.

The second concert of the eleventh season of the Schubert Society took place on Wednesday. Schumann's vocal and instrumental compositions formed the first part of the programme.

Richard Wagner has been to Meiningen, on a visit to the reigning Duke. A new work from his pen, entitled The Idyll of Siegfried, was performed at one of the Court concerts, under the direction of Wagner himself.

On the 11th of April, 1853, died in Paris Bernard Sarrette, founder and director of the Conservatory of Music. He occupied the post from 1795 to 1814. He was succeeded by Cherubini.

The Wagner Opera Festival commenced at Boston on the 26th March with The Flying Dutchman, occupying five nights and an afternoon. The other works were Lohengrin and Tannhäuser.

M. Gounod's new opera, Cinq-Mars, has been produced at the Paris Opéra-Comique. The libretto is founded upon Alfred de Vigny's once famous romance of that name. It is not believed to be a decided success.

An American maiden wrote to her lover: "Now George dont you fale to be at the singing-class to-night." George wrote back that: "In the bright lexicon of youth—Webster's Unabridged—there's no such word as Fale."

The twenty-first concert of the Leipsic Gewandhaus, last of the present series, was held recently. It has been frequently observed that since the death of Mendelssohn these once famous concerts have more or less gradually declined.

Mr John Towers, who resigned his appointment as organist at St Philips, Chorley, after ten years' service, has been appointed organist and choir-master at St Stephens, Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester. There were between fifty and sixty candidates.

Mlle Sylvia Rebel replaces Mlle Zina Dalti in La Courte Echelle, which will be produced about the end of the month at the Théâtre-Lyrique. She will, also, sustain the principal female part in La Statue, at the same theatre next November.

Longfellow says: "Some feelings are untranslatable; no language has been found for them." "For instance," observes the Boston Courier, "the feelings occasioned by sitting down on a wet sidewalk. The language of profanity has been tried in vain."

Félicien David's Désert has recently been performed at Saint-Germains, Marseilles, and Rheims. The musical performance was accompanied by a lecture on the composer and his works, the lecturer being M. de Lapommeraye, the well-known musical critic.

The Societa Armonica, under the direction of Miss Katharine Poyntz and Mr Duggan, resumed, last Saturday afternoon, the meetings which had been interrupted so sadly by the death of the amiable and much beloved Mrs Townley, the mother of Miss Poyntz.

Mlle Albani has been charming Parisian connoisseurs with some sacred pieces by Handel and Beethoven, disclosing a new phase in her talent with which her French admirers had previously been unacquainted. At her farewell representation (Tuesday) she was to sing in the first act of Norma.

From statistical returns we learn that 22 symphonies; 21 overtures, or short orchestral pieces; 19 concertos; and 6 grand vocal compositions, with chorus and orchestra, such as Schumann's Manfred and Beethoven's Egmont, were performed at the Gewandhaus Concerts, Leipsic, during the season just terminated.

We recommend all who are fond of a hearty laugh to pay a visit to the Egyptian Hall, where Mr John Nash's Be Merry and Wise keeps the audience in continual good humour. Mr Nash commences his entertainment with a short introduction on the "Philosophy of Laughter," followed by various clever impersonations and amusing songs. He is ably assisted by Mr F. Clifton. W. A. J.

Mr W. Pyatt, of Nottingham, has engaged the following artists for his "Spring tour;" Misses Agnes Larkcom and Helen D'Alton, Signor Foli and Mr Sims Reeves, Mr Lockwood (harp), Mr Henry Nicholson (flute), and Mr Joseph Roeckel (pianist). Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and Belfast, will be visited, and the time occupied will be from April 24th, to May 10th.

Sainte-Foy, once so popular at the Paris Opéra-Comique, died on the 1st inst., at his house in Neuilly, where he had resided since he retired from the stage. He was born at Vitry-le-François, in 1817, his real name being Charles Louis Pubereaux. He first studied the piano at the Paris Conservatory, but, having subsequently renounced the career of an instrumentalist for that of a singer, came out at the Opéra-Comique in 1840. He obtained such success in a certain line of business that the latter was distinguished by his name, and artists are now engaged for the "Sainte-Foys" as they are for the "Heavy Fathers" or the "Leading Old Men." Among his best parts may be reckoned Cantarelli of Le Père aux Clercs, Dickson of La Dame Blanche, Lord Koburg of Fra Diavolo, and Corentin of Le Pardon de Ploërmel. Some years since he accepted an engagement at St Petersburg, but soon returned. He afterwards played for a short time at the Opéra-Comique. He was buried at Neuilly on the 3rd inst.

"TWAS NOT EVER THUS."

"It was not ever thus with me,"

A maiden said, and sighed.

"My heart was once as boundless, free,
And fearless as the tide—

The tide that bore my lad, my one dear lad, from me.

"But now, in silence, must I weep!

Oh, God! recall their souls!

For, when the hungry billows leap

Upon the sandy shoals,

They bear to land the ghosts, the ghosts that will not sleep.

"And often, in the lonely night,

When all the world is still,

I wander through the pale moonlight—

Across the moor, the hill—

And strive to stay the souls, the souls that mock my sight."

H. MELVILLE.

* Copyright.

VIENNA.—The Theater an der Wien is closed, and will remain so until Herr Steiner finds a successor.

LISBON.—Mignon, with Signore Fricci, Mecocci, Signori Aldighieri, and Vidal, in the principal parts, has been successfully given.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 88, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE"

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

English Glee and Madrigal Writers.

By W. A. BARRETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.S.L., &c.

PRICE 2s. 6d.

W. REEVES, BOOKSELLER, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Dépôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Solists.

25, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.
Price List free on application.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL."

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, St ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

Published This Day.

"A SKATING SONG."

THE WORDS BY

HARRIETT F. SPENCER.

THE MUSIC BY

HENRY BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

Where may be obtained, composed by HENRY BAKER,

"THE STEPPING STONES"	3s.
"AS I LAY A-THINKING"	3s.
"THINK ON ME" ("GO WHERE THE WATER GLIDETH")	3s.
"THERE SITS A BIRD ON YONDER TREE," with violoncello obligato	4s.

Just Published.

"IL TROVATORE."

A BRILLIANT FANTASIA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

COMPOSED BY

FRANZ ROZENFELD.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"IN SHELTERED VALE."

(KARL FORMES.)

POPULAR GERMAN SONG. ARRANGED FOR A BASS VOICE.

By FRANK D'ALQUEN.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"IN A VALLEY FAR AWAY;"

(MAURYA VAWN ASTHORE.)

BALLAD.

Composed by ELENA NORTON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

FRANCESCO BERGER'S PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

"LA BONNE BOUCHE," Valse de Concert	4s.
"UNSPOKEN THOUGHTS"	4s.
"L'ETOILE DE MA VIE"	4s.
"CONSOLATION"	3s.
"A SLUMBER SONG"	3s.
"TROISIEME TARANTELE"	4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

FRANCESCO BERGER'S VOCAL COMPOSITIONS.

SIX SONGS FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

1. "FALLEN LEAVES," Song for Contralto...Poetry by OWEN MEREDITH	4s.
2. "CLEANSING FIRES," Do. for Mezzo-Soprano ...ADELAIDE PROCTOR	4s.
3. "WAYWARD WIND," Do. do.GEORGE MOORE	4s.
4. "TO AN ABSENTEE," Do. do.THOMAS HOOD	4s.
5. "THE STRAY LEAFLET," Do. do.AMELIA B. EDWARDS	4s.
6. "DON'T WHISTLE NEAR THE DOOR," Do. do.JAMES ONIONS	4s.

THREE SACRED SONGS.

1. "THY WAY, NOT MINE, O LORD"	2s.
2. "LIGHTEN OUR DARKNESS"	2s.
3. "BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK"	2s.

Composed by FRANCESCO BERGER.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TRANSCRIPTIONS OF FAVOURITE SCOTCH AIRS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By EMILE BERGER.

"FLORA MACDONALD'S LAMENT" and "KENMURE'S ON AND AWA"	4s.
"HUNTINGTOWER"	4s.
"THOU BONNIE WOOD O' CRAIGIE LEA"	4s.
"THE FLOWERS OF THE FOREST"	2s.
"THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE"	4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THREE EASY FANTASIES for the PIANOFORTE.

No. 1. "ROB ROY, MACGREGOR, O"	2s.
2. "BOBIN ADAIR" ("EILEEN ABOON")	2s.
3. "O DEAR, WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE?"	2s.

Composed by R. F. HARVEY.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

ASSIS SUR LA VERTE COLLINE. ("THE WISH.")
Paroles et Musique de M. WHITE. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	- 4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	- 3 0
RINK GALOP	- 4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	- 4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	- 4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	- 3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	- 4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	- 4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	- 4 0
WEST-END POLKA	- 3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	- 3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	- 3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	- 3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	- 3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	- 3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE.

PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE	- 4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	- 4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	- 3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	- 4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	- 3 0
HARMONIUM	- 3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	- 3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	- 4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2S. 6D. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.	s.	d.
OVERTURE	- - - - -	3	0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	- - - - -	3	0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	- - - - -	3	0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	- - - - -	3	0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	- - - - -	2	0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	- - - - -	4	0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	- - - - -	3	0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	- - - - -	4	0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	- - - - -	3	0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	- - - - -	3	0
8. FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron"	- - - - -	3	0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE	- - - - -
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night"	- - - - -	3	0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	- - - - -	3	0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	- - - - -	3	0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	- - - - -	3	0
13. DUET, "See him glaring"	- - - - -	4	0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	- - - - -	3	0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	- - - - -	3	0
15. FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	- - - - -	4	0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	- - - - -	3	0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	- - - - -	3	0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	- - - - -	4	0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	- - - - -	4	0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	- - - - -	3	0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
...	5 0
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	2 6
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	4 0

LONDON :

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9 CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

CHAMBER TRIOS,

FOR TREBLE VOICES.

The Music by the most eminent English and Foreign Composers.

(FORMERLY PUBLISHED BY MR. LAMBORN COCK.)

COMPOSER.			s.	d.	COMPOSER.			s.	d.
1	Swift from our fairy home descending	Mozart	2	0	58	We meet again	Mrs Ames	2	6
2	Ye powers guarding o'er us	Rossini	2	0	59	Amid the mazy dance	Blangini	2	6
3	Yon bark like a bird on the ocean	De Glimes	3	0	60	The silent moon is beaming	Rossini	2	6
4	Gentle pity soothe our anguish	Martini	2	0	61	See the star of queenly beauty!	Flotow	2	6
5	Welcome to our fairy dwelling	Winter	2	6	62	Come away	Lahee	2	6
6	Murm'ring o'er the silent wave	Meyerbeer	2	6	63	Lovely May	Mrs Ames	2	0
7	Away to the West	C. Horn	2	6	64	Here in cool grot	Earl of Mornington	2	6
8	Blessings on our absent friends	Frank Romer	2	6	65	Friends, good night	Flotow	2	0
9	Hark! the solemn music pealing	Donizetti	2	6	66	The Butterfly	H. Smart	2	6
10	Soft voices blending	Weigl	2	6	67	It is not always May	Pinsuti	3	0
11	Sister spirits, haste away	Brinley Richards	2	6	68	There is a reaper	Pinsuti	3	0
12	It is summer, it is summer	John Barnett	2	6	69	Star of the silent eve	Sterkel	2	6
13	Bend down from thy chariot	John Barnett	2	6	70	The glow-worm	H. Smart	2	6
14	O peace of mind! thou lovely guest	Mrs Ames	2	0	71	Thou'rt lovely, oh night	Paer	2	6
15	Come, gentle sleep	Mendelssohn	2	6	72	To a nightingale at mid-day	W. S. Bennett	3	0
16	We'll breathe the fairest flowers	Bellini	2	6	73	The coming of May	Walter Macfarren	3	0
17	The parting hour	Bellini	2	6	74	Sweet repose is reigning now	Benedict	2	6
18	Light and laughing summer sky	G. A. Macfarren	2	6	75	The golden ray of morning	Winter	2	6
19	Golden summer	Frank Romer	2	6	76	May morning	Flotow	2	6
20	Beautiful streamlet	Donizetti	2	6	77	So merrily over the ocean spray	Brinley Richards	3	0
21	The fairy revel	Rossini	2	6	78	The minstrel maidens	Weber	2	6
22	Night!	Rossini	2	6	79	Lull'd by the motion of the heaving billow	Verdi	3	0
23	We'll row thee o'er the waters	Mehul	2	0	80	A morning in May	H. C. Banister	2	6
24	Haste, gentle shepherd	Rossini	2	6	81	Hither! fairies trip	J. H. Tully	3	0
25	The red sun is sinking	Rossini	2	6	82	Wake the lay	J. Coward	2	6
26	It is the hour!	Rossini	2	6	83	Homeward bound	Benedict	3	0
27	Swiftly winging on bright golden pinions	Verdi	2	6	84	Down by the silv'ry stream	Ferrari	2	6
28	All hail to the greenwood	Donizetti	2	0	85	Happy flow'rets freshly wreathing	Winter	2	6
29	Brightly glows the morning star	Mercadante	2	6	86	The bright stars are beaming	Paer	2	6
30	Now the twilight's softly stealing	Mercadante	2	6	87	May	Benedict	3	0
31	Thy flow'ry banks, oh lovely river	Meyerbeer	2	0	88	Gently, gently, wood and meadow	Weber	3	0
32	The Savoyard's return	J. L. Hatton	2	6	89	Let us twine the clust'ring roses	H. R. Bishop	3	0
33	Come, follow, follow me	J. L. Hatton	2	6	90	Hark to the voices!	H. R. Bishop	3	0
34	Sweet is the sound of charity's voice	Rossini	2	6	91	Wake not, dreaming maiden	H. R. Bishop	3	0
35	The rose-gatherers	Weber	2	6	92	Where art thou, beam of light	H. R. Bishop	2	6
36	Summer bringeth buds and flowers	Spohr	2	0	93	Where the sweet rose	H. R. Bishop	3	0
37	Sisters, trip lightly	Verdi	2	6	94	A summer song	J. Barnby	3	0
38	Softly the echo	Rossini	2	6	95	The moon just peeps from out the sea	H. R. Bishop	3	0
39	Come, gentle harmony	Rossini	2	6	96	The voice of moonlight	Allen	2	6
40	Who will to the greenwood hie?	J. L. Hatton	2	6	97	See the jocund spring advancing	G. A. Macfarren	2	6
41	Sweet convent bells	J. L. Hatton	2	6	98	Good night	G. A. Macfarren	3	0
42	Calmly the hour of twilight is glowing	Rossini	2	6	99	Song for twilight	F. Berger	3	0
43	Wake, gentle Zephyr, your softest spell	Rossini	2	6	100	Cradle song	W. J. Westbrook	3	0
44	The wood-thrush	J. L. Hatton	2	6	101	Sunrise	H. Smart	3	0
45	What say the clouds on hill and plain?	J. L. Hatton	2	6	102	Dear peaceful valley	J. Barnett	3	0
46	O'er the starlit waters gliding	Campans	3	0	103	Go where the water glideth	Alex. Rowland	3	0
47	In liquid notes	T. Attwood	2	0	104	Borne on the night breeze	Cherubini	2	6
48	The nightingale to home returns	Mendelssohn	2	0	105	Come down into the meadow	Cherubini	3	0
49	O vales with sunlight smiling	Mendelssohn	2	6	106	Fair daffodils	Violet	2	6
50	Rest, weary pilgrim	Donizetti	2	0	107	Kind words	Ciro Pinsuti	3	0
51	O joyful day	Sacchini	2	6	108	Three charms of life	Ciro Pinsuti	3	0
52	Nymphs of air and ancient sea	H. Smart	2	0	109	Sing merrily all	W. J. Westbrook	2	6
53	Rest thee on this mossy pillow	H. Smart	2	6	110	The primrose	Mrs H. Ames	2	6
54	Farewell to the flowers	John Barnett	3	0	111	Spinning wheel chorus	Wagner	3	0
55	The dawn of spring	Mendelssohn	2	0	112	First gift of spring	H. Smart	3	0
56	Now the golden morn is breaking	Verdi	2	0	113	The cuckoo	F. Hiller	3	0
57	While time is swiftly winging	Cimarosa	3	0	114	Return, O brooklet	Blangini	3	0

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18, HANOVER SQUARE.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at 73 and 74, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex, Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, April 14, 1877.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 16.

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), April 21, will be performed
Rossini's Opera, "GUGLIELMO TELL." Mathilde, Mdle Bianchi; Mdle Ghisotti, Mdle Cottino; Signor Otogni (his second appearance in that character in England), Signor Baggiolo, Signor Scolaro, Signor Sabater, Signor Marini. Conductor—Signor VIANESI. La Tyrolleuse will be danced by Mdle
Girod, Mdle L. Reuters, and Mdle H. Reuters.

Next Week there will be Five performances.

On MONDAY next, April 23, "FAUST E MARGHERITA." Margherita, Mdle Smarocchi.

Signor Gayarre.

On TUESDAY next, April 24, "LES HUGUENOTS." Valentina, Mdle d'Angeri; Raoul, Signor Gayarre (his sixth appearance in England).

On THURSDAY next, April 26 (in lieu of the Subscription for Tuesday, Aug. 7),
"DON PASQUALE." Norina, Mdle Marimon.

On FRIDAY next, April 27, "GUGLIELMO TELL." Guglielmo Tell, M.
Maurel (his second appearance this season).

First appearance this Season of Mdle Albani.

On SATURDAY, April 28, "I PURITANI." Elvira, Mdle Albani (her first appearance this season; Arturo, Signor Gayarre (his first appearance in that character in England).
The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office under the portico of the theatre is open from Ten till Five.
Pit tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 8s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—GREAT RUBINSTEIN CONCERT.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY) at Three o'clock. The programme will consist entirely of the Works of M. Anton Rubinstein, comprising the Ocean Symphony, including the additional adagio and scherzo; the Finale to the Second Act of The Maccabees, with Arioso for alto, and Duet for soprano and alto; Concerto No. 2, for pianoforte and orchestra; and the Overture to Dimitri Donskoi. M. RUBINSTEIN will conduct all the above pieces, excepting the Concerto, of which he will himself play the solo part, and will, in addition, play three solo pieces, viz.:—Notturmo, Bohemo, from Sonata No. 3, and Capriccio. The Vocal portion of the Concert will be supported by Mdle Friedlander and Mdle Arnim, who, besides the above, will sing other compositions of M. Rubinstein. The Subscribers of the Serial Stalls will be entitled to occupy their usual seats. Stalls for the day may now be had, price 5s., 3s. 6d., and 2s. 6d. Admission to the Concert-room on this occasion, One Shilling.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.—FRIDAY, June 22, Public Rehearsal.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.—MONDAY, June 25, Messiah.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.—WEDNESDAY, June 27, Selection.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.—FRIDAY, June 29, Israel in Egypt.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL. Sets of tickets for the Festival are now on sale at the Crystal Palace and Exeter Hall.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

MR ALFRED GILBERT and MDME GILBERT'S FIRST CHAMBER CONCERT, LANGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street.
WEDNESDAY next, at Eight o'clock. "AN EVENING WITH SCHUBERT."
Mdme Gilbert, Miss Alice Askey, Miss Gattie Gilbert; Mr Wilby Cooper,
Mr Stanley Smith. Violin—Herr Rosenthal. Violoncello—Herr Lugens.
Pianoforte—Mr Alfred Gilbert. Conductor—MR CHARLES E. STEPHENS.
Tickets, 5s., 3s., and 1s.; at the usual places, or of MR ALFRED GILBERT, 59, Maiden Lane.

FRIDAY NEXT.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—Conductor—Sir MICHAEL COSTA. Friday next, April 27, Costa's Oratorio,
"ELL." Mdme Sherrington, Mdme Patey, Mr Vernon Rigby, Mr Lewis
Thomas, and Mr Santley. Organist—Mr Willing. Tickets, 3s., 5s.; Numbered Boxes, 7s.; Stalls, 10s. 6d., now ready.

BALFE'S NEW TRIO in A, Played by MARIE KREBS, JOACHIM, and PIATTI, at the Saturday Popular Concerts, will shortly be published. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

ROYAL AQUARIUM, WESTMINSTER.—RIVIERE'S

PROMENADE CONCERTS.—M. RIVIERE begs to announce that he will give FOUR VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERTS on the following Evenings, commencing at Eight o'clock: SATURDAYS, April 21, April 28, May 5, and May 12. The following artists will appear during the Series: Vocalists—
Mdme Rose Hersee, Miss Cora Stuart, Miss Lisa Walton, Mdme Ostmann-
Goldberg, Miss Enriquez, Miss Jenny Pratt, Miss Jose Sherrington, and Mdme Antoinette Sterling; Signor Bettini, Mr McGuckin, Signor Gustave Garcia, and Signor Foli. The excellent Orchestra of the Royal Aquarium will be enlarged to 70 exponents, and several soloists of continental celebrity have been expressly engaged, including M. Damore (the celebrated Piccolo player), M. Francois (Solo Violoncello of the Italian Opera, Paris), M. Reine (Solo Oboe of the Frascati Concerts, Paris—First Prize of the Conservatoire, Paris), M. Chavannes (Solo Cornet of the Frascati Concerts, Paris—First Prize of the Conservatoire)—their first appearance in London. The Choir of the Royal Aquarium will sing some new pieces, and take part in Operatic Selections, &c. The Band of the Scots Guards (under the direction of J. P. Clarke) will join the orchestra in Grand Selections, Marches, &c. Conductor—M. RIVIERE. Admission, One Shilling;
Reserved Seats, extra 1s. and 2s.; Balcony, 2s.

LEEDS TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1877.

Patron—Her Majesty the QUEEN. Conductor—Sir MICHAEL COSTA.
SEPTEMBER 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22nd. Early particulars may be obtained from the Honorary Secretaries, Festival Committee Rooms, Great George Street, near the Town Hall, Leeds.
JOHN WM. ATKINSON, } Hon. Secs.
FRED. R. SPARK, }

MOZART AND BEETHOVEN SOCIETY. President—

The Marquis of LONDONDERRY. Vice-President—Herr SCHUBERT. The NEXT SOIREE will take place on MAY 1st; and the SIXTH CONCERT at the LANGHAM HALL, on WEDNESDAY Evening, May 16th.

SATURDAY NEXT.

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

Conductors—Dr WYLD and Mr GANZ. The SECOND CONCERT will take place on SATURDAY Afternoon next, April 28. Programme:—Rubinstein's Ocean Symphony; Beethoven's Violin Concerto; Overtures "Der Freischütz" (Weber), and "The Flying Dutchman" (Wagner); and Wilhelmj's Paraphrase on the "Meistersinger." Violinist—Herr Wilhelmj. Vocalist—Herr Henschel.
Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Area Stalls, 5s.; Balcony Stalls (front row), 7s.; Balcony, 3s. Admission, One Shilling. Tickets may be obtained at Chappell's, Austin's, and the usual places.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

RAILWAY BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION, for the Relief of Railway Officers and Servants, their Orphans, Children, and Widows, when in Distressed Circumstances. Instituted May, 1858. Patrons—

Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES, K.G. GRAND EVENING CONCERT at the TOWN HALL, Shoreditch, for the Benefit of the Institution, on WEDNESDAY, April 25. Artists—Mdme
Patey, Mdme Blotoff, Miss Albert, Mrs J. Clippingle, Mr Barton McGuckin,
Mr Walter Macfarren, Mr V. Gerard, and Mr John Oneshire, assisted by a Select Choir of Sixty Voices. Conductors—Mr J. CLIPPINGDALE and Mr WALTER MACFARREN. Doors open at 7.30; commence at Eight o'clock. Tickets, Numbered and Reserved Stalls, 5s.; Numbered and Reserved Area, 2s. 6d.; Balcony Seats, 2s. Admission, One Shilling. May be obtained at the several Railway Stations; at HAYS', Royal Exchange; and at the Town Hall.

"MY LOVE HAS GONE AWAY."

MADAME PATEY will sing, for the First Time, a New Song, entitled "MY LOVE HAS GONE AWAY." Composed by J.
CLIPPINGDALE, at the Grand Concert, given for the Benefit of the Railway Benevolent Institution, on the 25th inst., at the Town Hall, Shoreditch.

"LET US PART FRIENDS."

MR BARTON MCGUCKIN will sing, for the First Time, a New Ballad, entitled "LET US PART FRIENDS." Composed by J. CLIP-PINGDALE, at the Grand Concert, given for the Benefit of the Railway Benevolent
Institution, on the 25th inst., at the Town Hall, Shoreditch.

ALEXANDRA MUSICAL BOX (Title Protected and Registered). Ornamental wood case, machine made, with the following 13 popular Melodies and Tunes:—Safe in the Arms of Jesus—Jesus of Nazareth passeth by—Sicilian Mariners' Hymn—Lo, He Comes with Clouds—Home, Sweet Home—The Minstrel Boy—Auld Lang Syne—The Keel Row—My Little Bunch of Roses—Tommy, make room for your Uncle—Fair Shines the Moon tonight—Silver Threads among the Gold—The Union Jack of Old England. Forwarded, securely packed and carriage paid, to any address on receipt of a Post-office Order, value 3s. 8d., payable at General Post-office to JOHN LEWIS & Co., 122, Wick Road, Hackney, N.E.

WANTED, by a Gentleman of good education, a Situation as ASSISTANT in a London Music Warehouse. Good pianist; good references.—O. H., care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

IN a small lodging, without the means of paying for it, without furniture, and only bread to eat, with scanty and insufficient clothing, are at this moment the FAMILY of the late Mr HOWARD GLOVER, the musical composer, son of the celebrated actress, Mrs Glover. He left England nine years ago with a family of 12 young children to better his fortune in the United States. He never earned, however, more than a bare subsistence, and on his death in November, 1875, his wife and children were plunged in deep embarrassment. They struggled on in New York, until at last they were sent home by the charity of the British Consul. The ages of the children now range from 8 to 21, and, consequently, if some aid is given, there is a prospect of getting situations which will enable them to keep themselves and their mother. The eldest son is a scene painter, but has been for the last few days engaged on journeyman painter's work. A large West-end house has promised to take one of the daughters, and there are prospects of placing the others—some in a theatre, some at the opera. In the meantime a sum of money is absolutely indispensable, if they are to be rescued from the worst sufferings and the most horrible temptations of poverty. Under these circumstances an appeal is made to the best sympathies of the public and the patrons of music and art to come to the rescue of an unfortunate family, absolutely wrecked. They are known to be most excellent and deserving. Donations may be sent to MITCHELL'S Library, 33, Old Bond Street.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," May 29, at Richmond; May 31, Princess's Concert Room; June 9, Town Hall, Shoreditch.

"SABRINA."

MR MICHAEL WATSON will play his new Valse de Concert, "SABRINA," at Langham Hall, May 23.

RICHARD WAGNER.

SOLE EDITIONS OF RICHARD WAGNER'S VOCAL SCORES, IN 4TO.

"DER RING DES NIBELUNGEN."
 "Das Rheingold" ... net 16s. | "Siegfried" ... net 24s.
 "Die Walküre" ... "20s." | "Götterdämmerung" ... net 28s.
 Original German Text, 1 vol., 12mo, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, net, 5s.
 English Translation, by ALFRED FORMAN, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, net, 5s.
 "DIE MEISTERSINGER VON NÜRNBERG," Vocal Score ... net 28s.
 Original German Text, 12mo, paper, net, 1s.

Catalogues containing Transcriptions, Arrangements, and Original Works of Richard Wagner, post free on application.

SCHOTT & CO., 159, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

CHARLES GOUNOD'S "CINQ - MARS."

Opéra, en Quatre Actes.

POÈME

De PAUL POIRSON et LOUIS GALLET.

VOCAL SCORE IN 8VO ... net 20s. | PIANO SOLO IN 8VO ... net 12s.
 Lists of the usual detached Vocal and Instrumental Pieces, Transcriptions, Arrangements, &c., post-free on application.

SCHOTT & CO., 159, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

Published This Day.

PURE RAY OF LIGHT.

TRIO FOR TWO SOPRANOS AND TENOR.

THE POETRY BY MOORE.

THE MUSIC BY HENRY BAKER.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SONGS by KATE MAUNDER. "LADY KIND, LADY FAIR," Serenade, price 4s.; "OH, HOW HAPPY ONCE WAS I!" Mezzo-Soprano Song, price 4s. C. LONSDALE, 26, Old Bond Street.

ALEXANDRA MUSICAL BOX (Title Protected and Registered). Ornamental wood case, machine made, with the following 18 popular Melodies and Tunes:—Safe in the Arms of Jesus—Jesus of Nazareth passeth by—Sicilian Mariners' Hymn—Lo, He Comes with Clouds—Home, Sweet Home—The Minstrel Boy—Auld Lang Syne—The Keel Row—My Little Bunch of Roses—Tommy, make room for your Uncle—Fair Shines the Moon to-night—Silver Threads among the Gold—The Union Jack of Old England. Forwarded, securely packed and carriage paid, to any address on receipt of a Post-office Order, value 3s. 8d., payable at General Post-office to JOHN LEWIS & Co., 122, Wick Road, Hackney, N.E.

MR FRANZ RUMMEL, Professor of the Pianoforte at the Conservatoire, Brussels, begs to announce that he has arrived in Town for the Season. Letters may be addressed to 43, Patehall Road, N.W.; or to the care of Messrs SCHOTT & Co., 159, Regent Street, W.

MR REMENYI, Solo Violinist to His Imperial and Royal Majesty of Austro-Hungary, begs to announce that he will arrive in Town for the Season on the 20th inst. All communications to be addressed to Mr E. MAURIN, 18, Arundel Street, Coventry Street, W.

SIGNOR and MDLLE BADIA have arrived in London for the Season. All communications for public or private Concerts, &c., to be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR ALFRED JAEEL will arrive in London on June 7. All letters to be addressed to the care of Messrs ERARD, 18, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

MR CHARLES HARPER, Principal and Solo Horn, having seceded from the Royal Italian Opera, begs to inform his friends and the public that he is now at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c., either in town or country. Address—3, Liddlington Place, Harrington Square, London, N.W.

MDME BERTINI (Soprano) is open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts and Solrées. All communications concerning Engagements or Lessons to be addressed to MDME BERTINI, 62, Harley Street, London, N.

MR FREDERIC WOOD (Primo Tenore), of the Wilhelmj Concert Party, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs HODGE & ESSEX, 6 and 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MISS ELENA NORTON, Soprano Vocalist (composer of "The Rose and the Ring"), is open for ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Solrées, &c., &c. Address, care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or to Mr D'Oyley Carte, 20, Charing Cross.

MDLLE IDA CORANI having returned to Town requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Opera or Concert be addressed to her Agent, Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME ERNST (Soprano) requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR CHARLES ABERCROMBIE (Tenor), of St James's Hall and the Royal Aquarium Concerts, Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St James's, requests that all applications for Terms and ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio, Opera, or Concert, be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY (his Agent and Business Manager), care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, S.W.

MR WELBYE-WALLACE (of the Crystal Palace and Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester, &c., &c.), having Returned from Abroad, can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Opera, or Oratorio. All Communications to be addressed to his Agent, Mr E. D'OYLEY CARTE, 9A, Craig's Court, Charing Cross, S.W.

MDME MARIE BELVAL begs that all Communications be addressed to her at 7, Cavendish Place, Cavendish Square, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MDME LOUISE GAGE (Contralto) is open to ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Solrées, &c. Address, MDME LOUISE GAGE, No. 17, Holland Road, Kensington, W., or care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

MR GERARD COVENTRY is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR IGNACE GIBSONE begs to inform the Profession that the following SONGS, of his Composition, can be Sung in Public without any Claim being made against them for so doing.

"AS YESTERDAY I WAS SPINNING" Published by Hutchings & Bomer.
 "THE PHANTOM BARK" ... Metzler & Co.
 "ACROSS THE SEA" ... Duncan Davison & Co.
 "MY LADY SLEEPS" ... " "
 "THEY PART NO MORE" ... Cunningham Boosey & Co.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Dépôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Solists.

5, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.

Price List free on application.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA. (RETROSPECT.)

The operas last week were Martha, I Puritani, La Favorita, Don Giovanni, and Rigoletto—the second, third, and fourth being repetitions. The part of Lady Enrichetta in Flotow's still popular work was again undertaken by Mdle Zaré Thalberg, whose impersonation not only justified the good opinions it elicited a twelvemonth since, but gave signs of further advance. The increasing fulness of a voice the genuine musical quality of which declared itself from the beginning was as apparent in Martha as in Don Giovanni; and it was no less telling in the high soprano passages of the quartet, "Mentre il piè la ruota gira," than in the more gentle strains of "Qui sola, vergin rosa." This English melody, to which M. Flotow and his opera owe so much, was sung with a touching simplicity that completely won the sympathies of the audience, and an encore was inevitable. A similar compliment was paid to the quartet at the spinning-wheel, in which Mdle Thalberg's associates were Mdle Scalchi, an admirable Nancy, M. Capoul, Lionello, and Signor Graziani, a Plunkett with whom we have happily been long acquainted, and who gives the famous apostrophe to "Beer" with such unction as to leave no doubt that it must have been that jovial gentleman-farmer's favourite beverage. The sentimental music allotted to Lionello exactly suits the idiosyncrasy of M. Capoul, who but lately set all feminine Paris raving about his Paul, in M. Victor's Massé's opera, Paul et Virginie, and who is nothing if not—or at any rate never so much as when—sentimental. Thus, both in the melodious quartet, "Dormi pur" (Act 2), and in the lachrymose ditty, "M'appari tutt' amor," he was particularly successful, winning an encore for the latter. Signor Ciampi was an accommodating Lord Tristan, Signor Ragner an imposing Sheriff, and the whole opera, with its abundance of tune, picturesque dances in the scene of the Statute Fair, &c., passed off as so lively a work can hardly fail to do, much to the general satisfaction. Signor Vianesi was conductor.

The first performance of Rigoletto brought an immense audience on Saturday night, which, taking into account the enormous crowd attracted to Albert Hall in the afternoon, by the third concert of the "Wagner Festival," and adding to that the anything rather than inviting weather, causes us to marvel whence all our musically inclined people come. Those at Covent Garden, however, on Saturday night, were rewarded by an unusually fine performance of what, despite its repulsive subject, is unquestionably Verdi's best opera. The Gilda of Mdle Albani, now ripened into such excellence as to leave little or nothing open to criticism, would alone have been an attraction. In 1873, when she first essayed the character, the opinion of amateurs was that a more interesting Gilda, whether in regard to personal appearance, or to her general conception of the character, had not been witnessed since the always-to-be-regretted Angiolina Bosio used so to delight opera-goers as to make it an almost ungrateful task for anyone to assume the character after her. There is now, however, no further need of comparison. Mdle Albani has made Gilda her own, not only looking, but acting and singing the part in perfection. It would be alike superfluous and tedious to enter into details about anything so well known. Enough that the first interview with Rigoletto, followed by the duet with the pretended Walter Maldé, veritable Duke of Mantua—the Francis of Le Roi s'amuse, a Don Giovanni as sneaking and contemptible as the Don Giovanni of Da Ponte and Mozart is unprincipled and bold, having at least the courage of his iniquities—the melodious and reposeful "Caro nome," the trying scene with Rigoletto, after the abduction, and the quartet in the final tableau, when Gilda is made aware of the faithfulness of one whose constancy had been her dream, formed a series of genuine successes for Mdle Albani, who never received or deserved more unanimous marks of approval. Signor Gayarre found much in the character of the Duke which exhibited to advantage his impassioned style. His delivery of "La donna è mobile" may have been a little overstrained; but it was encored all the same, as was the quartet, to the effect of which Mdle Scalchi and Signor Pandolfini contributed not a little. Mdle Scalchi's Maddalena has been for some time recognised as in all respects excellent. Signor Pandolfini, so far as his first appearance allows us to judge, will prove a valuable acquisition. Rigoletto is no ordinary part to test the capabilities of a new dramatic singer before an audience of connoisseurs; but Signor Pandolfini, having recently earned laurels at the Paris Italian Opera, had every right to present himself with confidence. The verdict of the audience could not possibly be mistaken. It was favourable without reserve. Signor Pandolfini has a bass-baritone voice of power, compass, and telling quality, sings like one who knows his art, and acts with earnest intelligence. That here and there he is somewhat too demonstrative in his gestures, and occasionally over emphasises his vocal expression, cannot be denied. But it would be unfair to judge him by a single performance, and we prefer recording, without further remark, an unquestionable success. A word is due to Signor Sclara, a Sparafucile who left nothing to desire, either in his histrionic conception of the part of the hired assassin or in his general delivery of the music of Verdi's gloomy, but, in this particular instance, characteristic music. Signor Bevnigani was the conductor of this, one of the most striking performances of the season.

Un Ballo in Maschera was given on Monday; Dinorah (for the first appearance of Mdme Adelina Patti), on Tuesday; Lohengrin, with Mdle Albani as Elsa, and Signor Carpi as Lohengrin, on Wednesday; The Huguenots, on Thursday; Don Giovanni (with Mdme Patti as Zerlina), last night. Lucia di Lammermoor (with Mdle Albani and Signor Gayarre) is announced for this evening.

HIER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Un Ballo in Maschera was given for the second time on Monday night, Mdle Caroline Salla as Amelia, and Mdle Mila Rodani, as Oscar, more than confirming the favourable impression created by their débuts, the week before last, in the same characters. Both these ladies are decided acquisitions. In Mdle Salla Mr Mapleson has secured the aid of one who possesses all the requisites for becoming a genuine lyric tragedian, combined with the inestimable advantages of youth; in Mdle Rodani, equally young and equally promising, he has every reason to hope for not less valuable support in another line of characters, which, though less pretentious, are quite as essential to the general strength of his company. Norma was to be repeated on the following night, and on Thursday we had Lucia di Lammermoor, in which the character of the heroine was assigned to that always progressing young artist, Mdle Alwina Valleria, who won and merited the warm approval of the audience, especially in the great scene of Lucia's madness (Act 3), where she displayed a vocal facility and a dramatic expression worthy all praise. The other principal characters were sustained by Signor Fancelli (Edgardo), Rots (Enrico), Rinaldini (Arturo), and Broccolini (Raimondo). The opera on Saturday night was Il Trovatore, about which it will suffice to say that Mdle Tietjens (in glorious voice) was the Leonora, and Signor Fancelli, Manrico—the other leading parts being represented, as on the occasion of the first performance, by Mdme Lablache and Signor Del Puente. The music of Manrico is well suited to the voice of Signor Fancelli, who was twice called for after his energetic delivery of "Di quella pira," and encored, with Mdle Tietjens, in the justly famous "Miserere." That "Il balen" should be similarly complimented, expressively as it was sung by Signor Del Puente, may be taken for granted, as also that the general performance, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa, was all that could be wished.

Un Ballo in Maschera was repeated on Monday; La Figlia del Reggimento, with Mdle Mila Rodani as Maria, and Signor Fancelli as Tonio, was the opera on Tuesday; and La Traviata (second appearance of Mdme Christine Nilsson) on Thursday. Lucrezia Borgia, for Mdle Tietjens, Mdme Trebelli, and M. Faure (first appearance of the two last named), is announced for this evening. (See elsewhere for other particulars.)

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of Organ Recitals by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 17th:—

Overture, Jessonda	Spohr.
Andantino (F major, Op. 164)	Schubert.
Air with variations	W. T. Best.
Fantasia for the Organ (F minor)	Mozart.
Marche Religieuse	L. Niedermeyer.
Grand Chœur (A major)	Th. Salomé.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 19th:—

Organ Concerto (G major)	Handel.
Romance (F major, Op. 56)	Beethoven.
Minuetto from the First Symphony	Mendelssohn.
Offertoire for the Organ	Th. Dubois.
Prelude and Fugue (C minor)	Bach.
March for the Organ (A minor)	W. T. Best.

MADRID.—A new Italian opera has been produced at the Teatro Real, entitled Ledia, the music by Zubiaurre, a Spaniard. The principal characters were sustained by Signora Ferni, Signori Tamberlik and Bocolini. The composer, who conducted, was much applauded. MM. Francis Planté and Joseph Servais have given concerts at the Teatro Real. The King attended the first,

ADELINA PATTI

(From the "Times," May, 16.)

Mdme Adelina Patti made her first appearance last night, and was received with the greatest enthusiasm by an audience crowding the theatre in every part. The opera selected was Meyerbeer's Dinorah, in her impersonation of the heroine of which she has so often earned distinction. When, in the opening scene, the forlorn, half-demented maiden crossed the stage in pursuit of her favourite goat, cheer after cheer greeted her. At the beginning, Mdme Patti appeared somewhat overcome by the exceeding warmth of her reception, but she speedily mastered this not unnatural emotion, and long before the end of the lullaby, "Si carina, dormi in pace," was in full possession of her unrivalled means. Thence to the end of the opera she sang and acted her very best. Not to enter into particulars, the famous scene in which Dinorah sings and dances to her shadow in the moonlight, comprising the well-known "Ombra leggera, non te n'andar," was a genuine masterpiece of vocal skill and mimetic power. Mdme Patti almost excelled herself in her brilliant delivery of this trying piece, every florid passage in which was executed with the utmost fluency, and every note, from the highest to the lowest, with a purity of intonation not to be surpassed. The audience, thoroughly roused by this wonderful display, were loud in their demonstrations of approval. An "encore" was demanded with marked unanimity; and so the last part of the air was repeated, Mdme Patti retiring amid a hurricane of applause, followed by three recalls before the curtain. The other parts were sustained by Mdme Scalchi, Signors Marini and Graziani. Signor Vianesi conducted.

(From the "Globe," May 16.)

Last night the brightest star of the operatic firmament, Adelina Patti, shone out with fullest brilliancy. The opera chosen for her rentrée was Meyerbeer's pastoral Dinorah, and never since she first essayed the character has she more completely proved herself a mistress of the vocal art and an actress of the rarest sympathetic power. At her first appearance, in the picturesque costume of a Breton peasant maiden, such a tempest of applause broke forth as it falls to the lot of few artists to elicit. She bowed her thanks again and again, visibly affected by the enthusiastic and affectionate reception accorded her by an audience which filled the large theatre from floor to ceiling, and when at length she was permitted to proceed, it was some time before she recovered full possession of her vocal powers. In the "Slumber Song" she was herself again, and the beauty of her voice was no less remarkable than the exquisite finish of her vocalisation. In the succeeding scene with Corentino her imitations of the florid passages played by the clarinet were tours de force, which were doubly enjoyable because of the apparent ease with which they were executed; and in the "Bell Trio," with which the first act concludes, the purity of vocal tone and the faultlessness of her intonation were alike remarkable. It is unnecessary to particularise the meritorious features of her admirable performance, but a word must be said respecting her execution of the difficult "Shadow Song." This was in all respects a specimen of the highest kind of vocal art, and was a model for vocalists to study and for musicians to admire. If we sometimes refrain from accepting operatic aspirants as "finished" artists, it is because they are unable to fulfil those artistic requirements which to Adelina Patti present no difficulties. For instance, her execution of chromatic scales in the "Shadow Song," her power of holding notes without the slightest suspicion of "tremolo," and her absolutely perfect execution of shakes and floriture, may be cited as specimens of really "finished" vocalisation. Art of this kind affords a standard which few can attain, but by which all may fairly be judged. The great artist who held her audience spell-bound did not arrive at her present development of vocal cultivation without long and assiduous study, and the example of her success conveys a lesson to every student. It must at the same time be admitted that she appears to be endowed by nature with a specially happy organisation, and, apart from cultivation, has a musical instinct of the rarest kind.

The same remark applies to her acting, which is so natural and spontaneous that all appearance of art is hidden. In comedy and tragedy she is equally delightful, and those who have watched her career from its commencement have noticed that there is an infinite variety in her readings of familiar parts, and that she often startles and delights her admirers by sudden and spontaneous revelations of a "grace beyond the reach of art." Last night this creative power was often manifested, and both her singing and acting merited the enthusiastic applause with which they were rewarded. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales and a large number of the aristocracy were present.

(From the "Pall Mall Gazette," May 16.)

The most perfect vocalist and most poetical actress of our time returned to us last night in the character of Dinorah, than which none is better suited for the exhibition of at least one side of her many-sided talent. It would be in vain to assert that Mdme Patti has improved since she was last among us, improvement in her case having ceased to be possible. But she was never before received with so much enthusiasm. That every place in the theatre was filled before the performance began happened as a matter of course. Every place, too, seemed to be occupied by some particularly devoted admirer of Mdme Patti, so that on appearing for the first time she met with a welcome so cordial, so pronounced, and so prolonged, that even this first favourite among the favourites of the operatic stage, accustomed as she is to ardent greetings, must have been astonished at her reception. Apparently, too, she was delighted; and she may well be pleased to find her popularity still increasing at a theatre where her abilities, her acquirements, and her manifold graces made her at once the most popular of prime donne when, some twelve or fourteen years ago, she came out at the Royal Italian Opera as Amina in La Sonnambula. She was only a child, but she was a child of genius; and the impression she then made, though less profound than the impression she now produces, was of the same character. She in those days presented sketches where at present she shows us perfect pictures. Still the same Patti, but a Patti of more power and more decision than could have belonged to the Patti of seventeen. To Mdme Patti's genius might well be applied the fable of the two knights who quarrelled as to the colour of an object which each saw from a different-coloured side. Many well-meaning persons, after seeing her as Rosina in Il Barbiere, or as Norina in Don Pasquale, go about saying that she is incomparable in comedy, which is true; but that she is not and cannot be quite so good in serious works, which is false. Those who have only witnessed Mdme Patti's performance of sentimental and dramatic parts fall into a similar error from the opposite point of view; and it would be quite possible to see her in the lively part of Rosina, in the pathetic part of Linda, in the tragic part of Aida, and yet have no conception as to her ability to realise on the stage the fantastic and fairy-like personage of Dinorah. Meyerbeer has set this highly spiritual character to appropriately ethereal music; and there is no heroine in the whole range of opera more perfectly painted by the melodies and melodic phrases assigned to her than the pale, shadowy, moonstruck heroine of the Breton legend known to opera-goers as Le Pardon de Plöermel. Meyerbeer must have had a vision of Mdme Patti in composing this Pardon de Plöermel, or Dinorah, as it is called on the Italian stage. One might easily believe that the character had been conceived and the music of the character written expressly for her. Not only is the personage marvellously suited to her in a dramatic point of view, the part moreover contains passages which she alone can sing. Others, no doubt, can utter the notes correctly enough; but Mdme Patti makes every phrase at once Dinorah's and her own. She animates the character in the completest sense of the word, penetrating herself with the composer's spirit, and throwing her whole soul into his creation.

LYONS.—A musical competition of reed bands and vocal societies is to take place on the 20th and 21st inst.

MUSIC AT LEEDS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The above is a mis-nomer—a false heading. We have no music at Leeds just at present. We can only reflect on the past, and anticipate good things in the future. But stay, is it not my duty, dear Editor, to chronicle what may possibly have an important bearing on “the music of the future” in Clothopolis, and to inform you that his Worship the Mayor of Leeds gave a magnificent banquet to the Musical Festival Committee last Friday evening at the Town Hall, and that your honoured contributor was among the favoured guests on that interesting occasion? Truly, if it was not wholly a feast of reason and a flow of soul, it was a feast of things in and out of season, and a very considerable flow of bowl. The proverbial hospitality of Yorkshire shone out most conspicuously. Never did the Mayor’s extensive table groan with choicer viands or more varied and delicious drinks, and these were specified, too, on a menu of original design, distinguished (as you will mark from the enclosed), if not by the purest French, at least by artistic and suitable musical emblems. The Mayors of Ripon and Wakefield, in their insignia of office, gave a municipal dignity to the banquet; eminent men of the legal and medical professions, as well as the Editors of the various Leeds papers, and a small sprinkling of local musicians (Dr Spark and Mr Broughton) all helped to make up the eighty guests who were assembled to assist the Mayor in his generous and timely welcome to the Leeds Musical Festival Committee of 1877. If the dinner was a model one, so was the toast list. To which were added, “The Mayors of Ripon and Wakefield,” smartly proposed by the Town Clerk, and “Mr Walter Austin” (composer of The Fire King cantata), who, said his proposer, was “the only representative composer present, i.e., of works written for the Festival”—Dr Spark having, it appears, withdrawn his offer of a concert-overture, for lack of time, &c. I must here mention that Dr Macfarren and Sir Michael Costa were both invited to the banquet, and would have attended but for indispensable engagements in town on the same evening.

The Mayor made a happy speech in proposing “Success to the Leeds Musical Festival.” His Worship observed that the two great points desired were (1) the encouragement and progress of music in its highest forms; and (2) the securing to our great local charity, the Leeds General Infirmary, a rich addition to its treasury.

Mr Thos. Marshall, the Registrar of the County Court, and chairman of the Executive Committee, replied in suitable terms. He said that as the town of Leeds possessed one of the finest halls and most famous organs in England, or perhaps in Europe, and also a superb and powerful chorus second to none, they (the Committee) had engaged to merit fair association with these local advantages, the grandest band, and also the most successful and experienced conductor of modern times—Sir Michael Costa. To these attractions would be added those of the best possible performance of ancient and modern compositions of the highest class—first-rate solo singers, &c.—But, he significantly added, there was a determination on the part of the executive not to sacrifice the general excellence of the performances, or the expected pecuniary benefit to the medical charities of the town, by paying extortionate sums to any particular “stars” who were expected by the general public to appear on the announcement of every musical festival, but whose expensive engagements but too often demanded sacrifices in more important departments, and decidedly militated against general success, musically and financially.

I may add that the chorus rehearsals are carried on with much vigour and success by Mr Broughton; and that, in addition to Handel’s Solomon, Mozart’s Requiem, Mendelssohn’s Walpurgis Night, and Bach’s Magnificat, a part of Dr Macfarren’s new oratorio has been rehearsed, the remainder being daily expected.

The orchestra in the Town Hall is fast being re-constructed; the grand organ is undergoing a complete overhauling—various repairs, cleaning, &c.; the recitals are over, and nothing is thought of (musically) in Leeds but the great event of the autumn, commencing on Wednesday, September 19th, which, notwithstanding the cry of bad trade, is expected to surpass former gatherings in almost every point. May no one be disappointed.

Leeds, May 16, 1877.

P.S.—Where shall we land now? Wagner is not coming to Leeds! One of our Committee has just returned from the Wagner

Festival at the Albert Hall, in which he says he found “plenty of room,” &c. He seems to be very ill, his language in attempting to describe to me the effect the music had upon him, is very incoherent, and occasionally painful to listen to. He tells me that he patiently bore the first half of the concert, and strove manfully with the German descriptions in the word books, but “could make nought of it.” Seeing others gradually sneaking away, he summoned up courage and followed suit, going back to his hotel and to bed with the greatest possible speed. Here in vain he strove to discover the “Liet-motive” in the selection from the Nibelungen and Rhinegold, and at last overtaxed nature was exhausted, and he fell asleep. He begs I will not press him further on the subject now, but promises to recur to it, and tell me all his impressions of that fearful night, if I will only first play to him gently and expressively, “Batti batti,” or “Salve dimora.” Poor fellow; he assured he has my deepest sympathy, and when he next comes I will play him “a tune.”

[The committee-gentleman who names “Batti batti” and “Slave dimora” in the same breath cannot fairly be expected to understand the melos of Richard Wagner.—E. Quett.]

THE LEAFLESS TREE.

BY PENCERDDD GWFFYN.

On the earth’s radiant mantle of varied hue,
That spring spreadeth forth to th’ enraptured view,
Yon dark leafless tree with bare skeleton arms,
Now forms a rude blot ’mid the fair virgin charms.
The sun as a bridegroom embraceth the earth,
His nuptial hymn’s chanted by birds in shrill mirth;
The forests in gay wedding garments appear,
Yet thou in the garb of grim death scowlest here.
In shaking thy vixenish hands to the sky,
The winds thou set’st moaning so dissonantly;
With hungry, gaunt fingers thou stretchest to seize
The riches which load all the neighbouring trees.
Across the blue sky thou art spread like a net,
That good should not fly through the tangled outlet;
And, spider-like, demons will lurk in thy web,
To clutch all that pass in the night’s flow and ebb.
The fairies when tripping beneath the moon’s ray,
Will shun the weird shadow that’s thrown from thy spray;
There goblins will revel in witchery’s craze,
In and out of the lines of thy tortuous maze.
The primrose unto thee now reareth its head,
And the violet deigneth its perfume to shed;
Adoration is sin to an idol’s foul shrine,
And offerings are vain on such altars as thine.
Whilst the forest resounds with its newly form’d quire,
Thy branches are dumb as an unstringed lyre;
The minstrels of day from thy scare wing their flight,
And ne’er from thy boughs sings the sweet bird of night.
The languishing lovers pass by with a sigh,
To shades that will hide them from every eye;
Th’ emotion, which courseth warm blood through each vein,
Thine image of death would its currents restrain.
The vows that are breath’d in th’ enraptured ear
Would be scatter’d by winds through thy branches so sere;
For love’s tender music in bowers will linger,
As in aisles are retained the tones of the singer.
Thou’rt like a spent voice harshly grating the ear,
Whilst youth’s sweetly carolling harmonies clear.
Cruel winter has left thee—his reign having ceased,
To be shown as the mummy at spring’s merry feast.
And is it then death? Nay, ’tis only the seeming;
For, behold! every stem with life latent is teeming;
The clos’d bud appeareth like death’s parasite,
But, unfolding, will bring hidden glories to sight.
When the blossoms, now spreading so wondrously fair,
Are drooping and fading ’neath summer’s fierce glare,
Thy bloom then will shoot with such vigour and zest,
That of all the spring tribe thou’lt be youngest and best.
Old age, like this tree, seems to cumber the ground,
His limbs, as thy branches, all wither’d are found;
Though winter upon him has fix’d the dread doom,
In the spring that’s eternal anon he will bloom,
May 14, 1877,

The Wagner Festival.

(From "Punch.")

Having been a considerable time accustomed to play the Trilogy with one finger on the accordion, I was naturally anxious to hear the same work of art performed by a band of two hundred at the Albert Hall.

Herr Richard Wagner wrote to me in his best low Bavarian:—

"Ich bin gleich nach gekommen London mit der Trompeten und Drummen, der brassen, der Winden und der Fiddelstücken. Du bist ein Musik-Kritiker. Wie viel? Leben Sie wohl.—R. W."

Then—

"Postscriptum.—Inklösen ist ein Postoffische Ordern für ein Thaler. Herren Hodge und Essex wollen Sie Trinkmönische geben. Wenn beide der Herren are at home, Sie der whole somm all-at-conce vill poketen!! Stecken Sie es in Ihre Tasche! Ich trinke to our Nex-merre-meeting! Hoch!"

To which I replied (in Saxon-Bavarian, which we both understood)—

"O mein intimer Freund, Ich see zou blowen vürst! Votz ein Thaler? Gettout!! Woran denken Sie? Das ist nicht genug. Ich weiss wie viel U're es ist! Ich take nicht der Trink-mönische ekeption wenn Ich bin drei. Wenn drei, trinke. Kumprenny! Lieben Sie wohl mein Herr von Thaler—nicht von Thaler, aber zwei, drei und az many moren Thaleren az zu li'en-to-standen! Hoch!"

Why, I couldn't even get up a torchlight procession in Orme Square with one thaler. It wouldn't run to one torch and a cab fare. So that all my schemes for worthily celebrating the grand occasion fell to the ground. I had composed a Festival Hymn, to be sung to an air of Bellini's under Wagner's vinder in Orme Square (where he is stopping with Herr Toole, who "always comes home to tea"), which ran (or would have run, if it had once got a fair start) like this,—

"Orme! Orme! Orme! sweet Orme!

Ho! Mynheer von Wagner, there's no place like Orme!"

This was set to a bed-chamber-kandlestücken "motive," and would have been simply a masterpiece; but, no matter, there's the masterpiece still on my chimney-piece. The world knows nothing of its greatest men!

Being a trifle near-sighted, and a little uncertain about Wagnerian waggeries generally (I haven't seen him for years—and the idea of offering me a thaler!), I requested a friend of mine, who has the reputation of being a very well-informed man, to ask me (in your interest) to dinner. He mistook my meaning, and came and dined with me. We were Wagnerites both—Wagnerisseriesites. My Well-Informed Man said he would tell me everything. Down to the Hall we went in a hansom. Then we got out, and, amid the cheers of the Monday populace and the courteous salutes of the A Division (Wagnerites to a man), bowing left and right, entered the salle.

"Der Walkiren!" exclaimed the crowd directly they saw us. We intimated to Herren Hodge and Essex that we wished to be alone. They replied that with nearly eight thousand people in the Hall this would be almost impossible. "But," they politely added, "after the opera is over you can have it entirely to yourself."

"Now," I said to my Well-Informed Man (engaged, mind, on purpose, just as a Q.C. has a solicitor below him to give him his facts), "Tell me all you know."

Oh, sir! Oh, my dear sir! Never again with you, Robin—I mean, never again with my Well-Informed Friend. A humbug, sir, a humbug!—but, to proceed.

Two ladies walked on to the platform. Immense applause. "Whom are they applauding?" I asked of Well-Informed Friend. Did he reply at once, sir? No. He referred to his programme. Why, I could have done as much. At this moment a buzz went round the house, and from box to box was mysteriously telegraphed the words "Frau Materna." "Ah!" exclaimed my Well-Informed Friend suddenly, "that's Frau Materna! She was at Bayreuth."

"Which is Frau Materna?" I asked, sternly, for there were two. Is it the magnificent lady in a brilliant dress, or is it the retiring young damsel in blue?"

"Well," replied my Well-Informed Friend, deliberately, "well—it's either the stouter of the two—or the other."

And I had asked this friend to accompany me on the strength of knowing all about it! Why, sir, I had imagined that this person had been your correspondent at Bayreuth last year.

Suddenly, a burst of enthusiastic applause. I could not see whom they were applauding. I appealed to my Well-Informed Friend. "Is it Wagner?" I asked.

"Well, he replied, slowly, "I fancy it must be Wagner."

"Is he there?" I asked, authoritatively—for you see I had treated this man, and treated him well, on the strength of his being Your Own Well-Informed Correspondent at Bayreuth.

"Well," he began, "I rather think he—!" But before the egregious humbug could commit himself to an assertion, a mysterious whisper passed round—"It is Wilhelmj!"

"Ah!" exclaimed my Well-Informed Friend, suddenly waking up, "that's Wilhelmj!"

I frowned; he cowered. So we sat, I frowning, he cowering, until an enthusiastic greeting announced the appearance of Herr Wagner.

A lady near me gave a great start.

"Is that Wagner?" she exclaimed; and then added, in a tone of considerable disappointment, "Why he is quite a respectable-looking, quiet, elderly man!" And so he is—now.

My Well-Informed Man, while pretending to read the German portion of the Tannhäuser (the humbug!), kept losing his place (I watched him), and was always looking over other people's shoulders to see when they turned over, and what page they were at.

Still I clung to him. I had heard him talk so much of Wagner. In your interests, sir, I clung to him. I still hoped that he might be the gifted creature I had supposed.

Between the parts I took my Well-Informed Man into the lobby, pulled out my note-book and said, "Now, tell me all about it. First, I suppose you knew all these singers to speak to at Bayreuth?"

My Well-Informed Man paused for a moment, trembled, turned pale, then throwing himself on his knees, while the perspiration streamed off his agonised face, he cried, "Spare me! Oh spare me! I never was at Bayreuth!"

I suppress the rest of this painful scene. I pity that man's family. He was at once confided to the care of Policeman B flat (a great Wagnerite), and I saw no more of him.

A sadder and wiser man I returned from the Rheingold, that overpoweringly wonderful work. The music-hall of the future is evidently paved with good motives. I recognised the genius of the idea, and fell into the spirit of it cordially. Before it was a quarter over didn't I feel an irrepressible "drink-motive?" Later on, wasn't I powerfully moved by a "more-drink-motive?" Then by "go-away-before-the-crowden-bit-motive?" Were not the Linkmen both actuated by a "threepenny-bit-motive" when they dashed wildly off in search of a cab for yours truly? And wasn't I (still Wagnerian) impelled by a "save-my-two-and-sixpence-motive" when I didn't stop for the cab, but set off to walk? Didn't the "drink-motive" recur strongly again and often-times during the remainder of the evening, not to mention the "supper-motive" and the "cigar motive," uniting together to form one irresistible "stop-at-the-club-till-three-in-the-morning-motive."

Before retiring to rest, I dropped a line to my old friend, "Mein Intimer Freund, your Rhine-gold has the ring (Der Ring des Nibelungen) of the true genius-metal. But with such a stock of Rhine-gold, why offer me a thaler? No matter. Success to you, Mein Herr! The "sleep-motive" overcomes yours ever, Posky Balfour.

TO F. C. BURNAND, ESQ.

DEAR BURNAND,—Mr Zero is expected in town daily. Wabash avenue residents are enjoying a carnival of bells. The Board of Health are after the sellers of diseased meat and stale oysters. John Dillon drew another large audience. The shops which advertise in the Republican are jammed full of Christmas buyers.

From this, dear Burnand, you may draw your own conclusions. My mind is made up. Hobbes (or Hobbs), of Malmesbury (or Malmsbury), says—"a state of nature is a state of war; everyone warring against everyone." Yours extremely, SIDNEY HAM.

AU PORT D'ALGER.

Layetier—Coffettier—Emballleur.	Box-maker, Trunk-maker, Packer.
Tient un assortiment des Boites et Caisses.	Keep a sortment of Boxes and Cashes.
Boites légères pour l'ajustement des dames.	Nimble Boxes for the adjusting of Ladies.
Encaisse aussi les Glaces, Meubles, Pendriles, Cristaux.	Pack up also in boxes, Ices, Household goods, Clocks, Crystal.
Emballage en toile grasse, toile cirée et toile d'emballage.	Packing in toils fat waxed and of packing.
Fait les expéditions à la douane.	Make the expeditions to the custom house.
Tient malles de tout genre et de toutes grandeur.	Keep Pack of all sorts and of all largeness.
Rue St Anne, No 16, Magnier, à Paris, A.D. 1808.

A VOICE FROM BERLIN.

Minnie Hauk has left us. How small or how great a loss she may be for our Royal Operahouse is a question into which we cannot and will not enter now. All celebrities are exposed to the attacks of the envious, and our prima donna has experienced no lack of enemies, who are certainly as numerous as her admirers. Despite this, the house on Thursday presented as brilliant an appearance as on the first night of a great work, and the traffic in tickets outside the doors was as flourishing as ever it was in the old and almost forgotten days of Pauline Lucca. Minnie Hauk, indeed, did more than anyone else to fill up the void occasioned by the departure of the lady last named. She undertook most of Pauline Lucca's parts, and, within the limits of her individuality, sustained them to perfection. She is no more free from weaknesses than are other fair artists, but she possesses a great number of good qualities, which are not so soon found combined in any other singer. Her place will not be easily filled up; and the public will often have occasion to lament the fact of her leaving Berlin. She has sung in more than a dozen parts, and stamped even the smallest with well-marked character. We will mention merely her Zerline in Don Juan and Fra Diavolo, and her grand parts, such as Margarethe, Aida, Pamina, Rosine in Il Barbiere, Marie, Mignon, Carlo Broschi, Cherubino, &c., which are certainly to be considered first-rate performances. A grand voice of extensive compass, an admirable method, considerable dramatic talent, and a heavenly stage-presence, belong to her in the highest degree. On her last appearance as Marie in La Fille du Régiment she was seen at her best. Her graceful, roguish acting was full of animation and effectiveness, and her efforts were rewarded by numerous ovations. Especially successful were the pieces introduced in the first scene of the second act, namely, "Kathleen Mavourneen," so frequently mentioned of late, and another English song, "She is fooling thee" (Balfe), greatly in vogue at the present time on the other side Channel; as well as, at the conclusion of the opera, the well-known waltz, "Vien', vien', m'abbraccia." Miss Hauk's style of execution is singularly well adapted for such pieces, her exceptionally beautiful pianissimo forming a very important feature in them. As a matter of course, large bouquets and wreaths rained down from all sides, and, at the conclusion of the opera, Miss Hauk had to appear before the curtain five times. We hear that she may return for a short engagement in the season of 1878-9. If she does, she may be sure of being well received. Between this and then there will be many advantageous alterations in the operas in which she sings, and the general effect will then be immeasurably superior. X.

—o—

FLAMINGO ON THE CHELTENHAM PROFESSOR.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—In the epistle signed "Cheltenham Professor" which you have characteristically inserted in your issue of May 12th, its author, while doing me the honour to comment upon one of my articles, employs an expression which, in the following sentence he confesses, "a man must be a simpleton to make use of," and discloses the facts that "Herr Manns' repute requires a conductor, and that it has done so 'on several occasions.'" I must decline to enter with the friends of Herr Manns into a discussion, the only effect of which would be a valuable advertisement to Herr Manns, without a corresponding increase to the credit side of the balance sheet of the Musical World. Besides, Herr Manns, being gentleman as well as musician, will hardly endorse the modest assertions of the West of England provincial, whose effusion can only occasion regret that the Board Schools had not been founded at a somewhat earlier period.

For, like many others of the "good-natured friends" who have become chivalrous in the cause of Herr Manns, the Professor of Cheltenham, is prepotently pragmatismal, peevishly personal, aberrantly abusive, innocently incoherent, and unequivocally ungrammatical.—Your obedient servant, FLAMINGO.

MANNHEIM.—A new comic opera, Die Fremden, by Herr Starke, has been produced.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

(Communicated.)

Sir Michael Costa, under whose conduct, as from the first, will be held the grand celebration in honour of Handel that is soon to take place at the Crystal Palace, has been down at Sydenham in conference with Mr Grove, Mr Manns, and the other musical authorities of the Palace, inspecting arrangements and perfecting plans which will, without doubt, invest the forthcoming Handel Festival with an exceptional perfectness, such as should be the result of an organisation so remarkable as that which has been created by the joint efforts of the Crystal Palace Company and the Sacred Harmonic Society, and maintained through so many years to this particular end. Sir Michael has been unremittingly attentive to the many orchestral details, and the musical effect will no doubt be unprecedented, even when we consider the unique position of former Handel Festivals at the Crystal Palace. Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdle Albani, Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Edith Wynne, Mdme Patey, Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Vernon Rigby, Mr Cummings, Signor Foli, Herr Henschel, and Mr Santley have been already engaged. The solo organ performance will be by Mr Best, of St George's Hall, Liverpool; Mr Willing playing organ in the oratorios. The organisation, for gathering and receiving the immense chorus and band of instrumentalists, numbering 4,000 executants, practised artists, is complete. The time is anxiously expected in many a country district. Almost every county sends up trained voices, drawn from cathedral choirs and local societies, to represent it, most of them making the occasion their holiday as well as their demonstration of admiration for the mighty master. All the resources of the Sacred Harmonic Society are put into requisition, so that the band and chorus may not only be numerically, but perfect artistically. The raised seats in front of the Great Stage, where at previous festivals the representatives of corporate bodies and other distinguished visitors have sat, will be as before. The Post Office authorities are connecting special telegraphic wires to an office constructed in the galleries specially devoted to the press. There is every prospect of a magnificent celebration.

—o—

WELSH CONCERT AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—As it has been reported that the miners are to appear at the Welsh Concert at the Crystal Palace, I shall feel obliged if you will permit me to announce that the statement is incorrect. Yours truly, BRINLEY RICHARDS.

St Mary Abbots Terrace, Kensington, May 14.

(For Music.)

HARK! THE HOARSE WHISPER!

Hark! the hoarse whisper o'er land and o'er sea,—
Tyrants are wakeful, the vultures are free;
Fiercely they stoop o'er the blood-glutted lands,
Peace in their voices, but death in their hands;
Honour is stagnant and lies in a fen,
Women breed craft-gods, but fail to breed men.

Stay but a moment! a vision I see!—
Britons are rousing from vile apathy,
Majesty stretches her arm o'er the main,
Tyranny struggles, but struggles in vain!
Back to his eyrie the vulture must speed—
Touch but a province, and death is the meed!

Sneer not, ye nations, though slumbering yet,
England can never her honour forget;
Sheathed is her falchion in scabbard of dun,
Soon will it flash under Liberty's sun.
God is her general! her bulwark is faith!
List to her war-cry—"Victory or Death!"

* Copyright.

H. MELVILLE.

ANTWERP.—M. Saint-Saëns' oratorio, Le Déluge, has been performed at the Grand-Théâtre. M. Ad. Samuel, director of the Royal Conservatory, Ghent, and Member of the Institute of Belgium, was conductor.

HAMBURG.—The fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the Stadttheater was celebrated, on the 3rd inst., by a performance of Goethe's Egmont, with Beethoven's music. In compliance with the request of the manager, Sig. Pollini, Herr Krebs, of Dresden, came to Hamburg expressly to conduct the music, as he had done when the theatre was opened with the same piece fifty years ago.

ST JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S
Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his SEVENTEENTH Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the following Afternoons:—

FRIDAY, May 25, 1877.
FRIDAY, June 1, "
FRIDAY, June 8, "

FRIDAY, June 15, 1877.
SATURDAY, June 23, "

FOURTH RECITAL.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 25, 1877.

QUINTET, in D minor, Op. 180, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello (first time)—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr L. RIES, Herr STRAUS, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA ... Spohr.
DIE DAVIDSBÜNDLER, Op. 6, for pianoforte alone (first time)—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ ... Schumann.
SONATA, in E minor, Op. 39, for pianoforte and violoncello (first time)—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ and Herr FRANZ NERUDA ... Brahms.
FOURTEEN VARIATIONS on an Original Theme, in E flat, Op. 44, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (first time)—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA ... Beethoven.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

	For the Series.	Single Tickets.
Sofa Stalls, numbered and reserved ...	23 2 0	20 7 0
Balcony ...	1 1 0	0 3 0
Area ...		0 1 0

Subscriptions received at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Olivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prosser, & Co., 45, Cheapside; Hays', 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

DEATH.

On the 8th May, at Catherington, WILLIAM ROBERT CROTCH, M.A., vicar of that place, late Fellow of New College, Oxford, only son of the late William Crotch, Mus. Doc., Oxon, in his 78th year.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1877.

Adelina Patti.

DELINA PATTI—"little Lina," as she used to be called, when not much littler, though some years younger—has returned; and now Mr Gye's bright galaxy is three parts finished. The Southern Cross is nothing to it. Fancy! Adelina, Emma, Zaré—the other being in nubibus, till the vapours disperse. It saves us all the pains of traversing thousands of miles of ocean, to see what Arabella (who would have been the fourth star in the Constellation) saw during perilous voyages over and athwart the globe. Behold Mr Gye's all but Cross; and dream of the time when Arabella, who can sing just as well as she can play, shall take her position of right in the southern sky, and complete it! While Anton plays, Arabella should sing; and while Anton sings (which he can, like an angel, when it pleases him) Arabella should play. But to leave astronomical metaphor, Adelina has come back to England. On Tuesday she appeared as the shadowy Dinorah of dear old Heine-Wagner-bitten Giacomo; and when the moon came out, shone brighter than the moonlight. There were birds of song in Shelley's time—sky-larks, "scorners of the earth," who—sang so as to arrest the music of the spheres, and make the heavens dumb for listening. Of such as these is Adelina—whose warbling, nevertheless, no bird, though rising in its flight so high as to become, as it were, a speck irradiating melody, ever equalled, or could possibly equal. Such a glory of tone and tune as gushes from the throat of Adelina was never before heard from feathered or unfeathered biped. Shelley, the divine, apostrophised Apollo, and also Pan. But maugre his "sweet pipings," Pan would be nowhere, supposing Adelina within ear-shot; while Apollo, who vauntingly says (through Shelley's verse—he, the god, could not have said it for himself)—

"In profuse strains of unpremeditated art"—

"I am the eye with which the universe Beholds itself, and knows itself divine"— would have been of little more account. Adelina would have been no Marsyas to him. Apollo, not Adelina, would have been flayed alive, had the Greek-styled Phoebus dared to contest the palm with her. As for Hermes and his tortoise—to Erebus with them both! But to quit the spheres—Adelina, on Tuesday, not only came, but saw and conquered two thousand amateurs hungry for melody, sending them home transported. She was younger than ever, more beautiful than ever, more syren-like than ever. Talk of Circe, and Calypso, and Armida!—no tying to masts could resist her spell. Duke Samson could no more have competed with Adelina in the carrying of hearts than she Duke Samson in the carrying of gates.

Septimus Wind.

The Wagner Festival.

We again quote the Times (May 14th) with reference to the "Wagner Festival," which to-day (unhappily) comes to an end:—

"The second concert of the series, on Wednesday evening, began with a selection from the Flying Dutchman, with which Mr Carl Rosa, through his admirable performances at the Lyceum Theatre, has made us so well acquainted that no further description is required. This was followed by the first act of Die Walküre, the second drama of the Ring des Nibelungen—about which more hereafter. The third concert, on Saturday afternoon, drew together an audience which might have outnumbered the audiences attracted by its precursors put together. The reason of this is not far to seek. There was distinguished patronage; and this being generally expected, many—how many we dare not guess—setting the weather, which could not have been less favourable, at naught, proceeded to the Royal Albert Hall, uncertain as to how they should arrive, and still more uncertain as to how they should get away. The programme was materially altered, 'by desire,' and those who had been satisfied with one hearing of the Tannhäuser "Procession March" had the unexpected gratification of hearing it again. The first part was devoted to a selection from Tannhäuser, consisting generally of pieces—such as the overture, the March, the song addressed by Wolfram to the 'Evening Star,' &c.—which have been heard over and over again. These were listened to with the usual equanimity, and applauded, from time to time, with the accustomed warmth, by an audience whose curiosity would have been more gratified had the programme consisted entirely of excerpts from Wagner's last and, by very many degrees, greatest work—the Ring des Nibelungen. It was, at any rate, a mistake to place the Bayreuth music—which as Herr Edouard Hanalick says, compared with any preceding composition by Wagner, is 'like the Falls of Niagara to a glass of water'—at the end, instead of at the beginning, of the programme. After the first part attention flags; and while the most extraordinary things go on, the audience are leisurely departing. Thus many lost one of the most magnificent performances ever listened to of a truly magnificent piece of orchestral music. Under the splendid conducting of Herr Richter, the 'Ride of the Walkyries,' which began the second part, was more than worth all that preceded it; while the exquisite singing of Mdme Materna, no less irreproachable in a dramatic than in a musical sense, imparted especial interest to the selection from this part of the Tetralogy. Admirable at the second concert as Sieglinde, she was still more admirable at the third, as Brünnhilde. Beyond saying that the 'Ride' was encircled in a storm of applause, and, in defiance of Wagner's known objection to repetitions of any passages, however striking, from his 'dramas,' played over again, we shall add nothing more just now, believing that a general comment upon the series of performances will be more to the purpose than a detailed account of each. At the fourth concert, this evening, the programme comprises the 'Huldigungsmarsch,' dedicated to King Ludwig II., of Bavaria, together with selections from Lohengrin and Siegfried. We could have wished, for reasons already suggested, that Siegfried, came first instead of last. Herr Wagner, who directed a great part of the performance on Saturday, was received with the same cordiality as before."

The programmes of the fourth and fifth concerts, owing to circumstances which neither Herr Wagner nor the managers of the undertaking could have foreseen, were considerably modified. Nevertheless, each contained enough from the gorgeous and magnificent "Ring" to delight all present. More in our next.

T. Q.

Elench.

(Continued.)

At the Bee and Bottle.

PROFESSOR FOURLEGS.—I tell you, I have been, Admiral.
ADMIRAL STUMP (with emphasis).—You must go again to-morrow night, Professor—if only for this (sings) :—

Music in Smoke-room.

PROFESSOR FOURLEGS.—They are rehearsing in smoke-room.
ADMIRAL STUMP.—Come along, we must go hear. It is beautiful (singing) :—

(Exeunt to Smoke-room singing in octaves.)

Enter Dr NOSE and Major PULLIT.

Major PULLIT.—Oh, I like that from Die Walküre.
Dr. NOSE.—What?
Major PULLIT (singing) :—

Dr NOSE (interrupting him) :—

Music from Smoke-room.

Major PULLIT.—They are rehearsing in Smoke-room. Come along, or I'll pull your nose.

Dr NOSK.—Don't.

[Exeunt to Smoke-room.]

Enter Lord LONG and Mr T. DUFF SHORT, severally.

Lord LONG (not seeing Mr SHORT).—Demnition! That haunts me (sings):—

Mr T. DUFF SHORT (not seeing Lord LONG).—By Jove! I've spent a lot of tin for nothink. If only LONG was a member of the I O U. Never mind! I've heard Walküre. (Singing):—

Music in Smoke-room.

Lord LONG (seeing SHORT).—Demnition! There's Short. Demnition!

Mr T. DUFF SHORT (seeing LONG).—By Jove! There's Long. I'll have my tin.

Schluss folgt.

SIMS REEVES IN DUBLIN.

The Dublin Evening Express of May 5, in a notice of a concert given by Mr Sims Reeves on the night previous, speaks thus of our great English singer:—

"What though the great tenor be but nominis umbra, that name is a power in the land, as was made abundantly evident in the crowded attendance drawn together to the Earlsfort Terrace Rooms yesterday evening by the announcement of his visit. For our part we resolved to shun the floor, where nothing is distinctly audible, and a great deal cannot be heard at all, and last night we sought the gallery at the extreme end. We were abundantly repaid for our prudence. We can now recal Mr. Reeves's singing for many a year, but even when his noble voice had attained its zenith we were more pleased by his beauty of phrasing, the delicacy of his art, than by any tours de force or any ringing notes above the stave. His vocal quality is charming, his declamation faultless, his phrasing most just—never weakening but, on the contrary, enforcing the sense of the words. His intonation, too, is pure as ever; we could not detect a note out of tune (and we are somewhat sensitive in this respect) during the evening. . . . And when Sims Reeves is well, and in good sort, he is very compliant, especially in Ireland. He by no means merits the hard things (to employ no stronger term) that thoughtless people circulate so freely about his voice, his caprices—nay, his daily life. The simple truth is that he is a great musical artist, and therefore of necessity nervous and of excitable temperament; were he otherwise dull and stolid, who would go hear him? Who, indeed! Certes not we!"

The Dublin Evening Express is very condescending; but any body who pays attention to the senseless twaddle that has occasionally been talked about Sims Reeves (as it used to be, with equally slender foundation, about Mario, the Italian Reeves), deserves only to be laughed at for his pains. He will find no sympathy from common-sense people. Sims Reeves is Sims Reeves. Find another!

The following account of some of Mr Sims Reeves' dramatic performances is from the Dublin Express, of May 14th:—

"It having been announced that on Saturday night Mr Sims Reeves would appear as Henry Bertram in the opera of Guy Mannering, the house was crowded to an extraordinary and almost unprecedented degree. Not only were all parts filled to overflowing, but even the corridors approaching the boxes were crowded. Money was refused at the door. The pit, which was prematurely opened by a special door in Poolbeg Street to those who paid an extra sixpence, was filled by the time access was obtainable at the ordinary charge. We do not wonder at this. Sims Reeves is in every respect a great artist. To a great voice he unites in a pre-eminent degree musical and emotional sensibility. His powers as an artist seem to have so developed that to listen to him is to hear the perfection of singing. His exquisite phrasing, his perfect tune, and his thoroughly artistic rendering, in which neither words nor music are sacrificed, but both made tellingly distinct, have long since made and still keep him famous. The Dublin public have always evinced a special sensibility to great vocal artists. That Sims Reeves should have been a special favourite here is not to be wondered at; and that he is so still was proved by the audience which gathered to hear him on Saturday night. The opera of Guy Mannering is full of interest, both musically and as to its story; and several items were introduced as special opportunities for the greatest of tenors, which overwhelmed the audience with delight. When he appeared on the stage as Bertram, Mr Reeves was received with cheers, which were repeated over and over again. The ovation must have told upon him, and, probably, old associations too, for it soon appeared that his voice was in first-rate condition, and he sang his part with the power of earlier and the finish of later times. He looked singularly well, and his good acting and peculiarly graceful manner not a little enhanced the effect of his singing. In the "Echo" duet with Miss Craig his tender interpretation made the house hang upon every note. The 'Pilgrim of Love,' sung by Sims Reeves must have supplied an ideal to the audience which few will forget; and, in truth, the effect of his singing was rare beyond measure. 'Tom Bowling' was given with as true expression and as great effect as anything else that he sang. Hatton's 'Good-bye, sweetheart,' even in ordinary hands can send a thrill to the heart and tears to the eyes; sung by Sims Reeves, it was something overwhelming. Contrary to what many, perhaps, anticipated, Mr Reeves came forward in the most friendly manner, and responded to the encore by 'The Minstrel Boy,' his rendering of which was a music poem. After the fall of the curtain Mr Reeves was called forward and greeted with the warmest acclamations. On leaving at the stage door he received one of those ovations so characteristic of our metropolis. As he was moving to the carriage an immense crowd blocked the way and received him with all sorts of congratulations. 'Cheers for Sims Reeves' were heartily joined in; and several individuals insisted on shaking hands with him. Some even went so far as to ask his opinion on 'Home Rule.' Mr Reeves, in response to this demonstration of Irish feeling, expressed in a straightforward way his pleasure at having met and his regret at parting from his audience. He then got into his carriage and drove off."

HERR RICHARD WAGNER, by special invitation, had audience and "Tiffin" with Her Majesty, Queen-Empress, and the Royal-Imperial family, on Thursday noonwards.

It is more than likely that one of the features of Mr Carl Rosa's next autumn season will be Macfarren's Robin Hood.

MDME JANAUSCHECK, the celebrated tragedian, has been staying here for a short time, en route for Germany.

MDLLE CHIONI is engaged by Mr Mapleson to sing the part of Lucia at Her Majesty's Theatre. We hear that Mr Mapleson has also engaged Herr Theodor Wachtel (!) If so, how about Tamberlik?

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

A MAN armed with an accordeon lately stopped before the suburban villa of a Parisian journalist. "Sir," he said, "give me a trifle. I will not stun you with my music, but move on at once." "Not a bit of it," replied the journalist, "Play as much as you like. I don't mind it, and it will amuse the children." "But," observed the musician, disconcerted, "I don't know how to play." "What's the good, then, of your accordeon?" enquired the Journalist. "Only to—frighten people, sir!"

THE Journal de Musique relates the annexed anecdote concerning the gipsy musicians of Hungary, known to the Germans as Zigeuner, to the Italians as Zingari, and to the French as Tsigannes. "Tell me," said Count Teleki to Boka-Karoly, one of the impetuous and original musicians in question, "who taught you to play the violin so well?"—"M. Ibranyi, your Excellency."—"Oh, indeed. Then, of course, he plays very well himself?"—"On the contrary. He does not even know how to hold a bow."—"Then how did he manage to give you lessons?"—"Oh, his system was very simple. He used to listen to me all day, and, while doing so, always had a bottle of wine before him. Whenever I made a fault he flung his tumbler at my head. He flung so many that at last I finished by playing correctly." As the reader perceives, the system, to use the gipsy violinist's own words, was "very simple," but the expense would inevitably prevent its being introduced into our Academies of Music, unless the tumblers were made of toughened glass.

MAY, as we learn from Signor Paloschi's Annuario Musicale, is remarkable as the month in which the following composers and musicians were born: Michael Glinka, near Smolensk, 1804; Giovanni Paisiello, Taranto, 1741; Michael William Balfe, Limerick, 1808; Richard Wagner, Leipsic, 1813; Giovanni Battista Viotti, Fontanetto, 1753; Fromental Halévy, Paris, 1799; Ignaz Moscheles, Prague, 1794; Bartolomeo Cristofori, inventor of the piano, Padua, 1655; Tommaso Traetta, Bitonto, 1727. There died in the same month, Luigi Gordigiani, Florence, 1860; Giacomo Meyerbeer, Paris, 1864; Adolfo Fungalli, Florence, 1856; Adolphe Adam, Paris, 1856; Ferdinand Paër, Paris, 1839; Nicola Zingarelli, Torre del Greco, 1837; Nicolo Piccinni, Pesay, near Paris, 1800; Padre Stanislao Mattei, Bologna, 1825; Antonio Salieri, Vienna, 1825; D. F. E. Auber, Paris, 1871; Bonifazio Asioli, Corregio, 1832; Nicolò Paganini, Nice, 1840; Luigi Boccherini, Madrid, 1805; Joseph Haydn, Vienna, 1809; Giuditta Grisi, Robecco, 1840; Claudio Merulo, Parma, 1604; Giovanni Legrenzi, Venice, 1690; Lodovico Grossi-Viadana, Gualtieri, 1645; Ottaviano Petrucci da Fossombrone, inventor of music-printing with moveable types, 1539.

THE following operas were produced for the first time in May: Zampa, Hérold, Paris, 1831; L'Elisir d'Amore, Donizetti, Milan, 1832; Iphigénie en Tauride, Gluck, Paris, 1779; Linda di Chamounir, Donizetti, Vienna, 1842; Messa da Requiem, Verdi, Milan, 1874; Gianni di Parigi, Morlacchi, Milan, 1818; La Gazza ladra, Rossini, Milan, 1817; I Giuochi d'Agriento, Paisiello, for the inauguration of the Fenice, Venice, 1792; Zaira, Bellini, for the opening of the New Theatre, Parma, 1829; Arianna, Monteverde, for the public rejoicings on the occasion of the marriage of Francesco di Gonzaga with Margherita di Savoja, Mantua, 1608; and I Precauzioni, Petrella, Naples, 1851. Furthermore, on the 4th May, 1860, the bust of Mendelssohn was inaugurated at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham; on the 7th, 1876, the memorial tablet in honour of Bartolomeo Cristofori, inventor of the piano, was inaugurated in the church of Santa Croce, Florence; on the same date, 1824, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, in D minor, was performed for the first time in Vienna; and Beethoven gave his last public concert at the Kärnthnerthor Theater; on the 12th, 1852, the monument to Johann Simon Mayr was inaugurated at Bergamo; on the 15th, 1872, the monument to Franz Schubert was inaugurated in Vienna; on the same date, 1875, Verdi's Messa da Requiem was performed for the first time in London, under the direction of the composer; on the same date, 1876, Meyerbeer's Huguenots was performed for the 600th time at the Grand-Opéra, Paris; on the 17th, 1846, there was a grand concert at the Scala, Milan, to inaugurate Cincinnato Baruzzi's bust of Rossini; on the 20th, 1874, Glinka's Life for the Czar was performed for the first time in Italy, at the Teatro Dal Verme; on the 25th, 1853, the bronze statue of Orlando Lasso was inaugurated at Mons; and on the 28th, 1773, Anton Schweitzer's Alceste, the first really German opera, was produced at Weimar.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

MR W. T. BEST's organ recital on the afternoon of Wednesday the 16th inst. proved one of the most interesting and instructive of the series, and was enjoyed by the numerous audience assembled in The Hall, at Primrose Hill. The following was the programme: Organ Sonata, No. 6, D minor (Mendelssohn); Andante, G major (H. Smart); Fugue in C major (The Bell Fugue) (Dr Bexfield); Organ Preludes on Chorales (Bach); Air, with variations (Best); Fugue, D major (Eberlin); Marche Religieuse (Niedermayer); Organ Concerto, D minor (Handel). It will be seen that the works of Bach and Mendelssohn constituted the backbone of the programme. Some may have thought that Bach's pieces should have been placed first in the order of the programme, as in the relation of time; but it is evident Mr Best wished to give him the place of honour. Perhaps he was fearful that incoming feet might disturb the effect of the wondrous harmonies of the great master. Certain it is that the higher the class of composition, the higher are the merits of the performer; and Mr Best is not fully heard until performing the fugues of Bach. This was felt on Wednesday, when he, with the greatest ease, conquered the difficulties of the double pedal part in the prelude on the chorale, "We all believe in God." It was a triumph of skill, not only showing how earnestly he had pursued his studies, but also the continuity of his practice. Feet are seldom used for artistic purposes; hands monopolise the agency. This need not be. The time may come when the ten toes shall be in as much requisition as when they were used by our ancestors of the woods—so graphically described by Darwin. Mendelssohn's sonata was magnificently rendered. The andante, with its elevated religious sentiment, made more than its customary effect. Dr Bexfield's Bell Fugue gave an opportunity of using the carillon stop. But, apart from the attractiveness of the subject, the treatment of the fugue commands admiration. Mr Best's air with variations was not only acceptable for its rendition, but also for its merits. The air is bold in character, and the variations such as could be imagined its author would revel in. Handel's concerto proved a fitting climax to this interesting recital. The next is announced for the 23rd.

MR and M^{ME} ALFRED GILBERT gave the second concert of the series they entitle "Classics of the Pianoforte," on Wednesday evening, May 9th. The instrumentalists were Herr Straus (violin), Signor Pezza (violoncello), and Mr Alfred Gilbert (pianoforte); and the vocalists, M^{ME} Gilbert, Miss Palmer, and Signor Bonetti. Mozart's trio in G, a chaconne by Handel, the slow movement from Mendelssohn's sonata in B flat (pianoforte and violoncello), and Tartini's Trillo del Diavolo, were the instrumental pieces. The vocal music was selected from Mendelssohn, Schumann, Weber, Faure, Balfe, and J. W. Davison. Mr Charles E. Stephens accompanied.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY.—At the thirteenth soirée musicale on Wednesday, the 2nd inst., several young members made their first appearance. Among the most successful was M^{lle} Eugénie Pachette, who won much applause in songs by Dr Verrinder and Arthur Sullivan, accompanied on the harmonium by Dr Verrinder. Another débutant was Emil Frank. M^{ME} Schubert, Miss E. Clare, Miss Woodcock, M^{ME} Elma, Miss Mary Egmont, and Herr Hugo (vocalists), and Herr Hause, Miss Ottley, Miss Charlotte May, M^{lle} Meyers, Miss Ogden, and Herr Schubert (instrumentalists), all members, took part in the entertainment. Dr Verrinder and Herr Schubert conducted. The fourteenth soirée is announced for Wednesday, 13th June.

MISS PURDY's morning concert was given at St George's Hall, on Wednesday, May 9. M^{lle} Ida Corani, Mrs Osgood, M^{ME} Marie Roze, Miss Alice Fairman, M^{ME} Zoboli, Drummond, Shakespeare, Federici, and Trelawny Cobham were the vocalists, and Signor Tito Mattei, solo pianist. Miss Purdy, who has just returned from Italy, sustained her reputation as one of the most rising contralto singers of the day in the cavatina from Pacini's Saffo, "Ah con lui mi fu rapita," the cordial applause and recall after which being justly merited. Miss Purdy's other solo was a new song entitled "Earl March's Daughter," composed expressed for her by the Cavaliere Biletta, her rendering of which was no less admirable and no less unanimously appreciated. In addition to these Miss Purdy took part in concerted pieces from Verdi's operas. Mr Shakespeare, who was in excellent voice was twice called forward after an air from Weber's Euryanthe. Signor Tito Mattei was compelled to repeat his fantasia on "Home, sweet home." The vocal music was accompanied by M^{ME} Visetti, Bisaccia, H. Parker, and Ganz.

A CONCERT was given in aid of the National Hospital for Diseases of the Heart, at the rooms in Soho Square, on Tuesday evening, May 15. Miss Amy Matthews, Messrs Scarsbrook, Thurley Beale, and Suchet Champion assisted. Mr Scarsbrook played Bach's Gavotte in D, and two compositions of his own. Miss Matthews gave with taste and expression Macfarren's "Beating of my own heart," and Blumenthal's "Love, the pilgrim." Mr Beale contributed songs by H. Parker and Scarsbrook; Mr Champion gave "My lady sleeps" (Ignace Gibsone), and his own "Mignonette," and he was encored in both.

M^{LE} IDA HENRY gave her annual concert in the new concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music, on Tuesday evening, May 15, assisted by M^{lle} Redeker, M^{ME} Paul Viardot, Zerbini, and Daubert. M^{lle} Henry played, with M. Viardot, Bach's Sonata in A major, for pianoforte and violin; Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor; a Quartet by Schumann, with M^{ME} Viardot, Zerbini, and Daubert; solos by Scharwenka, Grieg, and Chopin, and, with M. Daubert, the last-named master's "Introduction and Polonaise Brillante," for pianoforte and violoncello. She had thus ample opportunity of exhibiting her talent, and was rewarded by the marked approbation of her patrons. She was "re-called" after each solo. M. Paul Viardot, in Variations on an air by Léonard, was unanimously applauded, and, being encored, repeated the whole. There was a full attendance.

MR ALFRED BURNETT's concert at Blackheath took place on Wednesday evening, May 9. The singers were Misses Elena Norton and Orridge. The first, a "daughter of Erin," distinguished herself in the great scena from Der Freyschütz, and the ballad, "He does not love me," from her own comic opera, The Rose and the Ring. Miss Orridge was quite "at home" in the contralto air from Dinorah, and in Spohr's "Bird and the Maiden" (clarinet obbligato, Mr Lazarus). Messrs Burnett and Edward Howell played solos and duets for violin and violoncello, and Mr Lazarus a fantasia on airs from Professor Bergson's Louise di Montford. Mozart's Quintet for clarinet, two violins, and violoncello, and Mendelssohn's Stringed Quartet in D major (Messrs Burnett, F. J. Amor, C. Doyle, and E. Howell) were also given, as well as a solo on the pianoforte by Mr G. F. Geaussen.

PROVINCIAL.

WORCESTER.—Mendelssohn's Lauda Sion, and the first and second parts of Haydn's Creation, were given at the first concert of the Philharmonic Society on Tuesday evening, May 2, under the direction of Mr Done. The principal artists were Miss Julia Wigan (soprano), Mr Charles Fredericks (tenor), and Mr Goodhead (bass). Miss Julia Wigan, a pupil of M^{ME} Sainton-Dolby's, although new to Worcester, "created"—says Berrow's Worcester Journal—"a highly favourable impression. She possesses a soprano voice clear and equal throughout its extensive range, combined with a graceful and easy method and admirable facility of execution. It is therefore scarcely necessary to add that the whole of the music allotted to her, both in the Lauda Sion and the oratorio, was very artistically rendered. Especial mention may perhaps be made of "The marvellous work" and "With verdure clad" in the oratorio; these were given with charming delicacy and refinement, the former being repeated in response to an unmistakable encore."

WINDSOR.—The Windsor and Eton Choral Society gave their last concert of the season in the Town Hall, on Monday evening, May 14th. Crotch's oratorio, Palestine, was given under the direction of Sir George Elvey, Mus. Doc. The vocalists were Misses Ada Paterson, Knowles, Emma Christian, Messrs Mellor and Thurley Beale. Leader, Mr J. S. Liddle, Mus. Bac.; harmonium, Mr S. Smith.

SLOUGH.—A miscellaneous concert was given in the Literary Institution on Friday last, by Mr O. Christian, assisted by the Brousil family, Miss Annie Sinclair, and Mr J. Mellor. The ballads sung by Miss Sinclair were well received, and Randegger's trio, "I Naviganti," sung by Miss Sinclair, Mr Mellor, and Mr Christian, met with a hearty encore, as did also a violin solo, "The bird on the tree," played by M^{lle} Bertha Brousil. Mr Christian was successful in "She wore a wreath of roses," and Mr Mellor in Sir S. Bennett's "His salvation is nigh them that fear Him." Messrs A. Joll and W. Summers conducted.

EXETER.—The Oratorio Society gave Joshua in the Victoria Hall on May 10th. The hall was filled with an audience which applauded "not wisely, but too well." M^{ME} Enriquez sang the music of Othniel. The capabilities of M^{ME} Enriquez in oratorio are well known, and her singing in Joshua will not detract from her reputation. In the declamatory air, "But who is he?" in the love passages which conclude the first part, and in "Now give the army breath," M^{ME} Enriquez was perfect. The soprano music was entrusted to Miss Emily Spiller, the tenor to Mr Henry Guy.

BIRMINGHAM.—The concert given by the members of the Edgbaston Amateur Musical Union, in the Town Hall, on Thursday evening, May 10th, furnished—says the Daily Post—a triumphant refutation of those scoffers who are given to deride the merits and uses of amateur organisation in musical matters. Alike as to musical results and philanthropic purpose, the concert was most creditable to all concerned, and to none more than to the estimable and accomplished musician who has for so many years laboured, with such assiduity and disinterestedness, to guide the aims and promote the efficiency of the executive members of the society. In addition to the members of the society's band, numbering, with some professional recruits, about seventy performers, under the direction of the society's honorary conductor, Mr C. J. Duchemin; there were, as vocalists, M^{ME}s Rose Hersee and Enriquez, Messrs Vernon Rigby and Lansmere. Mr C. J. Duchemin was solo pianist, and Mr Winn, accompanist. M^{ME} Hersee was especially successful in the "Laughing Song" from Manon Lescaut, and had to repeat the last verse. M^{lle} Enriquez was encored in a ballad by M^{ME} Dolby, and Mr Vernon Rigby received hearty applause for Blumenthal's "The Message," and a "double encore" after "The Thorn," when he gave "La Donna è Mobile." The orchestral performances were creditable and effective, especially that of the delightful little symphony by Mozart (No. 12). The novelty of the evening was the new caprice à la gavotta, by Mr Duchemin. The themes are at once quaint, characteristic, and tuneful, and the composer has caught the rhythmical forms of the old gavotte, with much of its courtly spirit and antique grace. The solo playing of Mr Duchemin was as usual marked by breadth, force, and expressiveness; and his conducting was not less satisfactory.

ADVERTISEMENT FROM VIENNA PAPER.

"ANNA AGRIKOL, sick nurse, watches dead bodies, repairs straw chairs, applies leeches, and makes pastry, desserts, and delicacies."

TOULOUSE.—The editors of, and principal writers on, the local papers, forgetting for the moment their political differences, joined one another in offering M. Faure a "punch d'honneur" during the celebrated French barytone's recent visit.

ROSSINI AND WAGNER.*

In the singular piece of criticism devoted by Wagner to the memory of Auber, and more especially to the vindication of La Muette de Portici, we have two or three times come across the name of Rossini, and had occasion to remark the off-hand fashion in which the author of Tannhäuser summoned before his judgment-seat the minstrel of Guillaume Tell. It struck me that those readers who were at all interested in the short study published in our two preceding numbers might, perhaps, like to penetrate still further into Wagner's opinion of Rossini.† I tackled courageously, therefore, the nine thick volumes of the Gesammelte Schriften—for Wagner has written nearly as many books as scores. I turned over the leaves, noting an outburst of petulance here and there, and holding my pen in readiness whenever I met the illustrious name for which I was watching. But, though Wagner has rarely lost an opportunity of having a thrust at Rossini, he has never, that I am aware, written a study ex professo of Guillaume Tell. For my part, I am extremely sorry for this. I own that I should have liked very much to read the reasons for the opinion entertained by the Pontiff of Bayreuth of a score which I place far above all contemporary operas not excepting Les Huguenots: the Blessing of the Daggers shakes me doubtless more violently than the oath of the Rutli, but it moves me much less profoundly. Yet though, while beating about Wagner's prose, I did not start the game I was seeking, I did not return quite empty handed. In the eighth volume of the Gesammelte Schriften, under the rubric, "Censures," and the special title, "My Reminiscences of Rossini," we find a page which deserves to pass down to posterity.

Concerning the genius of the Pesaro master there is nothing particular. Wagner wraps himself up in general phraseology which cannot well compromise him. He is contented with saying that the true significance of the part played by Rossini in contemporary music will not be determined with precision till the day when some one shall write the history of art in the nineteenth century, a remark which applies to every other composer, including Wagner himself. He adds, it is true, that the place occupied by Rossini in this history will be a prominent one (nicht gering), and that the author of Guillaume Tell is the expression of his own time, as Palestrina, Bach, and Mozart were the epitomes of theirs. Only, and it is here that we again recognise the familiar snarl, only the artistic tendencies of Rossini's epoch ought to be judged as Rossini himself judged them; that is to say, that they were grossly sensual, and that it is impossible to discover a noble or generous aspiration in them. It is not, however, in this somewhat cavalier estimate that the chief interest of Wagner's article lies. All its flavour is concentrated in his account of the interview he had with Rossini, in the year of grace, 1860, when we see him submit to the pumping process, which Auber again tried so successfully on him. It will be recollected that at this time Wagner gave at the Italiens three concerts which provoked warm polemical discussions in the Parisian press. It was the prelude to the Homeric combats in which the Patrocli and Achilles of the feuilleton were to engage somewhat later over the body of the unfortunate Tannhäuser, dragged three times round the stage of the Grand Opera:—

"Ter circum Iliacos raptaverat Hectora muros."

Every day there were fresh skirmishes, the principal part in them being borne by the literary periodicals. As Rossini's wit was acknowledged to be extremely fertile, people were fond of attributing to the composer most of the shafts barbed by the sarcasm of the smaller papers. Things went on at such a rate that, one fine day, the Hermit of the Chaussée d'Antin felt bound to protest against these mauvaises blagues, the paternity of which was so liberally attributed to him. "He was not entitled," he wrote, "to pronounce an opinion on M. Wagner, for he was not acquainted with his music, never having heard anything of his except a march, performed at Baden, and that, by the way, had pleased him exceedingly. Besides, he knew too well the respect due to artists who endeavour to extend the limits of their art, to indulge in bad jokes concerning them." Very agreeably surprised by this unexpected protestation, which, perhaps, was nothing more than another "bit of chaff" (blague), Wagner resolved to call on Rossini and thank him for his gracious intervention. He was, as may well be imagined, admitted to a private audience, and received with all the consideration due to his wounded pride. After verbally renewing his protestations and assuring his visitor that he had never uttered the witticisms put into circulation, Rossini quickly took the visitor's measure, and saw clearly that he could risk anything with a man possessing so tenacious and robust a faith in himself. Striking himself thrice on the breast, and bowing his forehead in the dust, the clever mystifier recited at length his "Confiteor," and murmured, with a contrite air, his "Pater, peccavi." But we will let Wagner himself speak. Very fortunately for us he has not preserved the secrets of the confessional. "After a few preliminaries," says Wagner, "Rossini resolved to trace for me in concise terms a characteristic account of his career, and confide to me his opinion of himself, an opinion which he had until then kept secret. He really believed, he observed, that he would have become somebody (es hätte aus ihm das Rechte werden können) had he been fortunate enough to be born and educated in Germany. 'J'avais de la facilité,' he said, 'et peut-être j'aurais pu arriver à quelque chose'" ('I possessed facility, and might have done something'). But, he added, in his time, Italy was no longer the place where the reform of operatic music could be attempted or carried out. All elevated tendencies were violently suppressed there, the Italian people having only one object: to succeed some day or other in leading a life worthy the country of Cognac. It was amid such surroundings that Rossini grew up, and this was the singular ideal which he unconsciously adopted. Besides, the commencement of his career had been a wretched one, and he had been put to all kind of shifts merely to live. Afterwards, when his circumstances were somewhat easier, he might, it is true, have modified his point of view, but it was too late! To do so he should have required to exert a degree of force and energy of which he did not feel capable."

After a confession made with such Christian humility, is it not true that nothing was wanting save a good act of contrition? Let the reader be of good cheer; he will not have long to wait for it. On the day in question, Rossini was in too good a humour to refuse so supreme a satisfaction to the master of Bayreuth. Listen, and recollect that it is the author of Guillaume Tell who is speaking: "Thus," he said, with his most expressive smile, "despite the indulgence with which men of serious minds have been kind enough to judge me, I in no way deceive myself, and I HAVE NOT THE PRETENSION TO BE INCLUDED AMONG THE NUMBER OF GOOD MUSICIANS." Then, perceiving the effect produced by this avowal, so free from artifice, Rossini slowly uttered the following words, which Wagner must have found delicious as he smacked his tongue over them: "Ce que je ne puis tolérer pourtant, c'est qu'on me rabaisse à ce point de me ranger parmi les sots qui plaisantent un idéal plus élevé que le mien." ("What, however, I cannot bear is that people should degrade me to such a point as to rank me with the fools who ridicule an ideal higher than my own.")

We can see Wagner bridling up and puffing himself out with importance, while his roguish interlocutor was laughing in his sleeve at his visitor's pride and simple vanity. In the narrative we have quoted, Wagner is positively unable to say enough of the character of a master who estimates his own value with so much modesty and clear-sightedness. In truth, we do not know which to admire the more, the audacity of Rossini in venturing upon jokes of such formidable proportions, or Wagner's credulity in entering and carrying them to his account with the gravity of an old city clerk.

VICTOR WILDER.

(Lines for Music.)*

Last night I sang in a palace hall,
And they gave me royal greeting;
I looked around on the people all,
Bright smiles and glances meeting.
But I thought not of king, so grand,
So grand,
Or if smiles were many or few;
Though my voice should have rung
thro' all the land,
I was singing only to you!

To-night you are far o'er the waters wide,
And the crowded hall is dreary,
Each ebbing and flowing of ocean's tide
Will leave me more a-weary.
But you cannot wander so far, so far,
That my heart will not be true;
And tho' stand we apart, as star
from star,
I shall always sing to you!

M. A. W.

* Copyright.

* French in Wagner's original account.

* From La Ménestrel.

† See Musical World, pp. 219, 281, 284, 312.

WAIFS.

Mdme Rudersdorff lately gave a grand concert at Union Hall, Boston, U.S.

Pietro Cominazzi, the well-known critic of La Fama, died recently at Milan.

Mr Sims Reeves has been in Ireland, showing the inhabitants, "Bedad!" how to sing.

La Marjolaine was played at the Théâtre de la Renaissance for the 100th time on the 13th inst.

A new tenor, Mr Ashley Foster, is shortly to make his first appearance under the tutelage of Mr G. W. Martin.

The Cross of the Leopold Order has been conferred on M. Charles Mahillon, founder of the manufactory of instruments in Brussels.

Herr Ignaz Brüll's new opera, Der Landfriede, with words by Mosenthal, has been accepted at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna.

Anton Rubinstein's Maccabder was recently performed at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, Mdle Marie Brandt sustaining the part of Leah.

Mr Charles Lyall, the admirable lyric comedian, has returned to London, and will remain till August, when the provincial tour of Mr Carl Rosa begins again.

M. Maton has been engaged for two years at the Théâtre-Lyrique, with the title of Director of the Music. His duties will be similar to those performed some ten years ago at the Grand Opera, by M. Gevaert.

Mr Carl Rosa was present at the second of the Wagner concerts on Wednesday night week. He must have enjoyed an excellent opportunity of weighing the difference between a transcendent genius and a transcendent prestidigitateur.

The success of the Hungarian prima donna, Mdle Etelka Gerster, has been something unusual. Munificent offers come from all sides. Signor Gardini, her manager, however, determined not to lose so valuable a star, to put an end to competition, will—shortly marry her.

On the re-opening of the Paris Opéra-Comique in November, the following important pieces will be added to the score of M. Gounod's Cinq-Mars: a grand overture; an air for De Thou; an air for Marie de Gonzague; and a grand dramatic finale, interpolated in the hunting music of the third act.

There will not be time to get up at the Théâtre-Lyrique before the close of the season all the works which were to be produced there. The management restricts itself to Salomon's Aumônier du Régiment, Wekerlin's Après Fontenoy, and La Promise, of Decourcelle. In the last, Mdle Girard has the chief part.

Mr Franz Rummel, the pianist who made his début at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert of April 7, intends remaining in London during the season. Mr Rummel is one of the professors at the Conservatoire of Music, Brussels, and nephew of Mr Joseph Rummel, of London, the well-known composer.

Signor Gariboldi, the flautist and composer, has been created a knight of the Italian Order of the Crown; Signor Delle Sedie has been decorated with the cross of the Italian Order of Saints Maurice and Lazarus; and MM. Planté and Joseph Servais have been named members of the Spanish order of Charles III. [Servais 'em right.—T. Q.]

The first two scenes have been painted for L'Africaine at the Grand Opera. The mounting of the work is being actively pushed forward, but, despite all the diligence employed, the first performance can hardly take place before the end of the present year. The part of Sélika will be sustained by Mdle Kraus, and that of Néluko by M. Lasalle. Previously to Meyerbeer's opera, however, La Muette de Portici, the scenery for which is nearly ready, will be performed at the beginning of the winter season. With L'Africaine and La Muette, the repertory of the Grand Opera will be re-constituted as it was before the destruction, by fire, of the old house.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News,

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE"

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

English Glee and Madrigal Writers.

By W. A. BARRETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.S.L., &c.

PRICE 2s. 6d.

W. REEVES, BOOKSELLER, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL"

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, ST ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

Just Published.

FRANCESCO BERGER'S VOCAL COMPOSITIONS.

SIX SONGS FOR VOICE AND PIANO

1. "FALLEN LEAVES." Song for Contralto... Poetry by OWEN MEREDITH 4s.
2. "CLEANSING FIRES." Do. for Mezzo-Soprano ...ADELAIDE PROCTOR 4s.
3. "WAYWARD WIND." Do. do.GEORGE MOORE 4s.
4. "TO AN ABSENTEE." Do. do.THOMAS HOOD 4s.
5. "THE STRAY LEAFLET." Do. do.AMELIA B. EDWARDS 4s.
6. "DON'T WHISTLE NEAR THE DOOR." Do. do.JAMES ORMOND 4s.

THREE SACRED SONGS.

1. "THY WAY, NOT MINE, O LORD" 2s.
2. "LIGHTEN OUR DARKNESS" 2s.
3. "BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK" 2s.

Composed by FRANCESCO BERGER.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TRANSCRIPTIONS OF FAVOURITE SCOTCH AIRS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By EMILE BERGER.

- "FLORA MACDONALD'S LAMENT" and "KENMURE'S ON AND AWA" 4s.
 "HUNTINGTOWER" 4s.
 "THOU BONNIE WOOD O' CRAIGIE LEA" 4s.
 "THE FLOWERS OF THE FOREST" 3s.
 "THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE" 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	s. d.
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	4 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	4 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	4 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	3 0
RINK GALOP	4 0
FLEUR DE THÉ QUADRILLE	4 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	4 0
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	3 0
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como" and "Palermo"	4 0
HOME, SWEET HOME WALTZES	4 0
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	4 0
WEST-END POLKA	3 0
SOLDIERS' POLKA	3 0
GREAT EASTERN POLKA	3 0
BIG BEN POLKA	3 0
LILLIAN POLKA	3 0
SULTAN'S POLKA	3 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

N.B.—A Complete List of M. D'ALBERT'S Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

M. WALDTEUFEL'S NEWEST WALTZ. AU REVOIR VALSE. PAR EMILE WALDTEUFEL,

COMPOSER OF THE CELEBRATED "MANOLA" WALTZ.

Price 4s.

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

NEW WALTZES BY M. LAMOTHE.

CHANTS DE L'AUBE	4 0
LE MESSAGE DES FLEURS	4 0

Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s.

M. GOUNOD'S NEWEST COMPOSITIONS. MARCHE RELIGIEUSE

(Companion to his celebrated "Marche Romaine").

PIANOFORTE SOLO	3 0
PIANOFORTE DUET	4 0
ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato)	3 0
HARMONIUM	3 0
MARCHE MILITAIRE	3 0
Ditto Ditto Piano duet	4 0

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends."

MUSIC BY GEORGE FOX.

PRICE 2S. 6D. NET.

"The Cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and at private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"Very charming music."—Figaro.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
	s. d.
OVERTURE	3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st ACT, "I'm not the Baron"	3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night"	3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring"	4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd ACT, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	s. d.
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	5 0
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO	2 6
	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9 CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOOSEY & CO.'S

NEW EDITION OF

The Passion

(ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW).

THE PROSE TAKEN LITERALLY FROM THE GOSPEL, AND THE VERSE TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN

BY

JOHN OXENFORD.

THE MUSIC EDITED BY

J. PITTMAN.

PRICE 1s. 6d. CLOTH, GILT EDGES, 3s.

ALSO, PUBLISHED SEPARATELY, THE MUSIC (IN FULL SCORE) OF

THE CORALES,

ACCOMPANIED BY THE WHOLE OF THE TEXT, FORMING A COMPLETE HANDY BOOK FOR THE USE OF THE CONGREGATION.

PRICE 6d. IN PAPER. 1s. CLOTH GILT.

London: BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street, W.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 21.

SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, HAYMARKET.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 26, will be performed
GOUNOD'S Opera, "FAUST." (The whole of the scenery designed and painted by Mr W. Telbin). Faust, Signor Giliand; Mephistopheles, M. Faure; Valentin, Signor del Puente; Wagner, Signor Franceschi; Siebel, Mdlle Macvitt; Martha, Mdlle Lablache; and Margherita, Mdlle Christine Nilsson. Director of the Music and Conductor.—Sir MICHAEL COSTA.

Next Week.—Extra Night.—Second performance of "Robert le Diable."

On MONDAY next, May 28, will be repeated MEYERBEER'S Grand Romantic Opera, "ROBERT LE DIABLE." (The scenery by Messrs Grieve & Son and Messrs Fox). Roberto, Signor Fancelli (his second appearance in that character); Bertramo, Signor Foli; Ramboldo, Signor Rinaldini; Alberto, M. Gonnet; Araldo, Signor Grassi; Un Prêtre, Signor Brocolini; Elena, Mdlle Katti Lanner; Isabella, Mdlle Alwina Valleria; and Alice, Mdlle Caroline Balla (her first appearance in that character).

On TUESDAY next, May 29, DONIZETTI'S Opera, "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOORE." Edgardo, Signor Giliand; Enrico Aston, Signor Rota; Arturo, Signor Rinaldini; Raimondo, Signor Brocolini; Normanno, Signor Fallar; Alise, Mdlle Filomena; and Lucia, Mdlle Emilia Chiomi (her first appearance).

Extra Night.

On THURSDAY next, May 31 (for the second time this Season), "FAUST." (Cast as above.)

On SATURDAY, June 2, "ROBERT LE DIABLE." (See above.)
The doors will open at Eight; the Opera will commence at Half-past Eight o'clock.

Stalls, 25s.; Dress Circle, 15s.; Amphitheatre Stalls (first two rows), 10s. 6d.; Other Rows, 7s. 6d.; Gallery Stalls, 5s.; Gallery, 2s. 6d.

Places may be obtained of Mr Bailey, at the Box-Office of Her Majesty's Theatre, under the portico of the Opera-house, Haymarket, which is open daily from Ten till Five.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.

FRIDAY, June 29	GRAND FULL REHEARSAL.
MONDAY, June 30	MESSIAH.
WEDNESDAY, June 27	SELECTION.
FRIDAY, June 29	ISRAEL IN EGYPT.

Principal Vocalists:
Mdlle ADELINA PATTI
and Mdlle ALBANI.
Mdlle LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON
and
Mdlle EDITH WYNNE.

Mdlle PATEY.

Mr VERNON RIGBY.
Mr EDWARD LLOYD.
Mr CUMMINGS.

Signor FOLI.
Herr HENSOHEL.
Mr SÄNTLEY.

Solo Organ.—Mr Best. Organist.—Mr Willing.
Conductor.—Sir MICHAEL COSTA.

Sets of Tickets for the Festival may be had at the Crystal Palace and at Exeter Hall.

Prices of Sets (including admission): Central Area, Three Guineas and Two and a Half Guineas; Galleries, Two and a Half Guineas and Two Guineas.

Tickets for the Rehearsal Day: Stalls (exclusive of admission), 7s. 6d. and 5s. Admission Tickets, Half-a-Crown.

Single Stall Tickets may now be had, 25s., One Guinea, and 15s.

MR. C. H. COULDERY'S EVENING CONCERT, ROYAL

ACADEMY CONCERT-ROOM, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, FRIDAY, June 1, 1877, commencing at Eight o'clock, at which will be performed, for the first time, his New Sacred Cantata, "CHRIST'S ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM," and a Miscellaneous Selection. Principal Vocalists: Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Marion Severn, Mr W. H. Cummings, and Mr Wadmore. An efficient Chorus and select Band have been engaged. Conductor.—Mr T. PRITTT. Organ.—Mr Mountain. Pianoforte.—Mr Stephen Kemp. Principal Violin.—Mr Ralph Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (reserved), 5s.; Unreserved Seats, Area, 5s.; Balcony, 2s. 6d. Tickets to be had at the Royal Academy of Music; of all the principal Musicellers; and of Mr COULDERY, Hampton House, Court Hill, Lewisham.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 26, will be performed
"DON GIOVANNI." Meedames Adeline Patti (her fourth appearance this Season).

Next Week there will be Five Performances.

On MONDAY next, May 28 (second time this Season), "LOHENGRIN." Meedames Albani and D'Angeri.

On TUESDAY next, May 29 (first time this Season), "L'ETOILE DU NORD." Mdlle Adeline Patti.

On WEDNESDAY next, May 30, no performance.

On THURSDAY next, May 31 (in lieu of the Subscription for Tuesday, July 31), "FAUST E MARGHERITA." Meedames Albani, Synnerberg (her first appearance on any stage); Signori Ordinas (his first appearance in England).

On FRIDAY next, June 1, "IL TROVATORE." Lionora, Mdlle Adeline Patti. The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office under the portico of the theatre is open from Ten till Five. Pit tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.

President.—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal.—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

The HALF-TERM will commence on THURSDAY, June 7, and will terminate on SATURDAY, July 21.

Candidates for Admission (bringing music they can perform) will be examined at the Institution on THURSDAY, the 31st inst., at Eleven o'clock.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street,
Hanover Square, London.

MDME CHRISTINE NILSSON has the honour to announce that she will give a GRAND MORNING CONCERT (under the immediate patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN; Her Royal Highness Princess LOUISE, Marchioness of Lorne; Her Royal and Imperial Highness the Duchess of EDINBURGH; Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK), in aid of the Westminster Training School and Home for Nurses (founded by the Lady Augusta Stanley), at ST JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY morning, June 6, 1877, to commence at Three o'clock. Mdlle Christine Nilsson has the gratification to announce that she will be assisted by the following distinguished Artists: Mdlle Trebelli-Bettini (by kind permission of J. H. Mapleson, Esq.), Mdlle Badia; Mr Sims Reeves, Signor Foli, Signor Fraschetti, and M. Faure (by kind permission of J. H. Mapleson, Esq.). The London Concert Glee Union, under the direction of Mr F. Walker. Violin.—Mdlle Pommereuil. Pianoforte.—Mdlle Cognetti. Conductor.—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Sofa Stalls, One Guinea. Stalls, Half-a-Guinea. Balcony Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Balcony, 5s.; Gallery and Area Seats, 2s. 6d. Tickets may be obtained at Mitchell's Library, 33, Old Bond Street; Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street; Cramer & Co., 301, Regent Street; Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; Lacon & Oller, 168, New Bond Street; Keith Prowse & Co., 48, Cheapside; A. Hays, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, Piccadilly.

ST GEORGE'S HALL.

HERR LEHMEYER'S next CLASSICAL CONCERT will take place on THURSDAY, June 14, at ST GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place (Mortimer Street Entrance), on which occasion he will be assisted by most eminent Artists. Tickets, One Guinea; 10s. 6d.; and 5s., to be had of Herr LEHMEYER, 7, Store Street, Bedford Square.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

MR W. T. BEST will give the next RECITAL on the GREAT ORGAN, at "THE HALL," Primrose Hill Road, Regent's Park, on WEDNESDAY next, May 30, at Four o'clock. Carriages at 5.30. Programme: Toccata and Fugue, C major (Bach); Larghetto, from the Clarinet Quintet (Mozart); Organ Concerto, F major (Handel); Gavottes (Gluck); Prelude and Fugue (G. F. Hattton); Fourth Organ Sonata (Mendelssohn); Andante (Smart); Finale, E major (Best). Vouchers of admission, 3s. each; at Austin's, Piccadilly, and the principal Concert Agents. These Recitals (by permission) will take place each Wednesday during the Season.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERT. Eleventh Season, 1877. The next Meeting for Vocal and Instrumental Practice takes place on WEDNESDAY, May 30. The FOURTEENTH SOIRÉE MUSICALE on WEDNESDAY, June 13. The Concerts and Soirées of the Society afford excellent opportunities to young rising Artists to make their début and for Composers to have their works introduced. Full Prospectus on application to H. G. HOFFER, Hon. Sec. 244, Regent Street, W.

MR WILBYE COOPER begs to announce THREE CONCERTS, at LANGHAM HALL, WEDNESDAY Evenings, May 23, and June 13, at Eight, and SATURDAY Afternoon, July 7, at Three, under the immediate patronage of the Right Hon. Lord and Lady John Manners, Sir R. W. Carden, Sir Albert and Lady Woods, the Hon. G. O. Talbot, Captain Hutton, Captain Heathorn, R.A., Captain J. O. A. Lewis, Edward Bullen, Esq., Dr Llewellyn Thomas; Mrs Blakeway, &c. Artists—Misses Marian Lynton, Janet Clayton, Gertrude Lawes, Siedle, Ellen Horne, Edith Wrenn, Palmer, Madeline Cronin, and Mmes Barri and Tonneller; Messrs Arthur Hooper, Dudley Thomas, Henry Pope, Stanley Smith, Gerard Henry, Michael Watson, Alfred Gilbert, F. H. Coombs, Barri, Vascetti, and Richard Blagrove. Tickets, 5s. and 3s.; at 19, Great Portland Street; and Lonsdale's, 36, Old Bond Street.

MIDDLE VICTORIA BUNSEN begs to announce that her ANNUAL CONCERT will take place (by kind permission), at the residence of Captain and Mrs Coester, 137, HARLEY STREET, Cavendish Square, on MONDAY Morning, June 18. Full particulars will be duly announced. Address, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION. Established 1859. Patronised by HER MAJESTY, Miss Jane Wells, Mr Thomas Baxter, Mr William Coates, Mr Montem Smith, and Mr William Winn. Communications respecting Concerts, Conversations, Evening Parties, &c., &c., addressed to the Secretary, Mr WILLIAM COATES, 6, Shaftesbury Road, Hammer-smith; Messrs Mitchell Royal Library, 33, Old Bond Street; or Mr Austin, St James's Hall, will receive immediate attention. A series of Morning Concerts will be given in the months of May and June.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR W. COURTNEY will sing WILFORD MORGAN's popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," at the BYRE ARMS, St John's Wood, on May 31.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," May 29, at Richmond; May 31, Princess's Concert Room; June 9, Town Hall, Shoreditch.

RICHARD WAGNER.

SOLE EDITIONS OF RICHARD WAGNER'S VOCAL SCORES, IN 4TO.

"DER RING DES NIBELUNGEN."
"Das Rheingold" ... net 16s. | "Siegfried" ... net 24s.
"Die Walküre" ... 20s. | "Götterdämmerung" ... 28s.
Original German Text, 1 vol., 12mo, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, net, 5s.
English Translation, by ALFRED FORMAN, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, net, 5s.
"DIE MEISTERSINGER VON NÜRNBERG." Vocal Score ... net 28s.
Original German Text, 12mo, paper, net, 1s.
Catalogues containing Transcriptions, Arrangements, and Original Works of Richard Wagner, post free on application.

SCHOTT & CO., 159, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

CHARLES GOUNOD'S "CINQ-MARS." Opéra, en Quatre Actes. POÈME

De PAUL POIRSON et LOUIS GAILLET.
VOCAL SCORE IN 8VO ... net 20s. | PIANO SOLO IN 8VO ... net 12s.
Lists of the usual detached Vocal and Instrumental Pieces, Transcriptions, Arrangements, &c., post-free on application.

SCHOTT & CO., 159, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

ITALIAN SONGS BY G. MURATORI.

"PERCHÉ SOGNAR MIA BELLA" ... (Parolè di F. Risselli) ... 4s.
"TUTTO È TORMENTO" ... (Metastasio) ... 4s.
"IL MESSAGGIO DEI SOPIRI" ... (V. Meini) ... 4s.
"TERZETTO" per Soprano, Contralto, e Tenori.
"OH DEL, CHE DOLORE IN CANTO" ... (Parolè di Metastasio) ... 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG BY F. SCHIRA.

"AFTER LONG YEARS." Compass D to F ... 3s.
Also by the same Composer.
"THE BIRD AND THE MAID." Compass C to A ... 3s.
"MOONBEAMS." Compass E to F ... 3s.
"NO REST." Compass D to G ... 3s.
"ONLY APART." Compass C to F ... 3s.
"SOGNAI," in D (with Italian and English words). Compass A to F ... 3s.
Do. in E (with Italian words only). Compass B to G ... 4s.
"IL MIO BEPPIN." Compass D to E ... 3s.
Post free at Half-price.

LONDON: C. JEFFERYS, 67, BERNERS STREET, W.

WANTED, by a Gentleman of good education, a Situation as ASSISTANT in a London Music Warehouse. Good pianist; good references.—C. H., care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THREE DUETS.

FOR SOPRANO AND CONTRALTO.

The Poetry by SAMUEL ROGERS.

The Music by M. W. BALFE.

No. 1. "TWILIGHT'S SOFT DEWS" ... 3s.
" 2. "THE BEAUTEOUS MAID" ... 3s.
" 3. "OH! SHE WAS GOOD AS SHE WAS FAIR" ... 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

Just Published.

PURE RAY OF LIGHT.

TRIO FOR TWO SOPRANOS AND TENOR.

THE POETRY BY MOORE.

THE MUSIC BY HENRY BAKER.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR IGNACE GIBSON begs to inform the Profession that the following SONGS, of his Composition, can be Sung in Public without any Claim being made against them for so doing.

"AS YESTERDAY I WAS SPINNING" Published by Hutchings & Romer.
"THE PHANTOM BARK" ... Metcaler & Co.
"ACROSS THE SEA" ... Duncan Davison & Co.
"MY LADY SLEEPS" ... "
"THEY PART NO MORE" ... Cunningham Boosey & Co.

LETTERS FROM BAYREUTH, Descriptive and Critical, of WAGNER'S "DER RING DES NIBELUNGEN," with an Appendix. By JOSEPH BENNETT, Special Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph. Price 2s. 6d. London: NOVELLO, EWER & Co., 1, Berners Street, and 50 and 51, Queen Street, E.C.

SONGS by KATE MAUNDER. "LADY KIND, LADY FAIR," Serenade, price 4s.; "OH, HOW HAPPY ONCE WAS I," Mezzo-Soprano Song, price 4s. C. LONSDALE, 36, Old Bond Street.

ALEXANDRA MUSICAL BOX (Title Protected and Registered). Ornamental wood case, machine made, with the following 13 popular Melodies and Tunes:—Safe in the Arms of Jesus—Jesus of Nazareth passeth by—Sicilian Mariners' Hymn—Lo, He Comes with Clouds—Home, Sweet Home—The Minstrel Boy—Auld Lang Syne—The Keel Row—My Little Bunch of Roses—Tommy, make room for your Uncle—Fair Shines the Moon to-night—Silver Threads among the Gold—The Union Jack of Old England. Forwarded, securely packed and carriage paid, to any address on receipt of a Post-office Order, value 3s. 8d., payable at General Post-office to JOHN LARSEN & Co., 122, Wick Road, Hackney, N.E.

BALFE'S NEW TRIO in A, Played by MARIE KRBS, JOACHIM, and PIATTI, at the Saturday Popular Concerts, will shortly be published. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

MR EMILE BERGER will arrive in London on the 1st June. Address, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

MR FRANZ RUMMEL, Professor of the Pianoforte at the Conservatoire, Brussels, begs to announce that he has arrived in Town for the Season. Letters may be addressed to 43, Patahall Road, N.W.; or to the care of Messrs SCHOTT & Co., 159, Regent Street, W.

MR REMENYI, Solo Violinist to His Imperial and Royal Majesty of Austro-Hungary, begs to announce that he will arrive in Town for the Season on the 20th inst. All communications to be addressed to Mr E. MAURIN, 18, Arundel Street, Coventry Street, W.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Dépôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists.

5, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.

Price List free on application.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

AN UNPUBLISHED OPERA BY AUBER.*

The Royal Library of Brussels, lately enriched by an original score of Berton's, has just made an acquisition full of interest for the lyric stage. This acquisition is a small quarto manuscript, richly bound in red morocco, and bearing the title: "Jean de Chimay, a comic opera in three acts, words by M. Lemerrier, music by M. Auber. Placed on the stage by the Chevalier de Melfort, and performed for the first time, at the Chimay Theatre, on the 15th November, 1812." None of Auber's biographers speak of this work, or, at least, none of them refer to it by its title. All we find is the following mention of it introduced subsequently in the Biographie universelle des Musiciens: "The desire of working for the stage had already induced Auber to re-set the old comic opera, entitled Julie, with an accompaniment of two violins, two tenors, a violoncello, and a double-bass. This production, which contained several charming numbers, was performed at a private theatre in Paris, and greatly applauded. A short time afterwards Auber wrote for the little theatre of M. de Caraman, Prince de Chimay, another opera for full band. He subsequently took several of the pieces in it for some of his other works." The opera in question, the title of which was unknown, was Jean de Chimay.

The copy of the book on which Auber first tried his strength is preceded by a summarised history of Chimay and an account of the historical fact which furnished the subject of the story. The hero is a certain Jean de Croy, Count of Chimay, treacherously seized and kept a prisoner by one of his neighbours, the Marquis de Couvin, who reported he was dead, and wanted to marry the Countess de Chimay, whom he endeavoured to persuade that she was a widow. A herdsman discovered that Jean de Chimay was confined in a subterranean dungeon of the Château de Couvin. He informed the Countess of his discovery, and the lady, putting herself at the head of her vassals, went and set the captive free.

The book was written by Népomucène Lemerrier—a literary celebrity of the day—the author of Agamemnon, Ophie, and the Lévi d'Ephraïm. He conceived the plot during a season he spent at the Prince's seat in company with Auber and Cherubini. The selection of the local tradition which formed the subject was a graceful act towards the master and the mistress of the house, a mark of gratitude for their generous and delicate hospitality. It was agreed that the projected opera should be brought out at the Chimay Theatre, and that any idea of producing it elsewhere should not be entertained. Auber eagerly seized this opportunity of paying a tribute of thanks to the Princess de Chimay, the amiable and charming lady of whom he said: "When she entered a drawing-room she created day and night; day for herself and night for the others."

Lemerrier and Auber finished their task by the beginning of the summer of 1812. Jean de Chimay was ready for rehearsal when the Château of Chimay received its usual guests. The author and the composer set about teaching the amateurs to whom the various parts were entrusted. What was the cast? We have been supplied with no information on this head. We only know that the principal part, that of the Comtesse de Chimay, was sustained by Mad. Pauline Duchambge. There were eight leading characters, together with choristers, supernumeraries, and dancers; for the stage business was complicated by a ballet. Mad. Pauline Duchambge, the prima donna of the Chimay opera, was for a long time a popular composer of romances. Born at Martinique, in 1778, she married, when very young, Baron Duchambge, against whom she shortly afterwards brought an action for divorce, which she gained. Being left with a very modest income, she found herself compelled to seek a livelihood in the art she had cultivated as an amateur. Aided by the friendship of the Princess de Chimay, she took piano lessons from Dussek, and under Cherubini lessons in composition, which she continued under Auber. She published three hundred romances.

The Prince de Chimay was determined that nothing should be neglected to get up Auber's opera with all the magnificence the resources of the Chimay Theatre would allow. He sent for Cicci from Paris to paint the scenes, three in number, one for each act. There are water-colour sketches of them, not badly executed, bound up with the copy of Jean de Chimay. They represent: 1. A view of the Château and the town of Corvin; 2. The interior of the subterranean vault in which the Count de Chimay was kept a prisoner; 3. The grand hall in the Château de Chimay. As the action is given with each sketch, we see what were the costumes. The women were dressed in the style of the Empire, and the men as knights of those conventional Middle Ages, specimens of which we find in the groups surmounting the clocks of sixty years ago. According to the custom of the period the pieces of music were not numerous, though the book was long. The first act contained an introductory chorus, a romance, an air, and a finale; the second act, some couplets, an air, and a trio; and the third act, a concerted piece, a duet, a romance, and some couplets worked into a final chorus. The share allotted by the poet to his collaborator would be considered now-a-days rather scant; but music did not then play, as a rule, a more important part in comic opera. To the numbers mentioned, we must add an overture and symphonic fragments in several scenes.

It is probable that the pains taken in putting Jean de Chimay on the stage obliged the Prince de Chimay to extend his stay in the country longer than usual, for the first performance did not come off before the 15th November. Nothing is said about the effect produced, but it was undoubtedly great. The annals of the Chimay Theatre boast of no more important event. Was there, on the return of the Princess to Paris, a performance of Auber's opera in her drawing-room as there had been one of Cherubini's Mass for three Voices, which, also, like the opera, had been composed at Chimay? It is probable that such was the case, and we may be allowed to suppose that it was to the favourable judgment pronounced by a picked audience that Auber was indebted for the good fortune of seeing the doors of the Théâtre Feydeau at length thrown open to him, and having Le Séjour Militaire, the first opera he wrote for the real public, played at that establishment a few months afterwards.

Anyone wishing to publish the complete works of Népomucène Lemerrier, would have to include among them the book of Jean de Chimay, the existence of which has been ignored by that author's biographers. As for Auber's score, which would be much more interesting, the original manuscript would, no doubt, be found in the archives of the Château de Chimay. The curator of the valuable musical library at the Paris Conservatory might, we feel sure, obtain permission to have a copy made, to be placed at the head of the celebrated composer's works.

BANQUET TO HERR WAGNER.

(From the "Daily News," May 23.)

Richard Wagner celebrated yesterday his sixty-fourth birthday, the composer having been born at Leipsic on the 22nd of May, 1813. In honour of the occasion the London Liederkrantz gave a banquet in the beautiful hall of the Cannon Street Hotel, about 300 persons—mostly German residents in London—taking part. Some ladies were also present in the gallery, and among them were the composer's wife and Mme Materna-Brynhild. The banquet was a pleasant affair, and there were speeches and singing by members of the Liederkrantz. Herr Wagner made his appearance about half-past seven. The composer in an admirable speech expressed gratification at his reception at the Royal Albert Hall, and by the members of the society of which he was the guest. He, who had been so little accustomed to public festivals, could rejoice in the sympathy shown him in England, and renew for a moment the glorious feelings of the past. He, who had spent so many of his years in seclusion, had come forth again into the great world, and could hardly find words to express his joy at finding such sympathy and love. He had quitted his hermit-like seclusion for a far distant world, only to find how the work he had been doing had influenced the minds of people to an extent of which he had never dreamt. It was a great joy to find what he had created taking root, flourishing, and living in the hearts of men. In conclusion, he said, there are hours in the lives of men which console them for years of labour, opposition, and suffering; and he could only thank the English musical world and the members of the London Liederkrantz for encouraging him to believe that he had not lived in vain, and that his creations might survive in musical history. Several toasts having been given, Dr Harrack spoke of the significance of the day to the German musical world, and concluded his address by presenting to the composer, in the name of the Liederkrantz, a volume of copies of the frescoes of Michael Angelo, which, the society were informed, had been greatly admired by the master during his recent sojourn in Italy. On the 22nd of May five years ago the foundation stone of the Nibelungen Theatre at Bayreuth was laid.

* From the Indépendance Belge.

(From "Punch.")

The Shoulder-cold ;OR, THE MASTER-AND-MISSIS'S RING !(As cleverly managed by Mr Alfred Forman, and familiar by this time to all Wagnerites.)DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Marihann }
 Lisajane } The three Kitchenmaidens.
 Mytilda }
 Pleesmannex (a Nibbeling).
 Master } Belgravians.
 Missis }

ARGUMENT.

The idea is very simple. The three Kitchenmaidens guard the Shoulder-cold. They are taken unawares by Pleesmannex (a Nibbeling), who disappears with the Shoulder-cold. We will not anticipate the dénouement.

The Scene represents the interior of a House from the Cellar to the Drawing-rooms on the first-floor. The windows are at the back, looking out on the Squares of Belgravia.

The three Kitchenmaidens (Marihann, Lisajane, and Mytilda), with brooms and dusters, are seen gliding about on the Drawing-room floor, ascending ladders to clean the upper panes of the windows, descending to break the china ornaments on the tables, and mounting again on chairs and sofas to dust the Pictures, as with their crinolines they gracefully sweep the articles of vertu off the brackets.

Marihann has poised herself on the fifth rung of a light ladder, which rests against the mantelpiece, where stands a magnificent Clock under a glass shade.

MARIHANN.— Waggala ! Waggala !
 Waggala dusta.
 Over the crockery.
 Waggaladusta !
 Waggala ! Wiggala ! Waya !

LISAJANE (voice from the upper panes).—
 Who's on the carpet, Mytilda !

MYTILDA.— I off the ladder,
 Lisajane, falling
 Chipping the china.
 (The Three laugh.)
 Ha ! ha ! ha !

(Lisajane dives down from the ladder, and laughingly attempts to catch Mytilda, who throws over a writing-table, scattering the pens, ink, paper, and other articles on the carpet, and so evades her pursuer. The Three seek playfully to catch one another. This is musically illustrated by the "Crockery Motive" in the Orchestra.)

MYTILDA (thumping the Grand Piano).—
 Waggala ! Waggala !
 Workingless Sisters.

MARIHANN (tumbling off the Ladder).—
 The Clock I have crushed,
 Cracking the Clock-case,
 To crumbling crystals !

LISAJANE.— Let us say 'twas the cat.
 (The three laugh.)
 Ha ! ha ! ha !

(With merry cries they run away from each other, upsetting everything. Meanwhile, Pleesmannex appears gradually from the Cellar, and so into the Kitchen. This is musically illustrated by the "Cold Mutton Motive.")

PLEESMANNEX.— Ho there ! you Noddies !
 How neatly I nab you !
 Am I not hungering ?
 Come, Kitchenmaidens !
 [At the sound of his voice they cease their play,

MARIHANN.— See there the Blue Man !

LISAJANE.— Our play will he join in ?

MYTILDA.— Blaze bright his buttons !

ALL THREE.— What would'st thou, below ?

PLEESMANNEX (with an amorous glance in his eye).—
 How sweet and how seducious !
 On you I have my eye !
 Come, and I'll kiss yer !

MARIHANN.— Now I laugh at fear.
 The foe is in love !

(They laugh.)

Ha ! ha ! ha !

(Pleesmannex, incited by their merriment, mounts the kitchen table, and ascends through an open space in the ceiling, left there by a gas-man, and steps on to the Dining-room floor, thence, by similar means, he attempts to climb to the Drawing-room.)

MARIHANN (tickling him with her broom, but keeping him at a distance).—
 Bobby, you bungler !
 Buss you the broomstick !
 [He seizes the broom, and she escapes up a ladder.

MYTILDA (stooping suddenly down, and leaning over the opening in the floor, so as to blind his eyes with a duster).—

Ducky, I'm drooping
 Down to you drowally,
 Blinding with blinkers.
 Ain't it galopshus ?

(He turns sharply, grasps the duster, but is taken with a violent fit of sneezing, and so Mytilda escapes, mockingly.)

PLEESMANNEX.— Atishoo ! Atishoo ! Atishoo !
 How the dashed dry dust
 Nebulous Nothing
 Nettled my Nasal
 Nostrils, you Noodles !
 Atishoo ! Atishoo ! Atishoo !

LISAJANE (taking his hat off, and about to carry it away).—
 Ah ! now, thou hatless man !
 Catch me to kiss me ?

(He darts at her suddenly, and seizes her apron as she kneels over the aperture. She turns to fly ; he clings to her apron, and so is dragged up into the Drawing-room. She undoes the strings ; he falls heavily on the floor, but scrambles up on his hands and knees. The three Kitchenmaidens get up ladders, and behind chairs and sofas, mockingly.)

PLEESMANNEX (with shrieking voice).—
 Woa, there ! Woa !
 Woa ! Pull up !
 You giggling, gabbling Girls there !
 Give over your goading and gambols !
 Gang of unmannerly maidens,
 Have ye no heart !
 Ye workingless Idleuns !
 Nimble Nid-Noddies !
 ALL THREE (gracefully dancing round a settee together).—
 Waggala ! Waggala !
 Waggala dusta !

(A bright light shines below, between the Kitchen and the Cellar. This is illustrated by the "Bull's-Eye Motive.")

LISAJANE (pointing below to where suddenly the bright light has discovered the Larder-door).—

Skirting the Scullery,
 I see cold mutton-minced
 Left leg or shrunk shoulder
 Sent from the table
 Of Master and Missis.

PLEESMANNEX.— Mutton for my Mouth !
 Masterless Ideluns !
 Give me, ye scatterbrains,
 Shining cold shoulder !
 MYTILDA.— I, Underkitchen Maid,
 Put the cold mutton
 Into the larder.

Where lies the key ?

MARIHANN.— I fill the Cooky's place,
 Plain, but particular.
 Guarding the mutton,
 I keep the key.

PLEESMANNEX (with eyes fixed on the Larder-door, through which is now visible, by the aid of the bull's-eye light shining from his belt, the cold Shoulder reposing in cold, still silence).—

Ho ! there, Shy Shufflers !
 Shelved is the Shoulder.
 I am the Ungerer,
 Unawares Nibbeling.

(Fearfully loud.)

Laugh as you like,
 The Nibbelung is nearing to Nibble !

(With a wild cry of intense appetite he dives down into the Kitchen, and with fearful force bangs open the Larder-door, seizes the cold Shoulder, extinguishes his bull's-eye, and, swiftly disappearing into the darkness, boldly ascends the "airy steps" to the pavement above. The light breaks suddenly in on all sides. Bells clang, knockers sound, wrangling of Cabman and Fare heard outside, Master and Missis have come back, unexpectedly, to sup on the cold shoulder of mutton)

THE RING OF THE MASTER-AND-MISSIS IS HEARD.

Thunder—Lightning—Storm.

KITCHENMAIDENS (flying in different directions, and screaming).—

Waggala! Waggala!

Workingless Ideluns!

What will the Missis say?

What will the Master say?

"Take a month's notice,

Wageless ones, Ideluns!"

Woe! Woe!

Woe! Woe!

(They descend and ascend in confusion. From the very farthest end of the Square is heard the sound of Pleesmann's laughing, with his mouth full. The Master and Missis appear; their faces are filled with black looks, and the Kitchenmaidens tremble before them in the passage, and then go downwards. Presently, the Master and Missis ascend, illustrated by "Lullaby Motive." Dark night sets in, and all is quiet.)

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

Clare College Lodge, May 11, 1877.

The Syndicate appointed March 23, 1877, "to consider whether any, and, if any, what change should be made in the musical examinations of the University and in the requirements for musical degrees, and to report thereon to the Senate before the end of next Michaelmas term," leg leave to make a first report to the Senate as follows:—

A. The Syndicate observe that under the existing regulations for obtaining a degree in music no provision is made for testing the literary and scientific qualifications of the candidates. They think it undesirable that a University degree in music should be obtainable by persons of whose general culture the University has received no evidence. They therefore recommend:—

That no candidate be admitted to the examination for the degree of Mus. Bac. unless

- (a) he have past parts I. and II. of the previous examination;
- or (b) produce evidence of having satisfied the examiners in one of the "senior local examinations" of the University*
 - in English grammar and arithmetic;
 - in two at least of the subjects in section B (English History, Geography, a work of some standard English writer, and political economy), and in the English essay;
 - in one of the subjects of sections C and D (viz., Latin, Greek, French, or German); and in section E (Euclid and Algebra); or (c) produce a certificate of having satisfied the examiners in one of the "higher local examinations" of the University; or (d) produce the certificate of the "Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board."

Having regard to the case of candidates who have already applied for examination under the existing regulations, and whose age or professional pursuits may make the production of the above certificates a matter of difficulty, the Syndicate recommend that the above certificates, &c., be not required in the case of candidates who present themselves for examination before the end of the Easter term, 1879, being at the time of such examination over thirty years of age.

B. With regard to the examination for the degree of Mus. Bac. the Syndicate recommend:—

That the examination for the degree of Mus. Bac. consist of three parts:—

(1) A preliminary examination in

- (a) Acoustics,
- (b) Harmony,
- (c) Counterpoint.

(2) The exercise.

(3) A more advanced examination in musical science;

and that no person be accepted as a candidate for the second or third part of the examination until he has qualified in the previous part, or parts.

C. The Syndicate recommend that a Board of Musical Studies be appointed, the duties of which shall be to arrange, subject to the approval of the Senate, the details of the above and other University examinations in music, to consult together from time to time on all matters relating to the actual state of musical studies and examinations in the University, and to prepare, whenever it appears to them desirable, and lay before the Vice-Chancellor, a report to be by him published to the University. That such board shall consist of the Professor of Music and six other persons nominated by the Council and elected by the Senate, of whom three at least shall be members of the Senate or Doctors of Music of the University. Of these six two shall retire annually on the 20th day of November in every year (commencing with Nov. 20, 1878), and their places be supplied by election at the next ensuing congregation.

D. The musical examinations of the University are at present conducted by the Professor only. The Syndicate recommend:—

(1) That the examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music be conducted by the Professor, assisted by two or more examiners nominated annually by the Board of Musical Studies (or, if there be no such board, by the Council), and elected by the Senate, of whom one at least shall be a member of the Senate or a Mus. Doc. of the University; and that each examiner so appointed receive from the University chest the sum of ten pounds for each part of these examinations, in which he is engaged.

(2) That the examinations for the degree of Doctor of Music be conducted by the Professor, assisted by two or more examiners nominated annually by the Board of Musical Studies (or, if there be no such board, by the Council), and elected by the Senate, of whom one at least shall be a member of the Senate, or a Mus. Doc. of the University.

E. The Syndicate recommend that the regulations contained in parts A, B, and D of this report be applicable to the next examination for musical degrees held by the University, and that the dates of such examination together with the Schedule of Subjects be announced by the Board of Musical Studies (or, if there be no such board, by the Professor of Music) before the end of next Michaelmas term.

F. The Syndicate recommend that in lieu of the fee of £8 paid to the University chest at the time of taking the degree of Mus. Bac., each candidate on presenting himself for the first part of the examination for the degree of Mus. Bac. pay to the registry the fee of £3 3s., and the same on presenting himself for the final part of the examination, and that on presenting himself for the degree he pay to the University chest the sum of £5.

G. The Syndicate have had under their consideration the fact that beyond the lectures of the Professor, the University gives at present no encouragement whatever to the study of music as a science. They are of opinion that it is undesirable that this faculty should continue to occupy such a comparatively nominal position in the academic system, and they think that if the examinations recommended in part B of this report should be approved by the Senate, a favourable opportunity would be afforded of recognising this study to the extent of admitting it as the subject of an additional special examination for the ordinary B.A. degree. They therefore recommend that

A student who has passed the previous and the general examinations, and is in his ninth term of residence at least, having previously kept eight terms, shall on passing the preliminary examination in acoustics, harmony, and counterpoint prescribed in section B (1) be entitled, when he has kept nine terms, to receive the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

E. Atkinson (Vice-Chancellor), S. G. Phear, G. A. Macfarren [with the exception of the words, "a member of the Senate or," in section D paragraphs (1) and (2)], E. W. Blore, Sedley Taylor, Coutts Trotter, Gerard F. Cobb, A. W. Spratt, J. W. Cartmell, R. Pendlebury.

The Vice-Chancellor invites the attendance of members of the Senate in the Arts School on Saturday next, May 19, at 2 p.m., for the discussion of the above report.

HAMBURG.—On the occasion of the fifteenth anniversary of the opening of the Stadttheater, the Committee presented the manager, Herr Pollini, with a vase of antique form, on a silver pedestal. Herr Pollini spares neither pains nor expense to render the Stadttheatre one of the first in Germany. In addition to his already strong company, he has engaged Mme Wilt, of Vienna; Mme Peschka-Leutner, of Leipzig; Herr Franz Diener, of Cologne; and Herr Landau. Mme Wilt receives 45,000 marks for the season.

* Students above the age of eighteen may be admitted by the Local Examinations Syndicate to the senior local examinations under the power given by Grace of June 8, 1865 (see Ordinances, p. 207).

Warr Wall.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—The subjoined copy of a letter which I have this day sent to Mr H. Wall will explain itself. I shall be glad if you will insert it in your next issue, and trust that the musical profession will soon unite to take the necessary steps for the purpose of annihilating an Act which is not only provokingly mischievous, but supremely ridiculous.—Yours faithfully, WM. SPARK.

Whit-Tuesday, 1877.

SIR,—To my intense surprise, I have received from you this morning a letter bearing the heading—

Authors', Composers', and Artists'

Copyright and Performing Right Protection Office,

8, Colebrooke Row, Islington, N.

dated "London, May 19th, 1877," demanding payment on or before Tuesday next, the 22nd inst. (the very day on which I receive your letter) of the sum of £2, the amount of statutory penalty incurred by me for the performance of the song entitled "Eily Mavourneen" at St Simon's Schools, Leeds, on the 8th of March last; "and you further add that, unless the money be paid on or before this day" (the day on which I receive this letter), "the matter will be placed without further notice in the hands of the solicitors, with instructions to issue legal process against me in respect thereof." Now, sir, my answer to this gross attempt at extortion is—(1) That the performance of the song "Eily Mavourneen" by the tenor singer engaged by me for the occasion referred to was given at a gratuitous lecture on "The Vocal Music of the Victorian Era," delivered by me at the request of my friend the vicar (the Rev. T. Whitby, M.A.), on behalf of some society in connection with his parish in Leeds. (2) I know nothing of you or your agency for restrictions placed upon this or any other piece; and being constantly engaged in public performances, conducting concerts, or giving organ recitals, thereby introducing numberless songs and pieces, I, as well as those situated in a similar way, cannot possibly continue our efforts for the advancement of a knowledge of music with any such oppressive and humiliating conditions. (3) If, after this statement, and under the circumstances, you proceed further in the demand of this iniquitous tax, so destructive to the freedom of musical education in England, and so adverse to the equitable principles of our general law, I have only to say that I will resist the payment to the last, even to the distraining upon my property, and will fight the case inch by inch in the courts, until every judge, every legislator, and every musician in our land is made acquainted with a law so infamous and so unjust.—Yours faithfully, WM. SPARK.

Springfield Villa, Leeds, May 22, 1877.

[Wall must have been offended at the alliteration in the title of the lecture. If, instead of "Vocal Music of the Victorian Era," it had been Vocal Music of the Victorian Era, or Vocal Music of the Victorian Era, he would probably not have been offended. The fault, however, is that of Sir Julius Benedict. Why does he write such charming songs?—D. P.]

—o—

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—Will you be so kind as to give me the name and address of the author of "Lines for Music," signed "M. A. W.," which appeared in your last issue.—Yours faithfully,

2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, CUNNINGHAM BOOSEY.
May 24, 1877.

It has been attributed to Dr Wines.—D. P.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of Organ Recital by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 24th:—

Grand March (E flat major)	II. Smart.
Andante con Variazioni, from the Serenade for Flute, Violin, and Viola	Beethoven.
Toccata and Fugue (C major)	Bach.
Pastorale	Kullak.
Andante (D major)	E. Silas.
Overture, Guillaume Tell	Rossini.

Five Hundred and Ninety-ninth Concert.

INTELLIGENT DIRECTOR (musing).—Shall I engage him for the 600th concert? No. I'll wait till the 1,000th. He won't do just now for the Pops. Or rather he would do for them. That won't do for me. Or rather it would do for me. I was going to offer him four thousand. Rosa says he gave him eight thousand. Hum! I'll ask H. Broadwood and Sir Julius. (INTELLIGENT DIRECTOR pats back his pocket-book, and exit in brown study.)

For Miss Ultra.

Dedicated to Arabella Goddard.

Greater Gape (invisible):
—Oh!

Gumbo.—Gollowalla!

Lesser Gape (invisible):
—Ah!

Gumbo.—Wogafoga!

Weel may the pedal go,
The pedal go,
The pedal go,
Weel may the pedal go. (Old Scotch tune.)

At the Royal Albert Hall.

Tuesday, May 22—aged 64.

Hoch !

Walhallwahnfriedmotiv.

ST JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S
Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his SEVENTEENTH Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the following Afternoons:—

FRIDAY, June 1, 1877.
FRIDAY, June 8, ..

FRIDAY, June 15, 1877.
SATURDAY, June 23, ..

FIFTH RECITAL.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 1, 1877.

GRAND TRIO, in E flat, Op. 40, for pianoforte, violin, and horn
—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, Mdsme NORMAN-NERUDA, and Mr
WEDTLAND Brahms.
SONATA, in G minor, "Didona abbandonata"—"Scena Tragica," for pianoforte alone (first time)—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ... .. Clementi.
SONATA, in A minor, Op. 105, for pianoforte and violin—Mr
CHARLES HALLÉ and Mdsme NORMAN-NERUDA... .. Schumann.
GRAND TRIO, in D, Op. 70, No. 1, for pianoforte, violin, and violinello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, Mdsme NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANK NERUDA Beethoven.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

	For the Series.	Single Tickets.
Sofa Stalls, numbered and reserved ...	23 2 0	20 7 0
Balcony	1 1 0	0 3 0
Area	0 1 0

Subscriptions received at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Olivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse, & Co., 48, Cheapside; Hays', 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. B.—The actual delinquent is Dr Whiskeya, who wrote the symphony called "Horn," and married the niece of Farmer Hay, while (under the name of "Phob") joining Perry of Worcester, Appleford of Hereford, Button of Birmingham, Holmes of Hallow, Evans of Evesham, Pidcock of Peterborough, Lockett of Loughborough, Mellor of Malmesbury, and Admiral Wink, in the compilation of A Book of Wheels, published for the "Deaf tone-poets of Tewksbury," about seventy fortnights ago. Ham was the musical overseer.

MARRIAGE.

On the 24th, at St. Mark's, Regent's Park, by the Rev. J. W. Morris (Cantab), ALFRED ASLETT to EMMA MARY, only daughter of the late Edward Francis Rimbault, LL.D., F.S.A. No cards.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1877.

The Wagner Festival.

FOR an account of the last concert of the Wagner Festival we have again recourse to the Times:—

In spite of disappointments, attributable to the indisposition from time to time of leading singers, the "Wagner Festival" came virtually to an end on Saturday afternoon, with what, if we may judge by the audience thronging Albert Hall, and the indiscriminate applause bestowed upon piece after piece, was the most successful concert of the series. The programme contained the Grand March for the opening of the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition, a selection from Die Meistersinger, another from Tristan und Isolde, and yet another from Götterdämmerung, the concluding drama of the Tetralogy. The whole of the first part was directed by Herr Wagner himself, the master then yielding up the conductor's stick to his admirable lieutenant, Herr Richter, whose appearance on the platform was unanimously hailed both by the audience and the orchestral performers. As the music assigned to the care of this acknowledged chief of German orchestral leaders formed part of the Bayreuth programme, with the preliminary rehearsals for which Herr Richter had as much to do as the composer of the Nibelungen himself, this recognition was neither more nor less than a just tribute to distinguished ability. In so far as regards the Meistersinger von Nürnberg, our public had been already made familiar with the grandiose and, perhaps, super-elaborated overture, with the instrumental prelude to Act 3, and—especially through its frequent and exquisite performance on the violin by Herr Wilhelmj—with the love-song, "Morgenlich leuchtend in rosigem Schein," addressed to Eva on the festival morning of St John's Day. We are, therefore, not called upon to say anything about the fragments culled from the Munich opera, except that the overture, finely rendered as it undoubtedly was, made less impression than the prelude to Act 3, the final chord of which, as the curtain is lifted, discovers Hans Sachs, the inspired poet-cobbler, in solitary meditation; and that the Meisterlied of Walther von Stolzing, though given with much expression, would have been more effective had the singer been completely in possession of his vocal means. The most interesting part of Saturday's programme was the selection from the second act of Tristan und Isolde, which the large majority of Herr Wagner's disciples, encouraged, as is generally believed, by the opinion of the master, regard as his superlative effort, the ultima thule of his aspirations. Some, nevertheless, who have carefully studied the work may not exactly be of that persuasion; and we cannot accuse them fairly of misappreciation when they insist that any one of the four parts which compose the Tetralogy of the Ring des Nibelungen is, for boldness of conception and originality of treatment, superior to either Tristan or Die Meistersinger. That—be it said with deference—extraordinary as are the merits of the former, is our own impression. To accept Wagner, under any circumstances, as a comic writer would demand an unlimited degree of faith in the "absolute." Take, for example, those passages in the overture to the Meistersinger representing a "clandestine declaration," and the chattering of the "Meistersingers' apprentices" as proofs of his idiosyncratic deficiency in this respect. The first aims at a quasi-sentimental humour, the second at humour unrestrained. Neither hits the mark; and the reason is not far to seek. When Wagner attempts this sort of thing it is against the grain, or, as some old French writer would express it—il caresse son chat à rebrousse poil (allowing "chat" to stand for "Muse"). That Herr Wagner can be grimly humorous, his powerfully characteristic delineation of Mime, the ill-treated brother of Alberich, chief among Nibelungs, whether in Das Rheingold or in Siegfried, emphatically shows; but he cannot be comic like Rossini in one style, Auber in another, or even Mozart in another (witness Die Zauberflöte)—to say nothing of Haydn, in his rondos, or of Beethoven and Mendelssohn in many of their scherzos, &c. The humour exhibited in Die Meistersinger is laboured, not spontaneous. On the other hand, while we cannot but feel that in Tristan und Isolde, absorbed with his subject, Herr Wagner in his enthusiasm, has striven to make too much of it, he soars high into the regions of poetry, and both as lyricist and dramatist prefers claims that are undeniable. In his interesting volume, "Richard Wagner and the Music of the Future," Dr. Francis Hueffer, one of the earliest and most zealous exponents of the Wagnerian system among us, speaking of Tristan, says that here Wagner "wrote with the full concentrated power of his inspiration, freed at last from the fetters of conventional operatic forms, with which he has broken definitely and irrevocably." Admitting so much, it must also be conceded that Wagner, who never produced any remarkable specimens of what Dr Hueffer, after him, styles "conventional operatic forms," did well to rid himself of their "fetters" and write freely, according to the impulse from within. Never having made himself familiar with "the artificial canals of aria cavatina," &c. (to say nothing of what the Italians designate "cabaletta"), he was wise in not attempting to compete with those who have. The talk about relative positions of music and poetry in Wagner and Sophocles is pure moonshine; for nobody knows, or ever can know, what position music held with regard to tragedy among the Greeks. Leave Wagner to himself; take Wagner for what he is; and enough remains entitling him to be regarded as a man of wonderful intellectual power—a man who, having a great deal to tell us, tells it in such a way as to enforce serious consideration. A more convincing illustration of this, apart from certain passages in the Ring des Nibelungen, could not be cited than the marvellous duet which, on Saturday, was the chief feature of the selection from Tristan und Isolde, wherein the lovers echo one another, phrase after phrase, as if what one said was precisely what the other would have said had their positions been reversed. Here the melody never ceases, the orchestra playing a most eloquent part throughout—involving it may be, but always in perfect keeping with the sentiment to be expressed. Although Herr Unger was still so indisposed as to be prevented from taking part in the Götterdämmerung selection which followed, he did his best; while the singing of Mme Materna was so touchingly expressive and artistically faultless that the duet, long spun out as it unquestionably is, created an extraordinary sensation, the "encore" being too unanimous even for Herr Wagner to resist. As the last few bars died away "pianissimo," little doubt could have remained that, not only many scenes in the operas of Herr Wagner, despite his own reiterated protests, may be separated from the dramatic context without material loss, but that in this particular case the absence of scenic accessories is rather a gain than otherwise. As occurring in the opera, the situation is one scarcely to be tolerated on the boards of an English theatre, but presented as at the Royal Albert Hall, by Tristan und Isolde, book in hand—overlooking certain specifications in the printed libretto, which like the premonitory utterances of the watchful Brangäne (the Bragwaïne of our Mort d'Arthur), might as well be omitted—the supreme beauty of the music told its own story, and was appreciated on its own account. In the selection from Götterdämmerung, which brought the concert to an end, there was no Siegfried; but the grandly impressive Funeral March, with the splendid singing and declamation of Mme Materna, as Brünnhilde, offered sufficient compensation.

Extra concerts are announced for Monday afternoon and Tuesday evening next—at one, if not at both, of which it is hoped that the promised selection from Siegfried, including the fresh and charming music of the forest scene, where the hero of the Nibelungen is initiated in the language of birds, and taught the way to the dormant Brünnhilde's fire-encircled prison, will be introduced. These may possibly give occasion for some further remarks on the so-called "Wagner Festival," and on the influence it has exercised with respect to a promotion of Wagner's art-theories among us.—

Next week, after the two extra concerts (with the addition of Siegfried), we shall have some general remarks to offer.

F. F.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

At the sixth concert of the Mozart and Beethoven Society, May 16th, there was a very large audience. The first part included Beethoven's grand trio, Op. 97 (Herrn Laistner, Booth, and Schuberth), his Polonaise in C major (Miss Lillie Albrecht—recalled), and Trio in C minor (Herrn Hause, Otto Booth, and Schuberth). The vocal compositions comprised Mozart's "Mentri li lascio, O figlia," and "In diesen heiligen Hallen" (Mr Pyatt). Mme Augusta Roche gave three Scotch songs with pianoforte, violin, and violoncello accompaniment by Beethoven. The second part was miscellaneous, the instrumental performers being Mme Sievers (harmonium), Mr Chapman (flute), Herr Booth (violin), Herr Laistner (pianoforte), and Herr Schuberth (violoncello). The other vocalists were Mdle Kellini, who was "recalled" after "Ah fors'è lui;" Mdle Alma, who sang Proch's "Forget me not" (flute obbligato, Mr Chapman), and Mme Roche. Herr Schuberth conducted.

EXETER HALL.—Mr John Child, our youngest tenor, for he is scarcely emancipated from his "teens," gave a concert on Wednesday evening, the 23rd inst., at this old established musical quarters, assisted by Miss Banks, Mme Clara Suter, Miss Emily Mott, Messrs Lewis Thomas, A. Caink, W. Henry Thomas, and Frank Lewis. The concert was well attended, and the audience gave every encouragement to the youthful artist, now known to many by his family connections, and who, if we mistake not, will soon be more widely known in the artistic career for which he has so many elements necessary to success.

PROVINCIAL.

BLACKBURN.—On May 17 the St Cecilia Society gave Mendelssohn's Athalie, with full band and chorus, under Mr Bentley, B.M. The solo vocalists were Misses Carina and Edith Clelland.

MUSIC AT CAMBRIDGE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The University Musical Society has lately given signs of unabated vitality. At a chamber concert on May 18, two works by living composers were performed: Sonata for pianoforte and violin (MS.), by Mr C. Villiers Stanford, conductor of the society, and the second set of Liebeslieder valse, Op. 65, by Johannes Brahms, a work, in our opinion, infinitely superior to the first collection, both as regards the musical development of the single pieces, and their combination in an organic whole. This first performance of the Easter term in a manner foreshadowed a more important event, viz., the Full Choral and Orchestral Concert, which took place last Tuesday. The programme deserves quoting in full:

Prelude to Die Meistersinger von Nuremberg (Wagner); Rhapsody for alto solo and male chorus, Op. 53 (Brahms); 46th Psalm for soli, chorus, and orchestra (C. Villiers Stanford); D minor Symphony (Schumann).

Of the first and last-named works it will suffice to say that they received at the hands of Mr Stanford and his band a spirited, if not quite sufficiently refined, performance, the brass, especially in Wagner's brilliant overture, being not always treated with the discretion on which the master himself insists most strenuously. Brahms' "Rhapsody" to words by Goethe is an effective piece of declamation well in keeping with the sombre spirit of the poetry. The first two stanzas are treated in the manner of a recitativo obbligato, as modified by Wagner and other modern composers. With the last verse, expressive of hope and resignation, a more melodious strain commences, and here the chorus of male voices is effectively introduced. The alto solo-part was exquisitely rendered by that sweet and sweet-voiced maiden, Mdle Redeker. To so elaborate and so extensive a piece of music as Mr Stanford's Psalm we cannot do full justice within the limited space allotted to us. Suffice it to say that its reception was decidedly favourable, the applause being especially cordial after the second movement—"The rivers of the flood," a vocal quartet, the solo parts of which were well sung by Mdles Friedländer and Redeker, and two accomplished amateurs, the Rev. L. Borissow and Mr G. F. Cobb. Another member of the society, the Rev. W. Jekyll, gave the baritone solo, "O come hither." At a first hearing we found the first chorus, "Allegro maestoso," with a short orchestral introduction preceding it, most to our liking; while the second chorus, "Allegro con fuoco," seemed somewhat boisterous. But the whole work betrays the accomplished musicianship of its composer. Mr Villiers Stanford conducted throughout the concert.

Wagner Festival.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL, MAY, 1877.

To August Wilhelmj.

SIR,—The members of the orchestra of the Wagner Festival cannot separate without expressing to you their admiration of your great abilities as a violinist and a musician. They are assured that to you they are largely indebted for the opportunity that has been afforded them of assisting in the interpretation of the works of the great master, under his own immediate superintendence. For these reasons, and for the great assistance you have rendered in the arrangements for the Festival, and especially as leader of the orchestra, they beg your acceptance of a violin bow, as a mark of their respect, and as a memento of one of the most important events in the musical history of this country.

Signed on behalf of the orchestra:—Hermann Franke, Carl Deichmann, Hugo Daubert, Richard Blagrove, Edwin Ould, C. Thomas, Charles Harper, John Hedley (Secretary).

AMONG recent visitors to Paris is Herr Jauner, manager of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna; Signor Merelli, impresario of Italian opera at the same theatre; Signor Faccio, conductor at the Scala, Milan; Doctor Filippo Fillipi, of the Perseveranza; and the manager of the Teatro Reggio, Turin.

(From "Punch.")

Diary of my ride to Khiva.

(Continued, and forwarded by Private Wire.)

To-Day.—Have been unwell for a day or two on the road to Khiva, but am now quite re-khiva'd. (Pun duly patented and registered as a newspaper for transmission abroad.) Just met a Roumaniac coming from Roumania. They are all Roumaniacs in Roumania. Asked him if he had heard any war reports. He replied, "O son of many distinguished parents, O very much over-fed and polished one, I haven't." He went on to add that only the reports he had heard were of guns in the distance.

Met several people going the other way, all dressed in different costumes, some with beards, some with no beards, some with moustachios, some with no moustachios, some with bald heads, some with full flowing wigs, some with long noses and green spectacles, others with short noses and blue spectacles, and so on. Soon found out (on their removing their false noses, beards, &c.) that they were Russian Spies in disguise. They went through a short gymnastic entertainment and left early. If Mr Chatterton wants some Vokeski amusements for his next Christmas Pantomime, he'd better give me carte blanche to engage this Band of Russian Spies. It would be a highly spiced entertainment. (Pun patented and protected by Vic. V. cap. 6.)

Day after.—Met a Fair Circassian. Addressed her with "Where are you going to, my pretty maid?" in her own native tongue. Struck me—the idea struck me, not the Fair Circassian—that she would do for the Princess Olinka in Mazeppa. Engaged her. The only question is now, can I play Mazeppa with my present lot? And do I want a licence? What will the Lord Chamberlain say? My corps consists of self (as Mazeppa), Sleigh-driver, and his Boy. Fair Circassian, and the Circus Horse. The Donkey could be got up as a Wolf, and could be taught to pursue me. The Pig is a difficulty; but being already so remarkably clever, I fancy that with a very little more arithmetical training with tickets and passes, he might become an invaluable check-taker, or better still, an acting-manager for the front of the house; and this would not only save a salary, but also be an attraction if properly announced in the bills, thus—"Money taken at the doors by the Learned Pig. All applications on business connected with the management must be made to the Pig!" And in these times when anything from the East creates an excitement, I could advertise him as, "Hog, the Ex-King of Bason!" But these are day-dreams. On to Khiva! Haven't seen the Oxus lately, from which circumstance I gather that the Sleigh-driver has got the Circus Horse to go straight for once.

Next Day.—Met a few small Boys. Engaged them. New idea—advertise myself and company as "Dr Larx and His Little Men!" Agent in advance much wanted. Pig no good. If he went on alone he might get into difficulties with the wolves. He'd be safe from the nomad tribes en route, as their religious tenets are generally anti-pig, and on this one point they are a Pig-culinar, not a Pig-culinary people. This is what I say when I'm crackling a joke with a friend. The Sleigh-driver has begun to learn English. How will this end? Wish I had a book of Mazeppa. Quite forgot to bring one with me. Shall have to make it up from memory. I remember the funny man in it—Drolinski. Weather cold. My frigidometer down to Zero-under-line. Very low note. I write this before going to bed. Think I hear wolves. No! . . . Only the Pig snoring. Wish I could think of a good name for the Pig in the handbills. A German name always looks artistic, and Herr von Gruntz wouldn't be bad. I'll ask him when he wakes, and get him to spell it out on the Alphabet. If he doesn't like it, he shan't have it. What a pet this Pig is! I'm spoiling him, I'm afraid. Oft on a stilly night, when his head is aching after his day's mental strain of the performance—for he is a litter-ary Pig, bless him!—I sit by his little couch, and sing him to sleep, the Sleigh-driver playing on the banjoski (a Tartar instrument with one string and a half and two screws at the top, played with the thumb of the left hand), with the air, "Hush-a-bye, Bacon!" from my exquisite Russian adaptation of the celebrated Triumvirate, which will be published (shortly) at St Petersburg under the title of "Cozus and Bozus on the Oxus." So runs the world away! Good night! . . . Jumped out of bed again just to jot down this idea. Shall call my Sleigh-driver, Herr Wagner. Perhaps it will frighten the wolves.

To-morrow.—Thought it would never come. Am writing, while driving in the sleigh-caravan, the first act of Mazeppa. Pig hard at his studies. Stopped for lunchski with Fair Circassian at Kissenuff. She has got an appetite. Played three games at Cribbage with Pig. Pig backed by Fair Circassian (who said I cheated) and Sleigh-driver. Lost twenty roubles. Fair Circassian insisted on being paid on the spot. Row. No more Cribbage. Pig ungrateful, and knows too much. Sleigh-driver's Boy sharp, though. I was just on the point of handing over the coin, for one cannot keep a Lady waiting, when the Boy rushes in, his hair standing on end, his face pale, his dress disordered, crying out, "Wolves!"

In a second I was master of the situation. My purse went back again into my pocket. Horse harnessed. Donkey put on tandem fashion. Circassian jumped in. Pig anywhere. Little Boys stowed under the apron. Sleigh-driver (a very nervous man wrapped up in thick capes), on to his box. Crack goes the whip. Sleigh-driver's Boy up behind. Bells jingle. Away! Away! Wolves after us in full cry!! Imagine the horror of the situation!! More in my next, if I live to tell the tale!! The next halting-place is Gladitzova. Wish we were there. Again we are urging on our wild career. There must be at least a thousand wolves behind us. I telegraph this to you—perhaps for the last time. Please send out cheque by messenger, it may keep the wolf from the carriage-door. Snow falling, wolves howling, thunder, lightning, lights down, hats off in front, music!! . . . Ha! they come!!

(To be continued by Private Wire, in my next, if possible.)

SALZBURG MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

We have heard that the International Mozart Foundation Committee will organise a grand musical festival in the second half of July next, in the native town of our immortal master, provided that political events do not prevent their so doing.

For years, and especially since the Schienenstrang has facilitated communication with the mountainous districts, Salzburg, so lavishly dowered by Nature with the most lovely scenery, Salzburg, the magnificent Alpine town, has been the rendezvous of tourists, and has most worthily donned a festive dress on more than one occasion. We will mention only the Artists' Festival, held in 1862, the Congress of Jurisconsults, &c.

The programme proposed for the Festival will be framed so as to afford scope for social amusements as well as due musical enjoyment, as will be seen from what follows.

The duration of the Festival is, for the present, fixed at three days. There will be two Evening Concerts and a Matinée in the Aula Academica; two cosy Social Evenings, with a Regatta on the Leopoldskroner Lake, illuminated for the occasion; a banquet; an Artists' Excursion to the Lichtenstein-Klamm; a burlesque operatic performance in the Imperial Theatre by Viennese artists, who have already kindly consented to give their services; and, lastly, a Park Festival in the Curgarden.

Herr Dessoff, Court Chapellmaster, has most kindly undertaken to direct the concerts, and nearly all the members of the orchestra at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, have with equal kindness promised their co-operation. The Central Festival Committee are exerting themselves most strenuously to secure the services of prominent artists as soloists.

It is proposed to render this Musical Festival permanent in Salzburg, thus affording all composers and musical artists a common point of meeting in the town of Mozart.

During the three days there will be a special tariff, already settled with the hotel proprietors, for apartments, service, and conveyances. Thanks to the exertions of the International Mozart Foundation Committee, a locality has been found where the Elite Concerts, to be given on the occasion, may worthily be held. In compliance with the request made by the Committee, the government authorities readily placed at their disposition the Aula Academica of the old University, a hall which for size and beauty is surpassed by no other in the place. Apart from all considerations of its proportions, so well calculated for the object in view, and of its excellent acoustic qualities, what renders it especially appropriate for these concerts is the fact that the name of Mozart is intimately connected with it.

In the Aula Academica, built, as we know, in 1631, during the life of Archbishop Paris Lodron, the celebrated rector of the University, Alphons, erected in 1660, an academical theatre, in which, at the end of each scholastic year, sacred plays were performed by the students. It was under Archbishop Sigismund Schrattenbach that Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, when only five and a half, played twice in the Aula, namely, on the 1st and the 3rd of September, 1761, in the singing-comedy, Sigismundus Hungaria Rex, by the Benedictine Father Marianus Wimmer, with music by Eberlin.

It is, then, in this building, which presents to-day the same appearance as formerly, and which has been preserved with anxious care, that the music-loving crowds at the Festival will assemble for the purpose of listening to the strains of Beethoven, Cherubini, Gluck, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Schumann, R. Wagner, Goldmark, &c.

CARL BARON VON STERNECK.

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA ORCHESTRA.

First Violins—Carrodus, Leader; Collins, Pollitzer, Cooper, Kettanus, Streather, Vogell, Gibson, Jung, Palmer, Jacoby, Kummer, Hunneman, Harndorff. Second Violins—Betjemann, Leader of the Ballet; Reed, Cross, Roberts, Tournour, Earnshaw, Kelly, Grimson, Van Praag, Morel, Hargrave, Campione. Allos—Burnett, Principal; Waud, Thompson, Webb, Stehlin, Lawrence, Cubitt, Speelman, Eberwein. Violoncellos—E. Howell, Principal; Guest, Libotton, Boatwright, Shepherd, Snyder, Brie, Saunders, Harndorff. Double Basses—Howell, J., Principal; Reynolds, J., Severn, Harper, Jakeway, Perkins, Kliegl, Haydn Waud, Wade. Harp—Lookwood, Principal. Flutes—Radcliff, Principal; Young. Oboes—Castegnier, Principal; Reynolds, C. Clarinets—Tyler, Principal; Maycock. Bassoons—Hutchins, Principal; Anderson. Horns—Stennebrugen, Principal; Beltrami; Standen, 2nd Principal; Preatoni. Trumpets—Scott, Principal; Ellis. Trombones—Hawkes, Principal; Antoine, Blamphin. Ophicleide—Hughes, Principal. Timpani—Pheasant. Bass Drum—Austin. Side Drum—Seymour. Organist—Pittman.

Conductors—Signors VIANESI and BEVIGNANI.

ORCHESTRA OF HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

1st Violins—M. Sainton, Principal; Arnoe, Hill, Jones, Niedzielski, Nicholson, Parker, Ralph, Reed, Rendle, Rosenthal, Wiener. 2nd Violins—Willy, Principal; Diehl, Easton, Moszly, Newsham, Simmons, Snewing, Szczepanowski, Ullin, Zerbini. Harp—Cheshire. Violas—Doyle, Principal; Bernhardt, Bowie, Broedlet, Colchester, Channell, Reynolds, Schreurs. Violoncellos—Lasserre, Principal; Brousil, Chipp, Reed, Vieuxtemps, Velde, Woolhouse. Basses—White, Principal; Collins, Neuwrith, Percival, Strugnell, Tyler, Waud. Flutes—Brossa, Principal; Barrett. Oboes—Dubruq, Principal; Horton. Clarinets—Lazarus, Principal; Snelling. Bassoons—Wotton, Haveron. Horns—Haute, Principal; Handley, Keavill, Reynolds. Trumpets—McGrath, Neuzerling. Trombones—Hill, Webster, Harvey. Euphonium—Sanders. Drums—Smith. Triangle—Calkin. Gross Case—Middletitch.

Conductor—Sir MICHAEL COSTA.

CAROLINE SALLA'S ALICE.

Mdlle Caroline Salla was so obviously suffering from the weather of our "bounteous May" that she could not do justice to herself as a vocalist; but, apart from this, her Alice gave entire satisfaction. We have rarely witnessed a more attractive representation of the character. Always interesting, and always acting up to the full requirements of the part, without going beyond them, she gave us an Alice sans reproche—one marked by as much bright intelligence from first to last as distinguished by power when meeting the demand for tours de force. The trying scene at the Cross was especially well done. More natural and touching acting could not be desired. For the reason named above we shall not pass judgment upon Mdlle Salla's rendering of the music further than to say that, wherever only a moderate demand was made upon her strength she proved fully equal to the occasion, and that she everywhere presented the unmistakable signs of an accomplished singer. It may be stated here that the unaccompanied trio for Alice, Robert, and Bertram was admirably sung, and made the success of the evening.—Daily Telegraph.

CARISSIMI AND STRADELLA.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—In this age of musical activity and enthusiasm, and when enterprising publishers are beginning to find their account in disinterring some of the buried treasures of the past, now that "classical" music has (fortunately for our prospects of musical progress) become the fashion, your readers may perhaps excuse me if I direct their attention to a few more composers of ability and genius still neglected—presumably because unknown.

Occupying a very prominent position among such we find the names of two great Italian composers, who in their day enjoyed almost a European reputation. Giacomo Carissimi was born at Padua in 1586—some say 1590—and died at Rome, 1678. He composed several oratorios, cantatas, church services, and smaller pieces. His style was more highly esteemed than that of almost any of his contemporaries. There is a well-known anecdote related of him that, being on one occasion complimented upon the easy, natural flow of some of his melodies, he replied: "Ah! but with what difficulty is this ease acquired." Almost the only piece of Carissimi's compositions that we know anything of in this country is his sacred cantata, Jonah, and that only within these three or four years, thanks to the enterprise and good taste of Mr Henry Lealie, to whom we are indebted for its revival and re-publication. Compared, indeed, with Handel (who, however, had the good taste to borrow largely from Carissimi, as well as from Urio, G. Porta, &c.) his style may seem stiff and hard occasionally, but we must remember that he preceded nearly all those whom we now call the greatest composers, viz., Handel, Bach, Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, &c., and must consequently be looked upon as a pioneer of musical progress—great indeed himself, but the precursor of something greater still; and it is to be hoped that some of our many energetic publishers will give us more of his works in a cheap form. His younger contemporary, Alessandro Stradella, was born at Naples about 1645, and is now best known as having written an oratorio, San Giovanni, and a few elegant madrigals and cantatas. His tragical story is well known to students of musical biography. That he was an excellent singer and had a fine person; how he became acquainted with the beautiful Hortensia, the wife or mistress of an Italian marquis; how this nobleman hired braves to assassinate him, one of whom, after

CHRISTINE NILSSON'S LUCIA.

Lucia di Lammermoor was given, with Mdlle Nilsson in the title rôle. On this occasion the Swedish prima donna resumed her once favourite and familiar part after, for some reason not explained, neglecting it during three seasons. The Lucia to which she accustomed us in the earlier years of her career had not, however, been forgotten, nor was its withdrawal for a time likely to abate the interest with which opera-goers always regarded it. There was a full house consequently, and Mdlle Nilsson's efforts met with appreciation nothing short of enthusiastic. Her Lucia had not changed, save, perhaps, that the artist's increased dramatic experience and culture enable her now to present a more finished and powerful embodiment of the character. This was apparent above all in the scene of the contract, where the intensity of the situation permitted the best effect. Here Mdlle Nilsson was a great actress not less than a great singer, the two arts uniting in her to make a whole with which only hypercriticism could find fault. Of the manner in which the prima donna sang music for the most part familiarised by her in our concert-rooms, there can be no need to speak. Enough that, stimulated by applause and in possession of full means, Mdlle Nilsson acquitted herself in a manner that recalled the highest triumphs associated with her name. It would be superfluous to give details of the favour with which the lady's efforts were received. Nothing can be easier as a task for the imagination, which need not dread an exaggeration of the facts.—Daily Telegraph.

LIEGE.—The third of the Musical Festivals decreed by government will take place on the 3rd, 4th, 5th, 10th, and 11th of June. As it will coincide with the fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the Conservatory, the municipal authorities are organising a series of public rejoicings, attended by the King, Queen, Count and Countess of Flanders. There will be international rifle matches open to Belgian civic guards and foreign volunteers; a grand review of regular troops and civic guards; regattas on the Meuse; illuminations; dramatic performances; fireworks; concerts; balls; grand dinners; a vocal competition, open to choral societies of all countries; and a patriotic cantata, by M. J. Michel, a young musician, native of the town. The first programme comprises Beethoven's Symphony in C minor; "Hymne à la Patrie," for chorus and orchestra, by J. B. Rongé (local); chorus and air from Gluck's Orphée; Cain, a scena for solo, chorus, and orchestra, by M. Théodore Radoux, Director of the Conservatory; and the first part of Mendelssohn's Elijah. The second includes the overture to Die Zauberflöte; an air from Oberon; Beethoven's Violin Concerto; an air from Stratonice (Méhul); the oratorio, L'Escout, Part II., by M. Pierre Benoit, director of the Antwerp Conservatory; "Les Emigrants Irlandais," by M. Gevaert; "L'Été" and "Le Clair de la Lune," choruses by the late M. Etienne Soubre, former director of the Conservatory; the principal piece from the second act of Grétry's Richard Cœur de Lion; air from Fidelio; and the final chorus from Elijah. The solo instrumentalist is to be Joseph Joachim. The chorus will number 800, the orchestra 150, with Théodore Radoux as conductor.

listening to his fine singing, relented, and warned him of his danger, by that means enabling the lovers to escape for the time; and how, ultimately, they were followed by other emissaries of the revengeful marquis to Genoa, where, in 1679, they were stabbed in each other's arms—all this, I say, is matter of history. Apart entirely from the romantic interest attaching to his unhappy fate, there can be little doubt that we might profit not a little by perusing Stradella's graceful and expressive music. Our own glorious Purcell, too, I may mention (whose works, too long neglected, are now beginning to excite the interest they merit) was in some measure a contemporary of the great man I speak of, having been born in 1658, and would consequently have about attained his majority at the time Stradella was murdered. Here I must pause for the present, but, should I succeed in drawing the attention of the musical public to the great merit of such composers, I shall consider myself rewarded.

D. BAPTIE.

To J. C. Burward, Esq.

MY SINGULAR GOOD SCRIBE.—The most curious possession that comes to man in this world is woman's heart—when it is not hard. Dr Holland overlooks the tender care with which a man handles a meerschaum pipe just beginning to have a bilious look around the base of the bowl. Another man thinks he knows how to make hens lay, and communicates the process to agricultural papers. It's in the food, say idiots. When will the nobility of hens be understood? Hens are not machines. They are reasoning, thinking beings. If there is one sight more impressive than another, it is a hen thinking. If you want to make a hen lay, get on her best side. Work on her feelings. This can be done by studying her nature and learning her tastes. This accomplished, go to work to show her that you are her friend, and not a grasping, grinding leech, with no higher ambition than worming eggs out of her. When a hen sees that you love and respect her, that you are truly her friend, that you are in active sympathy with her reachings out for the Indefinable in nature, she will just turn her toes in, tighten her jaws, and fairly fill the entire atmosphere with eggs. Yours, Purple Plover.

NILSSON.

The Swedish Nightingale opens its Mouth. — Great Excitement of Chicago. — The Ovation at the Opera-house.

(By Atlantic and Submarine Telegraph, September 4, 1766. *)

Less than ten years ago it was announced that a "young Swedish girl, Christina Nilsson, has been sent to Paris by the Duchess of Ossgothland, to be educated at her expense as a singer, in consequence of the great beauty of her voice." That young Swedish girl, developed into a peach-formed woman, is the song queen of the period—the ruling musical sensation—legitimate successor of Jenny Lind. Differing from that vocalist in style and scope, deriving more of her success from personal and histrionic attractions, Nilsson has even exceeded her in people and piles.

In Chicago the general American rule is exaggerated. Place yourself at entrance of Crosby's Opera-house, and see the élite of Chicago surging up broad stairway, and defiling past patient Pollard, taker of tickets.

"Everybody is here," was the general exclamation; and all who could arrange it attended the first Nilsson concert. Grades of youth and age, beauty and ugliness, partook of the musical feast. Many "old stagers" were there, and also many sweet creatures, whose entrée into society will create a sensation one day.

It was absolutely startling to observe the variety of costumes and impossible tints classed under the general name of new colours. There was the Nile green, and half a dozen shades between this and the Metternich; transition from pink through different shades of crimson scarlet, wine colour, and garnet, a dozen varieties; orange, corn colour, lemon, and new, with faint suggestion of peach blossoms; violets, manves, pearl and steel greys, cuir (queer?), and browns, blues and drabs, until the eye rested with relief on black worn with grace.

The toilets were a compliment to this sweet-voiced song queen. Chicago's fairest and most exclusive went to the concert. Not as to the theatre, not as to receptions, did haughtiest dames come to this Swedish girl, who, of obscure origin, wins the homage of the proudest. Wear the costliest robes, fair ladies; exult in pride of station or birth. Christine Nilsson has a heritage heaven-sent. Your banks may break, your factories burn; but her possessions are intact—her voice is her fortune.

Nor must one censure ladies, who, preparing elaborate toilets, lost the first part. Their careful toilettes were the proudest tributes they could bring to lay at the feet of the conqueror. One young lady, elaborately dressed, who sat in the dress circle, just near the front, explained that it was wicked not to wear the best at such a time. "For," she remarked, "you cannot wear anything too iself when you are to hear sweet music." Another lady, well known in society as a charming woman, of exquisite taste in toilette, blessed with wealth, deficient in brains, a little blonde, sat languidly, seemingly delighted with everything she heard, now and then suppressing a yawn behind costly fan or dainty mouchoir. She was one of those who would rather be "out of the world than out of fashion," and admired accordingly. She horrified a celebrated professional by asking for "Captain Jinks"; but the skilful musician was unfamiliar with this melody. So goes the world!

The toilettes of Mdlle Nilsson were flawless. Costly silks, rare old lace, priceless gems; but dearer and sweeter than all, the rippling melody of her wondrous voice.

"Divine Nilsson!" more than one enthusiastic music-lover uttered. But it all came to an end, as the pleasantest events invariably must. And then, on through the cold and darkness of the night, the Nilsson audience went to their homes delighted with all they had heard, but looking forward the more eagerly to the opportunities left them of again hearing the Swedish Nightingale.

WAIFS.

MM. Servais and F. Planté have returned from Madrid.

Miss Kellogg intends introducing Paul et Virginie to America.

Signora Maria Palmieri will shortly return to Italy from America.

The seventh performance of Le Roi de Lahore brought 19,123 francs.

Mdlle Alma Fohström, a fair Finn, is creating an impression at St Petersburg.

Pepita, an opera by M. L. L. Delahaye is in preparation at the Salle Favart.

Mad. Friedrich-Materna contemplates quitting the German for the Italian lyric stage.

Mrs Charles Eley has resumed her "receptions" at her residence in the Finchley Road.

Sig. Borioli, manager of the San Carlo, Naples intends producing Lohengrin next season.

A portrait of Mdl'e Lucca, by Herr O. Begas, of Berlin, was recently sold by auction.

A biography of the late Signor Petrella, by Signor G. Carotti, editor of Il Pirata, is published at Turin.

M. Eeudier has asked the French Government for a grant of 200,000 francs in aid of the Théâtre Italien, Paris.

A performance of Liszt's oratorio, Christus, announced at the Berlin Singacademie, was expressly forbidden by the composer.

Mdlle Alexandrina Kroutoff has been engaged by Signor Ferri for St Petersburg and Moscow, and Mdlle Ada Adini for Monte Video.

Offenbach's Madame L'Archiduc has been performed at the Bouffes Parisiens with Mme Théo in the part originally filled by Mdlle Jadic.

The Exhibition building at Philadelphia is to be preserved, and a space capable of containing 2,500 executants and 8,000 listeners set aside for concerts.

M. Paul Ferrier is engaged on the libretto of a four-act-opera, the music by M. Henri Maréchal. The subject from F. Mistral's poem, Calendal, is written in the Provence dialect.

When an American father discovers that his razors have been used by his boy for the purpose of sharpening a slate pencil, his faith that he is to be the father of a President is temporarily eclipsed by anxiety to find the boy and a stout piece of lath.

A young gentleman wondering how a lady could make herself ridiculous by the vagaries of fashion, the wind catching him by the shirt collar on which his hat rested, he was obliged to grasp a telegraph pole to prevent his being wafted over a roof.

Previously to M. Ch. Lecocq's last opera, La Marjolaine, the greatest pecuniary success at the Théâtre de la Renaissance, Paris, was his Petite Marie, the first hundred performances bringing in 365,000 francs. For the same number La Marjolaine brought in 369,000. (Fi donc!)

* Delayed in transmission.

* Was that a part of her costume?—F. C. B.—D.

Of all those present at the opening of the Stadttheater, Hamburg, fifty years ago, only two, Herr Krebs, the Dresden Capellmeister, and Herr Gloy, an actor, are living. Herr Krebs conducted the orchestra at the opening of the theatre, and at the fiftieth anniversary, a short time since.

In the performance of Alceste, with Mr Gadsby's excellent music, at the Crystal Palace on Saturday, the 19th inst., Mr Arthur Matthison impersonated the character of Admetus, a part in which musical knowledge is absolutely necessary. It was not the first time this gentleman had undertaken the onerous duty; but, as on this occasion he had only two hours for preparation, he must be congratulated upon his success.

Mad. Esipoff's Pianoforte Recitals at Union Hall, Boston, began on the 8th inst. with a programme devoted to Beethoven, Bach, Handel, Mozart, Gluck, Hummel, Rameau, Field, Boccherini, and Scarlatti. On the 9th, the composers were Schubert, Schumann, and Mendelssohn; on the 10th, Chopin reigned supreme; on the 11th, the programme consisted of studies by Chopin, Moscheles, Thalberg, Scarlatti, Hummel, Henselt, and Liszt; and the 12th included pieces by Bach, Hässler, Mozart, Schubert, Liszt, Brahms, Leschetizky, Tschaiakowsky, and Heller.

GREGORIAN PSALMODY.—The fifth anniversary festival service of the London Gregorian Choral Association was celebrated on Thursday, May 17th, at St Paul's Cathedral. The increasing strength of the society may be gathered from the fact that between a thousand and eleven hundred choristers took part in the processional hymn, "Celestis Urbs Jerusalem," with which the service commenced. The effect was imposing. The congregation took part in the alternate verses of the psalms, responses, and metrical hymns. The anthem, "Fear not, O Land," was by Mr C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac., Oxon., honorary organist of the society.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE."

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

SIGNOR and the MDLLES BADIA have arrived in London for the Season. All communications for public or private Concerts, &c., to be addressed to 47, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park; or to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR ALFRED JAEEL will arrive in London on June 7. All letters to be addressed to the care of Messrs ERARD, 18, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

MR CHARLES HARPER, Principal and Solo Horn, having seceded from the Royal Italian Opera, begs to inform his friends and the public that he is now at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c., either in town or country. Address—3, Liddington Place, Harrington Square, London, N.W.

MR FREDERIC WOOD (Primo Tenore), of the Wilhelmj Concert Party, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs HODGE & ESSEX, 6 and 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MISS ELENA NORTON, Soprano Vocalist (composer of "The Rose and the Ring"), is open for ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c., &c. Address, care of DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or to Mr D'Oyley Carte, 20, Charing Cross.

MDLLE IDA CORANI having returned to Town requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Opera or Concert be addressed to her Agent, Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME ERNST (Soprano) requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR CHARLES ABERCROMBIE (Tenor), of St James's Hall and the Royal Aquarium Concerts, Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St James's, requests that all applications for Terms and ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio, Opera, or Concert, be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY (his Agent and Business Manager), care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, S.W.

MR WELBYE-WALLACE (of the Crystal Palace and Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester, &c., &c.), having Returned from Abroad, can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Opera, or Oratorio. All Communications to be addressed to his Agent, Mr R. D'OYLEY CARTE, 20, Craig's Court, Charing Cross, S.W.

MDME MARIE BELVAL begs that all Communications be addressed to her at 7, Cavendish Place, Cavendish Square, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MDME LOUISE GAGE (Contralto) is open to ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c. Address, Mdme LOUISE GAGE, No. 17, Holland Road, Kensington, W., or care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

MR GERARD COVENTRY is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

English Glee and Madrigal Writers.

By W. A. BARRETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.S.L., &c.

PRICE 2s. 6d.

W. REEVES, BOOKSELLER, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL."

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, ST ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

TRANSCRIPTIONS OF FAVOURITE SCOTCH AIRS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By EMILE BERGER.

"FLORA MACDONALD'S LAMENT" and "KENMURE'S ON AND AWA" 4s.
"HUNTINGTOWER" 4s.
"THOU BONNIE WOOD O' CRAIGIE LEA" 4s.
"THE FLOWERS OF THE FOREST" 3s.
"THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE" 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVIDSON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

TO CHURCH CHOIRS, CHORAL SOCIETIES, AND SCHOOLS.

Re-building of Show Rooms.

Nos. 49 & 50, NEW BOND STREET.

MESSRS CHAPPELL & CO. beg to announce that they will shortly commence Re-building the whole of the above premises; and, owing to temporary diminution of space, now offer the following large Instruments at greatly reduced prices, for Cash or on hire on the Three Years System.

ALEXANDRE HARMONIUM. Eight complete sets of Vibrators, 4 Stops, 2 Knee Pedals to Swell, and 2 Heel Pedals for Full Organ. Original price, 60 Guineas. For cash, £25; or £2 10s. per quarter on the three years system.

LARGE CONCERT HARMONIUM. Twenty-four Stops, Prolongement, 4 Knee Pedals, 2 Knee Pedals, 16 half sets of Vibrators, percussion action. Original price, 150 Guineas. For cash, £45; or £4 10s. per quarter on the three years system.

NO. 1, CHANCEL ORGAN. Three Stops, 1½ Octaves of German Pedals, Pine Case, Diapered Pipes. Original price, 55 Guineas. For cash, 40 Guineas; or £4 per quarter on the three years system.

NO. 2, CHANCEL ORGAN. Four Stops, 2½ Octaves of Pedals. Diapered Pipes. Original price, 70 Guineas. For cash, 55 Guineas; or £5 10s. per quarter on the three years system.

CHURCH ORGAN. Eleven Stops, 2 rows of Keys, 2½ Octaves of Pedals, Bourdon on Pedal Organ, &c. For cash, 200 Guineas; or £20 per quarter on the three years system.

A large stock of small Second-hand Harmoniums, from £3 and upwards.

ILLUSTRATED LISTS FREE BY POST.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS;

OR,
THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
	s. d.
OVERTURE - - - - -	3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day" - - -	3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away" -	3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill" - - -	2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever" - - -	4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly" -	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee" - - -	4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me" - - -	3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st Act, "I'm not the Baron" - - -	3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night" - - -	3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country" - - -	3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met" -	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring" - - -	4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you" - - -	3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd Act, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine" - - -	4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be" - - -	3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing" -	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand" -	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE ...	s. d. 5 0
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE ...	2 6
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. Kiko ...	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9 CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

SELECT PIANOFORTE PIECES

OF

STEPHEN HELLER.

									s. d.
AN AUTUMN LEAF						(Romance, Op. 105, No. 3)	3 0
AN EVEN SONG.						(Prelude, Op. 119, No. 16)	3 0
AUBADE						(Prelude, Op. 81, No. 7)	3 0
BARCAROLLE.. .. .						(Prelude, Op. 81, No. 23)	3 0
BERCEUSE						(Study, Op. 47, No. 19)	1 0
CHANSON DE MAI						(Prelude, Op. 81, No. 17)	1 0
CHANT DU BERCEAU						(Prelude, Op. 81, No. 15)	2 6
CHANT DU SOIR						(Study, Op. 45, No. 9)	1 0
CRADLE SONG						(Chanson de berceau, Op. 73, No. 3)	3 0
FEUILLET D'ALBUM						(Study, Op. 16, No. 15)	2 0
HALTE DU CHASSEUR						(Dans les bois, Op. 86, No. 3)	3 0
HUNTSMAN'S SONG						(Chant du chasseur, Op. 73, No. 1)	3 0
JAGDLIED						(Study, Op. 90, No. 7)	2 6
L'AVALANCHE						(Study, Op. 45, No. 2)	1 0
LA TRUITE						(Caprice brillant on the Song of Schubert, Op. 33)	4 0
LIEDCHEN						(Study, Op. 46, No. 8)	1 0
ON SONG'S BRIGHT PINIONS						(Improvisata on Song of Mendelssohn, Op. 67)	4 0
ONDINE						(Study, Op. 45, No. 16)	1 0
PARTING SONG						(Mendelssohn's Song transcribed)	3 0
RÊVERIE AU BOIS						(Study, Op. 45, No. 13)	1 0
THE WATERMILL						(Study, Op. 45, No. 20)	2 0
UN RAYON DU SOLEIL						(Study, Op. 45, No. 1)	1 0
UNE PETITE FEUILLE						(Op. 110)	3 0
UNE PETITE HISTOIRE						(Study, Op. 125, No. 6)	1 0
WANDERSTUNDEN						(Rêveries d'Artiste, Op. 80, No. 2)	3 0

The above pieces are among the most popular Works of this esteemed Composer. A complete catalogue of his entire Works, Op. 1 to Op. 141, is now ready, and will be forwarded post free (on application) to any part of the world.

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 22.

SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, HAYMARKET.

Third performance of "Robert le Diable."

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), June 2, will be performed
MEYERBEER'S Grand Romantic Opera, "ROBERT LE DIABLE."
(The scenery by Messrs Grieve & Son and Messrs Fox). Roberto, Signor Pancelli; Bertramo, Signor Foli; Ramboldo, Signor Rinaldini; Alberto, M. Gonnét; Araldo, Signor Grassi; Un Prêtre, Signor Brocolini; Elena, Mme Katti Lanner; Isabella, Mdle Alwina Valleria; and Alice, Mdle Caroline Salla. Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir MICHAEL COSTA. Notice—On the above occasion the doors will open at Half-past Seven, and the Opera commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Next Week there will be Five Performances.—Extra Night.

On MONDAY next, June 4, GOUNOD's Opera, "FAUST." (The whole of the scenery designed and painted by Mr W. Telbin.) Faust, Signor Gillandi; Mephistophiles, M. Faure; Valentin, Signor del Puente; Wagner, Signor Franceschi; Siebel, Mdle Macvitz; Martha, Mme Lablache; and Margherita, Mme Christine Nilsson.

On TUESDAY next, June 5 (for the first time this season), VERDI's Opera, "RIGOLETTO." Il Duca, Signor Talbo (his first appearance); Rigoletto, Signor Galassi (his first appearance this season); Sparafucile, Signor Brocolini; Montecarlo, M. Gonnét; Marullo, Signor Zoboli; Borsa, Signor Rinaldini; Ceprano, Signor Faller; Ucciere, Signor Grassi; La Contessa, Mdle Filomena; Maddalena, Mme Trebelli-Bettini; Giovanni, Mdle Robiati; and Gilda, Mdle Alwina Valleria.

Extra Night.

On THURSDAY next, June 7, DONIZETTI's Opera, "LUOLA DI LAMMERMOOR." Edgardo, Signor Pancelli; Enrico Aston, Signor Rota; and Lucia, Mdle Emilia Chiomi (her second appearance).

Extra Night.

On FRIDAY next, June 8, a favourite opera, in which Mme Christine Nilsson and M. Faure will appear.

On SATURDAY next, June 9 (for the last time this season), VERDI's Opera, "UN BALLO IN MASCHERA." Riccardò, Signor Pancelli; Renato, Signor Rota; Oscar, Mdle Milla Rodani; Ulrica, Mme Lablache; and Amalia, Mdle Caroline Salla (her seventh appearance).

The doors will open at Eight; the Opera will commence at Half-past Eight o'clock (except on the occasion mentioned above).

Stalls, 25s.; Dress Circle, 15s.; Amphitheatre Stalls (first two rows), 10s. 6d.; Other Rows, 7s. 6d.; Gallery Stalls, 5s.; Gallery, 2s. 6d.

Places may be obtained of Mr Bailey, at the Box-Office of Her Majesty's Theatre, under the portico of the Opera-house, Haymarket, which is open daily from Ten till Five.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

The next STUDENTS' CONCERT, open to Subscribers, Members, and Associates, will take place at this INSTITUTION, (in the new Concert-room), on SATURDAY Evening, the 9th inst., at Eight o'clock, when (by desire) Mr HENRY SMART's Cantata, "THE FISHERMAIDENS," will be repeated. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN. Tickets, which may be purchased at the doors, Balcony, 2s. 6d.; and Stalls, 5s. each.

The next ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY Evening, the 20th inst., instead of the 27th. Tickets already issued for the 27th, will be available on the 20th.

By order,
Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street,
Hanover Square, London.

JOHN GILL, Secretary.

UNDER the immediate PATRONAGE of

H.R.H. the Prince of WALES, K.G., and H.R.H. Princess CHRISTIAN.

HANDEL's Oratorio, "HERCULES," ST JAMES'S HALL, FRIDAY Evening next, June 8, at Eight o'clock. Dramatis personæ—Mrs Osgood, Miss Robertson, Mme Patey; Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Patey, and Mr Santley, Members of the Guild of Amateur Musicians, and Members of Mr Henry Leslie's Choir as Chorus. Band of eminent Professors. Organ—Mr John O. Ward. Pianoforte—Mr J. G. Calcott. Conductor—Mr Henry Leslie. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 3s., and 2s., at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, and all Libraries and Music Publishers.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), June 2, will be performed
"FRA DIAVOLO." Mdles Zaré Thalberg and Ghioffi. Conductor—Signor BEVIGNANI.

Next Week there will be Six Performances.

On MONDAY next, June 4 (first time this season), "AIDA." Mme Adeline Patti.

On TUESDAY next, June 5 (first time this season), "LINDA DI CHAMOUNI." Medames Albani and Synnerberg.

On WEDNESDAY next, June 6, "LES HUGUENOTS." Mdmes D'Angeri and Marimon.

On THURSDAY next, June 7, "GUGLIELMO TELL."

On FRIDAY next, June 8, "I PURITANI." Elvira, Mdle Albani.

On SATURDAY next, June 9 (second time this season), "L'ETOILE DU NORD." Caterina, Mdme Adeline Patti.

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office under the portico of the theatre is open from Ten till Five. Pit tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—RUBINSTEIN CONCERT.

MONDAY, June 4, at Three o'clock. Rubinstein's last appearance in England this season. The programme will consist of: Symphonie Dramatique, No. 4, in D minor (Rubinstein), first time of performance at the Crystal Palace; Duet for soprano and baritone, from the opera of The Macabees (Rubinstein), first time of performance in England; Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra, No. 4, in G (Beethoven) (Pianist—Herr Anton Rubinstein); Vocal pieces by different composers; Solos for pianoforte, by Schubert, Chopin, or other celebrated composers (Pianist—Herr Anton Rubinstein); Ballet Music, from Feramosa (Rubinstein). Vocalists—Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington and Herr Henschel. Herr Anton Rubinstein will conduct his own compositions. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANN. Admission to Concert-room, One Shilling; or by Reserved Seat tickets, now on sale, price 5s., 3s. 6d., and 2s. 6d., at the Ticket-office.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.

FRIDAY, June 22	GRAND FULL REHEARSAL.
MONDAY, June 25	MESSIAH.
WEDNESDAY, June 27	SELECTION.
FRIDAY, June 29	ISRAEL IN EGYPT.

Principal Vocalists:

Mdme ADELINA PATTI

and

Mdme ALBANI.

Mdme LEMMENS-SHERINGTON

and

Mdme EDITH WYNNE.

Mdme PATEY.

Mr VERNON RIGBY.

Mr EDWARD LLOYD.

Mr CUMMINGS.

Signor FOLI.

Herr HENSCHHEL.

Mr SANTLEY.

Solo Organ—Mr Best. Organist—Mr Willing.
Conductor—Sir MICHAEL COSTA.

Sets of Tickets for the Festival may be had at the Crystal Palace and at Exeter Hall.
Prices of Sets (including admission): Central Area, Three Guineas and Two and a Half Guineas; Galleries, Two and a Half Guineas and Two Guineas.
Tickets for the Rehearsal Day: Stalls (exclusive of admission), 7s. 6d. and 5s. Admission Tickets, Half-a-Crown.
Single Stall Tickets may now be had, 25s., One Guinea, and 15s.

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.
Conductors—Dr WYLD and Mr GANZ. The LAST CONCERT will take place on SATURDAY next, June 9, at Three o'clock. The Programme will include: Schubert's Symphony in C major; Beethoven's Overture to Leonore (No. 3); Raff's Concerto, in B minor, for violin; and Dr Hiller's Concertstück, for piano; Beethoven's Duet on Manfred for two pianos. Pianists—Mr Alfred Jaell and Mdle Dehblmont. Violin—Herr Auer. Vocalist—Mdme Sadler Grunn (from the Wagner Concerts). Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Area Stalls, 5s.; Balcony (front row), 7s.; Balcony, 2s. Admission, One Shilling. At Austin's, Chappell's, and the Ticket Office, St George's Hall.

MDME CHRISTINE NILSSON.WEDNESDAY NEXT.

WESTMINSTER TRAINING SCHOOL and HOME for NURSES (founded by the Lady Augusta Stanley). MDME CHRISTINE NILSSON has the honour to announce that she will give a GRAND MORNING CONCERT (under the immediate patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN; Her Royal Highness Princess Louise, Marchioness of LORNE; Her Royal and Imperial Highness the Duchess of EDINBURGH; and Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TEOK), in Aid of the above Institution, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY Morning, June 6, to commence at Three o'clock. MDME Christine Nilsson has the gratification to announce that she will be assisted by the following distinguished Artists: MDlle Badia, MDme Trebelli (by kind permission of J. H. Mapleson, Esq.), Mr Sims Reeves, Signor Foli, Signor Fraschetti, and M. Faure (by kind permission of J. H. Mapleson, Esq.). The London Concert Glee Union, under the direction of Mr F. Walker. Violin—MDlle Pommereul. Pianoforte—MDlle Cognetti. Conductor—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT (by desire). Part I.—Madrigal, "This pleasant month (Beale), the London Concert Glee Union; Aria, "O tu Palermo," Vespres Siciliana (Verdi), Signor Franceschi; Malanera, Carmen (Bizet), MDme Trebelli; Sacred Song, "Bestrong to hope" (G. Fox), Signor Foli; Recit. and Aria, "O loss of sight," and "Total Eolipse," from Samson (Handel), Mr Sims Reeves; Ballade et Polonaise, violin (Vieuxtemps), MDme Pommereul; Air (by desire), "From mighty king," Judas Maccabeus (Handel), MDme Christine Nilsson; (a), Berceuse, pianoforte (Chopin), (b), Tarantella, "Naples" (Liszt), MDlle Cognetti; Duet, "Crucifix," Poésie de Victor Hugo (Faure), MDme Christine Nilsson and M. Faure. Part II.—Part-song, "Slumber, dearest" (Mendelssohn), the London Concert Glee Union; Duo, "Glorio d'orrore," Semiramide (Rossini), MDme Christine Nilsson and MDme Trebelli; Ballad, "Stars of the summer night" (Berthold Tours), Mr Sims Reeves; Duo, "Un gentil a vago fior" (Luigi Badia), MDlle Badia, accompanied by the composer; Romance, "Mais on revient toujours," Jocunde (Nicolo), M. Faure; (a), Nocturne, violin (Chopin), (b), Tambourin, Delain, MDlle Pommereul; Song, "I fear no foe" (Paisiuti), Signor Foli; Valse de Bluets, (Coen), MDme Christine Nilsson. Sofa Stalls, One Guinea; Stalls, Half-a-Guinea; Balcony Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Balcony, 5s.; Gallery and Area Seats, 2s. 6d. Tickets may be obtained at Mitchell's Library, 33, Old Bond Street; Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street; Cramer & Co., 201, Regent Street; Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; Lacon & Ollier, 168, New Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co., 48, Cheapside; A. Hays, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, Piccadilly.

TUESDAY NEXT.

MISS MARION BEARD'S HARP CONCERT will take place at the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, TUESDAY EVENING, June 6. Vocalists—MDmes Sterling, Zimerl, and Herr Arnim von Boehme. Instrumentalists: Piano—Signori Mitterl and Mariolo; Violin—Herr Franke; Violoncello—Herr Liebe; Harp—Herr Oberthür, Mrs Frost, Miss Trust, Miss Lowe, and Miss Marion Beard (pupil of Herr Oberthür). Conductors—Signor ARDITI and Mr Cowen. Tickets at the Academy, Hanover Square.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

MISS ALICE FAIRMAN'S MORNING CONCERT takes place, at 26, ASHLEY PLACE, Victoria Street (by kind permission). WEDNESDAY, June 6. MDmes Lemmens-Sherrington, Osgood, Purdy, and Fairman; Messrs G. Perren, H. Guy, and Federici. Pianoforte—Miss J. Lawrence and Mr Ganz. Violin—Mr Louis Reis. Conductors—Messrs GANZ, N. H. THOMAS, H. PARKER, and MARLOIS. Tickets, 10s. 6d.; at Messrs Schott & Co., 159, Regent Street; or of Miss ALICE FAIRMAN, 18, St Peter's Square, Hammersmith.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

MR W. T. BEST will give the next RECITAL on the GREAT ORGAN, at "THE HALL," Primrose Hill Road, Regent's Park, on WEDNESDAY next, June 6, at Four o'clock. Carriages at 5.30. Programme: Musette (Handel); Andante, in D major (Haydn); Fantasia and Fugue, in G minor (Bach); Fifth Organ Sonata (Mendelssohn); Andante, in F major (Weeley); Allegro Marziale (Beet); Andante con Variazioni (Beethoven); Concertstück (Töpfer). Vouchers of admission, 3s. each; at Austin's, Piccadilly, and the principal Concert Agents. These Recitals (by permission) will take place each Wednesday during the Season.

THURSDAY NEXT.

MISS FLORENCE SANDERS' (pupil of Mr W. H. Holmes) EVENING CONCERT, at the LANGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street, on THURSDAY, June 7, commence at Eight o'clock. Artists: Miss May Davies, Miss Annie Butterworth, Miss M. J. Williams; Mr Stedman, Mr Frank Holmes, and Mr Wadmore. Solo Pianoforte—Miss Florence Sanders. Conductor—Mr ALFRED GILBERT.

MONDAY, JUNE 11.

MR KUHE'S GRAND ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT, at the FLORAL HALL, on MONDAY, June 11. MDme Adelina Patti, MDlle Zaré Thalberg, MDlle Albani; the most eminent artists, and the Chorus of the Royal Italian Opera. Violin—Herr Wilhelmj. Solo Pianoforte—Mr Kuhe. Conductors—MM. VIANESI, BEVIGNANI, F. H. COWEN, W. GANZ, and Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

MR GERARD COVENTRY has the honour to announce his GRAND MORNING CONCERT, at LANGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street, on WEDNESDAY, June 13, at Three o'clock precisely. Artists: MDme Edna Hall, MDlle Helena Arnim, MDme Louise Gage, and MDme Fanchita Barri; Mr Gerard Coventry, Mr Bernard Lane, Mr Edwin Holland, Signor Foretti, and Mr Cecil Tovey. Pianoforte—Miss H. Frytherah. Harp—Mr Frederick Chatterton. Conductors—Signor ZUCCARDI and Herr LEHMEYER. Tickets: Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Reserved Seats, 5s.; Balcony, 2s. 6d.; may be obtained of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street; Messrs Hutchings & Romer, 9, Conduit Street, Regent Street; and at the Hall.

SOUTH PLACE CHAPEL, FINSBURY.

MR MONCURE D. CONWAY will deliver a Discourse, at SOUTH PLACE CHAPEL, Finsbury, on SUNDAY Morning, the 3rd inst., at 11.15. Subject, "THE MUSIC OF THE FUTURE."

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

MASONIC HALL, CAMBERWELL NEW ROAD.—A GRAND CONCERT, in aid of ST JAMES'S HOME FOR FEMALE INEBRIATES, will be given on WEDNESDAY Evening, June 6, at Eight o'clock, under distinguished patronage. Admission, One Shilling; Stalls, 2s. 6d.; Reserved Seats, 2s.; to be obtained of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MASONIC HALL, CAMBERWELL NEW ROAD.—MR HENRY LESLIE's new Part Song for Male voices, "THE REJECTED LOVER" (Cramer & Co.), will be performed at the Concert for St James's Home, on Wednesday, June 6.

MASONIC HALL, CAMBERWELL NEW ROAD.—MRS OLIPPINGDALE will play "AUF FLUGELN DES GESANGES" (Heller), MEYERSON's "SPINNLED," and "FRUHLINGSBLIED," at the Concert for St James's Home, on Wednesday, June 6.

MASONIC HALL, CAMBERWELL NEW ROAD.—MDlle DE FOMBLANQUE will sing "BROKEN VOWS," "CALLER HERRIN," and join Mr and Mrs OLIPPINGDALE in LESLE's Trio, "MEMORY," at the Concert for St James's Home, on Wednesday, June 6.

MASONIC HALL, CAMBERWELL NEW ROAD.—MISS ANNIE WARD and Mr JOHN C. WARD will play a Grand Duo Brilliant, for Piano and Concertina, at the Concert for St James's Home, on Wednesday, June 6.

MASONIC HALL, CAMBERWELL NEW ROAD.—The Glee, Madrigals, and Part Songs will be sung by Members of Mr HENRY LESLIE's CHOIR (by special permission), at the Concert for St James's Home, on Wednesday, June 6.

MASONIC HALL, CAMBERWELL NEW ROAD.—MR F. A. BRIDGE will sing the "SCENA," from Zampa, and "JACK AND I," at the Concert for St James's Home, on Wednesday, June 6.

ST GEORGE'S HALL.

HERR LEHMEYER's next CLASSICAL CONCERT will take place on THURSDAY, June 14, at ST GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place (Mortimer Street Entrance), on which occasion he will be assisted by most eminent Artists. Tickets, One Guinea; 10s. 6d.; and 5s., to be had of Herr LEHMEYER, 7, Store Street, Bedford Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Eleventh Season, 1877. The FOURTEENTH SOIREE MUSICALE will take place on WEDNESDAY, June 13. The Concerts and Soirees of the Society afford excellent opportunities to young rising Artists to make their début and for Composers to have their works introduced. Full Prospectus on application to H. G. HOFFER, Hon. Sec. 244, Regent Street, W.

MR WILBYE COOPER begs to announce TWO CONCERTS, at LANGHAM HALL, WEDNESDAY Evenings, June 13, at Eight, and SATURDAY Afternoon, July 7, at Three, under the immediate patronage of the Right Hon. Lord and Lady John Manners, Sir R. W. Carden, Sir Albert and Lady Woods, the Hon. G. O. Talbot, Captain Hutton, Captain Heathorn, R.A., Captain J. C. A. Lewis, Edward Bullen, Esq., Dr Llewellyn Thomas; Mrs Blakeway, &c. Artists—Misses Marian Lynton, Janet Clayton, Gertrude Lawes, Siedle, Ellen Horne, Edith Wrenn, Palmer, Madelina Cronin, and MDmes Barri and Tonneller; Messrs Arthur Hooper, Dudley Thomas, Henry Pope, Stanley Smith, Gerard Henry, Michael Watson, Alfred Gilbert, F. H. COWEN, Barri, Vaschetti, and Richard Biagrove. Tickets, 5s. and 3s.; at 19, Great Portland Street; and Lonsdale's, 26, Old Bond Street.

MDlle VICTORIA BUNSEN begs to announce that her ANNUAL CONCERT will take place (by kind permission), at the residence of Captain and Mrs Coster, 137, HARLEY STREET, Cavendish Square, on MONDAY Morning, June 18. Full particulars will be duly announced. Address, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

UNDER ROYAL AND DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE.

MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN has the honour to announce that her GUITAR RECITAL will take place on THURSDAY, June 21, when she will play Giuliani's Duo Concertante, Op. 84 (lute and guitar); Paganini's Carnival, with Bottesini's Introduction; Selections from the celebrated writers for the guitar, Legnani, Leonard Schulz, and Sor; some of her latest compositions, True Love, Elfin's Revels, &c., &c. Further particulars at her residence, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

ALEXANDRA MUSICAL BOX (Title Protected and Registered). Ornamental wood case, machine made, with the following 13 popular Melodies and Tunes:—Safe in the Arms of Jesus—Jesus of Nazareth passeth by—Sicilian Mariners' Hymn—Lo, He Comes with Clouds—Home, Sweet Home—The Minstrel Boy—Auld Lang Syne—The Keel Row—My Little Bunch of Roses—Tommy, make room for your Uncle—Fair Shines the Moon to-night—Silver Threads among the Gold—The Union Jack of Old England. Forwarded, securely packed and carriage paid, to any address on receipt of a Post-office Order, value 3s. 8d., payable at General Post-office to JOHN LEWIS & Co., 122, Wick Road, Hackney, N.E.

BALFE'S NEW TRIO in A, Played by MARIE KREBS, JOACHIM, and PIATTI, at the Saturday Popular Concerts, will shortly be published. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

PROFESSOR BLACKIE versus ART.

About twelve months ago Professor Blackie attended a concert given by the Edinburgh University Musical Society, and was moved through what he heard thereof to go home and write a letter to the Scotsman. Whether the famous champion of things North British had ever before listened to the singing of his young countrymen we cannot say, but his astonishment at the character of their programme appears to have been great, and not unmixed with indignation. The Professor could hardly believe in the possibility of such a representative Scottish body entirely ignoring Scottish music. Yet there was the evidence of his own senses. From beginning to end of the evening not a skreel of the bagpipes or a phrase of Caledonian melody interrupted the procession of foreign airs. Wroth was the Professor in consequence, and boldly did he liken himself to Paul at Athens, filled with anger at seeing a whole city given up to idolatry. But he went further, and looked about for the cause of such a decline in national taste and patriotic feeling, discovering it, as he thought, at the West-end of the town. "I have no doubt," wrote the Professor, "the Scottish people and the Edinburgh West-enders are the offenders, who may fancy it a piece of gentility to prink themselves with all sorts of wretched foreign affectations, instead of growing stoutly out of their own root, and spreading forth the luxuriant leafage of native song. If these are the notions which are indulged in by young ladies and gentlemen of the present generation, I am heartily sorry for them. The constant flirtation with foreign ariettes, wedded to no words of popular power or significance, may, indeed, amuse the ear, and fill a vacant hour innocently, but it can do nothing to inspire noble sentiments, or to form a manly character." In another part of his communication the disgusted Professor lifted up his voice still higher against "West-endism"—a diseased state of opinion prevalent in the upper and middle classes, and equivalent to the "stunkeyism" of Carlyle and the "snobbishness" of Thackeray. One outcome of this, said Mr Blackie, is "the notion that the Scotch language, and everything Scotch, means vulgarity; and that English, with a little dabbling in French and German and Italian accomplishments, means gentility." The Professor did not waste words over what he styled this "hollow imagination," merely remarking, "There is no vulgarity greater than the would-be genteel; few things more contemptible than that feebleness of character which, for want of a proper self-esteem, instead of working its peculiar vein of native excellence, goes pretentiously about to prink itself all over with what does not belong to it, like the jackdaw with the peacock's feathers."

A year has passed since Professor Blackie thus wrote, but "West-endism" continues to pervade the musical world of Edinburgh, and a recent concert given by the University Society has again called for public reproof. By this time, however, the Professor has got used to the phenomenon, and writes about it with more calmness, besides being gracious enough to say that an æsthetic training, even in music, may be good for the "somewhat hard and square youth of Scotland." Nevertheless, Mr Blackie is not content. Referring to the concert, he observes, "I felt all the time as a student of optics would feel if, on a brilliant spectrum being projected on the wall, there should have occurred an absolute eclipse of one of the well-known primary colours. A solar spectrum without the red seems to my mind an exact counterpart to a concert of Scottish students in the Scottish metropolis without a single touch of native Scottish melody." Here was a phenomenon demanding grave investigation rather than abusive rhetoric, and the Professor tabulates no fewer than twelve questions with a view to the discovery of its exact origin and nature. These he addresses to the leaders of the University Musical Society, who are asked to say whether they think, first, that national feelings and traditions are unworthy of consideration by musicians; secondly, that Scottish music is so worthless, insignificant, and vile that it ought to be disowned; thirdly, that it cannot be adapted to the laws of harmony; fourthly, that it is so subtle and delicate that no academical throats are equal to it; fifthly, that the words of Scottish songs are too coarse for moral and proper young men; sixthly, that the words of songs should not be understood; seventhly, that the University of Edinburgh is not so much Scotch as cosmopolitan; eighthly, that the ears of Scottish students are familiar enough with Scottish melodies; ninthly, that novelty is the main thing to be considered; tenthly, are they trained by foreign artists who prefer to teach their own music? eleventhly, is Scottish music rejected because not genteel?; lastly, do they think that the existence of Scotland as Scotland is a national evil, and that the sooner that Scotch music, and everything Scotch, is stamped out of the working machinery of the British world so much the better? Having propounded these queries, the Professor adds, "I have written this in an articulate form because I hope I may receive an articulate answer or none at all. What I got last year when I made the same complaint was merely dust in the eyes and a stab in the dark, from which, of course, no clearness could come." It is no duty of ours to step between Professor Blackie and the Edinburgh students, some of whom, indeed, have already given an "articulate answer" to the whole dozen questions. But the matter is one capable of general application, and provocative of general interest. It presents an example of a phase in musical progress through which most countries passed so long ago that the time of its occurrence is a part of antiquity. In point of fact, what is now going on in Scotland with regard to things musical bears some analogy to the early processes which created the coral islands of the South Sea. Other nations have their heads above water, and are rich in fruits and flowers, while Scotland is still submerged. And Professor Blackie's mistake is in looking for fruits and flowers where none can grow, instead of waiting until the substructure tops the waves. That substructure the Edinburgh students, by the very course the Professor condemns, are helping to build up; for not only in this case, but in all others of similar development, what are the facts? The national melodies of a people, however much, as being the spontaneous utterance of popular feeling, they may enter into the national life, are not art, but rather the materials upon which it is the province of art to work. They are like the suggestions presented by nature to the painter, to be by him wrought up into pictures, the glory of which is that they are not reproductions, but creations. Professor Blackie, in his intense love of everything Scotch, fails to make this distinction. Because his country possesses nothing higher in music than her people's songs, he would have them regarded as works of art, and placed side by side with the masterpieces of more favoured lands—"Jock o' Hazeldean" elbowing the Hebrides overture, and "Scots wha hae" treading on the heels of the Walpurgis Night. The Edinburgh students, on the other hand, recognise that these two classes are widely apart, and cannot be brought together without an almost absurd incongruity. Their aim, as men bent upon the culture of artistic music, lies far above popular songs, out of which, for the particular purpose in view, no help can come. It by no means follows that the people's music should be ignored. There is a place for it in the very heart of the nation, where it abides, guarded by fond memories and tender associations. Never, we may be sure, will "Should auld acquaintance" cease to rouse the best feelings of human nature, or "Scots wha hae" fail to kindle a patriotic fire. But considerations like these no more detract from the superior claims of artistic music for purposes of culture than the blossom of a hedge-briar can compare with the rose-grower's latest marvel.

We have already spoken of national melodies as the materials provided, in a manner, by Nature for the use of the artistic musician, who finds in them a wealth of suggestion such as lies to hand nowhere else. It may now be pointed out that the greatest masters have availed themselves of these resources in all lands and at all epochs of musical history. Not only so, but the artistic music of a country is generally influenced by its popular tunes according to the measure of progress in art which the nation has made. In the earlier stages it embodies forms and characteristics common to the schools; whereas, later, it takes to itself all that can be found of distinctiveness and originality. Nay, such is the charm of national music for composers of genius, that it often attracts them beyond the frontier of their own land. Beethoven was neither Hungarian nor Russian, yet he adopted the themes of both nations; Schubert revelled in Magyar melodies; Schumann, and even Spohr, put on the Spanish dress; Flotow built an opera upon an Irish tune; while Auber dreamed of Naples, and Rossini went to Switzerland, for the materials of their respective masterpieces. As regards the national music of Scotland, it may comfort Professor Blackie to know that none other—the Hungarian perhaps excepted—has found more favour with composers of eminence. In Mendelssohn's A minor symphony we have it directly imitated; it is reflected in his Hebrides overture and Gade's "Im Hochland"; Schubert infused a Scottish element into some of his dances; and Schumann set Scottish verses with a strong flavour of the national style. In all this there is no cause for surprise. The people's melody of Scotland has a character of its own, not only on account of construction, but because of a tenderness and natural beauty such as might alone gain the supreme flattery of imitation. But should Scotland ever become a musical country, in the sense of producing great composers, homage to its "native wood-notes wild" will take a thousand graceful forms. At present all is barren, and—to use the words of an Edinburgh alumnus—"Scotland possesses the unenviable distinction of being the only country in Christendom which has not given birth to a single musical composer." If, however, its youth be encouraged to cultivate the art, not by singing "John Anderson my Jo," but by studying acknowledged masterpieces, better days may come. Should that result follow, Scottish composers will find in their rich store of native song a wealth greater than the treasures of Aladdin's cave; and the classical music of Scotland may, more than that of any other country, be built upon a purely national foundation. Professor Blackie is not likely to witness this perfect spectrum, for a national art is slow of growth; but he can help it on by striving to promote those forms of musical education which lie beyond, and far above, the modest level of people's tunes.

Chasrus Egg.

SALZBURG MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Amateurs of music who intend spending their summer holiday abroad may be pleased to learn that a festival of more than ordinary interest is being set on foot by the Committee of the "Internationale Mozartstiftung" (International Mozart Foundation), to be held during the last two weeks of July next. It may easily be guessed that the musical part of the festival will be in special honour of the illustrious composer, who was born at Salzburg on the 27th of January, 1756, and that each programme will contain selections from his vocal and instrumental works. The concerts, by permission of the Government authorities, are to be given at the "Aula Academica," in the theatre belonging to which, more than two centuries ago, sacred and secular plays used to be represented by the students. At one of these, when less than six years old, it is on record that Mozart himself assisted. Thus a particular interest is attached to the building. Herr Dessoff, from Vienna, has undertaken the post of musical director, and many of the most distinguished artists belonging to the orchestra of the Imperial Operahouse have volunteered their aid. The festival, which is to last three days, offers other attractions besides the evening and morning concerts in the Aula, the character of which the Alpine town itself, and its enchanting vicinities, so beloved of tourists, will readily be anticipated. It is in contemplation to make this Salzburg festival permanent, and thus afford a periodical place of meeting in Mozart's birthplace for all musicians and amateurs who hold his memory in affection.—Times.

To a Man of Genius.

Thou who didst earn a more than deathly fame
By leaving out a letter from thy name,
Or interweaving one ('tis all the same),
Tell me, O tell! what is thy little game.
That France and England will be one I guess,
But must an ignorance of the Uhy profess.
Yet we must own it matters little less
Than 't matter'd when my son thou didst confess.
O man of genius! I can see thee now,
As though there were no wrinkle on thy brow,
Or myrtle, that full oft adorns the cow,
If not the little dog that says "Bow-wow."
Tell me, thou man of genius, how's your calf,
That tended once with care thy better half,
While humming to thee tunes by dear old Balf',
And (bad rhyme) strove her best to make thee laugh.

Yours always very truly,
Bayreuth—opposite Theatre.

Simon Hall.

HANOVER.—Mdlle Marianne Brandt, of Berlin, has appeared in Le Prophète, Il Trovatore, Fidelio, and Lohengrin.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The last concert this season of the Sacred Harmonic Society was given at Exeter Hall yesterday evening week, when Spohr's Last Judgment and Mendelssohn's music to Athalie were performed. In the former Mdlle Sinico re-appeared after her recent indisposition, and was warmly welcomed. Sir Michael Costa conducted, and the forty-fifth season ended satisfactorily. We have some remarks to make about the series of performances just concluded, and also about the Sacred Harmonic Society generally, which must be postponed until a convenient occasion.

NEW ORGAN.

(Communicated.)

Messrs Bishop & Son, one of our oldest firms of organ builders, have completed a fine instrument for St Peter's Cathedral, Adelaide. The following is a list of stops and appliances:—

GREAT ORGAN.—(Compass CC to G, 56 notes).—Double open diapason, metal, 16 feet, 56 pipes; open diapason, metal, 8 feet, 56; viola, metal, 8 feet, 56; clarabella, wood, 8 feet, 56; principal metal, 4 feet, 56 pipes; harmonic flute, metal, 4 feet, 56; quint flute (lieblich), metal, 2½ feet, 56; fifteenth, metal, 2 feet, 56; sesquialtera, 3 ranks, metal, various, 158; trumpet, metal, 8 feet, 56.

SWELL ORGAN.—(Compass CC to G, 56 notes).—Lieblich bourdon, wood, 16 feet, 56 pipes; rohr flute, metal and wood, 8 feet, 56; open diapason, metal, 8 feet, 56; principal, metal, 4 feet, 56; fifteenth, metal, 2 feet, 56; mixture, 3 ranks, metal, various, 168; oboe, metal, 8 feet, 56; cornopean, metal, 8 feet, 56; clarion, 4 feet, 56.

CHOIR ORGAN.—(Compass CC to G).—Dulciana, metal, 8 feet, 56 pipes; viol di gamba C, (grooved) metal, 8 feet, 44; gedact, wood and metal, 8 feet, 56; suabe flute, wood, 4 feet, 56; salicet, metal, 4 feet, 56; harmonic piccolo, metal, 2 feet, 56; clarionet, metal, 8 feet, 56.

PEDAL ORGAN.—Open diapason, wood, 16 feet, 30 pipes; bourdon, wood, 16 feet, 30; violoncello, metal and wood, 8 feet, 30; spare.

COUPLERS.—Swell to pedals; great to pedals; choir to pedals; swell to great; swell to choir; 3 composition pedals to great; composition pedals to swell.

The interior metal pipes are of substantial "spotted metal," those in front being of zinc and decorated tastefully in gold and colours. The wooden pipes and mechanism throughout are varnished. The console is reversed and placed in the choir. The organ possesses some fine solo stops. Among the more noticeable are: the viola; the clarabella, invented by J. C. Bishop; the harmonic flute; the quint flute, supplying the place of a twelfth; the oboe; the cornopean; the viol di gamba; and the clarionet. The collective merits of the instrument are in proportion to the value of its several parts. The full organ produces a volume of happily balanced tone, each varied stop supplying its exact tribute to the whole. Messrs Bishop may be congratulated on turning out such a piece of sound workmanship. F. L.

MUNICH.—Verdi's Atida, with Mdlle Wekerlin as the heroine, has been performed at the Theatre Royal with great success.

WEIMAR.—At a party recently given by Princess Gortschakoff (dowager Baroness von Mayendorff), Herr Otto Lehfeld recited Count Tolstoy's poem, Der blinder Singer, with illustrative music by Liszt, who was himself the accompanist. The Grand Ducal Court, and leading members of the aristocracy, were present.

BERLIN.—Herr Reismann's "secular oratorio," Wittekind, has been given at the Garrison Church for the benefit of the Augusta Hospital. The singers were Mdlle Beymel; Herren Beck and Müller, of the Royal Opera; and Herr Prehn, of the Cathedral. The orchestra comprised members of the Berliner Sinfonie-Capelle.

(From "Punch.")

Diary of my ride to Khiva.

An awful time of it with Wolves—A wonderful escape. (Communicated by Private Wire.)

I breathe again. ("Let me breathe again!" Words by your own R.R., music by Dr Sullivan. Shortly.) . . . Such a day we've been having! But safe at last, and I stop to telegraph the good news to you, which you will receive as usual by Private Wire. (By the way news arrived here that you've had a picture of me riding on a pig to Khiva. No, sir, I am not in the habit of riding piggy-back).*

In the following account, I have not trusted to my imagination, but have referred to my diary, which, despite all difficulties and dangers insuperable to less hardy Norsemens than myself, I was able to keep, during the terrible hours of the past eventful Monday ("Black Monday"—Old Russian style—no connection with any other kalendar).

5.30 a.m.—Sleigh-driver wrapped up in thick capes—five of them—on the box. Sleigh-driver's boy up behind, with buns to feed the wolves. This was a happy idea of mine, based upon early reminiscences of what the animals at the Zoological Gardens used to like. I never yet knew a wolf, or a bear, refuse a bun. Boy has orders to be economical with buns, and be sure to throw them to the wolves. The hood being pulled over us in the carriage, I cannot keep my eye on the Boy. But, in so perilous a situation as this, I hope he is to be trusted. But buns will be buns, and boys will be boys. . . .

5.45.—Wolves heard in the distance. Roaring and hooting like one of Herr Wagner's Walkyrie laughs. Fair Circassian in fits. Took out scissors and cut her hair. Beat her hands. Asked her riddles. No answer. She is insensible! O Ciel! how will this end? . . . We are full inside, but not all right. Horse galloping. Donkey, harnessed tandem-fashion, galloping too. Sleigh-driver cracking his whip. Pig in the boot squeaking deliriously, and gasping for breath. What's in the wind now? . . . More howling from wolves. Five little boys, engaged to do the acrobat business, huddled up at the bottom of the carriage in a confused heap, so that I cannot distinguish one from another. All crying, and saying, in the Tartar dialect, that they'll tell their mother. What a fearful scene! . . .

6.—Thick fog. Snow everywhere. Frigidometer down to minus ten below double zero. My luxuriant moustaches and beard are all icicles!! I should be worth my weight in gold (wouldn't I feed up, and take no exercise to be weighed on such an occasion!) as a model for Old Father Christmas on a cake. Fair Circassian woke up. To cheer her, told her the story of Little Red Riding Hood and the Wolf pretending to be her grandmother. Fair Circassian in hysterics. I communicate with Boy in the rumble through a small hole. "Are you throwing buns to the wolves?" Boy's answer inaudible. Question repeated. Answer again inaudible. On looking through the hole at him, I see that he is trying to speak with his mouth full.

6.15.—Fearful roaring. Wolves on our track. No buns!! Crossed a river. The Orus, I fancy. Sleigh-driver says I hired this trap from his master at St Petersburg for half-a-crown an hour, and a shilling for the driver (himself), and that I haven't given him anything yet. Fancy choosing such a moment to ask for payment! Promise him roubles, to any amount, when we get to Gladitzova—the nearest posting town. Three bells: served out rations of wickaki all round. None to the Boy behind with the bun-box.

7.—For three-quarters of an hour we've been pursued. A lull at last. Donkey stopped. Fair Circassian wide awake. Says I haven't paid her for the last game of cribbage. Told her it was she who cheated: called her the Unfair Circassian. Wolves heard. Again we urge on our wild career.

8.—Everybody's hair turning white with fright. All except the sleigh-driver, who has his hat on. The little boys will be old men before the day is out. The wolves nearing us. Nearer—nearer—nearer. . . .

Through the hole at the back I implore the Boy, "Hav'n't you got one bun left?" No! O greediness, where are thy charms? He has eaten them all himself. Imagine the horror of the situation!

11.—Sun beginning to shine through mist. Just light enough to see a notice-board at the side of the road, "beware of the wolves!" Near it is a mile-stone with, I think, "to Khiva" on it . . . Wolves nearer and nearer. Boys crying. Circassian delirious and kicking. Served out wickaki to everyone except the Sleigh-driver, the Boy with the bun-box, and the Unfair Circassian. Played an extract from the Götterdämmerung on the mechanical piano, accompanied with shrieks from the Pig in the boot. Through my telescope I see the effect on the wolves. For a few moments they are puzzled. Oh, if I only had a music score of the entire work to throw out to them! The mechanical piano is out of order. Under pressure the chords snap. It falls in the snow. Onward! Speed onward, brave Sleigh-driver! We may yet escape!

One o'clock.—Time for lunchski. Preparations . . . Suddenly wolves appear within a mile of us . . . No lunchski. . . . Horrid thought! One o'clock must be the hour of the wolves' lunchski. . . . Can the horse do it? . . . The wolves! the wolves! . . . Send cheque at once . . . this is my last appeal . . . forward it by my friend . . . if we can only give wolves a check. . . .

(Hurried Diary).—Boy's hair, in rumble, quite white. Little Acrobat Boys twisted up in knots with sheer fear. Hair quite white. Unfair Circassian swears, despairingly, that she will never accuse me again of cheating at cribbage, and says it was the Sleigh-driver who put her up to it. I make her sign this declaration, in the belief that she is at her last gasp, on the back of an envelope. Wolves nearer—within half a mile. I dare use the telescope no longer, it brings the wolves too near. . . .

What shall be our next course? . . . Ha! . . . The old story occurs to me—the Russian father and mother who threw over their children to stay the wolves. . . . I've thrown over lots of people in my time, but never children. . . . But necessity is the mother of invention. . . . Wolves within a quarter of a mile. . . . They have stopped to eat the mechanical piano, which fell off some time ago. Through my telescope I see them tearing it to bits. There it goes—octaves, wires, key of G, chord of C. . . . Two wolves are fighting for the overture of Semiramide (which was in a small barrel by itself, with little prickly nails sticking out all over it), and an old wolf is hard on to the mechanical drum-trumpet and cymbal accompaniment in the finale of act two of the Huguenots. . . . Throw out more boxes of tunes—the march from Norma, the awful "Guerra, Guerra!" chorus from the same, a box with two tunes, "Suoni la tromba" and "La cicaladem." . . . Then my big box of the incantation scene in Der Freischütz, with imitation of full orchestral accompaniment, including thunder, lightning, and the owl's hooting apparatus—also my second tenor box with vox humana contrivance for the voice part and chorus in the Rataplan of the Huguenots, and the march from the Prophète. . . . They have taken the tunes, but this gives us time! Besides, music hath charms to soothe the savage beast. If I only had something plaintive and melodious. . . . Where's my box with "Looking Back" in it? . . . We are gaining upon them. . . .

(To be continued.)

TO DAN GODFREY, ESQ.

(From our correspondent at Vienna.)

Ettrah.

The members of the Musikerverein have sent a memorial to the Minister of War, representing that much distress is now prevalent in this capital among musicians, who have great difficulty in earning a livelihood, and that this difficulty is increased by their having to compete with members of the army bands, who play for prices at which their civil brethren in the profession would starve. The Minister is asked to put a stop to such a state of things, the matter being a question of life and death to the petitioners. Quilt (P.D.)

BEAUTY THAT DOES NOT FADE.*

O do not say that woman's beauty
Vanishes when youth is past,
A life well-spent in wholesome duty
Charms beholders to the last.

I do not care for chiseled faces,
Snow white skin, or faultless brow,
Without expression, void of graces,
Never changing, then or now.

* Copyright.

Give me a woman's face that borrows
Light and life from soul within,
Reflecting all our joys and sorrows,
Charming, fresh, and free from sin.

Let men who sneer at beauty fading,
View themselves with others' eyes,
For traits of vice are more degrading
Than lines of care they so despise.

M. A. B

* How could he have heard this? There is some mystery here. But we will fathom it, or perish in the attempt.—Ed.

* Very strange! Putting aside our doubts and misgivings, we must, in the name of humanity, see what we can do for him. There yet may be time (if he is in peril) to get up a subscription and save him.—Ed.

PUFFING A "CREED."
(From the "Liverpool Porcupine.")

The prizes awarded to amateur efforts in musical composition are not very often heard beyond the range of those private circles for whose benefit they are designed; and it is pretty well understood that they are, as a rule, worth no more than the expressions of satisfaction with which the objects of Mrs Primrose's bounty were wont to drink that lady's home-made wines. The truth is that not only is life short while art is long, but the faculty of composing good church music demands not merely genius, but the patient and undivided study of a lifetime. Hence, perhaps, it is that common-sense people, who would object to go to a dance at the Wellington-rooms in a coat made by an amateur tailor, or would take alarm at the thought of travelling to Euston by a train in charge of an amateur engine-driver, are—if so fortunate as not to be compelled to hear and judge for themselves—generally content with the assurance of friends that the musical knowledge of Mr P. or Mrs J. is such that Rossini did well to abandon composition and that Wagner didn't obtain a subsidy for more tetralogies. In the matter of "amateur acting" we have been long aware that so long as Mr F. or Miss H. are spared to our select and private theatricals, the continued presence of Roscius, Salvini, and Rachel on the boards is somewhat of an outrage.

Let us approach the bête noire of theologians, the Athanasian Creed, which we are to sing through the medium of Mr J. B. Cooper's musical and soft-winded accents.* In the course of an extraordinary article in Monday's issue of the Liverpool Daily Post, in which the lofty art of puffing has never been excelled, the public is recipient of much information. We read:—

"If the Athanasian Creed is to be said or sung, by all means let it be sung, since in things which are sung the words are less distinctly understood than in things which are said."

Are we awake? Musical intonation, especially in large ecclesiastical buildings, has been credited with some claims for the very purpose here deprecated. But to continue:—

"Hitherto it has usually been sung to Tallis's setting, which is, if possible, more monotonous than a droning reading of the words; and the lack of a melodious and well-harmonised arrangement has struck the veteran choirmaster so forcibly that he set to work and produced a very acceptable one."

To make the Athanasian Creed "acceptable" to a large section of the community has been found a tough job. Nothing, however, is impossible;† and we are here presented with the interesting tableau of a veteran choirmaster and composer, one cool evening, producing the desired "acceptable."

We are told that the Gregorian Plain Chant, to which the Creed has been allied for some centuries, is "monotonous." But those who have any theoretical knowledge of music are acquainted with one of its first requirements—viz., to impart variety of treatment to a given theme. It need hardly be mentioned that all "recitation," as in the psalms and creeds, is properly sung to a common note, with some slight inflections, to which appropriate colour can be given by the organ and a varied distribution of the choral forces.

In the last paragraph language evidently fails in its object:—

"Not to attempt any technical description of this really beautiful achievement in church music, we may say that in the comparative breadth and delicacy of different passages, as well as in a simple dignity frequently relieved by unexpected harmonies, it remarkably excels."

The music may be very briefly dismissed as a series of notes, in ordinary chant form, to which a few additional bars in another key, as alternative, afford but scant relief. We never met with a similar composition containing so many offences against the natural accent of words and accompanying music. The different verses, too, on opposite sides of the page not being numbered, must give singers an unnecessary amount of trouble.

P.S.—

There was an old Liverpool Porcupine,
Who said to some fools, "if for work you pine,
"Just each take a quill,
"And my sheet with trash fill;
"I'm a foolish and drivelling old Porcupine."

HEINRICH MARSCHNER.

(From our Correspondent at Hanover.)

The Marschner Monument is to be solemnly unveiled on the 11th inst. The procession will be marshalled in the following order:—Committee; Magistrates and Municipality; Members of the Theatre Royal, Actors, Singers, and Musicians; united Liedertafeln; Members of the Artists' Association. On the arrival of the procession in the large square before the Theatre Royal, proceedings are to commence with Mendelssohn's "Festgesang an die Künstler." Herr Köhler will then make a speech referring to the great event of the day, followed by the act of unveiling. Marschner's chorus, "Liedesfreiheit," will be sung, and the monument formally accepted for the town by the Stadtdirector. The ceremony closes with a "Schlussgesang," by C. L. Fischer, director of the musical department. In the evening, there will be a performance of Marschner's Templer und Jüdin. A convivial party (Festcommers), by the united Liedertafeln, in the large hall of the Odéon, is to bring the whole to an end. Anufiel! Curck.

Chopin.

(From the "Twickenham Teasar.")*

We fear we must confess to a sense of weary exertion in reading this book. We have met with the same work before, as an American publication (Philadelphia, published by Leupoldt, 1863), but we must say that the present—a reprint of the American one—is far superior to it in every way. We cannot but admire the "classical tone" of the colour of the binding which characterises Mr Reeves' series of musical publications, and which renders them elegant additions to the drawing room table. We should like to say as much for the inside as for the outside of the one under notice, but we can scarcely do so. Whatever be the original of Liszt's, we do not like the "high falutin'" translation. One needs only to read the translator's dedication and preface to discover this. How is this? Is expressive and terse Anglo-Saxon utterly decayed on the other side of the Atlantic, or have we here only the eccentric diction of an individual whose style is foreign to the normal national spirit? Alas! we fear that the fearfully piled-up agony of psychological rhodomontade, as we see it here, is nationally peculiar to a country which revels in extremes and enthusiasms of every nature. Then as to the subject, or rather hero, of the dedication—it is to one Jan Pychowski. It well points our remarks when we find all the attributes and qualities, which even a Chopin himself could scarcely have possessed in so distinguished a fulness, credited to this man as a great musician and artist. Pychowski! a name in musical history to which we are yet a stranger. The complimentary epithets on this individual are almost inexhaustible. The same evidence is found in the preface; it is replete with exaggerated adjectives, and full of bathos, verbosity, and capillary distinctions. Chopin's style is described as being "most ethereal, subtle, and delicate;" his compositions as being full of "individual and national idiosyncracies of psychological interest" (pages 11 and 12). How are we to judge, therefore, whether this "Life" be really Liszt's, or merely an American paraphrase? The same vitiated style appears throughout, so that in the book itself we are obliged to accredit Liszt with absurdities as great as are perpetrated by the translator. We sigh for a grain of Cobbett's

* "Athanasian Creed." Arranged by J. B. Cooper.

† Except nothing.—D. P.

* The Life of Chopin. By Franz Liszt, translated from the French by M. Walker Cook. (London: W. Reeves, 185, Fleet Street.)

English and common sense. We may learn here how to destroy the capability of expressing distinct ideas in English; see the following specimen. Speaking of the Hungarians, the translator makes Liszt refer to their genius in respect of personal adornment, &c. "To know how to take off, to put on, to manœuvre the cap with all possible grace, constituting almost an art" (page 40). The italics are ours; to talk of how to "manœuvre the cap!" Another instance—we are told of a certain class of nobles who are "too poor indeed to take part in the fête, yet only excluded from it by their own volition" (page 43). We always understood the word "volition" to express not a mental state, but an act—i.e., the power of motion—but here the power of motion is negated by the performance of volition! Again, all the characters of classical and mythical history are paraded in illustration, as if they were the stage properties of a literary showman (see pages 28, &c.).

The opening chapter of the work reads as if we are commencing a treatise on necromancy by a professional wizard, since Liszt speaks of the "manifold forms of art" as being "but different incantations, charged with electricity from the soul of the artist" (page 18), an expression which is quite Mephistophelian! This may explain the source of the "blazing torch of his (Liszt's) own genius" (vide translator in preface), for his "incantations" have hitherto proved very unacceptable to English ears. Quite on a par is Liszt's definition of genius as being "the creative power of artistic intuition" when "first invoked within the magic circle" (page 18).

Now, what does Liszt tell us of Chopin? Not much indeed. Large portions of the book are taken up with descriptions of national customs of which Chopin's music is claimed to be the poetical embodiment. To serve this purpose, Chopin only appears as a mythical idea impersonating the abstract traditions of history which are otherwise impossible of expression. It is only after 142 pages that we learn for the first time that he was born to a conscious existence and became a living entity. The date of his birth, however, is unknown, and the absence of even this trivial knowledge is turned into a "presentiment" of his mysterious after-age and future (page 143). Liszt's worship and adoration of art, and its expression in Chopin, seems to cover the whole universe of known philosophy, and hence he is so lost in its contemplation that he seems to forget the central figure of whom he is writing the "Life." A few intercalated particulars of journeys and some half-a-dozen historic dates are about all we get to know of the man Chopin. Liszt's book really divides into two portions—the subjective and mythical, and the objective, the latter of which includes all we are told of Chopin's life and personality mixed up with subjective and legendary comments. Chopin only wrote for the piano; he was proof, says Liszt, to "the temptation of the singing of the bow, the liquid sweetness of the flute, or the deafening swells of the trumpet" (page 20); all of which merely means that he wrote nothing for the orchestra. Liszt amplifies this text by going on to exclaim, "What strong conviction! What intuitive penetration! What confident perception!"—he exclaims—"must have moved Chopin in thus making sole choice of the piano as the vehicle of his harmonies." Certainly it is the mighty power of a strong conviction by which a man becomes absorbed in selecting and pursuing one end and aim, and his success in all such cases is commensurate to the value of the principles he has fixed upon. It was thus—admitting the "conviction," but not the far-reaching prophetic "penetration" assigned—that Chopin chose the piano, but Liszt, in order to support his hypothesis of Chopin's prophetic penetration, assumes the piano to have been a poor unknown instrument, unconscious of its powers, until awakened by the genius and touch of Chopin's nature. This is not true, nor did Chopin discover its powers. Beethoven, long before, did that, let alone the "intuitive penetration" as to its future which must have animated a Bach, a Mozart, or a Schubert. The earlier contemporaries of Chopin who were glorifying the same instrument and studying its powers were neither few nor poor in talent. It was an age of piano developments, and Chopin was but one of a general consensus of influence which was operating in such men as Mendelssohn and Schumann. This is a case in point of that fevered diction by which Liszt ascribes such a breadth of genius to Chopin throughout the book, and which is gratuitously unjust to the other great masters of musical art. Liszt has one idea—that idea he expresses in an utterly unhistorical Chopin, one which he creates from the fecundity of his imagination and ascribes to one Frederic Chopin. We owe much to Chopin for his key-board discoveries—to speak un sentimentally—and his was a genius in which "boldness was justified" (page 23); but not to him, as is hinted (ibid), is the whole of the credit to be given for the discovery of the marvellous powers which have been found in, and extracted from, the piano. In Liszt's description of Chopin's Funeral March there is much we can endorse, but not to the full lengths to which he goes. He destroys the very aptness of his description by stringing furiously eloquent appeals to Cassandra, to Priam, &c., as representing nothing equal to the impassioned expression of those bars of music. Liszt gives a fearfully long and prolix description of Polish dances—he enters into their quasi-philosophical aspect. We find a "religious robe" (Kontusz, page 39) associated with the national dance of the "Polonaise"; he mingles prelates and priests with these national displays and customs (pages 46 and 54). To find all that Liszt does in the national expression of Chopin's music is to need no history. Tradition and custom are therein more indelibly imprinted than can otherwise be portrayed. Language, painting, Moabite stones, and even the tablets of Esarhaddon fail to give man that psychological insight into ages and feelings which a few bars of Chopin's music are capable of doing. Wonderful metempsychosis! grotesque hyperbole! When a musician writes of a musician we expect a musical work; but here we have a semi-philosophical work by one who has learnt in the cloister the parrot phrases and current patois of psychological science, and, by an abuse of language, terms, and ideas, makes the subject of his sketch fit into all the apertures and orifices of a foregone set of ideas.

Having thus censured, let us extol what we can. Some parts—for instance, the latter portion of chapter six—gives us much real insight into Chopin's character. At page 84 we come across some hints and observations as to how to play Chopin's music; these are good. The description of Chopin's last visit to London, too, is mournfully picturesque. Omitting the dross, there are, we suppose, all the particulars here that can be known of Chopin's meagre life. Those then who wish to know what is and can be said of that great creative artist will find much to enlighten them in this work. Amidst plenty of gold we must put up with the alloy, for the greater portion of which, we doubt not, the translator is responsible. The publishers have done well in not giving the full name on the title page, as in the American edition. The difference, perhaps, elucidates the absurdities we have pointed out.

[Mr Lavender Pitt wrote an Essay on Chopin, which John Simon (because of "the Dutch Verhulst") called "The Yellow Book."

Otto Reart.

—o—
To F. E. Burnard, Esq.

SIR,—One or two choir flirts will do more towards making a revival fail than ten old spear-tailed devils.—Yours truly,
Septimus Widd.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of Organ Recital by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 31st:—

Organ Concerto (F major)	Handel.
Andantino from the Symphony "The Power of Sound"	Spohr.
Allegro con brio (E major)	W. T. Best.
Sabbath Song (Le Chant du Dimanche)	Meyerbeer.
Prelude and Fugue (E minor)	Bach.
Overture, Oberon	Weber.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 2nd:—

Organ Sonata (No. 5, D major)	Mendelssohn.
Intermezzo, "In the Elysian Fields," from the opera of Orfeo	Gluck.
Fugue for the Organ (The Bell Fugue)	W. R. Bezfild.
Air, "If guiltless blood," Susanna	Handel.
Marche Religieuse	L. Niedermeyer.
Overture (D major, Op. 60)	Romberg.

GRANADA.—The Italian operatic company lately playing at Seville will give a series of performances here.

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S

Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his SEVENTEENTH Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the following Afternoons:—

FRIDAY, June 8; FRIDAY, June 15; SATURDAY, June 23.

SIXTH RECITAL.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 8, 1877.

Programme.

QUINTET, in F minor, Op. 34, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr L. RIES, Herr STRAUS, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA ... Brahms.
 FANTASIA, in C, Op. 17, for pianoforte (first time)—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ ... Schumann.
 SOLO, Adagio from 9th Concerto, for violin—M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA ... Spoth.
 GRAND TRIO, in E flat, Op. 70, No. 3, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA ... Beethoven.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

	For the Series.	Single Tickets.
Sofa Stalls, numbered and reserved ...	£2 2 0	£0 7 0
Balcony ...	1 1 0	0 3 0
Area ...		0 1 0

Subscriptions received at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Olivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse, & Co., 48, Cheapside; Hays', 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

DEATH.

On the 28th inst., at 228, Piccadilly, after great suffering, CHARLOTTE NAYLOR, daughter of the late Mrs Pittman, of New Ormond Street.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1877.

ART versus SCIENCE.

HOW often shall we be compelled to remind some of the most intelligent and widely cultured of our friends that art is one thing, science another?—that music, being an art, has no more pretensions to be regarded as a science than painting or poetry? Read the subjoined news from Cambridge, and answer—O Pomponatius Achilles Ptolomy!

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

Saturday, May 19.—On the report of the musical examinations Syndicate (Reporter, p. 436), the Vice-Chancellor was sorry to say that the Professor of Music dissented from one small part of the report. He had asked the Professor to be so good as to state his reasons, and he had received from him the following letter:—

"7 Hamilton Terrace, London, N. W.

"MY DEAR MR VICE-CHANCELLOR,—Not in the hope of changing the views of the gentlemen I have met on the Syndicate, but to justify my dissent from one expression in the report, I must trouble you with my reasons, which are the result of many years' reflection and of frequent consultation with musicians. I venture to wish for the omission of the words, 'a member of the Senate or,' because I am firmly convinced that it is more than desirable, it is necessary, for the honour of the University and the welfare of music, for every person who officiates in the musical examinations to be a musician of proved competency. The words, against which I offer a protest, open the possibility, however improbable, of the appointment as examiner of some Physicist, or other man of extraneous learning, to be subject to whose inquisition would be painful to any one whose life and best energies had been devoted to the widely comprehensive study of music. The distinctions between non-professional and professional followers of an art are very fine, but most obvious; no book learning, but the constant habit of producing, can alone make an artist, and the constant habit of tuition can alone make a teacher. This is because the daily observing of faults in others sharpens perception of right and wrong, and the daily working of art problems is the sole experience of the means of avoiding error. As little would I trust the life of a friend to a physician whose knowledge was acquired wholly outside the medical profession, as I would a score to an examiner whose musicianship was not his all-absorbing occupation. The case is different certainly in theology, and perhaps in law, where the subject is finite and changeless, from what it is in those studies which are constantly enriched by additions whose truth can but be tested by the continual habit of practical application. To enlarge upon the uses of other institutions than Cambridge might be personal, and would thus be untimely and far from my purpose; but I am bound to state the deep-rooted belief that, to make the Cambridge musical degrees most highly respected, musicians must be assured against the participation of amateurs in the investigating of their professional pretensions. My sincerity may I trust serve as apology, if need be, for any warmth of expression in the above, which I must ask you, if you please, to submit to the Council together with the Syndicate's report.—I am, my dear Mr Vice-Chancellor, faithfully yours,

G. A. MACFARREN.

"The Rev. the Vice-Chancellor."

In commenting on the foregoing, Mr Sedley Taylor made the subjoined remarks:—

"Musical degrees conferred without residence were an anomaly which might advantageously be got rid of altogether; but, if they were to be retained, additional requirements such as those recommended by the Syndicate ought to be adopted without delay. It was most desirable to insist on a preliminary educational test. If the present regulations continued in force there might soon be a class of graduates inferior in general culture to persons who had simply passed the University Local Examinations. In fact, however, the imposition of some such test was no longer a matter of option. Other Universities which conferred musical degrees, such as Oxford, Dublin, and London, had already determined to require a literary qualification, and Cambridge must either take a similar step or prepare to welcome all the worst educated candidates who would be deterred from applying elsewhere by the preliminary tests there exacted. This was no theoretical apprehension: an unprecedentedly large number of applications for the next examination had already been received by the Professor of Music, in great part, doubtless, from aspirants who were anxious to get into the only port still free from blockade, and avoid unpleasant overhauling of a dubious cargo. To stop an ugly rush of this kind the University must adopt measures in the direction of the Syndicate's Report. He felt very strongly the advisability of introducing the Acoustics of Music into the examination for the Mus. Bac. degree. The term 'theory of music' was a misleading misnomer. Such subjects as harmony, counterpoint, fugue, &c., commonly embraced by it, were mere classifications of chords and progressions. Acoustics was alone entitled to be called a 'theory' of music, as supplying an immovable basis in laws of Nature on which to rear a superstructure of Art. The essential elements of music, pitch, quality, concord and discord, were absolutely controlled by ascertained laws of great beauty and simplicity, which are capable, too, of fairly complete popular exposition. A knowledge of these laws would not be without direct value to the practical executant, from the careful attention to minute shades of pitch which his use of acoustical instruments, such as the monochord and the resonator, would necessarily entail. But to the teacher of music the benefit would be far more decisive. No branch of education probably was more completely under the sway of unreasoning routine and traditional dogmatism. An acquaintance with the laws of sound would make clear in the teacher's mind what was too often extremely obscure, viz., the distinction between consequences flowing directly from immutable physical laws and mere conventional rules possessing no sanction save that of established usage. In this and in other ways, a knowledge of acoustics would render the teaching of music more intelligent and educationally valuable, and would tend also to emancipate the subject from arbitrary restrictions with which it was still encumbered. On these grounds he cordially supported the introduction of a branch of study on which he felt justified in speaking with some confidence. He would next refer to the proposal put forward in Professor Macfarren's letter. Its opening statement, that the examiners in music ought to be 'musicians of proved competency,' would, taking those words in their usual sense, be open to no other criticism than this, that a Cambridge Board of Studies, or the Council of the Senate, could be safely depended upon to make no appointment in which this condition was not fulfilled. But it was clear from the latter part of the letter that by these words Professor Macfarren meant members of the musical profession, and that what he desired was to bar the possibility of any person other than a professional musician being appointed to examine in music. The difficulty of defining a professional musician with the precision necessary for the purposes of a formal University regulation would alone go far to render such a proposal inadmissible. Moreover, it would be inconsistent with the usage of the University, which had not required that examiners in other branches should have any professional connection with them. The examiners in the two great triposes were not necessarily persons who gained their living by teaching mathematics or classics, and such a restriction would be obviously disadvantageous and have no chance of adoption. It was not the business of the University to issue licences to professional practitioners in music, but to attest the possession of a sound independent knowledge of the subject. The Senate would therefore do wisely to take a less restricted view than that advocated by the Professor of Music. As a step towards a juster recognition of the study of music as an independent branch of liberal education he warmly supported the proposal to allow that subject to count as one of the portals to an ordinary B.A. degree."

Another distinguished member of the Senate, Mr Gerard F. Cobb, supported Mr Sedley Taylor in his main argument, with which Mr Cobb thoroughly agreed.

"He (Mr Cobb) was sorry he could not endorse the exception taken by Professor Macfarren to the Report. He ventured to think, however, that the Professor's letter was the result partly of his less intimate acquaintance with the rules and precedents of our academic system, and partly of his regarding the proposed changes in the sole light of their bearing on extraneous candidates for degrees. He seemed, in fact, to have written far more as the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, than as the Head of the University Faculty. The excision of the words to which the Professor took exception would of course be technically insufficient to meet his views, for the Senate would still be free to appoint none but its own members to examine. It was against all precedent to stipulate for 'proved competency' in examiners; the ordinary method of their appointment was the guarantee for this, and the body which had been fortunate enough to secure the services of so competent a Professor would be the last to neutralise their choice by giving him incompetent colleagues. On the other hand, in the case of a subject where there might be a tendency for some time to come to select non-academic examiners, there was an absolute necessity for the co-operation of at least one person possessing a proper familiarity with ordinary examination and other academic routine. Had the Syndicate recommended leaving things as they were the case would have been different; but their main object had been to make the Faculty really, what it was nominally, an Academic Faculty, and endeavour to encourage the scientific study of music within its own precincts, instead of being the mere source of professional passports. Professor Macfarren's letter left this main object entirely out of sight, and this very fact seemed to make the precaution objected to by him additionally necessary. Moreover the introduction of Acoustics, a subject with which few, if any, strictly professional musicians were at present acquainted, and which the Professor himself seemed to regard as 'extraneous,' even to the 'widely comprehensive study' of music, would necessitate (for this branch of the examination) a non-professional appointment. It was not found that candidates for our degrees in law or medicine experienced such susceptibility on being examined by law examiners or physiologists not actually earning their living as barristers or surgeons, as the Professor seemed to apprehend for the musical candidate. Moreover, were the Professor's view adopted and no one eligible as examiner unless the 'teaching' of music were his 'all-absorbing occupation,' it would exclude some who from the very fact of their freedom from professional engagements might be all the more absorbed in such studies, and therefore competent to examine. With regard to making the preliminary examination an avenue to the ordinary degree, it might possibly be thought by some that the University did enough for the encouragement of musical study here by giving special musical degrees. Unfortunately however these degrees were not generally regarded in their proper light, but were viewed with disfavour as being somewhat distinctively professional. It was therefore necessary to provide for our undergraduate students some other stimulus. As an illustration of this, he would mention the case of an undergraduate of his own college, whose father had objected on these grounds to his becoming a candidate for a musical degree, but who was quite ready to become a candidate for a musical special."

Bach knew nothing about acoustics; Handel less. Haydn knew nothing about acoustics; Mozart less. Beethoven knew nothing about acoustics; Spohr, Weber, Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Rossini, and Auber less. It results from this, that Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Spohr, Weber, Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Rossini, and Auber, desirous of a Cambridge musical degree, must be plucked. Nothing between Albrechtsberger and Wagner would possess the hair of a chance. Palestrina would turn a somersault; Cherubini kick the bucket; Rubinstein would dive into the depths of his own "Ocean," and find no science, even were Sir Flamborough to take a header after him and help in the search. Science is a dead certainty—quiet as a stone. Art plays with it. Hence poetry, which comes from the invisible soul, and is a cut above visible nature.

Thophilus Quetz.

Elench.

(Continued.)

At the I.O.U. Club—King and Beard,
COLONEL TWIST.—Come to the Bee and Bottle.

DR SHIVER.—I can't—I'm sleepy.
COLONEL TWIST.—Nonsense; they are going to rehearse the Walküre. Do you remember? (sings):

Enter BAYLIS BOIL and PURPLE POWIS.

MR BAYLIS BOIL.—You are wrong. Hans Sachs was no more a cobbler—

MR PURPLE POWIS (interrupting him).—than John Bunyan was a tinker.

MR BAYLIS BOIL.—John was a cobbler of a tinker.

MR PURPLE POWIS.—Hans was a tinker of a cobbler (sings):

Jerum! Jerum!

Halla halla he!

O ho! Trallalei! O he!

Enter MUMBO and JUMBO.

MUMBO.—'im Burnand?

JUMBO.—No, it am Wagner.

Head of Benwell appears.

HEAD OF BENWELL (sings):

MUMBO.—'im Straus! Ho?

JUMBO.—No—'im Wagner—'im Massasingum.

MUMBO and JUMBO (together).—Gollawolla! 'im Benwell head! [Exit precipitately.]

Schluss folgt.

LET MEYERBEER ALONE.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Amid the torrent of Wagnerian exultation that has overspread London for the last few weeks, we are in danger of forgetting Meyerbeer and his "machines." I can answer for the Chorus at least of both our grand operas forgetting their part in the "Rataplan" of Les Huguenots; this clumsy passage being substituted for the far more Meyerbeerish and characteristic modulation—

Pray bring your powerful influence to bear upon the peccant soldiery, and believe me, yours faithfully, Tavistock Hotel, 18th May.

R. P. STEWART.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—My attention having been called to a circular stating that I had been down at Sydenham in conference with the musical authorities of the Crystal Palace as to arrangements for the forthcoming Handel Festival, I beg to state that under no circumstances could such be the case. All the arrangements and engagements of artists have been made by the Committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society, and I have only undertaken to conduct the rehearsals and performances, and nothing more.—I remain, sir, yours obediently, 59, Eccleston Square, S. W., May 21st, 1877.

M. COSTA.

HERR RICHTER, the great orchestral conductor, who has played so distinguished a part in the Wagner Festival concerts at Albert Hall, left for Vienna on Wednesday, to resume his duties as musical director at the Imperial Opera of the Austrian capital.

SIGNOR TAMBERLIK, the renowned tenor—"last of the Romans," as Rossini used to say—has arrived in London, and will shortly make his appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre in the opera of Otello, with Christine Nilsson as his priceless Desdemona.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.—His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has signified his intention to be present at the Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace, and will be accompanied on the occasion of his visit by the Princess of Wales.

A SPECIAL Service in aid of the Choir Benevolent Fund will be held in St Paul's Cathedral on Thursday evening, the 28th of June. The choir will consist entirely of professional singers, composed of members of the St Paul's, Westminster Abbey, Chapel Royal choirs, and most of the cathedral choirs in England. Handel's Zadok the Priest is to be included in the service. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales has been pleased to give his name as patron to the Choir Benevolent Fund.

OCCASIONAL NOTE.

THE report that Signor Tamberlik is to take the part of Nero in Herr Rubinstein's opera, so-called, at Covent Garden, is, for two reasons, "moonshine." Reason No. 1, Nero will not be given. Reason No. 2, Tamberlik is engaged at Her Majesty's Theatre. When asked by a subscriber whether Rubinstein's Maccabees was to be given at the Royal Italian Opera, Mr Gye is said to have replied—"It's apocryphal." Si non e vero, &c.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

SIGNOR TITO MATTEI's matinée at Mr and Mrs Hirsch's residence, Kilburn, on Saturday, May 26, attracted a large number of friends of the popular Italian. Signor Mattei played several of his most admired pieces, including "La Lyre," nocturne, and "Marche fantastique." The selections from his vocal works comprised the romanza, "Non é ver" (Mdmé Luisa Gage), serenata, "Rita" (Mr Welby Wallace), and "Sull' onda" (Signor Caravoglia). Signor Mattei also played excerpts from Mendelssohn and Thalberg, to the evident satisfaction of his hearers. Besides the artists already named, Signori Bettini, Vergara, Foli, Federici, Mr Shakespeare, Mdmé Roze Perkins, Mdle Pernini, and Miss Alice Fairman (vocalists), Signor Passini (violin), and M. Albert (violoncello) gave their assistance. Signor Li Calsi accompanied the vocal music.

At the concert given at St George's Hall by Mr J. Parry Cole on Saturday evening, May 26, a noticeable feature was the singing of Miss Cora Stuart, who gained an encore for Herr Taubert's "My darling was so fair." Messrs G. Coventry, W. Moylan, Mdmes Susanna Cole, and Marie Stuart were the other vocalists. A comic operetta by Mr J. Parry Cole, in which the author took an active part, brought the entertainment to a conclusion. W. A. J.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—In the concert on Saturday, May 19th, Mdle Cognetti (piano), Mdles Pommereul (violin), and Campani, the Misses Allitsen and Herr Carl Hill (the "Niblung") took part. We have no space to dwell on their individual merits on this occasion. Enough that each artist, singing and playing con amore, was duly appreciated. The Misses Allitsen (Mr Goldberg's clever pupils) winning a "call" both after the duet from Auber's Crown Diamonds, and Rossini's "Giorno d'orrore." Herr Hill pleased by the style in which he gave two of Schubert's Lieder, and Mdle Redeker by her charming delivery of an aria of Mozart's. Part-songs by the Crystal Palace choir, and some excellent performances by the orchestra under Mr Manns made up an interesting programme.

MR AMBROSE AUSTIN gave his annual concert at St James's Hall on Thursday evening, May 17th. The vocalists were Mdle Tietjens, Mesdames Antoinette Sterling and Trebelli, Miss Lilian Roscoe, Messrs Sims Reeves, Maybrick, Edward Lloyd, and Santley, aided by the "Bijou Choir." The instrumentalists were Mr Paul Viardot (violin) and Mr Henry Ketten (pianoforte). The room was crowded. Mdle Tietjens, who was in fine voice, gave "Ocean, thou mighty monster" splendidly, and, being encored after Mr Cowen's ballad, "It was a dream," substituted "Kathleen Mavourneen;" she also joined Mdmé Trebelli in "Giorno d'orrore," Semiramide. Mr Sims Reeves, who was in the full vigour of his prime, gave "The Message" of Blumenthal to absolute perfection, and was twice called forward at the end, to be enthusiastically applauded. He also took part with Mr Santley in "All's well," which, as usual, was encored, and finally sang "My pretty Jane" so well that, as the reward of merit, he was solicited (or rather forced) to sing again; to which we were indebted for an inimitable rendering of "Tom Bowling," that finest of Dibdin's songs. Mr Santley, singing his very best, was compelled to repeat Sullivan's "Thou'rt passing hence, my brother," and, in response to an encore for "The leather Bottel," delighted the audience with "The Vicar of Bray." Mesdames Trebelli and Antoinette Sterling, Miss Roscoe, Messrs Lloyd and Maybrick, were also in great favour with the audience. M. Viardot, the young and already expert and accomplished violinist, won a hearty "re-call" after his admirable execution of a solo; and Mr Ketten's brilliant performance of a Polonaise, by Chopin, obtained unanimous recognition. The vocal music was accompanied by Messrs Cowen, Elliott, and Sidney Naylor. Mr Austin may be fairly congratulated on the success of this, one of the most varied and attractive of his many excellent concerts. St James's Hall was crowded in every part.

PALERMO.—The remains of Petrella, at request of the Municipality, will be sent here from Genoa, and buried at public expense.

PROVINCIAL.

BRIGHTON.—The Sacred Harmonic Society gave Handel's Samson on Saturday, May 19th, with Misses Jessie Jones, Julia Elton, and Messrs Cummings and Santley as principal vocalists. Samson not having been heard at Brighton for some years, it was a quasi-novelty, and a large audience assembled in the Dome. The principals, chorus, and band acquitted themselves admirably, and the applause was hearty and frequent. Mr Carrodus was leader, Mr E. Howell, principal violoncellist, Mr Spearing, organist, and Mr Taylor, conductor. The general arrangements were well looked after by Messrs Lyon & Hall.

MR BEST ON PRIMROSE HILL.

On Wednesday last Mr Best gave another of his highly interesting recitals at the Hall, Primrose Hill Road. The following pieces were selected from the performer's apparently boundless repertoire:—

Tocatta and Fugue, in C major (Bach); Larghetto, in D major (Mozart); Organ Concerto, in F major (Handel); Gavottes, Orphée, in A minor, and Iphigénie en Aulide, in A major (Gluck); Prelude and Fugue, in D minor (G. F. Hatton); Organ Sonata, No. 4, in B flat major (Mendelssohn); Andante, in A major (H. Smart); Allegro con brio, in E major (W. T. Best).

It is needless to describe the manner in which the difficult and elaborate pedal solo in the Tocatta was rendered; it is sufficient to say that it formed a fitting prelude to the fugue, the noble subject of which was perpetually and variedly asserted, now as with a giant's voice, and now with a tenderness of tone that appealed to the heart. The Larghetto from the quintet for clarinet and strings, one of Mozart's most delightful slow movements, was given con amore. The organ concerto, with its spirited Allegro and flowing melody, showed the great master in one of his most cheerful moods.

The Gavottes suffered in coming directly after the bold and powerful work of Handel; though full of beauty, they become rather same through the constant repetition of the subject; they are hardly suited for the organ. The prelude and fugue, by G. F. Hatton (son of the well-known composer), showed that he had inherited the skill and profited by the guidance of his father. Though leaning to the ancient style, both prelude and fugue manifest yearnings for the freedom of modern art. Mr Best approached the most poetic item of his programme in Mendelssohn's sonata. The Andante Religioso was sung as if the strains flowed from a well-trained choir, the Echo organ giving the effect produced by the reverberations heard in a lofty cathedral. The Andante, in A major, 6-8 time, one of Henry Smart's happiest inspirations, with its charming melody and rich and varied harmonies, was received with loud applause. The recital terminated with an Allegro by Mr Best, which manifested the vigour and sustained power always exhibited by our great organ virtuoso. The next recital is announced for next Wednesday, June 6th. F. L.

OCEANA.

There was an old symphony "Ocean,"
Which, heard after taking a potion,
Gave the dose such assistance
As conquer'd resistance,
And work'd the reverse way of ocean.
There was an old symphony "Ocean,"
For outward appliance like lotion;
If you took but a sip
You were careful to dip
Your head never more in that "Ocean."
There was an old symphony "Ocean,"
Writ, to scourge the Egyptians, in Goshen,
But the plague wasn't wanted,
For the Hebrews levanted,
And Pharaoh got drowned in the ocean.

BUDA-PESTH.—Mdle Etelka Gerster (now Mad. Gardini) took temporary leave in an entertainment made up of Hunydy László and Die Zauberflöte. Paul et Virginie has been produced.

John Baldwin Buckstone and John Sims Beebes.
(Telegraph by Private Wire.)

Two cherries on one stalk.

Stalk!—booby Wire. Who ever heard of cherries on a stork?
Ctesaphilus Querr.

ONE HUNDRED POUNDS REWARD FOR A MEANING.

To Cictor Hugo.*

Victor in Poesy, Victor in Romance,
Cloud-weaver of phantasmal hopes and fears,
French of the French, and Lord of human tears;
Child-lover; Bard whose fame-lit laurels glance,
Darkening the wreaths of all that would advance,
Beyond our strait, their claim to be thy peers;
Weird Titan by thy wintry weight of years,
As yet unbroken, Stormy voice of France!
Thou dost not love our England—so they say.
I know not—England, France, all man to be
Will make one people ere man's race be run.
And I, desiring that diviner day,
Yield thee full thanks for thy full courtesy
To younger England, in the boy my son.

Alfred Tennyson.

SALZBURG.

(From a Correspondent.)

The list of artists who will take part in the approaching Musical Festival is now complete. Mme Gomperz-Bettelheim, Imperial and Royal Austrian Chamber Singer, who very seldom abandons her retirement for public life, has, with her usual kindness, declared her readiness to add by her co-operation a new attraction to the Festival; and a similar promise has been made by Herr J. M. Grün, Concertmeister, at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna. With regard to the orchestra, it will comprise fourteen first, and fourteen second, violins; twelve tenors; nine violoncellos; nine double-basses; one harp; three flutes; three oboes; two clarionets; four bassoons; four trumpets; three trombones, besides other instruments, making a grand total of ninety performers, and representing nearly the entire orchestra of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna.

JUNE.*

Come to the fresh mown meadows,
Come while we sweep the scythe;
The lambs skip in the shadows,
And we, too, will be blithe.
The strokes together falling
Play still the self-same tune;
The cuckoo keeps on calling
All in the month of June.
Come, maidens, to the mowing,
Here lovers often meet;
Your smiles on us bestowing
Will make the hay more sweet.
Come, maidens, no delaying,
You cannot come too soon;
You'll make our work seem playing
All in the month of June.

* Copyright.

S. P. HOWELL.

* From the "Nineteenth Century" for June.

WAIFS.

Her Majesty sent from Balmoral on Wednesday a most kind message of inquiry respecting the health of Mdle Tietjens. The answer, which was telegraphed by the Queen's express order to Her Majesty at Balmoral Castle, was to the effect that "Mdle Tietjens could not be as yet pronounced out of danger, but that the advance towards recovery was cheering." No one, however, except her medical attendants (even her nearest relatives) is permitted to see Mdle Tietjens, and her state still remains exceedingly critical.—Times, June 1.

MDLE TIETJENS.—The paragraph which we copied from the Observer has led to so many inquiries that we have obtained authentic information as to the present state of this favourite singer, and we are happy to be able to say that she is steadily improving. Since her return from America last year her condition has been such as to occasion her great suffering; but she has most honourably fulfilled all her engagements, and it was only after the performance of Lucrezia Borgia, on Saturday week, that imminent danger was threatened. On Tuesday recovery was almost despaired of; and at a consultation on Tuesday evening with Sir William Jenner it was arranged that a very serious surgical operation should be performed early on Wednesday morning by Mr Spencer Wells. The operation afforded immediate relief to all urgent symptoms; and, although extreme quiet is necessary, the patient is gaining ground daily.—Times, May 29.

Dr Filippo Filippi has returned to Milan.

Ole Bull was to leave New York for Europe on the 19th ult.

Signor Carlo Scalese is engaged as conductor at the Teatro Real, Madrid.

The Duke of Marigliano has sent 200 francs to the family of the late Signor Dall' Argine.

On the 4th June Mdme Thérèse is to appear at the Gaiety Theatre. Enterprising Mr Hollingshead!

On Tuesday afternoon L'Ami Fritz is to be played by the Gaiety company at the Aquarium Theatre. Enterprising Mr Hollingshead!

Pacini's Niccolò de' Lapi (not so good as Schira's) will be revived next season at the Pagliano, Florence.

Mad. Essipoff, was to make her last appearance in America at the Union Hall, Boston, on the 16th ult.

Mr A. Blissett, a pupil of Mr W. Haynes, of Malvern, is appointed organist and choirmaster to Cowleigh church.

Miss E. Farren has, we are glad to hear, in some measure recovered from the effects of her recent accident.

Mr Barton McGuckin has been singing with success at Rivière's concerts in the Queen's Theatre during the week.

The manuscript of the Messa da Requiem, written by the late Signor Petrelli for Angelo Mariani, has just been found.

The expenses of interring Bellini's remains at Catania, and of the accompanying performances, amounted to 150,773 francs, 40 cents.

Signor Aldighieri (one of the late B. Lumley's pensioners) is to receive 60,000 francs next season at the San Carlo, Lisbon. The Portuguese must be rich.

In Signor E. Cavazza's new opera, Emma, promised for this month at the Teatro Brunetti, Bologna, the leading parts are assigned to Signore Pozzi, Boccognomi, Mr Byron, and Signor Valle.

At the Welsh National concert, to be given in aid of the Miners' Fund, at the Crystal Palace on Wednesday next, Mdme Edith Wynne will give the solos in Mr Brinley Richards' new choral song "The Men of Wales."

Mr Buckstone took his annual benefit at the Haymarket Theatre last night. The Overland Route was played, the veteran comedian repeating his original part of Mr Lovibond. Mr Sims rare Reeves was to sing "My Queen," and "Come into the garden, Maud."

Mr Creswick's benefit at the Gaiety was interesting as something more than an indication of the good feeling with which he is regarded by his brother and sister players. The complimentary dinner was given on Monday at the Freemasons' Tavern, Dr Doran in the chair.

BYRON EXHIBITION.—The Byron Memorial Committee has decided to postpone the exhibition of competition models and Byroniana, announced for June 4, at the Albert Hall, until Tuesday, June 5, in order that the necessary arrangements may be completed. The private view will be held on the 4th.

The success of the recent "Boucicault series" of plays at the Crystal Palace has encouraged Mr Charles Wyndham to follow it up by a second, which commenced on Tuesday. The series will comprise The Shaughraun, Long Strike, Flying Scud, Willow Copse, Octoroon, Arrah na Pogue, and Streets of London. The company is, as usual, highly efficient.

COVENT GARDEN.—A correspondent writes in Notes and Queries:—"Next Friday, June 1, should be looked to by the Duke of Bedford, if he would not lose his Covent Garden Charter.—'On Thursday a peck of green peas was sold in Covent Garden Market for 6d., agreeably to an ancient custom, the Charter being held by the circumstance of selling at that price on the 1st of June.'"—Morning Intelligencer, June 3, 1780.

VIOLINS.—At the sale of Mr Perera's collection of violins at Messrs Puttick & Simpson's on Tuesday last, lot 5, a violin by Peter Guarnerius, brought £60; lot 13, a violin by Stradivarius, 1722, £280 (Hart); lot 14, another by the same maker, dated 1710, £170 (Hill); lot 15, a viola by ditto, £200 (Hart); lot 16, a violoncello, also by Stradivarius, formerly in the possession of King George IV., £370; lot 17, another violin by Stradivarius, Amati pattern, £70; and lot 42, a small violoncello by Amati, £100.

The 16th annual meeting of parochial choirs in connection with the Canterbury Diocesan Choral Union was held on Tuesday in Canterbury Cathedral. There were 357 members of surplined choirs, and the unsurplined choirs numbered about 100 persons. The choirs assembled in the chapter-house and entered the cathedral by the Martyrdom door, when the processional hymn, written especially for the occasion by the late Mr T. G. Godfrey-Flaussett, was sung. The psalms, hymns, and anthem were given by the choirs with precision in an impressive harmony.

Ocean.

There was an old symphony, "Ocean,"
By no means an aid to devotion;
It opened in C,*
But ended in D,
That washy old symphony, "Ocean."

* Variorum :—

It opened in Sea,
But it ended in Dee,
Though it went down to E—
Which means fiddle-de-dee.

Yours truly, D. P.

COLOGNE.—Verdi's Messa da Requiem was performed with great success on the 22nd ult. An album, a conducting-stick, and a gold and silver crown were presented to the composer.

MILAN.—An opera entitled Isabella Spinola, lately produced at the Teatro Carcano, although the composer, Signor Abbà Cornaglia, was called on* some hundred thousand times, the theatre being almost empty on each occasion, was withdrawn after the fourth performance.—Signor Filippo Patierno, the tenor, has died aged 42. A widower two years, just before his decease he was re-married. He leaves a considerable fortune. Happy tenors!

* According to Dr Blidge.—D. P.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Fatti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE"

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

SIGNOR and the MDLLES BADIA have arrived in London for the Season. All communications for public or private Concerts, &c., to be addressed to 47, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park; or to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR ALFRED JAEHL will arrive in London on June 7. All letters to be addressed to the care of Messrs ERARD, 18, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

MR CHARLES HARPER, Principal and Solo Horn, having seceded from the Royal Italian Opera, begs to inform his friends and the public that he is now at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c., either in town or country. Address—3, Liddington Place, Harrington Square, London, N.W.

MR FREDERIC WOOD (Primo Tenore), of the Wilhelmj Concert Party, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs HODGE & ESSEX, 6 and 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MISS ELENA NORTON, Soprano Vocalist (composer of "The Rose and the Ring"), is open for ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c., &c. Address, care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or to Mr D'Oyley Carte, 20, Charing Cross.

MDLLE IDA CORANI having returned to Town requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Opera or Concert be addressed to her Agent, Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME ERNST (Soprano) requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR CHARLES ABERCROMBIE (Tenor), of St James's Hall and the Royal Aquarium Concerts, Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St James's, requests that all applications for Terms and ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio, Opera, or Concert, be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY (his Agent and Business Manager), care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, S.W.

MR WELBYE-WALLACE (of the Crystal Palace and Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester, &c., &c.), having Returned from Abroad, can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Opera, or Oratorio. All Communications to be addressed to his Agent, Mr R. D'OYLEY CARTE, 9A, Craig's Court, Charing Cross, S.W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MDME LOUISE GAGE (Contralto) is open to ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c. Address, Mdme LOUISE GAGE, No. 17, Holland Road, Kensington, W., or care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

MR GERARD COVENTRY is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR and MDME BODDA (late Miss LOUISA PYNE) beg to inform the Musical Profession and the public that Mr HARRY WALL is no longer their agent, and all future communications respecting fees for operas, &c., are to be made to Messrs WALTER JARVIS & TRISCOTT, Solicitors, 22, Chancery Lane, London.

MR FRANZ RUMMEL, Professor of the Pianoforte at the Conservatoire, Brussels, begs to announce that he has arrived in Town for the Season. Letters may be addressed to 43, Patishull Road, N.W.; or to the care of Messrs SCHOTT & Co., 159, Regent Street, W.

"O'ER THE BENDING RUSHES."

MISS CATHERINE PENNA will sing IGNACE GIBSONE'S new Song, "O'ER THE BENDING RUSHES," at the Norwich Musical Union Society's Concert, June 14.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR J. H. PEARSON will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" every evening next week, at Riviere's Concerts, Queen's Theatre.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," June 9, Town Hall, Shoreditch.

CHRIST CHURCH, BRONDESBURY, KILBURN.—ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER (Surplined Choir) WANTED. Services:—Sunday morning and evening; children's afternoon, extra, once per month, if required; Good Friday, Christmas Day, Ascension, Harvest Festival, and Dedication. Practice, Friday evening, 7 to 9. Salary, £40 per annum. If willing to give a second evening's practice, £10 extra.

WANTED, by a Gentleman of good education, a Situation as ASSISTANT in a London Music Warehouse. Good pianist; good references.—C. H., care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

RICHARD WAGNER.

SOLE EDITIONS OF RICHARD WAGNER'S VOCAL SCORES, IN 4TO.

"DER RING DES NIBELUNGEN."
"Das Rheingold" ... net 16s. | "Siegfried" ... net 24s.
"Die Walküre" ... 20s. | "Götterdämmerung" ... 28s.
 Original German Text, 1 vol., 12mo, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, net, 5s.
 English Translation, by ALFRED FORMAN, paper, net, 4s.; in limp cloth, net, 5s.
"DIE MEISTERSINGER VON NURNBERG." Vocal Score ... net 28s.
 Original German Text, 12mo, paper, net, 1s.

Catalogues containing Transcriptions, Arrangements, and Original Works of Richard Wagner, post free on application.

SCHOTT & CO., 159, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

CHARLES GOUNOD'S
"CINQ - MARS."

Opéra, en Quatre Actes.

POÈME

De PAUL POIRSON et LOUIS GALLET.
 Vocal Score in 8vo ... net 20s. | Piano Solo in 8vo ... net 12s.
 Lists of the usual detached Vocal and Instrumental Pieces, Transcriptions, Arrangements, &c., post-free on application.

SCHOTT & CO., 159, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

ITALIAN SONGS BY G. MURATORI.

"PERCHE SOGNAR MIA BELLA" ... (Parolè di F. Rizzelli) ... 4s.
"TUTTO E TORMENTO" ... (Metastasio) ... 4s.
"IL MESSAGIO DEI ROSPIRI" ... (V. Meini) ... 4s.
"TERZETTO," per Soprano, Contralto, e Tenori.
"OH DEI, CHE DOLCE IN CANTO" ... (Parolè di Metastasio) ... 4s.
 London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG BY F. SCHIRA.

"AFTER LONG YEARS." Compass D to F ... 3s.
Also by the same Composer.
"THE BIRD AND THE MAID." Compass C to A ... 3s.
"MOONBEAMS." Compass E to F ... 3s.
"NO REST." Compass D to G ... 3s.
"ONLY APART." Compass C to F ... 3s.
"SOGNAI," in D (with Italian and English words). Compass A to F ... 3s.
 Do. in E (with Italian words only). Compass B to G ... 4s.
"IL MIO BEPPIN." Compass D to E ... 3s.

Post free at Half-price.

LONDON: C. JEFFERYS, 67, BERNERS STREET, W.

English Glee and Madrigal Writers.

By W. A. BARRETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.S.L., &c.

PRICE 2s. 6d.

W. REEVES, BOOKSELLER, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Just Published.

PURE RAY OF LIGHT.

TRIO FOR TWO SOPRANOS AND TENOR.

THE POETRY BY MOORE.

THE MUSIC BY HENRY BAKER.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Third Edition.

A FIRST BOOK ON THE

THEORY OF MUSIC.

BY LOUISA GIBSON.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE, MARCHIONESS OF LORNE.

Adopted in the South London Musical Training College, and in various High Schools in London and the Provinces.

LONDON:

WEEKES & CO.; NOVELLO & CO.; WHITTAKER & CO.
 AND OF THE AUTHOR, SEATON TERRACE, PLYMOUTH.

Price, boards, 2s.; stiff paper, 2s.; postage, 2d.

"VOLE MON OISEAU."

PENSÉE FUGITIVE POUR PIANO.

Par IGNACE GIBSONE.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

LETTERS FROM BAYREUTH, Descriptive and Critical, of WAGNER'S "DER RING DES NIBELUNGEN," with an Appendix. By JOSEPH BENNETT, Special Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph. Price 2s. 6d.

THREE DUETS.

FOR SOPRANO AND CONTRALTO.

The Poetry by SAMUEL ROGERS.

THE MUSIC BY M. W. BALFE.

No. 1. "TWILIGHT'S SOFT DEWS" ... 3s.
 " 2. "THE BEAUTEOUS MAID" ... 3s.
 " 3. "OH! SHE WAS GOOD AS SHE WAS FAIR" ... 3s.
 London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

KENNEDY'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

MR KENNEDY is assisted by the following members of his family:—Miss Helen Kennedy, Soprano; Miss Marjory Kennedy, Contralto; Mr David Kennedy, Tenor; Mr Robert Kennedy, Tenor; Mr James Kennedy, Baritone.

"KENNEDY'S COLONIAL TRAVEL"

By DAVID KENNEDY, JUNIOR.

440 pp., crown 8vo. Price 5s., post-free.

No. 8, ST ANDREW'S TERRACE, NEWINGTON, EDINBURGH.

MR IGNACE GIBSONE begs to inform the Profession that the following SONGS, of his Composition, can be Sung in Public without any Claim being made against them for so doing.

"AS YESTERDAY I WAS SPINNING" Published by Hutchings & Romer.
"THE PHANTOM BARK" ... Metzler & Co.
"ACROSS THE SEA" ... Duncan Davison & Co.
"MY LADY SLEEPS" ...
"THEY PART NO MORE" ... Cunningham Boosey & Co.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists.

5, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.
 Price List free on application.

TRANSCRIPTIONS OF FAVOURITE SCOTCH AIRS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By EMILE BERGER.

"FLORA MACDONALD'S LAMENT" and "KENMURE'S ON AND AWA" ... 4s.
"HUNTINGTOWER" ... 4s.
"THOU BONNIE WOOD O' ORAIGIE LEA" ... 4s.
"THE FLOWERS OF THE FOREST" ... 3s.
"THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE" ... 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MOMENTS HEUREUX. Etude pour le Violon (sans Accompagnement) ou Piano seul. Composée, et dédiée à son Maître, Mons PROSPER SAINTON, par F. J. AMOR (de Salisbury, en Angleterre). Price 4s
 London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOOSEY & CO.'S

NEW EDITION OF

The Passion

(ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW).

THE PROSE TAKEN LITERALLY FROM THE GOSPEL, AND THE VERSE TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN

BY

JOHN OXENFORD.

THE MUSIC EDITED BY

J. PITTMAN.

PRICE 1s. 6d. CLOTH, GILT EDGES, 3s.

ALSO, PUBLISHED SEPARATELY, THE MUSIC (IN FULL SCORE) OF

THE CORALES,

ACCOMPANIED BY THE WHOLE OF THE TEXT, FORMING A COMPLETE HANDY BOOK FOR THE USE OF THE CONGREGATION.

PRICE 6d. IN PAPER. 1s. CLOTH GILT.

London: BOOSEY & Co., 293, Regent Street, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

TO CHURCH CHOIRS, CHORAL SOCIETIES, AND SCHOOLS

Re-building of Show Rooms.

Nos. 49 & 50, NEW BOND STREET.

MESSRS CHAPPELL & CO. beg to announce that they will shortly commence Re-building the whole of the above premises; and, owing to temporary diminution of space, now offer the following large Instruments at greatly reduced prices, for Cash or on hire on the Three Years System.

ALEXANDRE HARMONIUM. Eight complete sets of Vibrators, 4 Stops, 2 Knee Pedals to Swell, and 2 Heel Pedals for Full Organ. Original price, 50 Guineas. For cash, £25; or £2 10s. per quarter on the three years system.

LARGE CONCERT HARMONIUM. Twenty-four Stops, Prolongement, 4 Knee Pedals, 2 Knee Pedals, 16 half sets of Vibrators, percussion action. Original price, 150 Guineas. For cash, £45; or £4 10s. per quarter on the three years system.

NO. 1, CHANCEL ORGAN. Three Stops, 1½ Octaves of German Pedals, Pine Case, Diapered Pipes. Original price, 55 Guineas. For cash, 40 Guineas; or £4 per quarter on the three years system.

NO. 2, CHANCEL ORGAN. Four Stops, 2½ Octaves of Pedals. Diapered Pipes. Original price, 70 Guineas. For cash, 55 Guineas; or £5 10s. per quarter on the three years system.

CHURCH ORGAN. Eleven Stops, 2 rows of Keys, 2½ Octaves of Pedals, Bourdon on Pedal Organ, &c. For cash, 200 Guineas; or £20 per quarter on the three years system.

A LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND HARMONIUMS, FROM £3 AND UPWARDS.

Second-hand American Organs by the best Makers, from 14 Guineas.

ILLUSTRATED LISTS FREE BY POST.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

	Price.
s. d.
OVERTURE - - - - -	3 0
No. 1. CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day" - - -	3 0
2. SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away" -	3 0
2 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	3 0
3. DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill" - - -	2 0
4. TRIO, "He thought himself so clever" - - -	4 0
5. DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly" -	3 0
6. TRIO, "So I must leave thee" - - -	4 0
7. DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me" - - -	3 0
7 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
8. FINALE, 1st ACT, "I'm not the Baron" - - -	3 0
9. BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE
10. CHORUS, "Joy to night" - - -	3 0
11. SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country" - - -	3 0
12. LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met" -	3 0
12 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
13. DUET, "See him glaring" - - -	4 0
14. SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you" - - -	3 0
14 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in C	3 0
15. FINALE, 2nd ACT, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine" - - -	4 0
16. SONG, "To-day we'll happy be" - - -	3 0
16 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	3 0
17. SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing" -	4 0
17 bis. Ditto ditto Arranged in F	4 0
18. FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand" -	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE ...	5 0
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE ...	2 6
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. KIKO ...	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9 CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 23.

SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, HAYMARKET.

Extra Night.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), June 9, will be performed
DOMIZETTI's Opera, "LA FIGLIA DEL REGGIMENTO." Tonio, Signor Carrion; Sergeant Sulpizio, Signor Del Puente; La Marchesa, M^{me} Lablache; and Maria, M^{lle} Milo Rodani. To conclude with a new Ballet Divertissement, invented and arranged by M^{me} Katti Lanner, entitled "LES NYMPHES DE LA FORET."

Next Week there will be Five Performances.

On MONDAY next, June 11 (Extra Night), last time this Season, VERDI's Opera, "LA TRAVIATA." Violetta, M^{me} Christine Nilsson.

First time this Season of "Les Huguenots."

On TUESDAY next, June 12 (for the first time this Season), MEYERBEER's Opera, "LES HUGUENOTS." Raoul di Nangis, Herr Wachtel (his first appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre); Il Conte di Nevers, M. Faure; Il Conte di San Bris, Signor Rota; Marcello, Herr Rokitsansky (his first appearance this Season); Margherita di Valois, M^{lle} Alwina Valleria; Urbano, M^{me} Trebelli; and Valentina, M^{lle} Caroline Salla (her first appearance in that character).

Subscription Night (in lieu of Saturday, July 28.)—First Night of "Otello."

On THURSDAY next, June 14 (for the first time these 17 years), ROSSINI's Opera, "OTELLO." Desdemona, M^{me} Christine Nilsson; Iago, M. Faure; Elmiro, Signor Foli; and Otello, Signor Tamberik (his first appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre).

On FRIDAY next, June 15, MEYERBEER's Grand Romantic Opera, "ROBERT LE DIABLE."

On SATURDAY next, June 16, "RIGOLETTO."

The doors will open at Eight; the Opera will commence at Half-past Eight o'clock (except on the occasion of the performance of "Robert le Diable," on the 18th inst., when the Opera will commence at Eight o'clock precisely.)

Stalls, 2s.; Dress Circle, 1s.; Amphitheatre Stalls (first two rows), 10s. 6d., Other Rows, 7s. 6d.; Gallery Stalls, 5s.; Gallery, 2s. 6d.

Places may be obtained of Mr. Bailey, at the Box-Office of Her Majesty's Theatre, under the portico of the Opera-house, Haymarket, which is open daily from Ten till Five.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SIXTH TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.

FRIDAY, June 22	GRAND FULL REHEARSAL.
MONDAY, June 25	MESSIAH.
WEDNESDAY, June 27	SELECTION.
FRIDAY, June 29	ISRAEL IN EGYPT.

Principal Vocalists:
M^{me} ADELINA PATTI
and
M^{lle} ALBANI.
M^{me} LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON
and
M^{me} EDITH WYNNE.

M^{me} PATEY.

Mr VERNON RIGBY.
Mr EDWARD LLOYD.
Mr CUMMINGS.

Signor FOLI.
Herr HENSCHEL.
Mr SANTLEY.

Solo Organ.—Mr Best. Organist.—Mr Willing.
Conductor.—Sir MICHAEL COSTA.

Sets of Tickets for the Festival may be had at the Crystal Palace and at Exeter Hall.

Prices of Sets (including admission): Central Area, Three Guineas and Two and a Half Guineas; Galleries, Two and a Half Guineas and Two Guineas.

Tickets for the Rehearsal Day: Stalls (exclusive of admission), 7s. 6d. and 5s. Admission Tickets, Half-a-Crown.

Single Stall Tickets may now be had, 2s., One Guinea, and 15s.

MONDAY, JUNE 18.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S GRAND ANNUAL CON-
CERT will take place in the FLORAL HALL, on MONDAY Afternoon, June 18. Full particulars will be duly announced.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), June 9, will be performed
"L'ETOILE DU NORD." On this occasion the opera will commence at Eight instead of Half-past Eight o'clock as usual. M^{me} Adolina Patti.

Next Week there will be Six Performances.

On MONDAY next, June 11, "LA FAVORITA." M^{me} Scalchi.

On TUESDAY next, June 12, "AIDA." Mesdames Adolina Patti and Scalchi.

On WEDNESDAY next, June 13, "TANNHAUSER." M^{lle} Albani.

On THURSDAY next, June 14, "MARTHA." Enrichetta, M^{lle} Zaré Thalberg.

On FRIDAY next, June 15, "IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA." Rosina, M^{me} Adolina Patti.

On SATURDAY next, June 16, WAGNER's Opera, "IL VASCELLO FANTASMA." Senta, M^{lle} Albani.

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office under the portico of the theatre is open from Ten till Five.

Pit tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

MR J. LEMMENS will (by permission of Mr. N. J. Holmes) give the RECITAL upon the GREAT ORGAN, at "THE HALL," Primrose Hill Road, Regent's Park, on SATURDAY Morning, June 9, at Four o'clock. Carriages at Half-past Five. Programme: Prelude, in five parts (diapasons), Organ School (J. Lemmens); Sonate Pontificale, No. 1, (a) All. Moderato, (b) Adagio non troppo, (c) March Pontificale, (d) Fugue—Fanfare (J. Lemmens); Sacred Song, "For this our heart is faint," from the oratorio, The Resurrection (G. A. Macfarren)—M^{me} Lemmens-Sherrington; Fantasia and Fuga, G minor (J. S. Bach); Thema, with Variations (J. Lemmens); Prayer in E—vox humana, with violoncello accompaniment (J. Lemmens); Song, "But oh! what art can teach," from the Ode to St Cecilia, with organ accompaniment (Handel)—M^{me} Lemmens-Sherrington; Grande Fantasia, "The Storm" (J. Lemmens); Finale (J. Lemmens). Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, to be had of Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall; the usual Concert Agents; and of Mr LEMMENS, 53, Finchley Road.

MR WILBYE COOPER begs to announce the SECOND of the THREE CONCERTS, at LANGHAM HALL, WEDNESDAY Evening, June 13, at Eight o'clock, under the immediate patronage of the Right Hon. Lord and Lady John Manners, Sir R. W. Carden, Sir Albert and Lady Woods, the Hon. G. C. Talbot, Captain Hutton, Captain Heathorn, R.A., Captain J. O. A. Lewis, Edward Bullen, Esq., Dr Llewellyn Thomas; Mrs Blakeway, &c. Artists—Misses Marian Lynton, Janet Clayton, Gertrude Lawes, Siedle, Ellen Horne, Edith Wrenn, Van Senden, Palmer, Madelena Cronin, and M^{mes} Barri and Tonnelier; Messrs Urio, Arthur Hooper, Dudley Thomas, Thurlay Beale, Henry Pope, Stanley Smith, Gerard Henry, Michael Watson, Zerbini, Herr Oberthür, F. H. Cozens, Barri, Vaschetti, and Richard Blagrove. Tickets, 5s. and 3s.; at 19, Great Portland Street; and Lonsdale's, 26, Old Bond Street.

MR TRELAWNY COBHAM'S MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place on MONDAY, June 11, at 27, HARLEY STREET, Cavendish Square, commencing at Three o'clock, when the following Artists will appear: Mesdames Ida Corani, Agnes Larkoom, Eleanor Armstrong, Purdy and Alice Fairman; Signori Bettini, Trelawny Cobham, Fred. Penna, and Adelman, Mr Anton Hartvigson, M^{lle} Castellan, Signor Romano, Mr Henry Parker, and Mr Ganz. Tickets to be had of Mr TRELAWNY COBHAM, 23, Somerset Street, Portman Square.

SIGNOR GUSTAVE GARCIA'S FOURTH GRAND ANNUAL CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, TUESDAY Evening, June 19. To commence at Eight o'clock precisely. Carriages at 10.30. Mesdames Garcia, Friedlander, Bedeker, Lisa Walton (pupil of Signor G. Garcia), Friberg (from Sweden, her first appearance in England); Signor Foli, Mr Charles E. Tinney, Signor Federici, and Signor G. Garcia. Instrumentalists: Violin—M. Paul Viardot; Pianist—M. Joseph Wieniawski. "The Legend of Melusine" (by Hoffmann) will be executed by some of the above artists, and a choir of 300 voices (conductor—Signor G. Garcia). Conductors—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT and Herr W. GANZ. Messrs MARLOIS and W. THOMAS. Mr Theo. Jones will accompany the Solos in Melusine, and Mr A. Gittens will conduct the two Part-songs. A Grand Piano by Messrs Broadwood will be used on this occasion. Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Reserved Seats (numbered), 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area or Gallery, One Shilling. Tickets to be obtained of the principal Music-sellers in Bond Street; of Mr Austin, St James's Hall, Piccadilly; and Signor GARCIA, 54, Portadown Road, Maida Hill, W.

"LEGEND OF MELUSINA."

SIGNOR GUSTAVE GARCIA'S CHOIR (250 Voices), Mesdames GARCIA, LISA WALTON, Messrs FEDERICI and TINNEY will sing "THE LEGEND OF MELUSINA" (by HOFFMANN), first public performance in England, at St James's Hall, June 19.

MR SIMS REEVES' BENEFIT CONCERT, ROYAL ALBERT HALL, WEDNESDAY, JULY 4th, at Eight o'clock.

Vocalists.

Mdme CHRISTINE NILSSON, Mdme TREBELL, Miss ANNA WILLIAMS,
Mdme ANTOINETTE STIRLING, and Miss HELEN D'ALTON.
Mr SIMS REEVES, Mr EDWARD LLOYD, Sig. FOLL, and Mr SANTLEY.

Solo Violin—Herr WILHELMJ.

The London Vocal Union (under the direction of Mr Fred Walker).

Conductor—Mr SYDNEY NAYLOR.

Boxes: Grand Tier (ten seats in each), Four Guineas; Loggia (eight seats in each), Three Guineas; Second Tier (five seats in each), Two Guineas; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (numbered), 5s.; Balcony (unnumbered), 2s. 6d.; and 5,000 admissions, One Shilling. Tickets now ready at Royal Albert Hall; Austin's Office, St James's Hall; and usual Agents.

MR JOHN THOMAS (Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen) begs to announce that his GRAND HARP CONCERT will take place at ST JAMES'S HALL, on THURSDAY Morning, June 21, at Three o'clock. Harp Solos, Songs, with Harp accompaniment, Duets for two harps, and several Compositions for a BAND OF TWELVE HARPS. Vocalists: Mesdames Edith Wynne, Osgood, Enriquez, and Antoinette Sterling, Mdmes Henrietta Beale and Robertson; Messrs William Shakespeare, Frederick, and Lewis Thomas. Harp—Messrs John Thomas and T. H. Wright. Sofa Stalls, 21s.; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.; Balcony, 5s.; Admission, 2s. 6d.; to be had of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 54, New Bond Street; the principal Musicellers and Librarians; at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall; and of Mr JOHN THOMAS, 53, Welbeck Street, W.

MDLLE VICTORIA BUNSEN has the honour to announce that her ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT will take place at 137, HARLEY STREET, Cavendish Square, W. (by kind permission of Capt. and Mrs COCKER), on MONDAY, 18th June, to commence at Three o'clock. Vocalists—Mdme Rose-Perkins, Mrs Harley Hughes (amateur), Mdle Victoria Bunsen, Mdle Trentanove, Signora Louise Gage; Signor Bettini, Mr Drummond, Mr Treawny Cobham, Signor Vergara, and Signor Monari Rocca. Instrumentalists: Pianoforte—Mr Kuhe and Mdle Felicia Bunsen; Violin—Mdle Castellan; Harp—Herr Oberthür. Between the parts Miss Cowen will give a short Recitation. Conductors—Mr LINDSAY SLOPER, Le Marquis D'HAYET ZUCCARDI, Signor MAZZONI, Mr GANZ, and Mr COWEN. Tickets, One Guinea each; Family Tickets (to admit three), Two Guineas. To be obtained of Mdle VICTORIA BUNSEN, 4, Mortimer Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MR WILBYE COOPER begs to announce the LAST of the THREE CONCERTS, at LANGHAM HALL, SATURDAY Afternoon, 7th July, at Three o'clock, under the immediate patronage of the Right Hon. Lord and Lady John Manners, Sir R. W. Carden, Sir Albert and Lady Woods, the Hon. G. C. Talbot, Captain Hutton, Captain Heathorn, R.A., Captain J. O. A. Lewis, Edward Bullen, Esq., Dr Llewellyn Thomas; Mrs Blakeway, &c. Artists—Mesdames Marian Lynton, Janet Clayton, Gertrude Lawes, Siedle, Ellen Horne, Edith Wrenn, Van Senden, Palmer, Madelena Cronin, and Mimes Barri and Tonneller; Messrs Urlo, Arthur Hooper, Dudley Thomas, Thurley Beale, Henry Pope, Stanley Smith, Gerard Henry, Michael Watson, Zerbini, Herr Oberthür, F. H. Cozens, Barri, Vaschetti, and Richard Biagrove. Tickets, 5s. and 3s.; at 19, Great Portland Street; and Lonsdale's, 26, Old Bond Street.

SIGNOR GUSTAVE GARCIA'S FOURTH GRAND ANNUAL CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, TUESDAY Evening, June 19. To commence at Eight o'clock precisely. Carriages at 10.30. Mesdames Garcia, Friedlander, Redeker, Lisa Walton (pupil of Signor G. Garcia), Friberg (from Sweden, her first appearance in England); Signor Foll, Mr Charles B. Tinney, Signor Federici, and Signor G. Garcia. Instrumentalists: Violin—M. Paul Viardot; Pianist—M. Joseph Wieniawski. "The Legend of Melusine" (by Hoffmann) will be executed by some of the above artists, and a choir of 300 voices (conductor—Signor G. Garcia). Conductors—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT and Herr W. GANZ, Messrs MARLOIS and W. THOMAS. Mr Theo. Jones will accompany the Solos in Melusine, and Mr A. Gittens will conduct the two Part-songs. A Grand Piano by Messrs Broadwood will be used on this occasion. Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Reserved Seats (numbered), 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area or Gallery, One Shilling. Tickets to be obtained of the principal Music-sellers in Bond Street; of Mr Austin, St James's Hall, Piccadilly; and Signor GARCIA, 54, Portdown Road, Maida Hill, W.

"LEGEND OF MELUSINA"

SIGNOR GUSTAVE GARCIA'S CHOIR (250 Voices), Mesdames GARCIA, LISA WALTON, Messrs FEDERICI and TINNEY will sing "THE LEGEND OF MELUSINA" (by HOFFMANN), first public performance in England, at St James's Hall, June 19.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, JULY 3.

HERB LEHMEYER'S SECOND PIANOFORTE RECITAL will take place on TUESDAY, the 3rd July, on which occasion he will be assisted by his piano pupils, Miss Ada Jeffery, Miss Abud, Miss Van Deynaen, Miss Harvey. Vocalists—Mdme Louise Gage, Miss Funell; Mr Welbye Wallace, Mr Mayhew, Mr Craig, and distinguished amateurs. All particulars of Herr LEHMEYER, 7, Store Street.

"MY LADY SLEEPS."

MR WELBYE-WALLACE will sing IGNACE GIBSON'S Serenade, "MY LADY SLEEPS," at Herr Lehmeier's Concert, at St George's Hall, 3rd July.

MR LINDSAY SLOPER'S SECOND MATINEE, at WILLIS'S ROOMS, 19th June. The programme will include, among other works, a selection of the later pieces of Stephen Heller, and some recent compositions of Mr Lindsay Sloper.

GAIETY THEATRE.

SOLE LESSEE AND MANAGER - - - MR JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD.

PERFORMANCE FOR THE BENEFIT OF MR CHARLES LAMB KENNEY.

A Committee of the following Noblemen and Gentlemen has been formed to organise a Performance for the Benefit of Charles Lamb Kenney, at the Gaiety Theatre.

ON WEDNESDAY, THE 20TH JUNE, 1877.

Committee.

Lord LONDSEBOROUGH, Lord DUNRAVEN, Tom TAYLOR, Esq., Dr DORAN, F.S.A., J. W. DAVISON, Esq., W. D. DAVISON, Esq., EDMUND YATES, Esq., G. GODWIN, Esq., F.R.S., F.S.A., J. L. TOOLE, Esq., LIOSEL LAWSON, Esq., THOMAS CHAPPELL, Esq., JOHN BOOSEY, Esq., FALGRAVE SIMPSON, Esq., HENRY NEVILLE, Esq., O. L. GRUNKEISEN, Esq., SIMS REEVES, Esq., CHARLES SANTLEY, Esq., GEORGE BENTLEY, Esq., HENRY IRVING, Esq., WILLIAM MITCHELL, Esq., GEORGE COLEMAN, Esq., FRED. DAVISON, Esq., ARTHUR SKETCHLEY, Esq., J. R. FLANCHER, Esq., S. L. BLANCHARD, Esq., CHARLES DICKENS, Esq., W. H. WILLS, Esq., JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, Esq., HENRY FRISBY, Esq., F. B. CHATBERTON, Esq., R. CHURCHILL, Esq., G. A. SALA, Esq., H. S. EDWARDS, Esq., CHARLES KEADE, Esq., D.C.L., BENJAMIN WEBSTER, Esq., JAMES ALBURY, Esq., and F. O. BURNARD, Esq.

The performance will commence at 1.30 o'clock, and will consist of SKERIDAN'S Comedy of the

SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL,

In which Mr SANTLEY will sing the celebrated Song, "Here's to the Lam."

To be followed by DIBDIN'S Operetta of

THE WATERMAN,

In which Mr SIMS REEVES has kindly consented to appear as "Tom Tug."

Between the Comedy and the Operetta

Mr HENRY IRVING will recite - - - "The Dream of Eugene Aram."

The principal characters in the Comedy are as follows:—

Lady Teazle	- - - - -	Miss ELLEN TERRY (first time in London.)
Sir Peter Teazle	- - - - -	Mr C. KELLY (first time in London.)
Charles Surface	- - - - -	Mr HENRY NEVILLE
Joseph Surface	- - - - -	Mr JOHN CLAYTON
Mrs Candour	- - - - -	Mrs A. STIRLING
Lady Sneerwell	- - - - -	Mrs ALFRED MELLON
Sir Harry Bumper	- - - - -	Mr SANTLEY

The other characters in the Comedy will be sustained by Mr. LIN MAYNE, Mr OLARKE, Mr HENRY KEMBLE, Mr VOLLAIRE, Mr YOUNGE, Mr MARCUS, and Miss MYRA HOLMES; who have kindly, and by permission of their respective Managers, given their services on this occasion.

Places may be booked at the Box Office of the Gaiety Theatre. Stalls, 21s.; Dress Circle, 10s.; Upper Boxes, 5s.; Private Boxes, from 25s. to £25.

Tickets may also be procured of Mr Mitchell, Royal Library, 33, Old Bond Street; Messrs Boosey, Regent Street; Duncan Davidson & Co., Regent Street; Chappell & Co., Bond Street; and the Gaiety Theatre.

UNDER ROYAL AND DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE

MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN has the honour to announce that her GUITAR RECITAL will take place on THURSDAY, June 21, when she will play Giuliani's Duo Concertante, Op. 84 (flute and guitar); Paganini's Carnival, with Bottesini's Introduction; Selections from the celebrated writers for the guitar, Legnani, Leonard Schulz, and Bor; some of her latest compositions, Treue Liebe, Elfin's Revels, &c., &c. Further particulars at her residence, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

SIGNOR ARDITI has the honour to announce that his CONCERT will take place, at DUDLEY HOUSE, Park Lane (by kind permission of the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Dudley), on THURSDAY Afternoon, June 21. Further particulars will be duly announced.

"THE PAGE'S SONG."

MDLLE IDA CORANI will sing ARDITI'S admired composition, "THE PAGE'S SONG," at the Composer's Concert, Dudley House, 21st June.

"RITA."

MR WELBYE-WALLACE will sing Signor TITO MATTI'S last most successful Serenade, "RITA," at St George's Hall, 3rd July, in lieu of, as previously announced, 14th June.

"BALFE'S TRIO."

MR W. GANZ, HERR WILHELMJ, and SIGNOR PEZZE will play BALFE'S Trio (originally produced at the Saturday Popular Concerts, and played by Mdle Krebs, Herr Joachim, and Signor Platti), at Herr Ganz's Concert, Dudley House, Tuesday, 19th June.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT will play at the Alexandra Palace on Monday afternoon, the 18th inst., CHOPIN'S "GROSSE POLONAISE," and THALBERG'S "MOSE IN EGITTO."

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT will play, on Friday evening, 22nd June, for the Benefit of the "Argyll Home," at Onslow Hall, Onslow Gardens, THALBERG'S "MOSE IN EGITTO" (by special desire), and several other brilliant pianoforte compositions. Patronesses—Her Grace the Duchess of Argyll, Lady Victoria Campbell, Lady Jane Dundas, the Baroness Lionel de Rothschild, and many other distinguished ladies.—38, Oakley Square,

LEEDS CONCERT SEASON.

(From the "Yorkshire Post and Leeds Intelligencer.")

On referring to the preliminary notice in the Yorkshire Post of the 7th October, of the musical season then about to commence, and now concluded, we find the notice very brief, containing smaller promise than usual of the winter's musical events, and written in anything but a hopeful tone. There can be no hesitation, therefore, in admitting at once, in justice to the past series of musical entertainments which has helped to lighten the long and dreary winter, that much more was done than foreshadowed, and that the history of these concerts is better than the promise.

The first event was Mr Pyatt's ballad concert. Mr Sims Reeves appeared, singing some favourite ballads in grand style. Signor Foli and others assisted, vocalists and instrumentalists, but most of them were hardly listened to. The audience appeared to think that they could not have too much of Mr Reeves, though we have no doubt that eminent tenor had quite enough of them. To "let bygones be bygones" is a good motto, but if the disgraceful scene witnessed on that night has any effect of stopping the absurd "encore" system, it will have done good as well as harm.

The Leeds Philharmonic Society commenced with the Creation—a happy choice. Mrs Osgood sang the principal soprano airs, and was well supported. Mr James Broughton conducted as usual, and Mr Alfred Broughton played the organ. The chorus was very good, and the work, generally speaking, went well. A concert in aid of the funds of All Souls' (Hook Memorial) Church Sunday Schools was given by this society in February, at the Mechanics' Institute, when Mendelssohn's Christus and Hummel's "Alma Virgo" were performed, besides other interesting things. The object was good, and the concert very creditable. The Philharmonic concluded the season with an ambitious programme, including the Ode to St Cecilia's Day, Bach's motet, "I wrestle and pray," Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, and other works of importance. The concert was long, but creditable to the society.

Mr Ramsden, as usual, gave his series of four concerts, and, as usual, provided for satisfaction and success. St Paul was chosen for the first. Mr R. S. Burton conducted a band selected from Mr Charles Hallé's Manchester force, and the chorus was that known as the Yorkshire Festival Chorus. The principals were Mesdames Edith Wynne and Sterling, Mr Lloyd, and Mr Thomas. Mr George Hirst took the organ. The Victoria Hall was filled by a pleased audience. The minority of cultivated musicians who take more pleasure in the detection of a fault than in listening to broad general effects, had employment now and again for adverse criticism; but, rather than be reduced to the alternative of a perfect performance or none, we prefer one in which the standard of excellence is maintained. Mr Ramsden's second concert was very German in character. The vocalist was Mlle Redeker, who was rather coldly received in some Lieder—not from any fault on her part, but because the music was unfamiliar to the bulk of her audience. Mr Charles Hallé conducted his full band, which has seldom been heard to greater advantage. Beethoven's superb symphony in C minor was the great feature of the programme. Mr Hallé played Mendelssohn's pianoforte concerto, No. 2, in D minor. The other numbers were selected with artistic taste, and the educational value of the concert was much greater than usual. Mr Burton again conducted at the third concert, when The Messiah was given. Mr George Hirst played the organ. The solo singers were Mme Campobello, Mlle Enriquez, Mr Abercrombie, and Signor Campobello. The chorus, as usual, was good. Mr Ramsden concluded the series with Elijah, thus giving three oratorios and one classical selection. He took the part of the Prophet, and achieved real success. Mr Charles Hallé conducted, and Mr Burton played the organ. The other principals were Mme Wynne, Mlle Enriquez, Mr H. Guy, and Miss Tomlinson. The performance, passing over a defect here and there, was of remarkable excellence. Again has Mr Ramsden done his best for music in Leeds.

An excellent concert (the first of two) was provided during October by Mr Morgan. There appeared at the Albert Hall, Leeds Mechanics' Institute, among others, Mesdames Patey and Sherrington. These ladies sang together the "Quis est homo," from Stabat Mater. The audience was enthusiastic, and would have had nearly every piece repeated. Mr Morgan gave his second concert in November, and in the large Victoria Hall. Although Albani sang, the hall was not crowded, and Zaré Thalberg was unable to be present, but the other attractions were numerous.

A memorable feature of the season's music has been the prominence given to the pianoforte. In November last year Mme Arabella Goddard gave a recital at the Mechanics' Institute. The hall was very full, and for two hours did the audience listen enraptured to the style (perfect in its way) of the lady who has so long occupied a foremost rank in the art. Twice this year has the same hall been again crowded to hear the renowned Rubinstein, and on the second occasion people from far and near were turned away from the doors for want of room. A greater contrast between the placid, even style of Arabella Goddard and the emotional power, grandeur, and eccentricity of Rubinstein could not be imagined. Those who heard both may like to compare notes some day, and, as the pianoforte as a domestic instrument is carrying everything before it, the rising generation do well to hear of how much power and expression the instrument is capable.

Mr. Broughton's classical chamber concerts have been continued at the Queen's Hotel. The services of Herren Straus, Bernhardt, Vieuxtemps, and other artists were secured, and the arrangement of the programmes was, as usual, beyond praise. We might devote more space to an annual analysis of these concerts if pains were taken by the promoters to attract the general public. Whether the object be to limit their enjoyment to a select few, we know not; but if so, that is accomplished, the number of the audience being small. Mr Broughton conducted, and his brother, Mr Alfred Broughton, maintained his reputation as an exponent of classical pianoforte music. It is to be hoped, this series may ere long be made accessible to a larger circle. No concerts in Leeds possess more genuine attraction. Chamber music, like rare old wine, is not produced every day.

Herr Wilhelmj has made two appearances. He is a host in himself, and has a well-deserved cosmopolitan reputation; but he did not rely upon his own efforts alone, being ably assisted by other artists. Wagner's music obtained due recognition at his hands.

Dr Spark has given valuable recitals on the great organ at the Town Hall. His selections have been marked by great care, judgment, and taste, and sometimes we wonder why so few attend them. Perhaps the organ alone has not attractions for the many; but students and professors who like to hear so grand an instrument should make up a goodly number. The organ, closed for some time, will continue closed till after the Festival, the orchestra undergoing alterations for that event.

On St Patrick's Day the Rev. M. A. Hunt determined to have a concert in which artists of the highest rank would appear. Mlle Tietjens gave her services, and was assisted by a number of the best artists of Mr Mapleson's company. The result was a great success. The prima donna was most gracious, and the enthusiasm of the audience knew no bounds, a torchlight procession being got up in her honour. This, we should say, was the best concert ever given at the town hall on a Saturday night, if we except the memorable concluding cheap night of the last Festival. The Leeds Private Vocal Society suddenly re-appeared at the last period of the season, and gave a fair concert, with diminished numbers. The Leeds Madrigal and Motet Society deserve credit for producing a work like Jephthah. Dr Spark conducted, Mr Bowling played the organ; and, with few exceptions, the oratorio was creditably done, the chorus showing strength and quality. Mr Wilkinson has given pianoforte recitals at the Philosophic Hall, always to large audiences.

In October the Imperial Opera Company visited the New Theatre, and performed several well-known operas. The principals were tolerably strong, but the chorus was weak. The same company paid us a second visit early this year.

It must be admitted that an autumn programme of poor interest has developed into a respectable spring of work accomplished. We have written of what has been done. To write of what might have been done in this great centre of industry is a task too heavy to undertake. We have nothing to say against those who provide musical entertainment for the public. It is their business to find something to which the public will listen, and it is the merest cant to claim from them anything more. In love of their art we know that they frequently do more; but if they thought exclusively of art, the bankruptcy court would be the result. The fault lies in another quarter. Musical education with the young is neglected, and music with adults is made the merest trifle of the hour. A "little music" sometimes serves for recreation, though it often amounts to boredom, and in many a drawing-room a game of "all fours" would be more amusing. With the wealthy public the ideal concert is a canary show. A great name is announced, with lesser lights. While the crowd gets seated, two lesser lights sing an Italian duet. Meanwhile the prima donna is arranging her toilet in the artist's room, ready to make her bow at the proper time, and take her part in the human barrel organ of the manager. She lets off rockets of florid passages, and the audience yell at her and split kid gloves. She returns, and, instead of the passionate Italian, she appears as the sweet Scotch girl who kisses in the rye-field, and tells. Then the buffo singer goes through the Italian equivalent to an English fit of apoplexy, and, finally, the audience troop out to a quartet. Instrumental music, as a rule, bores, and part singing of old English music, would be certain failure. Most people like music when they understand it, as most people in a lesser degree like poetry; but Horace would be a dull book to one whose education was limited to the Eton Latin Grammar, and Greek plays would not excite any violent emotions in the one who had only mastered the Greek alphabet. Good music is capable of affording intense enjoyment, if only understood. Education must supply that want. Music of some kind has in all ages been recognised as a need of man, and a tremendous motive power. He longs for and clings to it as he hugs a Faith and loves sunshine and the open air. He cannot throw off the mystic power; but he may learn to love and know that power as one which triumphs over Death and Time.

*As from the pow'r of sacred lays the spheres began to move,
And sang the great Creator's praise to all the bless'd above,
So when the last and dreadful hour this crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high; the dead shall live, the living die,
And music shall untune the sky.*

"RE" RUBINSTEIN.

(From "Mayfair.")

Our æsthetical dictionary wants revising. What is a drama, for example, and what is dramatic? The few people who know Dryden will be ready with the answer: "A drama is a poem in which the action is not related but represented, and in which, therefore, such rules are to be observed as make the representations probable." The definition is true, if somewhat narrow. But admitting that, now-a-days, the adjective is applied to a good many things not actually "represented," we yet ask with some surprise, What in earth or heaven induced Herr Rubinstein to label his fourth symphony, "The Dramatic"? Is it that he thought of a particular play when he conceived the music? He might have said so, and pleaded excellent precedents in his favour. Berlioz has written a Romeo and Juliet symphony, and Liszt's "Poèmes Symphoniques," one and all, suggest dramatic ideas or characters. But Rubinstein has given us no clue to his poetic intuitions, and we must assume that the epithet refers less to matter than to manner or workmanship. In that case the choice could not have been more unfortunate. Dramatic treatment suggests conciseness, grasp, concentration of form and idea; Rubinstein's work is characterised by diametrically opposite qualities. Diffuseness, as we pointed out some time ago, is, with him, constitutional, and of the value of his own work he evidently judges by its length, unaware, apparently, of the fact that his audience may, and most probably do, apply converse measurement. To speak plainly, the first and last movements of Rubinstein's new symphony come under the category of "sound and fury," and the slender, melodious materials are quite out of proportion with the pompous and long-winded treatment they have to undergo. Tediousness is the inevitable result, in spite of the fine impulse of some of the themes. The second and third movements—scherzo and adagio—are infinitely superior, especially the former, which is graceful and well conceived. Reduction to half its present size might, perhaps, give vitality to the work.*

The reader is probably aware that our remarks are occasioned by Rubinstein's farewell concert at the Crystal Palace, last week. The success of his pianoforte recitals during the season has been simply phenomenal. St James's Hall was crowded to its utmost limits on each occasion. The sum of £8,000 is intimated as the spolia opima of the campaign. Under such circumstances, "farewell" is synonymous with "Auf Wiedersehn," and our welcome to Rubinstein, the pianist, on his return next year, will be most cordial. As to the composer, we must reserve our final judgment. Rubinstein is still in the prime of life, and an artist of his intellectual power and untiring energy may unexpectedly develop new gifts and capabilities. But the present in that respect does not augur well for the future. We observe in him full maturity of technical skill and exuberance of fancy, together with a total absence of artistic self-restraint, and with little indication of that original type of conception which distinguishes creative genius from clever reproductions. Rubinstein's work always suggests some model, sometimes two or three models, simultaneously. Take, for instance, the duet from his sacred opera, Die Makkabäer, performed at the concert referred to. Gounod, himself an eclectic, might have written the tender passages, Meyerbeer the dramatic ones, while the recitative is cast in the mould of Wagner. The result was decidedly pleasing, owing partly to the excellent rendering of the music by Mme Lemmens-Sherrington and Herr Henschel, who bravely contended with the audible effects of our climate on his fine voice. But there was no approach to that deep impression invariably produced by genuine dramatic pathos. The lighter accompaniments of the drama are evidently more congenial to Herr Rubinstein's cast of mind. The ballet music from Feramosz, an early opera, which concluded the present concert, is graceful and melodious in the extreme. The audience seemed electrified (!) by the lively rhythms, and the imagination easily supplied coryphæes and stage pageantry.

In addition to conducting his own compositions, Rubinstein played Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G, No. 4, and three minor pieces by Schubert himself and Chopin. That he can play Beethoven, or any other master, dead or living, he has frequently shown; but on this occasion he was evidently fatigued, and at one point his memory seemed to fail him. But the audience very justly overlooked this slight defect, and took leave of its favourite with all the marks of approbation which his high qualities as an executive artist so fully deserve.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

We subjoin the programme of the Students' evening concert, in the new concert-room on Saturday evening, June 9:—

Andante and Allegretto, from Quartet in D, two violins, viola, and violoncello (composed for the King of Prussia)—Mr Oldaker, Miss Ada Brand, Mr Hill, and Mr Elliott (Mozart); Nocturne, in F minor, Op. 55, pianoforte—Miss Andrews (Chopin); Song, "What shall I send to thee?"—Miss E. Thomas (C. K. Salaman); Romance, in G minor, and Capriccio, in F (MS.), pianoforte—Mr Tobias Matthey (Tobias Matthey, student—pupil of Mr Walter Macfarren); Aria, "Ave, Maria"—Miss Reimar, clarinet obbligato, Miss Frances Thomas (Cherubini); Nocturne, in F sharp major, Op. 15, and Etude, in F minor, No. 2, Book 3, Op. 25 (Chopin), Lied ohne Worte, in C, No. 4, Book 6—pianoforte, Miss Goldsbro', pupil of Mr F. B. Jewson (Mendelssohn); Part-song (MS.), "If thou art sleeping, maiden"—Alice Borten, student; Variations, on a Theme by Schumann, Op. 23, for two performers on the pianoforte—Miss Margaret Bucknall and Miss Alice Heathcote (Brahms); Song (MS.), "If little flowers knew it—Mr Sidney Tower—harp and clarinet accompaniment, Miss Edith Brand and Miss Frances Thomas (Oliveria Prescott, student); Fantasia in C minor, organ—Mr H. R. Rose (Berens); Cantata, for female voices, with pianoforte accompaniment, The Fishermans, the words by Frederick E. Weatherly (by desire, second time of performance)—Misses Kate Brand, Mary Davies, Reimar, Ada Patterson, and Orridge—pianoforte, Mr F. W. W. Bampfylde (Henry Smart); Barcarolle, in G, and Mazurka, in D minor, violin—Miss Julia de Nolte, Professors' scholar (Spohr); Hymn (MS.), "When shades of night around us close," organ, pianoforte, violin, and trumpet accompaniment—Mr Ford (Sir John Goss, scholar), Mr Eaton Fanning, Mr Oldaker, and Mr Solomon (Eaton Fanning, student); Air, "O del mio dolce ardor"—Mr Welch (Stradella); Quintetto, "Di scrivermi ogni giorno" (Costi fan tutte)—Miss Saidie Singleton, Miss Clara Samuelli, Mr James Sauvage, Mr Theiler, and Mr Ley (Mozart). The accompanists were—at the organ, Mr H. R. Rose; and at the pianoforte, Miss Alice Heathcote, Miss Kate Steel, and Mr Hooper.

The next Students' orchestral concert is announced to be given in St James's Hall on Wednesday evening, June 20th,

* Pray, then, let nobody set about the task of reducing it.—T. QUENK.

ADELINA (LEONORA-VERDI) PATTI

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

It is remarkable, though by no means curious, that the part which, years ago, Mdme Patti played once and set aside, now belongs to the most effective in her repertory. The fact, remembering how unapproachable she is in light-comedy characters, impressively shows the wide scope of her genius and the versatility of powers which meet with ease whatever demand may be made upon them. The Leonora (Il Trovatore) of Friday night was, beyond question, an embodiment of superlative excellence. That Mdme Patti sang the music perfectly "goes without saying;" for perfect singing seems in her case to be, like the lark's carol, a natural utterance. But her acting, from the first intimation of Leonora's love for Manrico—a love which Inez calls dangerous, "perigliosa fiamma"—till it involves all in ruin, was such as only a great artist could achieve. The audience, one and all, saw this clearly enough, and their expressions of admiration amounted to real enthusiasm.

SALZBURG MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The subscription for all three concerts to be given during the Festival has been fixed as follows: One Fantueil, 20 florins; one "Circle-Seat," 15 florins; and a Numbered Seat, 10 florins. The prices at the pay-place will be higher. Seats at the above subscription prices may be secured on the transmission of a post-office order, with 15 kreutzers for postage, from the Treasurer of the International Mozart Foundation; Herr Carl Spängler, banker; and Herr Heinrich Dieter, bookseller, Salzburg; as well as from Herr C. Haslinger, Music Publisher to the Emperor, Am Graben, Vienna. In reply to every demand for places a numbered ticket will be forwarded, and with it a voucher. The two together will entitle the holder to the reduction of a third (during a fortnight) of the fare to and from Salzburg on the Empress Elizabeth Western Railway, the Crown Prince Rudolph Railway, the Francis Joseph Railway, the Bohemian Western Railway, the State Railway, and the Southern Railway (for the journey to Vienna and Kufstein). Moreover, the production of the voucher will entitle the holder to have dinners in the hotels of the town at prices varying from 1 florin 20 kreutzers, and rooms at prices ranging from 80 kreutzers upwards. Places can be secured in advance only till July 1st at the latest.—(Communicated.)

ORGAN OPENING AT ST ANDREW'S CHURCH.

(From the "Grimby Herald," June 2nd, 1877.)

The new organ built by Messrs Foster & Andrews, of Hull, for St Andrew's Church in this town, was opened on Thursday, when special services were held morning and evening, Dr Spark, of the Leeds Town Hall, presiding at the organ. The cost of the organ will be about £500, the half of which was subscribed some time ago. The following is the specification of the organ submitted to the Rev. W. Maples:—

GREAT ORGAN (CC to G).—Open diapason, metal, 8 feet, 56 pipes; dulciana, metal, 8 feet, 56; stopped diapason and hohlfloete, wood, 8 feet, 56; principal, metal, 4 feet, 56; *harmonic flute, metal, 4 feet, 56; fifteenth, metal, 2 feet, 56; *mixture, III ranks, metal, 2 feet, 168.

SWELL ORGAN (CC to G).—*Lieblich bordun, wood, 16 feet, 56 pipes; viol d'amour, wood and metal, 8 feet, 56; open diapason, wood and metal, 8 feet, 56; voix célestes, metal, 8 feet, 44; principal, metal, 4 feet, 56; *flageolet, wood, 2 feet, 56; *cornopean, metal, 8 feet, 56; oboe, metal, 8 feet, 44.

PEDAL ORGAN (CCC to F).—Open diapason, wood, 16 feet, 30 pipes; bourdon, wood, 16 feet, 30.

COUPLERS.—Swell to great; swell to pedals; *swell octave; great to pedals.

Three composition pedals. Radiating pedal board.

The services on Thursday were numerously attended, that in the evening especially, both being full choral. The choir, which numbered forty-two, was under the direction of Mr Mells.

* The pipes marked with an asterisk are not yet added to the organ.

Jackson's service was used. The opening voluntary was extemporaneous. After the Psalms for the day Dr Spark played an improvisation on the hymn-tune, "Sun of my soul," in the course of which he brought out with splendid effect the full powers of the organ. At the conclusion of the prayers Dr Spark gave an air in F sharp minor, varied, followed by Mendelssohn's sonata in C minor. After the benediction he played "Oh, that I had wings like a dove" (Mendelssohn). The Grimby Herald speaks in the same eulogistic terms of evensong and the organ performances of Dr Spark.

WELSH NATIONAL CONCERT.

Another successful endeavour to raise funds to reward the miners of Tynnewydd was made on the 7th inst., in the form of a Welsh National Concert at the Crystal Palace. Thousands of people, including many Welshmen, thronged the concert-hall, Mr H. Richard, M.P., occupying the honorary position of President. The solo singers were Mdme Edith Wynne, Misses Mary Davies, Marian Williams, Lizzie Evans, Martha Harries, M. J. Williams, and Edith Wren, Messrs Sauvage, J. L. Williams, and Gwilym Thomas (one of the gallant rescuers). Among the instrumentalists Mr Brinley Richards gave his valuable aid, and Mr John Thomas his. The chorus, composed of the Welsh Choral Union and the Crystal Palace Choir, filled the large orchestra. In the first part, consisting of English selections, Mdme Edith Wynne introduced a new song, with chorus, called "The Men of Wales," composed by Mr Brinley Richards expressly for the occasion, to words by Mr F. Weatherly. The burden is the all-prevailing topic of the rescue at Cymmer Pit. The music is in the familiar style of Mr Richards, and in the chorus, especially, was particularly telling and effective. Combined with the stirring nature of the theme, the new song roused the audience to enthusiasm, being rapturously encored. Equally demonstrative was the reception given to Mr Gwilym Thomas, who, with Miss Mary Davies, sang "How beautiful is night." Mr Thomas, a working collier, with a fine bass voice, evidently possesses the musical genius of his countrymen. Between the first and second parts of the concert Mr Richard, M.P., delivered a brief address, as he said, on the part of Welshmen in London, expressive of their admiration for the men who acted so nobly their part at Cymmer Colliery. Quoting in Welsh a verse of the hymn sung by the encavered miners, he said that to him as a man of peace the deeds of those men were really more chivalrous and brave than those on the battle-field. The hon. member, amid great applause, gave the thanks of Welshmen to Englishmen for their sympathy in this matter—redoubled when the speaker added that the organisation and success of that concert were due to a man of whose name, fame, and high character all Welshmen were proud—Mr Brinley Richards. Mr Richards acknowledged the compliment, and thanked the ladies and gentlemen who assisted him, especially Mdme Edith Wynne. At the commencement of the second part the soloists and choir joined in the Miner's Hymn, "In the deep and mighty waters," Mr Davies, "Mynonydd," taking the lâlon, wielded in other parts of the concert by Mr Manns, the celebrated Crystal Palace conductor. All the pieces in this division of the programme were Welsh, and several were given in the original tongue. The concert was eminently successful, and is likely to add a considerable sum to the Miners' Fund.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of Organ Recitals by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 14th:—

Triumphal March, "Vom fels zum meer"	F. Liszt.
Andante, from the Symphony in C minor	Beethoven.
Organ Concerto, No. 2, B flat major	Handel.
Prelude and Fugue, with Chorale, E minor	Mendelssohn.
Andante con moto, B flat major	H. Smart.
Trio, "Tantum ergo"	Rossini.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 16th:—

Organ Concerto, D minor	Handel.
Romanza, "When the orb of day reposing"	Webcr.
Fantasia Pastorale	W. T. Best.
Andante con Variazioni (Septuor)	Beethoven.
Passacaille, B minor	F. Couperin.
(a) Allegretto, D flat major	R. Schumann.
(b) Allegro con Brio, F minor

(From the Sketches for a Pedal Pianoforte, Op. 58.)

THE STOLEN SYMPHONY:

A REMINISCENCE OF AUGUST CONRADI.

BY FERDINAND GUMBERT.*

It was in the beginning of August, 1846. We—Conradi and I—were sitting over our coffee and cigar in my room. Having just returned from a two months' stay in Vienna, I was expected to relate my adventures there. Conradi had formed a friendly connection with me, which, leaving all question of sentiment out of consideration, was eminently advantageous to us both. Conradi was decidedly more talented as an instrumentalist, and I as a vocalist, so that we supplemented each other to our mutual benefit. Our friendly intercourse speedily became such a necessity that even the great distance between our respective lodgings (Conradi lived a long way outside the Oranienburg Gates, his father being a Sergeant of Police in that district) was no obstacle to frequent visits. As a matter of course, we communicated to each other, openly and unreservedly, what we thought and what we were doing. In this manner I became acquainted with everything that Conradi had written for several years, especially his more important works, such as symphonies, overtures, stringed quartets, &c. I was especially captivated by his last Symphony in A minor, with the motto from Goethe: "Wer nie sein Brod mit Thränen ass," which we carefully studied together, going into the smallest details of its construction as well as of its instrumentation. Very few persons besides myself knew anything of these creations. Like all musicians at the outset, Conradi lived quietly and unknown. His income was derived from his place as organist to the Nazareth Church and from a few pianoforte lessons, which he gave with decided repugnance, as, on account of his nervous impatience, he was little fitted to be a teacher. So much as to Conradi's character. I will now proceed with my narrative. Of course, I had a great deal to tell about Vienna. Anyone who has been lucky enough to please the Viennese and has presented himself personally, will never forget his reception among them. I preserve with a thankful heart my memories of those days.

"About you, too," I suddenly observed, parenthetically—"I heard a good deal on one occasion."—"About me?" said Conradi interrogatively, with an expression of surprise. "Who in Vienna knows me?"—"Oh! there is someone who knows you, and very well, too. One evening at the Garden Concert of Johann Strauss" (naturally the celebrated father of the no less celebrated son), "a young man came up, greeted me—naming me by my name—as being from the same part of Germany as he was, and introduced himself as a musician called L.† He knew I was on friendly terms with you, and, with much laudation of your talent, inquired how you were getting on. You never told me anything about the individual."—"Good gracious, no! Why should I bore you about him. He is a man devoid of talent, who forced himself upon me, pretended to admire my compositions, and kept my scores for weeks, in order, so he said, to study them thoroughly. At last, however, there were some special indications which excited my suspicions; I firmly believe he circulated my productions among his acquaintances as his own, so I withdrew from the connection. But tell me: what is he doing in Vienna?"—"Not much good! Prepare to be astonished; he has set up as a rigorous critic, and furiously attacks everything near and dear to the Viennese. He has, of course, hereby created a host of bitter enemies. At their head stands Dr August Schmidt, the respected editor of the Wiener Musikzeitung, and one of the founders of the Männergesang-Verein. It is the object of every one to render L. harmless. As he talks very arrogantly of important compositions of his, he is pressed on all sides to have them publicly performed."—"Ah! then the Viennese may wait long enough. L. has neither musical knowledge nor the stuff for a composer in him. He never wrote anything, and, therefore, never can produce anything."

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

† As I do not know whether L. is still alive, I refrain from giving his name. Perhaps he acted more from youthful thoughtlessness, and pressure of circumstances, though the latter, it is true, was brought about by himself, than from an absolutely bad disposition, and for this reason I do not like, after the lapse of twenty-seven years, to put him again in the pillory by mentioning his name. He never afterwards attracted public attention, so his name would possess no interest for the reader. Of course the name was cited at full length in the letters and notices I have quoted.

A short time subsequently to this conversation I was studying one afternoon, at a confectioner's, Bäuerle's Wiener Theaterzeitung.—"What is this? Do I read right? A symphony in A minor by Conrad L., performed in the Theater an der Wien!" As the notice also stated, the composer was unable to conduct his own work at rehearsal, and the Capellmeister, Herr Suppé, had been obliged to undertake the task. The Symphony itself proved very successful. My head seemed to swim round. I read the article carefully through once more, rubbed my eyes, and then read it again, to see if I had not made a mistake. But I no longer perceived the letters; L.'s figure stood before me; I thought of what had happened in Vienna, then of what Conradi had told me a few days previously, and—as Mozart's Donna Anna, after the B flat major quartet, exclaims, when Don Juan is about to leave: "That is my Father's murderer!" the voice of unmistakable conviction in my breast cried out: "That was Conradi's A minor Symphony!"—I jumped up in feverish excitement, and, begging the master of the establishment to let me have the paper, rushed into the street. My first thought, of course, was: "I am off to Conradi." But I soon reflected that I should have the trouble of walking the long distance for nothing, since at that hour there was not much chance of Conradi's being at home. So I wrote a letter, telling him to come to my lodgings without fail, at noon next day, as I had something of importance to communicate.

After I had slowly read him the article in the paper, Conradi sat, staring at me in speechless astonishment. He even let his cigar go out, which was something extraordinary in such an inveterate smoker. I at length roused him from his state of stupor, and exclaimed: "Conradi, do you know what I most decidedly believe?" "It is my Symphony," stammered Conradi, in a faint voice, "which the fellow has had performed in Vienna." With these words, his eyes filled with tears, and he began indulging in lamentations. "Just my luck," he observed. "Here, in Berlin, not a soul notices my Symphony. In Vienna it is a success, but a stranger gets the credit of that success, while I play the part of looker-on. Is not that terrible?" "Come, my dear boy, do not be disheartened. You see I laugh at the matter, for I believe justice will be done you. My stay in Vienna will turn out to your advantage. Dry up your tears. In my opinion, things do not look so bad for you after all." "What do you mean by that?" "Why, L.'s enemies will be delighted to have an opportunity of unmasking him and proving him a symphony-thief. But we must, above all things, obtain the certainty that it really was your Symphony which they performed in Vienna. To this end, write down at once, upon this sheet of music-paper, the beginnings of the four movements. In a few days we shall have an answer." Conradi did as I told him, and an hour afterwards I was off to the post with a letter for Dr August Schmidt, in Vienna. Need I state the contents of the letter? It will be evident from the reply which I give verbatim, because it explains what had occurred in Vienna. Dr Schmidt wrote:—

"My dear friend, I beg to inform you that, in order to lose no time, I gave the four commencements of the Symphony to Herr Fuchs,* who is better acquainted with Suppé than I am, and he showed them to Suppé. Yesterday evening, I received a note from Fuchs. It contained these words:—

"Suppé declares the initial motives to be those of L.'s Symphony."

"I have done nothing for the moment, nor shall I, till I hear from you. When, however, I hold in my hand undeniable proofs, from which there is no escape, I will deal the blow, but that blow must be annihilating, for such a swindle has never been known. I shall be exceedingly obliged if you will, without delay, institute enquiries as to whether L. really enjoys a pension from the Prussian Government, for, by heaven, I doubt even this. I should actually have my doubts as to his humanity, and look upon him as some lying imp of hell, were he not such a confounded fool! Concerning Spohr's Testimonial, which he hawks about everywhere to prove who he is, and which has hitherto served him as an amulet against the grave doubts of all disinterested persons, I have written directly to Spohr, asking him about it. I await from you, dear friend, the irrefutable proofs, and, if possible, the score of the Symphony, together with a statement in writing from the composer. And now to work!—Yours,

"Vienna, 29, 8, 1846."

"AUGUST SCHMIDT."

(To be continued.)

* Ferdinand Fuchs, known for songs and Gutenberg—long dead.

MILA RODANI'S VIVANDIÈRE.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

The representative of Maria was Mdle Mila Rodani, who, it will be in recollection, played the part at Drury Lane last season. We have not, therefore, to speak of a new assumption, but it is our duty to say that the young German artist showed a manifest improvement. As a vocalist her chief strength lies more in music of a bright and sparkling style than in strains of deep sentiment, and, consequently, she made her greatest success with the Song of the Regiment, and in the animated scene with the Countess and Sulpizio. Mdle Rodani was less happy in "Convien partir," chiefly because of a disposition to exaggerate the portamento, which, however much used, is no substitute for real feeling. From a dramatic point of view, Mdle Rodani's assumption could be regarded as nothing short of successful. She looked the character to perfection, which is something, and she played it discreetly, which is more. The danger always exists, in connection with this particular rôle, of over-refining to escape vulgarity, and of making it unduly vulgar to escape refinement. Mdle Rodani, in our opinion, struck the just mean, representing Maria in the earlier scenes as not too much a lady, and in the later as not too much a camp-follower. She was happy, above all, where the Vivandière re-asserts herself in the dress of grande dame. Here not a few touches of genuine comedy were observable, as distinct from a mere conventional rendering of the "business," and the applause of the house was well bestowed.

THE LORD MAYOR AND MR TOOLE.

At a banquet given in the Mansion House (Nov., 1875) by the then Lord Mayor to the leading officials of the Royal Theatrical and other Societies, his Lordship passed from the real to the mimic stage, and, remarking that the public were often delighted in seeing kings killed, he referred to his own youthful experiences. Subsequently:—

Mr J. L. Toole, preserving the key-note of speech struck by his lordship, proposed the Lord Mayor's health, and said: I feel highly flattered by being entrusted with the toast I have now to propose. As it is the custom to say "I am called upon very suddenly," I wish that I had been less suddenly called upon, because the toast is a very important one. I have always, since the time when I was a little boy, wished to "remember the 9th of November;" but I am sure that this day of November will for the future be the more memorable. You are aware that I have but recently returned from America. I was interviewed there. I had the pleasure of meeting the President of the United States, who seemed to have a little doubt about my nationality. He inquired if I did not come from Ireland. I then asked the President—"Have you ever heard of St Mary Axe?"—because I was born there. So I feel as if my foot was now on my native heath. I also told him, and he told the gentlemen of the press—at least I think so—that I had resided at Crosby Hall, where Richard III. had lived. I mixed up Richard III. and Crosby Hall, with the Lord Mayor, whose premises happen to adjoin my birth-place in St Mary Axe—or Crosby Hall (close by St Mary Axe) Richard III. and his Lordship got so mixed up together that he really believed I had been Lord Mayor of London. A great supposition, with slight truth. Little did I think then that I should have the honour of proposing the health of his Lordship. The Civic Magistrate is always loyal. Indeed I know that well—as I once played the Lord Mayor myself, and so paid homage to my king—Richard III—but that amiable, yet variable, monarch, I leave to the very able treatment of my friend sitting next to me—Mr H. Irving. Should he play the tyrant King, however, whilst I am performing at the Gaiety opposite, I dread the tumult of the conflicting armies of Richard and Richmond. May I, therefore, ask those gentlemen to be as quiet as possible when on the well-tried battle-field of the Lyceum, because a great clamour may interfere with our classic performance of Ici on Parle Français. I know there was a little noise last week. Complaining to the carpenters behind the scenes, they said it was "only two Scotch gentlemen over the way"—"having a duel." Since then we have closed the windows. But his Lordship's loving cup has apparently stopped the clang of arms, as those rival Scots (Macbeth and Macduff), both present, now challenge each other only in wine. My Lord Mayor, I feel deeply the compliment you have paid me, and I have great pleasure in proposing your health, trusting that we may for many years, as you have entertained us, have the honour of entertaining you when you go to the theatre.

VIENNA.—Schubert's opera, Der häusliche Krieg, has been performed with success at the Imperial Operahouse.

Augustus Mayhew.

"An old, old friend."

Requiescat in pace!

MUSIC AT THE ANTIPODES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Melbourne, 22nd March, 1877.

The musical event of the month has been the appearance, at the Theatre Royal, of Mr Samuel Lazar's Italian opera company, which had been performing at Sydney. The high prices of admission charged during the first three weeks of the series (which is limited to six) caused the audiences at first to be thin. After the first three weeks the prices to pit and upper circle were reduced, and the result was that these parts of the house were well filled. The operas already produced are Linda di Chamouni, Il Trovatore, Il Barbiere di Siviglia, Faust, La Figlia del Reggimento, Un Ballo in Maschera, La Sonnambula, Lucrezia Borgia, Tutti in Maschera, and Don Giovanni. The company is a fair one. Signora Guadagnini, the leading lady, and Signora Vita have created a favourable impression.

Mr. C. A. Irday announces a concert for to-morrow evening in the Fitzroy Town Hall, the first part of the programme consisting of Rossini's Stabat Mater, and the second of a general selection.

15th April, 1877.

The Lazar Italian opera company concluded their season at the Theatre Royal on the 21st ult. During the last month they played Faust, Il Trovatore, Norma, Un Ballo in Maschera, Lucia di Lammermoor, Don Giovanni, and selections from Pipèlè, Crispino e la Comare, and Il Barbiere. They are now in Adelaide.

Ernest Hutcheson, five years and eight months old, has been astonishing the Melbourne public by his performances on the piano. He reads music accurately and plays with great expression. He can analyse and name the notes in the most complex chords as soon as they are struck. A concert is to be given under the patronage of the Governor, and Lady Bowen, for the purpose of obtaining funds to send the young musician to Europe.

Sir Michael Costa's Naaman was performed in the Town Hall on Good Friday night by the Melbourne Philharmonic Society. The principal vocalists were Mrs Howitz, Miss Christian, Mr D. Miranda, Mr G. F. Smith, and Mr S. Lamble. Mr D. Lee was conductor, and Mr G. Peake, organist.

Mr J. Levy, the cornet player, has given seven concerts in the Town Hall. He was assisted by Mrs Cutter, Signor Rosnati, and Mr C. B. Foster, the last named as pianist. J. T. L. F.

HAMBURG.—Herr and Mad. Vogel, of the Theatre Royal, Munich, have appeared at the Stadttheater in Der Freischütz.

ST JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S
Pianoforte Recitals.

THE EIGHTH AND LAST RECITAL
WILL TAKE PLACE ON
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 23, 1877.

Programme.

QUINTET, in F minor, Op. 34, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr L. RIES, Herr STRAUS, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA Brahms.
"SCENES CARNAVALISQUES," Op. 9, for pianoforte—Mr
CHARLES HALLÉ Schumann.
ROMANZA, in F, for violin—M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA Beethoven.
GRAND TRIO, in B flat, Op. 97, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA Beethoven.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

	Single Tickets.
Sofa Stalls, numbered and reserved	£0 7 0
Balcony	0 3 0
Area	0 1 0

Tickets at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33,
Old Bond Street; Olivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse, & Co., 48,
Cheapside; Hays, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28,
Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S CONCERT.—MONDAY NEXT.

FLORAL HALL, ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT
GARDEN. Under the immediate patronage of his Royal Highness the Prince of WALES, her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES, his Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN, her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN, her Royal Highness Princess LOUISE (Marchioness of LORNE), her Royal Highness the Duchess of CAMBRIDGE, his Serene Highness the Duke of TECK, her Royal Highness Princess MARY (Duchess of TECK), the Most Honourable the Marquis of LORNE. Programme of Sir JULIUS BENEDICT'S ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT, Monday next, 18th June, to commence at Two o'clock: Part I.—"Cora, Alla Finlands," L'Etoile du Nord (Meyerbeer), by the Chorus of the Royal Italian Opera; Cavatina, "Sempere ne m'el deliri," Dolores (Manzocchi), M^{lle} Synnerberg; Romanza, "Il Viaggiatore" (Schubert), Signor Baggiolo; Aria, "De cette pompeuse retraite," Giralda
(Adam), M^{lle} Marimon; Fregiera, "O padre eterno," St Cecilia (Benedict),
M^{me} Scalchi (harmonium—Mr Pittman); Aria, "Figlia D'Erina" (Benedict),
M. Capoul; Ballad, "Sweet Village Bells" (Davison), M^{lle} Zare Thalberg; Romanza, "Un bacio sol" (Badia), Signor Cotoigni; Cavatina, "Casta diva," Norma (Bellini), M^{lle} Albani and Chorus; Duetto, "Le Magali," Mirella
(Gounod), M^{lle} Marimon and M. Capoul; Sonata, violin (Corelli), M^{me}
Norman-Neruda; Bolero, "Dilette amiche," Vesperi Siciliani (Verdi), M^{me}
Adelina Patti. Part II.—Duo, for two pianofortes, "Hommage à Handel" (Moscheles), Sir Julius Benedict and Mr Charles Hallé; Song, "The Bird that came in Spring" (Benedict), M^{me} Adelina Patti (flauto obbligato—Mr Radcliff); Romanza, "O liet di," L'Etoile du Nord (Meyerbeer), M. Maurel; Finale,
"Those whom the Highest," St Cecilia (Benedict), M^{lle} Albani and Chorus (harp
—Mr John Thomas; harmonium—Signor Vianesi); Aria, "Cujus animam," Stabat Mater (Rossini), Signor Nicolini; Old English Ballad, "My lodging is on the cold ground," M^{me} Adelina Patti; Aria, "Pro peccatis," Stabat Mater
(Rossini), Signor Ordinas; Aria, "Or Son sola," Fra Diavolo (Auber), M^{lle} Zare Thalberg; Romance, "Die rose" (Spohr), M^{lle} Smeroschi; Aria, "Gloia d'amore" (Campana), Signor Marini; Duetto, "Voglio dire," L'Elisir
(Donizetti), Signor Piazzi and Signor Caracciolo; Trio, "Te sol quest' anima," Attila (Verdi), M^{lle} Smeroschi, Signor Sabater, and Signor Caracciolo. Conductors—Signor VIANESI, Signor BEVIGNANI, and Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Stalls,
£1 1s.; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.; Reserved Seats in Balcony, 7s. 6d. and 5s.;
Reserved Back Seats, 5s.; Gallery, 2s. 6d. Application for tickets to be made to Mr E. Hall, at the Box Office under the portico of the theatre; also to Mr Mitchell, Mr Bubb, Messrs Chappell, Messrs Lacon & Ollier, Bond Street; Mr S.
Hays, 301, Regent Street; Messrs Keith, Prowse, & Co., 48, Cheapside; Mr
Hays, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; and to Mr Austin, St James's Hall, Piccadilly; also to Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, 2, Manchester Square.

"SWEET VILLAGE BELLS."

M^{lle} ZARE THALBERG will sing "SWEET VILLAGE BELLS" (J. W. DAVISON), at Sir Julius Benedict's Concert, at the Floral Hall, Monday morning next, 18th June.

To J. C. Burnand, Esq.
NEIGH AND BRAY.

(An Elench.)

MAJOR NEIGH.—Heu cauda!

DR BRAY.—Toot! toot! What's the matter?

MAJOR NEIGH.—Symphony!

DR BRAY.—Let me feel your pulse (feels pulse). You've got dramatic fever!

MAJOR NEIGH.—No—oceanic.

DR BRAY.—Then I will tap thee (taps him on the shoulder).

MAJOR NEIGH (neighing vociferously).—O! oa! oaw! Owawa-wawawa! Oaw—hi!

DR BRAY (braying loudly).—Hoyotoho! Hoyotoho! Helmige, thou art cured!

MAJOR NEIGH.—Heiaha! Heiaha!

DR BRAY.—Neigh! Neigh!—nay, be calm. Who hung at thy saddle?—Sintolt the Hegeling?

MAJOR NEIGH (taking a pinch of snuff).—No—Witting the Irming (sneezes).

DR BRAY.—Grimgerd' and Rossweisse! (sneezes).

MAJOR NEIGH.—Hoyotoho! Heiaha! (sneezes).

DR BRAY.—Heiaha! Hoyotoho! [Exeunt severally, sneezing.]

DEATH.

On June 11th, at 13, Dorchester Place, N. W. JOHANN BAPTIST ZIMMERMANN, Esq., aged 57.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1877.

We shall see.

WE take the following from the Globe, which is giving due importance in its columns to music and music's representatives:—

"Our bitterest enemies can hardly accuse us any longer of being 'unmusical.' No nation has received the Teutonic invader with such open arms as we. Tannhäuser and Lohengrin have been played with all the advantages of personal supervision (?) by the most sympathetic interpreters in the musical capitals of Italy, but no converts have been made to the new religion. The countrymen of Cimarosa and Rossini, of Donizetti and Bellini, refuse to make the sacrifice of their musical belief. So far from passing through the fire to Moloch, they have hardly singed a hair in coquetting with the German magician; and when he is gone, and the noise of his drum and trumpet no longer heard, they have returned back into Egypt without a qualm of conscience, and fallen into their old servitude to the simple melody so easy to understand. The traditions of the Italian school are too old to be uprooted in a day. Italian ears are rather puzzled than gratified by the complicated harmony in German compositions. They look back to the days before Weber and Meyerbeer wrote, insisting that noise and music are not synonymous, and that to be rendered deaf is a hard penalty to pay for studying a new creed. If Italy has not welcomed with effusion the new comer, still less has France succumbed. True, the invading army of Norsemen, Pagan goddesses, Christian princesses, improper Tannhäusers, and respectable Wolframs, passed over France like the hosts of a second Attila. The Parisians made way as philosophically as, later on, for the troops of Moltke or the reign of the Commune. But they did not worship the despot of the trombone and ophicleide. Prosper Mérimée, in his letters to an 'Inconnue,' thus describes a performance of Tannhäuser:—It was a remarkable representation. There was the Princess of Metternich raising her fan with a terrible gesture, to make people believe she understood what was going on, and to give the signal for applause which never came. The house was yawning with ennui, but for all that everybody wished to have the air of comprehending this terrible enigma.

"We English are too devoted followers of fashion to fly in the face of a recognised authority. In music, as in other things, we consider that others know better than ourselves; we submit to be led like children; schooling ourselves to learn and understand what seems mysterious and hard; believing that, if we cannot appreciate now, we shall some day, and that it is more likely we should be dull of comprehension, than the rest of the world mistaken. This national tendency to magnify the unknown may have had something to do with the reception Herr Wagner and his music have met with in this 'unmusical country.' Much of the enthusiasm, however, has been probably genuine. We have seen several of Wagner's operas produced in that perfection of detail to be found nowhere as in London. We have heard selections from his principal works at the Albert Hall, at concerts under his own supervision. We have thus seen him at his best and at his worst. On the stage he is doubtless seen to most advantage. As mere spectacles, acted in dumb pantomime, these representations would be imposing. Any candid critic must admit that in story and dramatic interest Wagner's operas are superior to any of the Italian school. Italian opera in the old days, before it became affected by German influence, was little but a peg to hang songs upon—songs beautiful in themselves, but which often had no more to do with the action of the plot than the dancing of nymphs, or fairies, coming in to break the monotony of the performance. The air was everything, the libretto contemptible, and Beaumarchais must have been thinking of Italian operas, just coming into fashion, when he said: 'Ce que ne vaut pas la peine d'être dit, on le chante.'

"We cannot think that German opera will ever be so popular in this country as Italian. Our ancestors would have been puzzled to foretell a taste so different from our own. When Italian opera was introduced into this country it was treated almost with contempt. We find Addison writing in 1709: 'I went on Friday last to the Opera, and was surprised to find so thin a house at so noble an entertainment, till I heard that the tumbler was not going to make his appearance there that night.' At the time it was sought to cultivate a taste amongst us which we considered to be essentially foreign—our national drama was in its prime. It was not likely that either dramatic authors or actors should welcome with cordiality this would-be usurper of their inheritance. But they undervalued the importance of the movement. 'Tommy,' said Garrick to Dr Arne, 'You should consider, after all, that music is at best but pickle to my roast beef.' 'By —, Davy,' rejoined Arne—'your beef shall be well pickled, then, before I have done.' The doctor carried out his threat by reviving the Beggar's Opera at Covent Garden, with Miss Brent in the part of Polly. It had such success that for a time Drury Lane was deserted; but the effect was transient, and the play pure and simple soon regained ascendancy. Indeed, it is improbable that Gay's masterpiece would have attracted such popularity but for the pretty actresses who successively made Polly Peachum famous. Subsequent attempts of a higher standard gained no more permanent hold on English play-goers; and while German Kaisers feasted Italian singers, and decorated Italian composers, Grand Dukes were proud to hold the bâton of conductor, and Serene Highnesses to play fiddle in the orchestra, we matter-of-fact, unenthusiastic English were deaf to the charms of Cimarosa and Rossini. After years of failure and at last tolerance, music worked its way till it became one of our sober pleasures. But it was on rare occasions that it aroused us to real enthusiasm.

"This reflection brings us back to the point whence we started—the effect Herr Wagner has produced, and is producing. Will it last? Remembering Oberon, we think not. Weber was the forerunner of Wagner. His Oberon, besides its musical excellences, was enriched by the poetic conception of Wieland and the dramatic touch of Planché. Its mise-en-scène was gorgeous, and old opera-goers may still remember the enthusiasm with which it was received on the 12th of April, 1826. That enthusiasm, instead of growing stronger, grew fainter night after night, and when Oberon was reproduced again (two months after its first performance), for the benefit of the composer's widow and children, it did not pay expenses."

No doubt we shall see—at least what we shall see; and, if no more, why so much?

—o—

IN an interesting collection of letters from the Princess Heinrich and Ferdinand of Prussia, to the Counts and the Countess Henckel-Donnersmarck, we find, in a letter bearing date the 15th December, 1800, the following observations, which do not say much for the high artistic taste of the personage who penned them:—

"Last Friday, a piece of music (sacred music) by Mozart was performed, and many admired it. I tell you in confidence that I thought it detestable. It is infernal music, there wanted only a cannon; all the instruments make an infernal noise. The music is considered very learned. To this I reply: it resembles Klopstock's Messiah, which is pronounced admirable, but which no one understands."

And this of Mozart! What would the august correspondent have said had he heard the productions of a certain composer of the present day!

THE celebrated Hungarian violinist, Edouard Remenyi, has arrived in London.

After Joachim Raff.

DR GRIEF.—Here you are again! Ham!—I shall never cure you if you go on taking, hour after hour, a nip of Raff.

MR SIDNEY HAM (groaning).—Oh! It wasn't a nip.

DR GRIEF.—What then?

MR SIDNEY HAM.—Oh! It was many nips!—at the Crystal Palace.

DR GRIEF.—Explain—or how can I prescribe?

MR SIDNEY HAM.—It was Lenore!

DR GRIEF.—Then, if you don't swallow this at once you're a dead man.

MR SIDNEY HAM (swallowing nostrum).—Oh! It's worse than Lenore!

DR GRIEF.—That's impossible.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

We feel it impossible adequately to express our admiration at the incomparable playing of Arabella Goddard, and we feel that Jersey owes a debt of gratitude to Mr Milne for having induced her to visit the island. The pianoforte used at the concert was Messrs Broadwood & Son's concert iron grand, sent especially from London for use on this occasion.—Jersey British Press.

At the wedding of Miss Elizabeth Thompson with Major W. F. Butler, which was celebrated at the church of the Servites Fathers, in Fulham Road (a Catholic church), on Monday last, one of the principal features of the solemnity was the music of a "motet" composed expressly for the circumstance, and consisting in a duet for tenor and bass, with accompaniment for the organ. The composer is a young Italian maestro from Rome, Mr Augusto Rotoli, now in London. The part of the tenor was sung by himself, and the bass part by Signor Rocca. Cardinal Manning presided at the ceremony, and upwards of a thousand people were present.

SIGNOR VIANESI, of the Royal Italian Opera, already Chevalier of SS. Maurice et Lazare (Italy), of Leopold de Belgique, &c., &c., has recently been honoured by Victor Emmanuel with the title of Cavaliere dell' ordine della corona d'Italia.

THE report that Mad. Pauline Lucca will appear again at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, next winter is denied. The lady has decided after singing at the period named for two months in Moscow, to retire from public life.

FROM 1,400 to 1,500 members of Church choirs, in the Archdeaconry of Worcester, assembled yesterday in Worcester Cathedral to hold a Triennial Church Choral Festival. There were services morning and evening, and about one-half of the choirs were surpliced. Both services were full choral, and the anthems were, "O give thanks," by Goss, and "Send out Thy light," by Gounod. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Hereford from 2 Chronicles v. verse 11, and following. The Bishop cited his text as testifying Divine approval of the use of music in Church services, and, while maintaining that the service should always be of the very best, he considered that while an ornamental style of music was fitting to a large place of worship, it was not so in a village church.

THE following events connected with music happened in the month of June: On the 1st, birth of Ferdinando Paër, Parma, 1771. On the 5th, death of Giovanni Paisiello, Naples, 1816; death of Carl Maria von Weber, London, 1826; and first representation of Donizetti's Maria di Rohan, Vienna, 1843. On the 6th, first performance, in France, of Verdi's Messa da Requiem, under the direction of the composer, Paris, 1874. On the 7th, hundredth performance of Spontini's Vestale, at the Grand Opera, Paris, 1816. On the 8th, inauguration of the Robert Schumann commemorative tablet and medallion portrait at Zwickau, 1860; birth of Luigi Ricci, Naples, 1805; and birth of Robert Schumann at Zwickau, 1810. On the 9th, inauguration of Rossini's statue in the vestibule of the Grand Opera, Paris, 1846. On the 10th, first performance of R. Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, Munich, 1865. On the 11th, first performance, in Germany, of Verdi's Messa da Requiem, under the direction of the composer, Vienna, 1875; first performance of Galuppi's Artaserse, for the opening of the Teatro Nuovo, Padua, 1751. On the 13th, death of Angelo Mariani, Genoa, 1873; first performance of Verdi's Vêpres Siciliennes, Paris, 1855. On the 14th, birth of Francesco Morlacchi, Perugia, 1784; death of Orlando Lasso, 1594; birth of Johann Simon Mayr, Mendorf, 1763. On the 15th, inauguration of the Beethoven Monument at Heiligenstadt, where Beethoven wrote his most important works, 1863. On the 16th, death of Valentino Fioravanti, Capua, 1837; inauguration of the Vela Monument to Donizetti in the church of Santa Maria Maggiore, Bergamo, 1855. On the 17th, birth of Charles Gounod, Paris, 1818. On the 18th, first performance of Weber's Freischütz, Berlin, 1821. On the 19th, first Italian performance in Germany of Verdi's Aida, under the direction of the composer, Vienna, 1875; performance of Palestrina's Messa di Papa Marcello, Rome, 1665. On the 21st, birth of Luigi Gordigiani, Modena, 1806. On the 22nd, first performance in England of Verdi's Aida, London, 1876. On the 24th, birth of Etienne Henri Méhul, Givet, 1763. On the 25th, first performance of Mendelssohn's Lobgesang, Leipzig, 1840. On the 27th, first performance of Luigi Ricci's Columbo, for the opening of the Teatro Nuovo, Parma 1829; inauguration of Méhul's statue, Givet, 1842. On the 28th, birth of Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Geneva, 1712. On the 20th, first performance of A. Bazzini's symphony-overture to Shakespeare's Lear—which carried off the prize offered by the Quartet Society, Milan—Florence, 1871; and inauguration of the Quartet Society, Milan, 1864.

DRESDEN.—The new Theatre Royal will probably be opened with M. Massenet's Roi de Lahore—re-named for Germany Sila.

DRESDEN.—People are indignant with Herr R. Wagner for granting the manager of the Stadttheater, Leipsic, permission to produce his Nibelungen, and withholding it from the Theatre Royal. Years ago Herr Wagner sold the right of performing his Rienzi, Tannhäuser, Fliegender Holländer, and more recently his Lohengrin, at the Theatre Royal, for a small consideration paid down. He now demands an additional sum of some 21,000 marks. Legally, he can claim nothing, but, till his demand is satisfied, he will not allow the production of any other work of his.—The new Theatre will be opened on the 2nd November.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

MISS MARION BEARD'S harp concert took place at the Royal Academy of Music on the 5th inst., and, to judge by the numerous audience, admirers of that beautiful instrument are by no means on the decrease. Miss Beard was assisted by Mdme Antoinette Sterling, Mdme Mathilde Zimeri, and Herr Arnim von Boehme, who gave with effect Wolfram's song, "The Evening Star" (Tannhäuser), and a charming song by C. Oberthür, "Drei Wünsche." The bénéficiaire, who played admirably the slow movement from C. Oberthür's concerto for the harp and the first harp part in the same author's "Grand Duo" for two harps on airs from the Huguenots, met with a flattering reception. Signor Tito Mattei played his brilliant pieces, "A la Lyre" and Fourth "Valse de Concert," and Herr Liebe two violoncello solos. There were several concerted harp pieces, amongst which C. Oberthür's "National Quartet," by Mrs Frost, Miss V. Trust, Miss Beard, and the author, was especially effective. There was also an arrangement of Parish Alvars' "Pirate Chorus" for four harps, in which, with the above-named artists, Miss Lowe took part. M. Marlois contributed a piano solo, much admired. Mr F. H. Cowen and M. Marlois were accompanists.

M. RIVIERE gave his first "classical night" at the Queen's Theatre on Wednesday. The programme included the overture to Le Nozze di Figaro; the march from Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; the andante and rondo from the same composer's pianoforte concerto in G minor, played by Miss Muschamp; Beethoven's Romance in A for the violin, played by Mons. A. Cornelis; the Priests' March from Mendelssohn's Athalie; and Mozart's Symphony in C major ("Jupiter"). Mdle Ida Sersaïs sang the grand air from Gluck's Alceste; Miss José Sherrington gave Handel's "Rejoice greatly;" and M. Valdini the serenade from Don Giovanni—an excellent programme, it will be allowed. These concerts are drawing crowds to the Queen's, a place of amusement which has been a great deal too much tabooed. M. Riviere is just the man to show that it is as good an arena as most others.

SIGNOR ARDITI'S annual matinée musicale d'invitation took place at Ashley Place. A large and fashionable audience assembled to listen to a variety of "songs of many lands," interpreted by Mesdames Trebelli, Pernini, Armand, and Marie Roze, Mdles Corani, Purdy, and Signor Bonetti. Mdle Debillemont and M. Ketten were the solo pianists, and the accompanists were Messrs Dami, Cowen, and Marlois. Signor Arditi announces that his annual concert will take place, by permission, at the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Dudley's residence in Park Lane on June 21.

HERR LEHMEYER gave his first "classical concert" at Langham Hall on May 10th, when he played, with well-deserved success, compositions by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Chopin, &c. Herr Lehmeier was assisted by Messrs Booth and Levier—instrumentalists; Misses Julia Warwick, Blanche Lucas, and Helen Arnim, Sig. Caravoglia, Messrs W. Shakespeare and Welby Wallace—vocalists. Herr Lehmeier's second "classical concert" will be held in St George's Hall on July 3rd.

ROYAL ACADEMY CONCERT ROOM.—A concert, under the direction of Mdme Sainton-Dolby, was given on Wednesday evening, the 6th inst., in the pleasant room attached to the Academy, in aid of the funds for the restoration of Handel's organ in Little Stanmore Church. The object of the concert and the place wherein it was held seemed to be in unison with the career of Mdme Sainton-Dolby; a lady who has reflected so much lustre upon the Royal Academy of Music, of which she was a pupil, and whose brilliant reputation was gained chiefly in the songs of Handel. Whenever there is a service to be rendered to art, or homage paid to the master, whose bountiful genius supplied materials with which to secure fame and fortune, the accomplished lady quits retirement on her honourable mission; and nowhere is her assistance more valuable than in the management of a concert. A selection of Handel's songs commenced the programme, Miss Cunningham singing, "Cangio d'aspetto;" Mr Lewis Thomas, "Revenge, Timotheus cries;" Miss Howe, "Rejoice greatly;" and Mdme Patey, "Lascia ch'io pianga." The only regret experienced about the selection was its brevity; if the whole of the first part had been devoted to unfamiliar songs of the great master it would have been in keeping with the occasion, and acceptable to the audience. Better substitution, however, could scarcely be found than the andante and finale of Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor; played by such artists as Mr A. Thoulless, M. Sainton, and M. Lassere, it could not fail in giving delight; and again the craving for more was felt, for the entire composition would even have been too brief. Mr Edward Lloyd sang "Sweet Saint," from Mdme Sainton-Dolby's cantata, St Dorothea, with a purity of voice and pleading force of accent that procured him a rapturous re-call. Anticipations had been formed that St Dorothea would be selected for performance on this occasion. All present would have liked to have renewed acquaintance with a work reflecting honour upon the fair composer, and a good opportunity, it was thought, of hearing it under personal direction, was lost. Mdme Patey made the best amends in her power by singing a ballad, "I cannot forget," by Mdme Dolby; though not aiming so high, it fairly hit the mark intended, that of engaging the interest and sympathies of the audience. The directress of the concert is to be thanked for introducing to our notice so many charming young ladies, her pupils, not only the soloists, but those who assisted in the chorus part of Schubert's Serenade, the solo to which was sung with sweetness by Miss Hoare. The piece was the gem of the concert, and the orchestra for the moment looked, as poor Balfe used to say of a score, "full of lovely gems." The student occupants of the orchestra were nameless in the programme. What's in a name? There were, however, pupils with printed names, some of which may, some day, make a name known to fame. Miss Julia Wigan distinguished herself in Gounod's "Ave, Maria," Miss Cummings in Rossini's "Ah! quel giorno," Miss Laing Meason in a ballad by her instructress, and Miss Adela Vernon in Gounod's valse, "Rondinella." Mrs Osgood displayed her accomplished vocalisation by giving an expressive reading of "Is it for ever," Messrs Faulkener and Gooch afforded good service, and Mr A. Thoulless presided at the piano with consummate ability. The concert will, we understand, render substantial aid in restoring the instrument so often quickened into life and beauty by unpremeditated strains rushing from the teeming brain of the giant Handel.

REGARDLESS of heat which indisposed to exertion of any kind, and made frightful the idea of getting mixed up with a crowd, a fashionable audience thronged the Floral Hall on Monday afternoon, when Mr Kuhe gave his annual concert. Precautions had happily been taken to moderate the temperature of the place, not the least effective measure being an arrangement of masses of ice among the plants and flowers at the foot of the platform. The result was that the audience gratified their æsthetic tastes under conditions not wholly incompatible with that measure of material comfort without which, so long as the "mortal coil" is round us, the mind can get but little satisfaction. As the concert was, save for a greater proportion of instrumental music, exactly like those given by Mr Gye in the same place, there is not much to be said about it from a critical point of view, and our task is limited to mentioning the chief features in the programme. Among these, taking the vocal pieces first, were the scena from Lucia, for her delivery of which Mdle Albani obtained a re-call, and the "Miserere" from Il Trovatore, with Mdme Patti and Signor Nicolini, who had to reappear twice at the close. Mdme Patti also sang "Kathleen Mavourneen," and Mdle Albani the "Ave, Maria" of Gounod, each being encored, as was the last-named subsequently in "The Blue Bells of Scotland." Mention should also be made of the success obtained by Mdle Thalberg in her father's romance, "La Partenza," and Bevilgnani's Tarantella, both followed by a re-call. Among other vocalists were Mesdames Synnerberg, Bianchi, and Smeroschi, MM. Marini, Pandolfini, Capoul, and Capponi. The instrumental works comprised two solos played by the concert-giver; a fantasia for violin, written and performed by Herr Wilhelm; and Benedict's andante, with Chopin's posthumous Mazurka, for eight hands on two pianofortes, the executants being Mr. Kuhe, Mr Cowen, Mr Ganz, and Sir J. Benedict. The three last-named assisted the joint-conductor of the Royal Italian Opera in accompanying the vocal music. No another word need be added to prove that the concert was a success.

D. T.

ASSEMBLY ROOMS, EYRE ARMS.—A concert was given at this establishment on Wednesday evening, the 6th inst., in aid of "the clock and tower fund of St Saviour's Church." The appeal, made with such attractive grace, met with the gratifying response, not only of a full attendance, but also of their high appreciation. The programme embraced both the amateur and professional element, and so well did they accord, that it would have been difficult to a hearer not conversant with professional names, to discern where the efforts of one began and the other ended; for the amateur qualities blended so naturally with those of experienced performers as to form a varied and interesting entertainment. For instance, the talents of Mrs Kenneth S. James were so conspicuous, and her execution so finished, as to warrant the belief that she had made the pianoforte the business of her life. Her playing of Prudent's Fantasia on airs from Rigoletto, and in the duet by Dusek, with Herr Pollitzer, evinced a skill worthy of a professor. Miss A. Selous in her songs showed she possessed a sweet voice, with fine instinct and agreeable expression; as did also Miss Thornhill, whose voice is sympathetic and knowledge extensive. The two ladies sang the duet, "Se, o cara sorridi," by Gabussi, with rare accord. Mr Fletcher proved himself the possessor of a fine bass voice, full and resonant in quality; and Mr Deane, though not happy in his choice of songs, pleased by his unobtrusive style. Mr Percy Blandford has already entered the professional ranks, and his choice of a musical career is justified by a voice worthy of cultivation; and one which gives every earnest of success. His progress will be watched with interest. Herr Pollitzer, the well-known violinist, did good suit and service; and Mr W. Henry Thomas played his own fantasia on Tannhäuser in a manner that called forth the warmest appreciation of the audience, who would fain have heard it again. Mme Edith Wynne and Mr Lewis Thomas also assisted at this successful concert.

ST JAMES'S HALL.—Mme Edith Wynne gave her annual concert on Thursday the 7th inst., at which her patrons and friends assembled in great force, thereby showing homage to art represented by one of our most gifted singers. The talents of Mme Wynne have never failed in obtaining recognition since the time she sang in the towns and villages of the principality; and when, but a mere girl, she was proclaimed the bright particular star of the Eisteddfods, and named the "Eos Cymru"—the nightingale of Wales. Her musical training was obtained before the public; for the chapel room, town, hall or tent, not the professor's class room, was the place she learnt, or rather practised, the art which was really born in her—yes, indeed. When she first appeared in London she was no novice to the boards. The press at once recognised her as an artist, in terms less shivering than the well-worn compliments "young and promising." If her early career was arduous, it was fortunate in supplying her with opportunities of singing; so that when she made her début in London she was ripe and experienced. Had she been English she would have been taught until ready, and then, like a dumpling from an oven, "brought out." Mme Wynne was assisted by Mmes Sherrington and Sterling, Misses Mary Davies, Marion Williams, Lizzie Evans, M. J. Williams, Martha Harries; Messrs Edward Lloyd, James Sauvage, Foli, Gwilym Thomas, and Lewis Thomas. The instrumentalists were Miss Clinton Fynes, Miss B. M. Waugh, Messrs Brinley Richards, and John Thomas. Mme Wynne sang with earnestness and dramatic force "Pace, mio dio," from Verdi's Forza del Destino, showing a command over resources other than needed for ballad singing. Still it is as a ballad singer she excels, and will in the future be remembered. No apology was made for the monotony of Welsh names in the programme. If the Welsh are a people of few words, they make a perplexing and wearying use of them. It would require, however, more words than are at our disposal to tell the merits of each of the singers and players. All seemed to secure favour with the audience, who lost no opportunity of testifying their esteem for the lady to whose appeal they had so heartily responded by attending in such numbers.

(From Punch.)

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* * * Once for all, we beg to inform our Correspondents that, though we, of course, know everything, these questions ought to have been sent to the Editor of the "Musical World."

A FIRM BELIEVER IN EVERYTHING YOU SAY.—You are an idiot.

ONE WHO KNOWS.—Wrong again. He never was. Consult a Musical Solicitor.

A TIMID GAZELLE.—The Composer you allude to came of age at the same time. This did not, however, prevent him from attending to his usual business at the office.

PROFONDO.—Piatti is not the first violoncello player. The first violoncello player must have lived a very long time ago.

A TENNER.—You will find the symphony in his early works. All his works were early, as he invariably wrote between three and six a.m. every morning. Compare Op. 6, Symp. 10, and count six to four bar one.

AN ACUTE EAR.—(1.) Lift the dominant; (2.) Yes; (3.) A fine example of a Major in the Lancers; (4.) Sometimes; (5.) Try A flat—in Victoria Street.

HANDEL JUNIOR.—All nautical songs need not be written in C. But it is absolutely necessary that they should be within every mariner's compass.

COUNT FAURE.—Poo! Knock him right into the big drum, and smash him on the head with the cymbals.

TWEEDLE DUMB.—If taken slowly, you will find it do you a lot of good. Two-four at a time.

WAGNER.—The overture to Die Wasserwölfer commences with fifteen bars of best yellow soap.

GREGORY says "he doesn't like Church music, and asks us what he shall do?" Go to Chappell.

DOLLY DOLCE asks "What time ought Lindsay Sloper's Nocturne to be taken at?" Bed time, of course.

* * * Being pressed for space below the line, we have forwarded the rest to our learned musical contemporary above named.*

* They will be answered next week.—Otto Beard.

MR HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

To the Guild of Amateur Musicians belongs the honour of having, a little time ago, given the first performance of Handel's Hercules since the time (1749) when it was last presented by the illustrious composer. That performance was under the direction of Mr Henry Leslie, who, on Friday evening, repeated it; with the chorus of the Guild, supplemented by his famous choir, a professional band being engaged, and the services of Mrs Osgood, Miss Robertson, Mme Patey, Mr Lloyd, Mr Patey, and Mr Santley secured. Although novelties have small attraction for the English public, one might have expected a full audience for Hercules, not only because an exceptionally good performance was assured, but because the work bears Handel's name, and is an example of his highest genius in connection with a very dramatic subject. Yet the hall was scarcely more than half full. Those present seemed, to judge by lavish applause, gratified beyond the common, but the fact stood out clearly enough that the great mass of London amateurs cared nothing at all about what was done. Are we to infer from this that Handel is losing his hold upon public favour? Some observers would give an affirmative reply without hesitation, and point out other evidence favouring their opinion. But we are loth to think with them. The music of Handel, in its strength and robustness, in its simplicity and directness of expression, has for 150 years been to the art in England what our translation of the Bible has for nearly three centuries been to the English tongue. We cannot afford to break loose from its influence, for if we do there is no telling whither we may drift. Hercules has many points of interest as an exemplification of its author's powers. True, the choral numbers in the work are few and, by comparison, insignificant; but, on the other hand, the airs are among the most expressive and musically beautiful that Handel ever wrote, while the whole "oratorio" is a splendid illustration of the dramatic force and truth which the master, when he had a fair chance, never failed to show. We might prove this by a crowd of details, but no amateur can have omitted to profit by the recent publication of Hercules in a cheap form, or neglected to acquaint himself with its merits. The performance on Friday evening was in most respects adequate to a complete setting forth of the work. True, the orchestra might have been better, but the chorus sang finely throughout, and the soloists were all more or less equal to the demands of their respective parts. Mrs Osgood, as Dejanira, the wife of Hercules, well satisfied the exigencies of a difficult, because dramatic rôle. The finest portion of her music—that in which the remorse of Dejanira is expressed—was omitted, but elsewhere the American soprano made her mark, and obtained liberal applause. As Iole Miss Robertson sustained a part more lyrical than dramatic, which was fortunate, because the young lady has not yet mastered the means of expression that should belong to a mistress of her art. But if she sang coldly she sang technically well, and her efforts met with the greatest favour. Mme Patey, as Lichas, again proved herself a Handelian singer par excellence. Her recitatives were models of musical declamation, and her airs were sung with a beauty of voice and propriety of style leaving nothing whatever to be desired. Mr Lloyd sustained his well-earned reputation as Hyllus, and Mr Santley emulated his own finest efforts as a dramatic singer in the part of Hercules, especially when delivering the recitative and air, "Oh, Jove! what land is this?" Altogether the performance was one to be remembered as an interesting event. The pity was that so few heard it. But the loss is theirs who stayed away, not ours who attended and added another to the increasing roll of pleasant musical memories.—Daily Telegraph.

SALZBURG AND MOZART.

During the Salzburg Musical Festival, Mozart's admirers will be afforded an opportunity of taking part in a small, but not on that account less pleasing, act of homage to the immortal master. As most persons are aware, it is to the generosity of his Highness Prince Starhemberg, that the International Mozart Foundation (Mozartstiftung) is indebted for the possession of the little pavilion in which Mozart wrote Die Zauberflöte, in 1791. The pavilion then stood in the middle large courtyard of the Freihaus, Vienna, and was lent by Schikaneder to the great master expressly for the purpose. It will now be erected at one of the most beautiful points of the Kapuzinerberg, and thrown open to the public during the Musical Festival. No more fitting spot could, in truth, anywhere be found. In the midst of God's magnificent scenery, to which Mozart was always devotedly attached, the little sacred relic will now find a permanent resting place, and undoubtedly form one of the most interesting sights of Salzburg. Who will not feel a desire to visit the very building in which Mozart's genius produced a work sufficient of itself alone to establish the composer's immortality. But there is something else which will make it worth while to visit the pavilion. In April, 1874, the Committee of the Mozart Foundation took the initiative in forming a collection of Portraits and Autographs, to include not only celebrated men, artists and others, contemporaries of Mozart, but likewise poets, composers, writers on musical matters, and critics, belonging to the present day. The notion met with the warmest support, and the Institution already possesses a respectable number of autographs, portraits, &c. The collection will be placed in an album in the Mozart Pavilion, and will certainly not fail to interest the admirers and the disciples of art. There are already portraits of Dr Ludwig Ritter von Köchel, Leopold Schefer, author of the Laienbrevier, Roderich Benedix, the well-known comedy writer, Friedrich Ritter von Henkl, author of Thoughts upon Music and Composers, and Emanuel Geibel, who with his portrait forwarded the following verses:—

"Mag die Welt vom einfach Schönen
Sich für kurze Zeit entwöhnen,
Nimmer trägt sie's auf die Dauer
Schönder Unnatur zu fröhnen.

"Zu dem Gipfel treibt sie's heimwärts
Den die echten Lorbeern krönen.
Und mit Wonne lauscht sie wieder
Gothe's Liedern, Mozart's Tönen."

A contribution which strikes us as especially worthy notice is that from J. Rieter-Biedermann, the well-known Leipzig music publisher, a warm promoter and true friend of the International Mozart Foundation. It is David F. Strauss's sonnet (copy) on Die Zaubergeflöte:

"Dem Gotte gleich, der aus den Thorenstreichen
Der Menschenkinder Weltgeschichte flicht,
Hast Du aus einem närrischen Gedicht
Ein Tönwerk erschaffen sonder gleichen.

"Schon warst Du nahe jenen ernsten Reichen
Wo jede Lebensstänkung uns zerbricht,
Das Haupt einstrahlt von jenem reinen Licht,
Vor dem die bunten Erdenfarben bleichen.

"Da schien der Menschen Thun Dir Kinderspiel,
Du sahst den Haas in ew'ge Nacht verbaunt,
Die Liebe sich zur Weisheit mild verklären.

"Dank Dir, verkürter Meister! Nah' dem Ziel,
Hast Du uns liebend noch herabgesandt
Vorklänge von der Harmonie der Sphären."

Besides the above, the following gentlemen have, also, sent their portraits:—Herr Bauernfeld, with the motto: "So wollt' ein Plätzchen uns gewähren, den Epigonen, die den Genius verehren;" Baron von Hülsen, Intendant-General of the Prussian Theatres Royal; Baron Perfall, Royal Intendant-General, Munich; Baron Johann von Vesque-Püttlingen, known as J. Hoven, and many others, whose names we unfortunately cannot give for want of space. As a matter of course, the collection is still open, and further contributions will be most thankfully received.

THE NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL FOR DANCING.—The production of Les Nymphes de la Forêt at Her Majesty's Theatre, on Saturday evening, not only characterised the revival of a species of entertainment once so popular at the "old house" in the Haymarket, but was the first public performance of the children in connection with the "National Training School for Dancing." The graceful evolutions of the children reflected much credit on the able tuition of Mme Katti Lanner; and the artistic display of la petite Marie Müller elicited frequent plaudits, and in one of her pas an enthusiastic encore.

* Though the world may for a short time turn from the Simply-Beautiful, it will never consent to serve permanently frivolous monstrosity. It is again impelled towards the pinnacle crowned with genuine laurels; it again listens with ecstacy to Goethe's songs and Mozart's strains.

† Like the god who out of the tricks of fools weaves the history of the children of this world, hast thou created an incomparable tone-work out of a stupid story. Already wast thou near the solemn realms, where every delusion of this world is dissipated, thy head surrounded by that pure light before which the varied colours of earth grow pale. Men's actions appeared to thee child's play. Thou sawest hate banished into eternal night and love gently transformed to wisdom. Thanks to thee, Master, in thy apotheosis. Near the goal, thou hast lovingly sent to us below a foretaste of the harmony of the spheres.

WAIFS.

M. Halanzier has engaged a new bass, M. Bordeneuve.

Verdi visited Paris on his return from the the Lower Rhine.

Mdme Alice Urban is engaged for next season at the Italiens.

The Roi de Lahore is to be performed next season at the Scala.

The season at the San Carlo, Naples, terminated on the 1st inst.

A buffo opera company of Italian children is making a tour through Germany.

M. Danbé has succeeded M. Lamoureux as conductor at the Paris Opéra-Comique.

The Arena Alfieri, at Verona, narrowly escaped being burnt down a short time since (as in 1857).

M. Brandus, the well-known music publisher, has purchased the autograph score of Robert le Diable.

Mdme Galli-Marié has re-appeared at the Paris Opéra-Comique as Rose Friquet in Les Dragons de Villars.

Mesdmes Nilsson, Albani, MM. Capoul and Massini are engaged for Italian opera, next season, at St Petersburg.

Sig. Arrigo Boito, composer of Mefistofele, has completed the words and music of an opera entitled Nerone.

The library of the Naples Conservatory possesses three thousand autographs of composers, more or less celebrated.

Verdi has presented the original MS. of his Stringed Quartet to the Musical College of S. Pietro a Majella, Naples.

M. Olivier Métra intends giving at Madrid a series of performances on the model of the Crystal Palace Concerts.

A subscription has been opened to place a marble bust of the late Sig. Petrella in the vestibule of the Scala, Milan.

According to Seifer's Kunst-Kritik, there are sixty-three choral and orchestral associations, mostly German, in New York.

The following entry appeared a short time since in the register of a Chicago hotel: "J. B. Strafford and father, Buffalo."

M. Mierzwonski, who sang Raoul in Les Huguenots at the Grand Opera, in 1874, has re-appeared after three years' absence.

The Fourth Triennial Festival of the Boston Handel and Haydn Society, commenced on the 16th and ended the 19th May. The Festival was brought to a close with Israel in Egypt.

M. Paladilhe has been commissioned by M. Carvalho to write a three-act comic opera, the book of which, entitled provisionally: Suzanne, has been furnished by MM. Lockroy and Cormon.

Sig. Gavarre has won his action against the management of the Scala, Milan, who refused to pay the balance of his salary on the pretext that he had sung without permission at two concerts.

Herr Ignaz Brüll's new opera, Landfrieden, will be produced, for the first time, on the 4th October, the Emperor's Saint's-day, at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna. It will afterwards be brought out at the Theatre Royal, Berlin.

For Mr Edward Lloyd's forthcoming autumnal tour Mr N. Vert has been commissioned to engage Mdme Edith Wynne, Mdme Antoinette Sterling, Mr Lewis Thomas, Mr Charles Ould, and Mr A. Thouless, who, with the tenor, Mr Edward Lloyd, will form the concert party.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY
ADOLFO FERRARI

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme A. Wina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklin, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFÈGE."

LE PETIT SOLFÈGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

SIGNOR and the MDLLES BADIO have arrived in London for the Season. All communications for public or private Concerts, &c., to be addressed to 47, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park; or to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR FREDERIC WOOD (Primo Tenore), of the Wilhelmj Concert Party, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs HODGE & ESSEX, 6 and 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MISS ELENA NORTON, Soprano Vocalist (composer of "The Rose and the Ring"), is open for ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c., &c. Address, care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or to Mr D'Oyley Carte, 20, Charing Cross.

MDLLE IDA CORANI having returned to Town requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Opera or Concert be addressed to her Agent, Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME ERNST (Soprano) requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR CHARLES ABERCROMBIE (Tenor), of St James's Hall and the Royal Aquarium Concerts, Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St James's, requests that all applications for Terms and ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio, Opera, or Concert, be addressed to Mr W. B. HEALEY (his Agent and Business Manager), care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, S.W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MDME LOUISE GAGE (Contralto) is open to ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c. Address, Mdme LOUISE GAGE, No. 17, Holland Road, Kensington, W., or care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

MR GERARD COVENTRY is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR FRANZ RUMMEL, Professor of the Pianoforte at the Conservatoire, Brussels, begs to announce that he has arrived in Town for the Season. Letters may be addressed to 43, Patahill Road, N.W.; or to the care of Messrs SCHOTT & Co., 159, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG BY F. SCHIRA.

AFTER LONG YEARS. Compose D to F ... 3s.
Also by the same Composer.
"THE BIRD AND THE MAID." Compose C to A ... 3s.
"MOONBEAMS." Compose E to F ... 3s.
"NO REST." Compose D to G ... 3s.
"ONLY APART." Compose C to F ... 3s.
"BOGNAI," in D (with Italian and English words). Compose A to F ... 3s.
Do. in E (with Italian words only). Compose B to G ... 4s.
"IL MIO BEPPIN." Compose D to E ... 3s.
Post free at Half-price.

LONDON: C. JEFFERYS, 67, BERNERS STREET, W.

English Glee and Madrigal Writers.

By W. A. BARRETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.S.L., &c.

PRICE 2s. 6d.

W. REEVES, BOOKSELLER, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

MUSIC STRINGS.—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS
FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Dépôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Solists.

25, SHERWOOD STREET, REGENT CIRCUS, PICCADILLY.
Price List free on application.

MDLLE VICTORIA BUNSEN will sing C. OBERHÜB's admired Song, "JE VOUDRAIS ÊTRE" (with harp accompaniment), at the Composer's Matinée Musicale, at Willis's Rooms, Thursday, July 5.

MR WELBYE-WALLACE will sing "DALLA SUA PACE" and "GUTEN ABEND" (BRAHMS), by desire, in place of "The Erl King," as first announced, at the Classical Concert of the Kensington Conservatory of Music, Langham Hall, 19th June.

REMOVAL.

MRS SICKLEMORE begs to announce her Removal from Cambridge Gardens to No. 8, ST JAMES'S TERRACE, Westbourne Square, W. June 12, 1877.

BALFE'S NEW TRIO in A, Played by MARIE KREBS, JOACHIM, and PIATTI, at the Saturday Popular Concerts, will shortly be published. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

THE MEN OF WALES. Song (with Chorus ad lib.), written by F. E. WEATHERLY; composed by BRINLEY RICHARDS. Sung at the Welsh Fête at the Crystal Palace, on June 6. 2s. net.

CONCERT AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JUNE 6.

"Mdme Edith Wynne was in fine voice, and her rendering of 'The Men of Wales,' composed by Brinley Richards, being so well given, that the audience demanded and obtained an encore."—Times, June 7.

"The music as rendered by Mdme Edith Wynne, and the chorus, especially telling and effective, roused the audience to enthusiasm, and the song was rapturously re-demanded and repeated."—Daily News, June 7.

LONDON: CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET.

AIDA.—Vocal Score, 8s.; Pianoforte Score, special English Edition, with full description of the plot and words to the leading subject (an excellent guide during performance), 4s. net.

OTELLO. Complete Vocal Score, 3s. 6d.; Pianoforte, 1s. net.

Songs, Pianoforte Arrangements of these Operas, &c.

LAMPERTI'S TREATISE on the ART of SINGING. The English Translation by his Pupil, J. O. GRIFFITH. 5s. net.

NEW SONGS with ITALIAN and ENGLISH WORDS.

PINSUTI.—"Donna gentil" ("Lady most fair"), sung by Mr Santley, always encoired, 4s. "Welcome, pretty Primrose" (English words), sung by Mdle Zaré Thalberg, always encoired, 4s.

ROTOLE.—"Spera" ("Hope then"), 3s. "Mia sposa sarà la mia bandiera" ("My bride shall be my flag"), sung by Signor Ootogni, 4s. "E tu vol sai" ("O couldst thou know"), 3s.

TOSTI.—"Ti rapirei" ("Away we'd fly"), 3s. 6d. "Serenata d'un Angelo" ("An angel serenade"), 3s. "Lamento d'amore" ("Love's lament"), 4s.

VASCHETTI.—"Il trasporto" ("Rapture"), sung with great applause by Mdle Ida Corani, whose portrait is on the title-page, 5s. All for half-price.

RICORDI's Dépôt, 26, Charles Street, Middlesex Hospital, London, W.

Just Published.

NEW PIANOFORTE PIECE BY MADAME OURY.
"CONSOLATION."

Easy of execution, but melodious and effective. Price 4s.; Half-price Cash or Stamps.

"We wonder who has not, in the hour of trouble, more than once derived comfort from the sweet sounds such as David must have used to mollify the troubled spirit of Saul. What better name, then, to give a graceful strain of peaceful melody, such as must convey to the sorrowing heart feelings of rest and sympathy, than 'Consolation'? Such is the title of a charming new pianoforte composition by that indefatigable and prolific writer, Mdme Oury; prolific indeed, for the piece bears no lower an Opus number than 185. Its flow of peaceful melody, enhanced by the delicacy and variety of the accompaniment, and harmonised in the masterly style of an experienced writer, well fulfils the object of the title. In every sense of the word is 'Consolation' an admirable piece of music, and it must rank among Mdme Oury's best efforts of the kind. As a morceau de salon it is of moderate difficulty, and of sufficient brilliance to display the capacities of a proficient performer. The composition is dedicated to Mrs Graver-Browne, of Morley Hall, and published by Messrs Paterson & Sons, of Edinburgh, Glasgow, &c."

PATERSON & SONS, 27, GEORGE STREET.

ALEXANDRA MUSICAL BOX (Title Protected and Registered). Ornamental wood case, machine made, with the following 13 popular Melodies and Tunes:—Safe in the Arms of Jesus—Jesus of Nazareth passeth by—Sicilian Mariners' Hymn—Lo, He Comes with Clouds—Home, Sweet Home—The Minstrel Boy—Auld Lang Syne—The Keel Row—My Little Bunch of Roses—Tommy, make room for your Uncle—Fair Shines the Moon to-night—Silver Threads among the Gold—The Union Jack of Old England. Forwarded, securely packed and carriage paid, to any address on receipt of a Post-office Order, value 3s. 8d., payable at General Post-office to JOHN LEWIS & Co., 122, Wick Road, Hackney, N.E.

WANTED, by a Gentleman of good education, a Situation as ASSISTANT in a London Music Warehouse. Good pianist; good references.—C. H., care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOOSEY & CO.'S

NEW EDITION OF

The Passion

(ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW).

THE PROSE TAKEN LITERALLY FROM THE GOSPEL, AND THE VERSE TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

BY

JOHN OXENFORD.

THE MUSIC EDITED BY

J. PITTMAN.

PRICE 1s. 6d. CLOTH, GILT EDGES, 3s.

ALSO, PUBLISHED SEPARATELY, THE MUSIC (IN FULL SCORE) OF

THE CORALES,

ACCOMPANIED BY THE WHOLE OF THE TEXT, FORMING A COMPLETE HANDY BOOK FOR THE USE OF THE CONGREGATION.

PRICE 6d. IN PAPER. 1s. CLOTH GILT.

London: BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

"CLEARANCE SALE."

Re-building of Show Rooms,

Nos. 49 & 50, NEW BOND STREET.

MESSRS CHAPPELL & CO. beg to announce that they will shortly commence Re-building the whole of the above premises; and, owing to temporary diminution of space, now offer their immense Stock of New and Second-hand Pianofortes, Organs, Harmoniums, Alexandre Organs, American Organs, and Pipe Organs, at greatly reduced prices for Cash.

ALEXANDRE ORGAN HARMONIUM, from 3 to 120 Guineas.

AMERICAN ORGANS, from 12 to 125 Guineas.

ALEXANDRE ORGANS, from 15 to 200 Guineas.

PIANINOS, from 20 Guineas.

COTTAGE PIANOS, from 27 Guineas.

OBLIQUES, from 50 Guineas.

GRANDS, from 75 Guineas.

HARMONIUMS, from £1 5s. per Quarter.

PIPE ORGANS, for Chancel, Church, or Drawing-room, from 50 Guineas.

A Liberal Discount for Cash.

THREE YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRE AND PURCHASE.

HARMONIUMS	From £1 5s. per Quarter.
PIANINOS	" £2 2s. "
COTTAGE PIANOS	" £2 14s. "
OBLIQUES	" £5 0s. "
GRANDS	" £7 10s. "

ILLUSTRATED LISTS FREE BY POST.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND ST.

DIE FLEDERMAUS; OR, THE BAT'S REVENGE.

A COMIC OPERA, IN THREE ACTS.

COMPOSED BY

JOHANN STRAUSS.

					Price s. d.
	OVERTURE	-	-	-	3 0
No. 1.	CHORUS, "On the Baron's natal day"	-	-	-	3 0
2.	SERENADE, "Little Dove that's flown away"	-	-	-	3 0
2 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in A flat	-	-	-	3 0
3.	DUET, "O my Aunt is very ill"	-	-	-	2 0
4.	TRIO, "He thought himself so clever"	-	-	-	4 0
5.	DUET and DANCE, "Let's be off, Sir, on the sly"	-	-	-	3 0
6.	TRIO, "So I must leave thee"	-	-	-	4 0
7.	DRINKING SONG, "Dearest, drink, yes, drink with me"	-	-	-	3 0
7 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	-	-	-	3 0
8.	FINALE, 1st ACT, "I'm not the Baron"	-	-	-	3 0
9.	BALLET MUSIC, composed by HAMILTON CLARKE	-	-	-
10.	CHORUS, "Joy to night"	-	-	-	3 0
11.	SONG and CHORUS (ad lib.), "The Custom of my Country"	-	-	-	3 0
12.	LAUGHING SONG, "I never yet have ever met"	-	-	-	3 0
12 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	-	-	-	3 0
13.	DUET, "See him glaring"	-	-	-	4 0
14.	SONG, "Poland, oh how I love you"	-	-	-	3 0
14 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in C	-	-	-	3 0
15.	FINALE, 2nd ACT, "Champagne, Sparkling Wine"	-	-	-	4 0
16.	SONG, "To-day we'll happy be"	-	-	-	3 0
16 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	-	-	-	3 0
17.	SONG, "Thus if a young maid I'm playing"	-	-	-	4 0
17 bis.	Ditto ditto Arranged in F	-	-	-	4 0
18.	FINALE, "To Baron here I'll give my hand"	-	-	-	3 0

The MUSIC Adapted, and partly Composed, for the Alhambra Theatre, by

HAMILTON CLARKE.

The Complete Opera Arranged and Adapted for the Alhambra Theatre, with new Choruses and Ballet Music, by HAMILTON CLARKE	5 0
The Entire Opera Arranged for the Pianoforte, by HAMILTON CLARKE	2 6
The Alhambra Fledermaus Quadrilles, by M. Kiko	4 0

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9 CONDUIT STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Wholesale Warehouse—10 & 11, LITTLE MARLBOROUGH STREET, REGENT STREET.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 55.—No. 25.

SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1877.

PRICE { 4d. Unstamped.
6d. Stamped.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), 23rd June, will be performed
AIDA. Mdme Adeline Patti.
Last Week but Three of the Season, which will terminate on Saturday, 31st July.—Next week there will be Five performances.

On MONDAY next, 25th June (last time this Season), "DON GIOVANNI." Mdme Adeline Patti.

On TUESDAY, 26th June, "DON PASQUALE." Mdle Marimon.

On WEDNESDAY next, 27th June, no performance.

On THURSDAY next, 28th June (first time this Season), "LA TRAVIATA." Mdme Adeline Patti.

On FRIDAY next, 29th June, "FAUST E MARGHERITA." Margherita, Mdle Albani.

On SATURDAY next, 30th June, his Royal Highness the Duke of SAXE COBURG-GOTHA's Grand Opera Seria, entitled "SANTA CHIARA." Carlotta, Mdle D'Angeri.

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.
The Box Office under the portico of the theatre is open from Ten till Five.
Pit tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; Amphitheatre, 3s. 6d.

C R Y S T A L P A L A C E.

GREAT HANDEL FESTIVAL.

MONDAY, June 25 MESSIAH.
WEDNESDAY, June 27 SELECTION.
FRIDAY, June 29 ISRAEL IN EGYPT.

Principal Vocalists:
Mdme ADELINA PATTI
and Mdle ALBANI.
Mdme LEMMENS-SHERINGTON
and
Mdme EDITH WYNNE.
Mdme SUTER.
Mdme PATEY.

Mr VERNON RIGBY.
Mr EDWARD LLOYD.
Mr CUMMINGS.

Signor FOLI.
Herr HENSCHEL.
Mr SANTLEY.

So's Organ—Mr W. T. Best. Organist—Mr Willing.
Conductor—Sir MICHAEL COSTA.

Prices of Sets of Tickets (including admission): Central Area, Three Guineas and Two and a Half Guineas; Galleries, Two and a Half Guineas and Two Guineas.
Single Stall Tickets, 25s., 21s., and 15s.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF

THE PRINCESS Y. DE NAB BEY,
THE COUNTESS OF TANKERVILLE,
THE BARONNE DE PÉÑEDO,
THE LADY JODRELL,
MRS R. TWING.

THE SISTERS WALDTEUFEL'S CONCERT will take place at LARGHAM HALL, 43, Great Portland Street, W., on TUESDAY Evening, 26th June, 1877, to commence at Half-past Eight o'clock. Tickets—Sofa Stalls, One Guinea; Stalls, Half-a-Guinea; may be had of Messrs Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street; Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; Novello, Ewer & Co., 1, Berners Street; Lamborn Cock, 62, New Bond Street; Cramer & Co., 199, Regent Street; and of Mdme Vve J. WALDTEUFEL, 72, Regent Street, W.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Eleventh Season, 1877. The FIFTY-SIXTH CONCERT, for the BENEFIT of Herr SCHUBERTH, will take place at the LARGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street, on THURSDAY, 5th July, 1877. Conductor—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Full particulars will be duly announced. H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec.
244, Regent Street, W.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, HAYMARKET.

Debut of Mdle Ethelka Gerster.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), 23rd June, will be performed
(first time this Season), BELLINI's Opera, "LA SONNAMBULA." Elvina, Signor Fancelli; Il Conte Rodolfo, Signor Del Puente; Alessio, Signor Fallar; Un Notaro, Signor Grazzi; Lisa, Mdle Robiati; Teresa, Mdme Lablache; and Aminta, Mdle Ethelka Gerster (her first appearance in England). To conclude with the new Ballet Divertissement, invented and arranged by Mdme Katti Lanner, entitled "LES NYMPHES DE LA FORÊT." Mdles Marie Muller, Luna, Anna, Sophie, and Mdme Katti Lanner; supported by the Corps de Ballet and the pupils of the National Training School for Dancing.

Next Week.—Extra Night.

On MONDAY next, 25th June, "LES HUGUENOTS." Raoul di Nangis, Herr Wachtel; Il Conte di Nevers, Signor del Puente; Il Conte di San Bris, Signor Rota; Marcello, Herr Rokitsansky; Margherita di Valois, Mdle Alwina Valleria; Urbano, Mdme Trebelli; and Valentina, Mdle Caroline Balla (her second appearance in that character). The Opera will terminate with the Grand Duet at the end of the fourth act.

On TUESDAY next, 26th June, "FAUST." Faust, Signor Fancelli; Mephistopheles, M. Faure; Valentin, Signor del Puente; Siebel, Mdme Trebelli; Martha, Mdme Lablache; and Margherita, Mdme Christine Nilsson.

On THURSDAY next, 28th June, second appearance of Mdle Ethelka Gerster.

Extra Night.

On FRIDAY next, 29th June, a favourite Opera.
On SATURDAY next, 30th June, WAGNER's Opera, "LOHENGRIIN." Elsa di Brabant, Mdme Christine Nilsson.

Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir MICHAEL COSTA.

The doors will open at Eight; the Opera will commence at Half-past Eight o'clock.

Stalls, 25s.; Dress Circle, 15s.; Amphitheatre Stalls (first two rows), 10s. 6d., Other Rows, 7s. 6d.; Gallery Stalls, 5s.; Gallery, 2s. 6d.

Places may be obtained of Mr Bailey, at the Box-Office of Her Majesty's Theatre, under the portico of the Opera-house, Haymarket, which is open daily from Ten till Five.

MR HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.—LAST CONCERT.—

The DIRECTOR'S BENEFIT, THURSDAY Evening next, 26th June, St JAMES'S HALL, at Eight o'clock. Bach's great unaccompanied Motet for double choir, "Sing ye to the Lord;" Mendelssohn's Hymn, "Hear my Prayer;" and the most celebrated choral pieces from the choir repertoire. Soloists—Miss Robertson, Mdme Patey; Mr Edward Lloyd, Herr Henschel, Mr Santley. Tickets, 7s., 3s., 2s., 1s., at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF HER GRACE THE DUCHESS OF WELLINGTON.

MR OBERTHÜR'S MATINÉE MUSICALE, at WILLIS'S

ROOMS, THURSDAY, 5th July. Artists: Meesdames Zimeri, Bunson, Emily Moore, Frost, V. Trust, M. Beard; Messrs A. v. Boehme, J. Ludwig-Albert, Th. Frantzen, and Mr Oberthür. On this occasion Mr Oberthür's new Concertstück, "Orpheus," will be performed, as also his Grand National Quartet for Four Harps, which was played by command before Her Majesty the Queen. Tickets, 10s. 6d. and 7s.; to be had at Schott's, Lonsdale's, and of Mr OBERTHÜR, 14, Talbot Road, Westbourne Park, W.

MR WILBYE COOPER begs to announce the LAST of the THREE CONCERTS, at LARGHAM HALL, SATURDAY Afternoon, 7th July, at Three o'clock, under the immediate patronage of the Right Hon. Lord and Lady John Manners, Sir R. W. Carden, Sir Albert and Lady Woods, the Hon. G. O. Talbot, Captain Hutton, Captain Heathorn, R.A., Captain J. O. A. Lewis, Edward Bullen, Esq., Dr Llewellyn Thomas; Mrs B'akeway, &c. Artists—Misses Marian Lynton, Janet Clayton, Gertrude Lawes, Siedle, Ellen Horne, Edith Wrenn, Van Senden, Palmer, Made'ena Cronin, and Mmes Barri and Tonneller; Messrs Urio, Arthur Hooper, Dudley Thomas, Thurlay Beale, Henry Pope, Stanley Smith, Gerard Henry, Michael Watson, Zerbini, Herr Oberthür, F. H. Cozens, Barri, Vascchetti, and Richard Blagrove. Tickets, 5s. and 3s.; at 19, Great Portland Street; and Lonsdale's, 26, Old Bond Street.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, JULY 3.

HERR LEHMEYER'S SECOND PIANOFORTE RECITAL will take place on TUESDAY, the 3rd July, on which occasion he will be assisted by his piano pupils, Miss Ada Jeffery, Miss Abud, Miss Van Dyenssen, Miss Harvey. Vocalists—Mdme Louise Gage, Miss Funelli; Mr Welby-Wallace, Mr Mayhew, Mr Craig, and distinguished amateurs. All particulars of Herr LEHMEYER, 7, Store Street.

MR SIMS REEVES' BENEFIT CONCERT, ROYAL ALBERT HALL, WEDNESDAY, JULY 4th, at Eight o'clock.

Vocalists.
M^{me} CHRISTINE NILSSON, Miss ANNA WILLIAMS,
M^{me} ANTOINETTE STERLING,
Miss HELEN DALTON, and M^{me} TREBELL.
Mr SIMS REEVES, Mr EDWARD LLOYD Sig. FOLL, and Mr SANTLEY.

Solo Violin—Herr WILHELMJ.

The London Vocal Union (under the direction of Mr Fred Walker).

Conductor—Mr SYDNEY NAYLOR.

Boxes: Grand Tier (ten seats in each), Four Guineas; Loggia (eight seats in each), Three Guineas; Second Tier (five seats in each), Two Guineas; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (numbered), 5s.; Balcony (unnumbered), 2s. 6d.; and 5,000 admissions, One Shilling. Tickets at the Royal Albert Hall; Austin's Office, St James's Hall; and usual Agents. Correct book of the words to be had only at the Hall.

WANTED, for an important Girl's School, a MUSIC GOVERNESS, age from 30 to 40. She must be thoroughly competent to prepare pupils for the Oxford Local Examination, and must produce testimonials from some musical Professor. All particulars can be ascertained by addressing—"M. G. B.," care of Messrs Kelly & Co., 23, King Street, Parliament Street, S.W.

VIOLINIST WANTED.

WANTED, by a Teacher of Dancing in Ireland, a YOUNG MAN, one who plays piano preferred. Personal interview required. Constant employment; salary liberal. Address—"F. B.," 28, Brunswick Square, London.

WANTED, by a Gentleman of good education, a Situation as ASSISTANT in a London Music Warehouse. Good pianist; good references.—O. H., care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PRIZE COMPETITION in MUSICAL COMPOSITION.

A Prize of FIVE GUINEAS is offered by the Proprietor of the Musical Examiner for the best ORIGINAL Trio for equal voices. For particulars see the Musical Examiner for July; price 3d.; of all booksellers; free by post, 3jd. Office: 11, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

"STAR GAZING."

MR CUMMINGS will sing his new Song, "STAR GAZING," at the Concert to be given at the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace Road, for the Organ Fund of Holy Trinity Church, Westminster, on Wednesday evening, 27th June.

"MY LADY SLEEPS."

MR WELBYE-WALLACE will sing IGNACE GIBSON'S Serenade, "MY LADY SLEEPS," at Herr Lehmeier's Concert, at St George's Hall, 3rd July.

SIGNOR and the MDLLES BADIA have arrived in London for the Season. All communications for public or private Concerts, &c., to be addressed to 47, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park; or to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR FREDERIC WOOD (Primo Tenore), of the Wilhelmj Concert Party, is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs HODGE & ESSEX, 6 and 7, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MISS ELENA NORTON, Soprano Vocalist (composer of "The Rose and the Ring"), is open for ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c., &c. Address, care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.; or to Mr D'Oyley Carte, 20, Charing Cross.

MDLLE IDA CORANI having returned to Town, requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Opera or Concert be addressed to her Agent, Mr W. B. HEALEY, care of Messrs Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MRS OSGOOD requests that all communications respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorio and Miscellaneous Concerts may be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MDME LOUISE GAGE (Contralto) is open to ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, Soirées, &c. Address, MDME LOUISE GAGE, No. 17, Holland Road, Kensington, W., or care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

MR GERARD COVENTRY is at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Address, care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR FRANZ RUMMEL, Professor of the Pianoforte at the Conservatoire, Brussels, begs to announce that he has arrived in Town for the Season. Letters may be addressed to 43, Patehall Road, N.W.; or to the care of Messrs SCHOTT & Co., 159, Regent Street, W.

MDLLE VICTORIA BUNSEN will sing C. OBERTHÜR'S admired Song, "JE VOUDRAIS ÊTRE" (with harp accompaniment), at the Composer's Matinée Musicale, at Willis's Rooms, Thursday, July 5.

MDME EMILIE GREY (Solo Harpist, Italian Opera Concerts, &c., &c.) requests that all Communications as to Concerts, &c., may be addressed to her at her residence, 47, Charleswood Street, Pimlico, S.W., or to the Musical World Office, 244, Regent Street, London.

PATRONESS.

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

PATRON.

H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Choir Benevolent Fund. A SPECIAL CHORAL SERVICE

Will be held, by the kind permission of the Very Rev. the Dean, in aid of the above Fund, at ST PAUL'S CATHEDRAL,

ON

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 28, 1877,

AT HALF-PAST SEVEN O'CLOCK,

On which occasion the Choir will consist of Members of the principal Cathedral and Collegiate Choirs in England, numbering about 200 voices.

The SERMON will be preached by the Right Rev. BISHOP CLAUGHTON, D.D.

A COLLECTION IN AID OF THE FUND WILL BE MADE DURING THE SERVICE.

Tickets of admission to Reserved Seats under the Dome may be obtained on application to Messrs Novello, Ewer & Co., 1, Berners Street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen Street, E.C.; and to Mr Lamborn Cock, 63, New Bond Street, W.

Annual Subscribers of £1 ls. to the Fund have the privilege of receiving Four Tickets.

Donations and Annual Subscriptions will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the Secretary, Mr CHARLES FRY, 1, Berners Street, W.

AIDA.—Vocal Score, 8s.; Pianoforte Score, special English Edition, with full description of the plot and words to the leading subject (an excellent guide during performance), 4s. net.

OTELLO. Complete Vocal Score, 3s. 6d.; Pianoforte, 1s. net.

Songs, Pianoforte Arrangements of these Operas, &c.

LAMPERTI'S TREATISE on the ART of SINGING.

The English Translation by his Pupil, J. C. GRIFFITH. 5s. net.

NEW SONGS with ITALIAN and ENGLISH WORDS.

PINSUTI.—"Donna gentil" ("Lady most fair"), sung by Mr Santley, always encored, 4s. "Welcome, pretty Primrose" (English words), sung by Mdle Zarc Thalberg, always encored, 4s.

ROTOLI.—"Opera" ("Hope then"), 3s. "Mia sposa sara la mia bandiera" ("My bride shall be my flag"), sung by Signor Ootogni, 4s. "E tu voi sai" ("O couldst thou know"), 3s.

TOSTI.—"Ti rapirei" ("Away we'd fly"), 3s. 6d. "Serenata d'un Angelo" ("An angel serenade"), 3s. "Lamento d'amore" ("Love's lament"), 4s.

VASCHETTI.—"Il trasporto" ("Rapture"), sung with great applause by Mdle Ida Corani, whose portrait is on the title-page, 5s. All for half-price.

Ricordi's Depot, 23, Charles Street, Middlesex Hospital, London, W.

Just Published.

NEW PIANOFORTE PIECE BY MADAME OURY. "CONSOLATION."

Easy of execution, but melodious and effective. Price 4s.; Half-price Cash or Stamps.

"We wonder who has not, in the hour of trouble, more than once derived comfort from the sweet sounds such as David must have used to mollify the troubled spirit of Saul. What better name, then, to give a graceful strain of peaceful melody, such as must convey to the sorrowing heart feelings of rest and sympathy, than 'Consolation'?" Such is the title of a charming new pianoforte composition by that indefatigable and prolific writer, Mdme Oury; prolific indeed, for the piece bears no lower an Opus number than 185. Its flow of peaceful melody, enhanced by the delicacy and variety of the accompaniment, and harmonised in the masterly style of an experienced writer, well fulfils the object of the title. In every sense of the word is 'Consolation' an admirable piece of music, and it must rank among Mdme Oury's best efforts of the kind. As a morceau de salon it is of moderate difficulty, and of sufficient brilliancy to display the capacities of a proficient performer. The composition is dedicated to Mrs Graver-Browne, of Morley Hall, and published by Messrs Paterson & Sons, of Edinburgh, Glasgow, &c."

PATERSON & SONS, 27, GEORGE STREET.

BALFE'S NEW TRIO in A, Played by MARIE KREBS, JOACHIM, and PIATTI, at the Saturday Popular Concerts, will shortly be published. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

(RETROSPECT.)

June 19th.

The Fliegende Holländer was presented on Saturday night, through another Italian version (with an English translation by Mr Josiah Pittman), bearing the title of Il Vascello Fantasma. About the work itself, and, indeed, about Wagner's earlier compositions for the theatre, so much has been written that to add more would rather fatigue than instruct or entertain our opera-going readers. The success of Mdle Albani as Elsa (Lohengrin) and Elizabeth (Tannhäuser) was such as to justify a hope that her Senta would make a worthy companion to the others; and the result more than came up to expectation. She is the veritable fate-struck maiden of whom Heinrich Heine might have dreamt, and against whom the hard-to-please musician "of the future" could scarcely have found a word to utter. She looks the gentle, guileless Senta to the life, and executes the music, trying as it is occasionally for her sympathetic voice, just as well as she impersonates the character. This was at once apparent in the opening scene of the second act—where Senta, while her companions are spinning, and singing to their spinning a melody that Weber himself would not have rejected, sits contemplating the portrait of the condemned navigator, so familiarly known among us as Vanderdecken. Her delivery of the legend was perfect, verse after verse showing increased warmth of feeling. When at length, suddenly, the hero of her reveries appears before her, her acting was fully equal to the occasion; and to the succeeding duet, where, despite the admonitions of Vanderdecken (by this name we must persist in recognising him), Senta resolves on self-sacrifice, Mdle Albani imparted full expression to every phrase, rising to enthusiasm when the irrevocable vow is given. In the final scene, where, overhearing the conversation between Senta and Erik, her plighted lover, the Dutchman, after bitter reproaches, goes back in despair to his ship, Mdle Albani was equally successful; and nothing could be more touchingly eloquent than her delivery of the phrase in which, before throwing herself into the sea, the devoted girl declares that what she has promised will be strictly carried out. M. Maurel, who assumed the character of the hero, evinced great earnestness, and on the whole his dramatic interpretation of the character was decidedly good. With regard to the music, however, those who have heard it sung by our countryman, Mr Santley (first at Drury Lane with Mr George Wood, then at the Lyceum with Mr Carl Rosa), could hardly have been so satisfied with the Frenchman as Wagner himself would have been with the Englishman. The other parts were sustained by Mdle Ghiotti (Mary—the very best we have seen), Signors Carpi, Bagagiolo, and Rosario (Erik, Dalando, and the Pilot). The orchestra, under Signor Vianesi, was admirable, and the overture, with its alternate storm and calm, was played in the most effective manner. The chorus also was good; though, in certain places, the opening scene of the last act, for instance, we think the singers might have been more strictly in tune; and this bearing in mind the difficulty of the task before them. We doubt if the opera has ever been more effectively placed upon the stage. The scenery, by Messrs Dayes & Caney, is picturesque and characteristic, while the management of the two ships, the Norwegian and the "Phantom," in the first and last acts deserves unqualified praise. There was a crowded house, including very many "Wagnerites" in the galleries, who hushed down all applause for the singers until the concluding orchestral notes.

With Mdme Adelina Patti in the theatre, the Barbiere of Rossini is a sine quâ non. If her Zerlina is "the Zerlina of Zerlinas," so is her Rosina the Rosina of Rosinas. She is as much at home with Rossini as with Mozart. Perhaps on no previous occasion, often as we have seen her as Dr Bartolo's recalcitrant ward, has she sung and acted the part more irreproachably than on Friday night. The applause that followed her wonderfully facile execution of "Una voce poco fa," and the duet with Figaro ("Dunque io sono") succeeding it, was richly merited. In the Lesson scene, Mdme Patti, according to custom, introduced a brilliant "valse." Being encored in that, she substituted "Home, sweet home," in English. But these are nothing compared with what she does for Rossini's own music throughout the rest of the opera. Here she stands alone, whether as comedian or vocalist. Signors Piazza, Cotogni, Ciampi, and Ordinas, respectively took the parts of Almaviva, Figaro, Bartolo, and Basilio; the useful Mdme Corsi playing Bertha. The audience was one of the fullest of the season.

The second performance of Aida being postponed in consequence of the temporary indisposition of Mdme Scalchi, who had played in the Favorita the night previously, Don Giovanni was substituted. Two trying mezzo-soprano parts, following immediately one after the other, cannot reasonably be expected from an artist whose voice is a contralto.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

(RETROSPECT.)

June 12th.

Mr Mapleson's theatre has now been open to the public about six weeks, and yet in that short space of time he has produced no less than eleven operas—Norma, the Trovatore, Un Ballo in Maschera, the Traviata, Lucia, Lucrezia Borgia, La Figlia del Reggimento, the Barbiere, Robert le Diable, Faust, and Rigoletto—all more or less efficiently put on the stage. This, when it is remembered, that after taking possession of the house he had little more than a month at command to make the necessary preparations, is creditable alike to himself, Sir Michael Costa, and to those in every department who work in his behalf. The prompt "mounting" so early in the season of an opera which demands such a profusion of scenic accessories as Robert le Diable, and then, again, of Faust, hardly less exacting in this respect, shows that the director of Her Majesty's Theatre has zealous and intelligent auxiliaries under his control. The general representation of Meyerbeer's first great opera, composed for the Parisian stage—the opera which gave convincing proof of how its composer could make himself German, French, and Italian all in one, and a great work, notwithstanding the sneers of Schumann (who never could have written it)—is remarkably effective. Mr Mapleson has already brought forward several new singers, who, if not all as eminently successful as could be desired, have, in two or three instances, met with ready and general acceptance. Among these stands out prominently Mdle Caroline Salla, whose debut as Amalia, in the Ballo in Maschera was so favourably noticed, and whose Alice more than fulfilled the expectation raised by that event. To give a fair interpretation of this character demands more than one quality from an artist. She must be an actress as well as a singer, and each in proportionate degrees. Mdle Salla is in possession of both faculties, being earnest, impulsive, and intelligent as an actress, endowed with a voice that charms as well as penetrates, and which she can use to excellent purpose in the various grades of emphasis and expression. That her voice, however, is more essentially a mezzo-soprano than a high soprano becomes clear from all she does; and though her dramatic power is incontestable, the less she is concerned with certain operas of Meyerbeer, &c., the better. She is a charming artist in all respects, and a genuine acquisition—therefore all the more worth tending. Her Alice is one of the most poetically conceived and carried out portrayals of the character we have witnessed, and her singing is marked by legitimate and unforced expression; but certain parts of the opera tax her rather severely, and the result is that she has been indisposed since the second performance, though we are happy to see her announced to play again on Friday. The return of Signor Foli to the stage as Bertram was welcome. He has a noble voice, we need hardly say, and looks the part of the "fiend-father" (as he used to be called, a long while ago, in the Covent Garden English version) to admiration. Perhaps few could sing the music of Robert just now with more ease and uniform correctness than Signor Fancelli; but he makes little attempt to give dramatic force to the character. Mdle Valleria is an Isabella to whom hardly an exception can be fairly taken, Signor Rinaldini an excellent Raimbaut, and Mdme Kattie Lanner inventress of the admirable arrangement of the ballet, in what Wagner would style (not without some reason) the "doubtful" scene of the apparition of the Nuns, is an Abbess the bringing back to life of whom makes us almost pardon Bertram for the object he had in view in contriving it.

Mdme Christine Nilsson has been now here since the beginning of the season, and every amateur is desirous of seeing so great, accomplished, and, it may be added, versatile an artist in other parts than Violetta, Lucia, and Margherita—though, it is true, she plays all three in perfection. To analyse her performances in the familiar works of Verdi, Donizetti, and Gounod would be equivalent to telling our opera-going readers for the twentieth time that which they could just as easily describe for themselves. For this reason it is consoling to find her announced for Desdemona, with that old favourite, Signor Tamberlik, and M. Faure, chief of dramatic baritone, in Rossini's once famous and always welcome opera of Otello.

Mr Mapleson's new tenor, Signor Carrion, who made his debut as Gennaro, in Lucrezia Borgia, on the occasion of the last memorable performance of Mdle Tietjens, has since appeared as Almaviva, in the Barbiere, with Mdme Trebelli—a Rosina to whose voice the music, as originally written, is precisely fitted, and who introduces Offenbach's "C'est l'Espagne," in the Lesson scene, with which she creates an effect that would have astonished, if it failed to please, the composer—Signor Del Puente, a real Italian Figaro, Signor Zoboli as Bartolo, Signor Foli as Basilio, and Mdme Lablache as Berta. The part of the Spanish Cavalier is hardly well suited to Signor Carrion, notwithstanding the fact that he has a voice of agreeable quality, which he uses now and then to very good purpose, while acting with a certain ease rendering him more or less acceptable. What militates against him is his somewhat diminutive stature. Signor Carrion has merit, however, despite his shortcomings in respect to bodily presence. Rigoletto introduced to us another new tenor, an English gentleman who, under the assumed name of Signor Talbo, gave a very fair representation of the adventurous Duke of Mantua (what would Victor Hugo say to his King being turned into a Duke, and his "France" into a Mantua?). Signor Talbo has a very pleasing tenor voice, and in his opening air, "Questa o quella," satisfied the audience so well that he was called upon to repeat it. The impression left by his performance generally, however, was that, though manifesting decided promise, and—not forgetting the encore to "La donna è mobile," or that accorded to the quartet in the last act, with which his delivery of the solo "Bella figlia dell' amore" had unquestionably something to do—Signor Talbo has much to learn, and can only be regarded at present as a first class amateur. Mdle Valleria was Gilda, Mdme Trebelli, Maddalena, and Signor Galassi, Rigoletto—to say which must suffice. A new soprano has also joined Mr Mapleson's company, who, equally of English birth, assumes an Italian non de théâtre. Mdle Chiomi has appeared twice as Lucia, in Donizetti's well-known opera, and on the first occasion, especially at the outset, was too nervous to exhibit advantageously whatever ability she may possess. On the second she was more completely mistress of her powers, and in more than one situation created a sensible impression. She has a good and capable voice, which only stands in need of cultivation. She has, moreover, evident dramatic instinct. We must, nevertheless, await further opportunities of adjudging her merits. We doubt, at the same time, the wisdom of her advisers who persuaded her to make her first appearance in a character which had only just before been represented by Mdme Nilsson. M. Faure has hitherto appeared in two characters—Alphonso (Lucrezia) and Mephistophiles (Faust). How admirable he is in each need not be told, but amateurs look forward to his Iago with just as much impatience as they look forward to the Desdemona and Otello of Mdme Nilsson and Signor Tamberlik. The opera on Saturday was the Figlia del Reggimento, in which, once again, Mdle Mila Rodani showed herself the lively, piquant, and thoroughly charming Vivandière recognised from the first. She was received with the greatest favour throughout the opera.

June 19.

The event of last week, and the finest performance as yet of the season, at Mr Mapleson's Theatre, was Rossini's happily revived Otello, in which Mdme Christine Nilsson, Signor Tamberlik, and M. Faure took the leading parts. Few can have forgotten the impression created by Mdme Nilsson when she first appeared as Desdemona in this country, at Her Majesty's Opera, Drury Lane, seven years ago; none can have forgotten that Otello is the part which exhibited Signor Tamberlik, when last among us, at his best; nor can there be a question that, since Ronconi, there has been no such Iago on the operatic stage as M. Faure. This, added to an imposing Elmira (Brabantio) like Signor Foli, an excellent Roderigo like the new tenor, Signor Carrion (here quite at home), a not less excellent Emilia in Mdle Robiati, and Signor Broccolini, as a fair representative of the Doge, made the cast of Rossini's opera seria—fair counterpart to his comic masterpiece, Il Barbiere di Siviglia, composed in the same year (1816)—one of more than ordinary strength, and the result was, as might have been expected, a success. Mdme Nilsson's Desdemona is another proof of the marked progress she is making, step by step, towards becoming a tragic lyric comedian of the first class, and, in fact, reaching the goal to which she has afforded more than one convincing proof that her ambition tends. Without describing her Desdemona scene after scene, and content with recording that on each successive occasion she rose with the dramatic requirements of the situation, we may simply state that the final act, where Desdemona is stabbed by her jealous and infuriated husband, was a fitting climax to all that had gone before. About Mdme Nilsson's execution of the music it is almost superfluous to speak. Still, it is only just to add that the famous "Willow Song" ("Assisa a piè d'un salice"), with the fanciful ornaments that might seem to, but do not actually, take from its pathetic character—so artistically has the composer supplied them—could not have been given with more touching simplicity, or the exquisite prayer, "Deh! calma o Ciel," its pendant, with more true devotional feeling. Signor Tamberlik, a worthy Otello to such a Desdemona, was received with the unanimous cordiality due to an old and well-deserving favourite. That the voice of this famous tenor, who at one time divided with Mario the sympathies of the operatic world, is not what it was in its prime may be easily understood. But though physical resources may be impaired, art once acquired remains to the very end; and Signor Tamberlik is now, as has been since we knew him, a consummate artist. In purity and distinctness of articulation, in declamatory power, and in the delivery of recitative, after the form with which Rossini, first among Italian composers, invested it, this Roman gentleman has had few competitors. That Signor Tamberlik is troubled with what we conventionally style the "tremolo" is true; but, like his predecessor, Rubini, he had it from the beginning—at least so far as we are able to remember. Nevertheless, even this, at emotional periods, serves him to excellent purpose; and when reaching a climax—as, for example, in the finely dramatic scene with Iago, where he gives full vent to his declamatory power—the effect is as of old. The duet between Otello and Iago was, in fact, as always, one of the most striking passages of the opera. Better rendered than by Signor Tamberlik and M. Faure, each vieing with the other to realise the intention of the composer—shackled by an indifferent reflex of a scene which should stand conspicuously prominent—it could hardly have been; and the unanimous encore evoked by so stirring a peroration was an obvious consequence. We are not thinking here of the high chest note given out with such extraordinary force, even now, by Signor Tamberlik, but of the dramatic intensity with which the entire duet was given, and in which M. Faure, with such vigour and intelligence, supported him. In the final scene with Desdemona Signor Tamberlik exhibited the histrionic genius for which he has always been noted; and, with Mdme Nilsson as his coadjutor, the impression created was not one easy to forget. The curtain fell amid applause from all parts of the house. How satisfactory was the general performance of Otello, with Sir Michael Costa, Rossini's friend and compatriot, at the conductor's desk, may be taken for granted.

The Trovatore, with Herr Wachtel as Manrico, was repeated earlier in the week. The German tenor is no stranger here, nor are his peculiar characteristics forgotten. He possesses still a splendid voice, which, in some degree, he has apparently learnt the art of subduing—take, for example, his delivery of the address to Leonora, "Ah si ben mio." In "Di quella pira," the sequel to this, moreover, he displayed all his well-remembered energy; but in other respects his singing and acting remain precisely as they were wont to be—now and then somewhat artificial and over-strained. Nevertheless, Herr Wachtel obtained frequent applause, and was compelled to repeat "Ah si ben mio."

—O—

A LETTER FROM FERDINAND HILLER.

DEAR DR WYLDE,—You are a charming man, producing my music and writing such nice things on me. Only you follow the first edition of Fétis, which is my damnation—the excellent man gave me six years more than I have—a dreadful thing for a young girl or an old composer. I am born the 24th October, 1811, two days after the celebrated Liszt, and in the season of the best wine of this century—consequently I have only thirty-five years. I hope you will announce your error in the Times—it is not without importance for the war which is going on. My thanks to King Alfred, and always very truly yours,

FERD. HILLER.

I never was a pupil of Rink—but I heard him once play the organ in a most splendid manner.

June 12, 1877.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL.

Programme of Organ Recitals by Mr W. T. Best.

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 21st:—

Allegretto and Adagio Religioso from the Symphony to the Hymn of Praise	...	Mendelssohn.
Andante, from a Symphony (poethumous)	...	Mozart.
(a) Gavotte, F major	...	G. Martini.
(b) Fugue, B flat major	...	H. Smart.
Fantasia with Chorale, G major	...	W. Taubert.
Canzonetta, "In distant lands I rove"	...	C. Haesling.
Overture on the Austrian Hymn	...

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 23rd:—

Tocatta con Fuga, D minor	...	Bach.
Adagio from the Sestet for Two Horns and Stringed Instruments, Op. 81	...	Beethoven.
Organ Concerto, F major	...	Handel.
(a) Serenade, "Adieu aux Jeunes Mariés"	...	Meyerbeer.
(b) Wedding March for the Organ	...	W. T. Best.
Allegretto from a Quartet	...	Haydn.
Finale, Allegro Vivace for the Organ	...	G. Morand.

Pitch.

(From "Mayfair.")

Mr Alexander J. Ellis has sent us a stupendously learned pamphlet "On the Measurement and Settlement of Musical Pitch," read before the Society of Arts on a recent occasion. Tremblingly we were threading our way through its pages, stumbling over Arabic scales, and keeping at a respectful distance from "dissident beats," when suddenly we came upon the familiar name of our dear old friend, Mr J. A. Hipkins. Everything became light immediately. Mr Hipkins is the most trustworthy man in the world, and he belongs to the firm of Messrs Broadwood & Co., who make by far the best pianos in the world. A movement in any way connected with two such names must be in the right direction. From this pamphlet it appears that Mr Hipkins, for the last thirty years, has been the "chiel amangst us taking notes," going about to all the concerts with his tuning-fork, measuring the tonal conditions of each band, and of each instrument individually, and jotting down everything in an unostentatious pocket-book. The result of these investigations, generously placed at the disposal of Mr Ellis, and profusely acknowledged by that gentleman, is of course invaluable. In addition to this, Mr Ellis records many interesting experiments made by himself and others with all kinds of tuning instruments, and the collection of scientific materials and historic dates contained in the narrow compass of twenty odd pages is perhaps unprecedented for completeness. As to the author's competence to speak on the subject there can be no doubt. His work in the field of early English scholarship is generally appreciated, and whatever may be thought of the practicability of his proposed spelling reform, it at any rate proves his intimate acquaintance with the phonetic peculiarities of our language. From the sound of the spoken word to the sound of music there is but a step, and little surprise was felt when Mr Ellis entered the field of acoustics with his translation of Professor Helmholtz's standard work.

As regards the present pamphlet, it may conveniently be divided into three parts: a scientific investigation, a historic sketch of grievances, and a practical proposal for remedying the latter. The first mentioned portion lies entirely beyond the scope of a non-technical journal. It is chiefly concerned with the difficulty of ascertaining the exact pitch of an orchestra—difficulties which must be of a truly appalling nature if we are to believe the statement of Dr Stone, here reproduced, to the effect that during a performance at one of our Italian operas "as many as five different pitches were in use at the same time." Such a revelation must be most distressing to the ingenious amateur, who firmly believes in the unrivalled perfection of our operatic bands. But the critic also, who may have been "pitching" into some unfortunate débutant on the score of faulty intonation, ought to feel some qualms of conscience. If Herr Appun's "Tonometer" really offers a safeguard against such eccentricities, the sooner it is generally adopted the better. On turning to the historic side of the question, we are struck by a singular physiological fact. Dr Stone states that "if two notes are sounded at nearly the same time, a player is almost certain to tune to the sharper of the two; and the general upward tendency thus indicated, although hardly perceptible in a single instance, leads, in the course of years, to the most important variations. Since Handel's time—that is, in little more than a century—the average orchestral pitch has gradually risen by more than a semitone; so that a piece written by that composer, say, in the key of E natural is actually played nowadays in that of F. But the same mysterious power is still at work, and Mr Hipkins's "extreme" pitch of 1874 has become the "mean" this year—the highest pitch ever obtained being that used at the Wagner Festival, which may account for some amount of "flat" singing noticeable on that occasion. People who, with Beethoven, believe in an innate and peculiar character of each individual key may deplore the radical change thus caused. But in instrumental music the consequences are, upon the whole, less serious than might at first sight be apprehended. Violas and basses may change the thickness of their strings, and even the more tenacious horns and clarionets can be made to conform to the higher demands of the age. But there is one element remaining stationary in the universal movement. The human voice steadfastly refuses to yield to what Mr Longfellow, in questionable Latin, would call the "exclaior" principle. A modern soprano is not a tenth of a note higher than that taxed with almost superhuman difficulties in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony; hence the natural objection on the part of singers to the involuntary transposition of their favourite airs by various fractions of a semitone. The most adequate remedy for the evils thus arising was some time ago adopted by the French legislature. A so-called diapason normal was established considerably below the modern concert pitch, and this has been since adopted by most of the Continental centres. England alone has stood up for the liberty of the subject, the result being a state of confusion at which the intelligent foreigner stands aghast. Messrs Broadwood find it necessary to tune their pianos to three or more pitches, and the differences of diapason existing amongst our various concert and opera bands cannot but be detrimental to the purity of intonation, especially as regards wind instruments and singers.

While speaking of our Italian operas, we may as well correct the popular prejudice of their having adopted the French diapason. So far from this being the case, they are only a fifth of a semitone below the absurdly high Philharmonic pitch. An attempt at reform made some years ago by Mr Sims Reeves, the popular tenor, seems to have remained without lasting effect, and the necessity of public intervention in the matter is established by Mr Ellis beyond the possibility of contradiction. But we are by no means certain as to the practical value of his suggestions. The different methods advocated by him, with regard to vocal and instrumental, ancient and modern music, contain the germs of infinite disputes, and his suggestion that "the pitch selected should be published with the music" is utterly impracticable. Palliative measures will not meet the case. The only hope of success lies in our adopting the example of France. Let the Government for once abandon its indifference in matters of taste. Let a law be passed, establishing a normal pitch, which is to be engraved on every tuning-fork, as the lion is on plate; the use of any tuning instrument without this hall-mark, to be illegal. For want of a thorough measure of this kind, we prefer, on pessimistic grounds, to let things go on in their old way till the nuisance has become intolerable, and legislative interference is a matter of absolute necessity.

To a future royal commission, sitting on this subject, the perusal of Mr Ellis's brochure cannot be recommended too strongly. In the mean time we wish, in return for much information, to point out a passage bearing on his favourite topic which we venture to say, is new to him and most of our readers. It contains probably one of the earliest references to the question, and introduces for the first time the word diapason in the English, or more properly the Scotch language. It is from "The Complaynt of Scotland," a prose idyl of the time of Henry VIII., that the following charming bit of euphuism is taken. "On the other side of that river there was a green bank full of rammel trees, whar there was mony small birds hoppand fra bush to twist singan melodious reports of natural music, in accords of measure of diapason prolations, tripla, and diatesseron, that heavenly harmony appeared to be artificial music." But to decide to what diapason those voices on the banks and braes were tuned might be a puzzle even for Mr Hipkins and Mr Ellis.

—o—
To J. C. Burnand, Esq.

SIR,—The gross grasshopper plague in the United States has been thoroughly studied by the doat Entomological Commission. Professor Riley believes that the worst of the pest in Arkansas and Texas is over.

In some places only 25 per cent. of the eggs are hatched, and he thinks that a combined movement of farmers may prevent much harm being done. The spread of the insects is greatly due to the reckless destruction of birds by hunters. In Missouri a law has been passed compelling able-bodied men between twelve and sixty years of age to assist in measures against grasshoppers for two days each week during the spring months. In Nebraska public prayers are offered up. Can you aid us, without over mental strain?—Yours, in advance,

Thomas Abder.

DRESDEN.—The number of pupils at the Conservatory, from April 1st, 1876, to April 1st, 1877, was 556. On the last-named date there were 367, 199 belonging to the Conservatory proper, and 168 to the Elementary School. 392 were natives of Saxony; 93 of other parts of Germany. 71 came from abroad:—18 Austrian, 1 Swiss, 1 Dutch, 8 American, 13 English, 26 Russian, 1 Dane, and 2 Turkish. The Conservatory now enjoys a Government grant.

(From "Punch.")

Diary of my Ride to Khiva.

(Diary continued, and forwarded by Private Wire.)

Saturday after last.—Gone wrong again. Got a new horse at Gladitzova (on sale or return), and a new boy, who said he knew the way. Discharged new boy at third mile-post. Met a man, who said that wasn't Khiva in the distance, but another place. Took first turning to the right. Thaw. Summer beginning.

Mid-day, Saturday.—Came up with a private caravan, consisting of an aged Moldavian, an old Wallachian, a Merryvianian (such a funny fellow!), a couple of Kirghiz-men, and one Roumanian from Koloi Hatchski. The old Wallachian, a bald man without any moustache or beard, was very unwell. He said he'd make his will, and leave me everything if I would only cure him. Felt his pulse. Having no medicine by me, gave him some of Mr Brillantine's Essential Regenerative Stimuloso—(a powerful oil for strengthening and darkening the hair. N.B.—Here would be a fine opportunity for taking advantage of my riding to Khiva as a travelling Advertising Agent. Let everybody who has any thing to puff send out samples at once to me, and I'll try 'em on the Khans and other people! My charges will be moderate, but payment in advance, to my agent in London, is absolutely indispensable. No Prior Pay, no Posterior Puff!)—He drank it all, and became insensible. We are stopping on our road, awaiting the consequences anxiously.

In the evening amused the Party with the Learned Pig, cribbage (won five games out of six), and an acrobatic performance from Our Boys. Fair Circassian sulky.

Midnight.—Patient still insensible.

1 A.M. Sunday.—Effect of Regenerating Stimulant gradually perceptible on the bald Wallachian. Hair sprouting out in various parts. Patient recovering consciousness: irritable. He is suffering from an entire new illness, which, on the homœopathic principle, has driven out the other. It makes him fretful, like cutting his teeth, only that this is cutting his hair.

3 A.M.—Whiskers appearing. Patient restless and feverish.

4 A.M.—Bald head suddenly breaking out into a sort of brown stubble. Patient using violent language in his native tongue. To soothe him, his friends sing a part-song, and play curious musical instruments.

5 A.M.—Hair two inches long on head. First appearance of moustaches. Lengthening and darkening of eyelashes. Patient being held down in bed.

6 A.M.—Rapid growth of beard, moustaches, and hair of head. A crisis.—We sit on him all at once, and place the Pig on him to keep him warm. His friends still singing and playing on instruments. Wickski all round. Daylight.

7 A.M.—Thank Heaven! Patient asleep. Crisis past. He is recovering, after an entire change of hair produced by one dose of Brillantine's Regenerative Stimuloso, sold in bottles for 3s. 6d. upwards. Apply to me, through my agent in town. None genuine without my signature. I re-name it on the spot, the "Khivan Curative Compound." Pig spells it out on the Alphabet. This will be a point for the Show. When I ask him what's the best remedy for anything, he'll spell out "Khivan Curative Compound," and I shall say that's the Pig's al-litter-ation. The jeu de mot will be sold with the bottle, and some allowance made to the purchaser on its return. More wickski. All to bed.

Sunday.—Spent it becomingly. Rang bells, as if for Church. Then all slept, as if during a sermon. Heard Pig his catechism. Set an excellent example to the four Tartar boys, and taught them one of Bishop's glees. The boys stood in a row, with their hands behind them, and their chins up in the air. I shall call them the Evanski Choristers. They sang "Peace be upon thee, Lady Bright!" to the Fair Circassian, who was much pleased. The lines run—

"Peace be upon thee, Lady Bright;
Sleep while we sing, good night, good night!"

Don't remember any more of it, but eked out the glee by repeating it over and over again. All delighted. The stupid Fair Circassian explained to the Caravan people the she was "Lady Bright." They got this into their idiotic heads, and would address me as Lord Bright. They think I am on a diplomatic mission to make peace between Turkey and Russia. Served wickski all round, and explained. Hairy Patient progressing. Before retiring, sent in my bill for medical attendance, making up prescription, &c. Hairy Patient promised to settle it in the morning. All to bed.

Monday.—Woke late. Caravan party disappeared. Gone without paying. What ingratitude! Think I hear them in the distance singing, "Peace be upon thee, Lady Bright!" Pack up, and pursuit.

10 A.M.—No signs of them. Crossed a river. Examined map. Only one river mentioned in it. The Oxus. If it is the Oxus, we ought to be near Khiva. If it isn't the Oxus, where are we?

11 A.M.—Fine day. Warm. Wind S.W. by E.C. Clear. No wolves. Nothing visible anywhere. Stopped for breakfast, and worked at fitting up my new sleigh with a "speaking machine," on the principle of the one in the Grand Hotel, Paris. It is connected with a lightning conductor which stands up at the back of the sleigh. The conductor is thus made to exclaim, at intervals, "Khiva! Khiva! Full inside! All right!" This will have the double effect of keeping off wolves and attracting any passengers, as there is plenty of room in it, and at three kopecks a head an honest rouble may be turned. The sleigh is fitted with a pair of boots, instead of one, which is a novelty. Lady Bright, the Unfair Circassian, quarrelsome. Shall drop her at Khiva, and the boys too. Rations running short. They threaten to mutiny and eat the Pig. A firm hand is necessary. Onward. Ha! Khiva in sight. . . . An anxious night . . . on guard before the boot where the Pig is. . . . Through a slit in the covering of the sleigh, I hear the confoundedly Unfair Circassian telling the Tartar boys how nice ham is! and what delicious things pigs' trotters are! Then she describes crackling and pig's fry! The Tartar boys, by their religion, are bound to detest pig. She is trying to convert them. Hate proselytism. What a subject for a romance, The Pig and the Proselyte! a Tale of the Great Atrocity! . . . Another moment I burst in among them! I begged them to remember the teaching they received on their mother's knee. They writhe. . . . they do remember the teaching they received on their mother's knee. . . . I have struck a wrong chord. . . . I adjured them by all the glories of their ancient creed not to apostatise. . . . I drew a fearful picture—or a picture—of the pains of indigestion. . . . they were touched, and the Pig is untouched! The Unfair Circassian flew at me. . . . ah! what a night of terror!!! Wickski all round. . . . quiet restored. . . . we sped onward. . . .

Wednesday, 4 A.M.—Khiva—it must be Khiva—in sight. . . . at last! . . .

Same Day, 6 A.M.—At the gates. Saw a Sentinel. "Ve Gates?" I asked. (German jeu de mot—one of my splittersidenen—quite new.) He presented his musket—I presented wickski. "O much-caressed son of extraordinary overfed parents!" he exclaimed, "I never take anything so early, except—a prisoner." . . .

Same Evening.—In a Russian goal. At least, I think it's Russian. I don't know whether I'm at Khiva, or not: no one will tell me. All I can ascertain from the Gaoler's Daughter (a pretty black-eyed girl) is that this is a Russian outpost, but that the name and the whereabouts is a secret. "Can I send a letter by this out-post?" I inquired. She smiled; and hearing her father's keys clanking in the corridor, she retired. . . . I am alone. . . . Boys, Circassian, and Pig, all gone. I contrive to write my Diary by ingeniously (for I am never at a loss) making some ink out of brick-dust mixed with the remains of my wickski. It is an admirable invention, will cost half the price of the best ink, and can be patented, on my return, as "Brickski-Wickski, or Indelible Khivan Incorrosive Ink." I have sharpened an old rusty nail, and am now writing this on a leaden plate, placed here for my supper, which (the plate, I mean) I shall throw out of window, in the hope of its being found, and forwarded to you. I have no private wire. Nothing. I shall write on the leaden plates (throwing them out of window as soon as finished, and only hope they won't fall on any unfriendly head), then on my pocket-handkerchiefs, linen, and sheets. They will be sheets ready for the press. The Gaoler's Daughter addresses me as "Lord Bright." The Circassian has told her this. Please get up a subscription for "Lord Bright, the unhappy nobleman now languishing in a Russian goal at —" . . . I'll let you know where it is when they tell me. . . . but do get up an agitation, and memorialise the Government. Couldn't you induce W. E. G. to make speeches about me? Tell him it's the Turks who are "atrocitizing" me—not the Russians. My agent in town will receive subscriptions, and will forward to me safely any packages of lint, soap, books, warm clothing, champagne, haunches of venison, &c., &c., "all addressed to the Unhappy Nobleman," &c., &c. Work the Oracle, or, if you don't, I shall never get to Khiva! There's a subject for a song in prison! It would sell immensely. Composed by our riding representative (or representative for the East Riding) when in prison at — ts. (It is pretty sure to end in "tz" or "ova" until we get more frontierwards, when it ends in "m or n," as the case may be.) The words would be something to this effect:—

"Then work the oracle, my boys,
And use the mighty lever
To raise subscriptions, or, my boys,
I'll never get to Khiva!"

Chorus. With my (the singer's and composer's) tol de rol de riddle lol,
Tol de rol de riva,
Oh tol de rol de riddle lol,
When shall I get to Khiva?"

You see my spirits are still above proof. . . . Hark! a footstep. Hush! 'tis the night-watch! he guards my lonely cell. I must hide my leaden plates, sheets, and writing apparatus! . . . 'Tis the Gaoler. He will enter and find me whistling in my sleep . . . will write more directly he has gone. . . .

[From the Musical World.]

"A MAN OF HIS WORD."

The New Horse."

* A present—not "on sale or return"—but a bond fide present. If "on sale," Private Wire could hardly be trusted. If "on return"—suppose "our R. R." never gets to Khiva—how can he, or barb, return from Khiva? Bond fide present from his enthusiastic admirer, Throphilus Queer.

(To be continued.)

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—The Conservatory of Music, established with funds left by Dr Hoch, will be opened next spring, under the directorship of Joachim Raff.

À MADAME ADELINA PATTI.

Les adorateurs de votre sublime talent vous demandent à genoux de leur faire entendre, à votre représentation d'adieu, la romance Anglaise, "The bird that came in spring"—pour nous faire moins regretter le printemps qui s'envole avec vous—vous notre oiseau céleste, imparfaitement représenté par le bijoux étincelant qui vous a été très-humblement offert. Adieu, oiseau-météore, et reviens éclairer de nouveau la nuit profonde où nous allons être plongés!

Saint-Petersbourg, le 4/16 Février 1877.

B. ORLOFF.
LISE BOLDAREFF.
BARON DE FRAENKEL.
T. LAWSON.
S. BASCHMANOFF.
A. STACHOVITCH.
EMMA BROWN.
A. ENGELHARDT.
P. RODOKONAKY.
S. LIMROTH.
N. BOLGOWSKOY.
H. LUMBY.
A. AXANOFF.
PRINCE N. SCHAHOPNOZ.
BARON K. KORFF.
D. VOULOUBIEW.
W. KAMENEW.
G. LERMONTOFF.
BARON NEURBERG.
T. OQAROKY.
PRINCE F. LIEVEN.
R. TIMACHEAU.

M. POULOKOASKY.
BARONNE STEMPEL.
COMTE E. PLENDEIKOFF.
M. THOMPSON.
PRINCESSE M. ORBELIANI.
PRINCE A. LOMERLOFF.
M. DAVYDOW.
L. ABASOUF.
COMTE PROTONOFF.
L. VOTOVSKY.
F. KAFNIST.
PRINCE A. LALOMIRSKI.
F. AIVASOFSKI.
LEON KALEN.
T. GROMOFF.
COMTE NORN.
N. DFLSCH.
A. WOLKOW.
O. PLESSKEE.
A. WORONITZ.
G. TEPITOUTIMSSOF.

Le 1er abonnement ne peut se consoler de n'avoir pas vu cet hiver Roméo et Juliette, le plus beau fleuron de votre couronne. Ne voudriez vous pas le substituer à Rigoletto, que ce fervent abonnement, tout entier, vient d'entendre à votre bénéfice!

[The composer of "The bird that came in spring" is Sir Julius Benedict, who, though not born in England, has written so many beautiful English songs as to entitle him to be called "An English composer"—and of the most genuine.

D. P.]

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

We subjoin the programme of the students' orchestral concert given in St James's Hall on Wednesday evening, June 9:—

Overture (MS.), Il Talismano (Balfe); Recitation and Song, The Resurrection (G. A. Macfarren)—Miss Weyland, pupil of Mr Goldberg; Concerto, in D minor, Op. 1, andante and presto (W. Sterndale Bennett)—pianoforte, Miss Emily Lawrence; Magnificat (MS.) (Olivier Prescott, student)—solo (Miss Marian Williams), chorus, and orchestra; Concerto, in E flat, Op. 73, first movement (Beethoven)—pianoforte, Miss Kate Steel; Nunc Dimittis (MS.) (Eaton Fanning, student)—chorus and orchestra; Duetto, "Notte gentil d'Imene," Roméo et Juliette (Gounod)—Miss Kate Brand and Mr Seligmann; Concerto, in F, larghetto (Weber)—clarinet, Miss Frances Thomas; Solo and Chorus, Orfeo (Gluck)—harp obbligato, Miss Edith Brand; solo, Miss Orridge; Concerto, in G, Op. 58, first movement (Beethoven)—pianoforte, Mr Morton; Finale, Loreley (Mendelssohn)—solo, Miss Jessie Jones; song, "O voi dell' erebo," La Resurrezione (Handel)—Mr R. George; Quintet, "Sento, O Dio," Così fan tutte (Mozart)—Miss Shaboe, Miss Geddes, Mr Thorpe, Mr Williams, and Mr Jopp; Overture, Ruy Blas (Mendelssohn).

BRUSSELS.—Gounod's Cinq-Mars, Le Timbre d'Argent of Saint-Saëns, Georges Dandin by M. Emile Mathieu, Reyer's Statue, Le Philtre by Auber, Wagner's Lohengrin, and Gounod's Roméo et Juliette are the novelties for next season at the Monnaie.*

BRESLAU.—The second Silesian Musical Festival commenced on the 10th inst. with Mendelssohn's Elijah. Among the singers were Mme Gardini, formerly Mdle Ethelka Gerster.†

* We shall go to Brussels to hear Le Philtre.—D. P.

† Who appears to-night as Amina at Her Majesty's Theatre.

Look upon
and this Picture on this.

(MOLDAVIA.)

(BESSARABIA.)

PPP—delicatisamente

Bospo (Neutral party).—Con spiedo.

FFF—Snnioso.

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S

Pianoforte Recitals.

THE EIGHTH AND LAST RECITAL

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 23, 1877.

Programme.

QUINTET, in F minor, Op. 34, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello — Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr L. RIES, Herr STRAUS, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA ... Brahms.
 "SCENES CARNAVALISQUES," Op. 9, for pianoforte — Mr CHARLES HALLÉ ... Schumann.
 ROMANZA, in F, for violin — M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA ... Beethoven.
 GRAND TRIO, in B flat, Op. 97, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello — Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, M^{me} NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA ... Beethoven.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

	Sing'e Tickets.
Sofa Stalls, numbered and reserved	£0 7 0
Balcony	0 3 0
Area	0 1 0

Tickets at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Olivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse, & Co., 48, Cheapside; Hays, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 23, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

AN ALARMIST.—No. M^{lle} Caroline Salla has beautifully shaped arms; and she knows it. Huguenots to wit. Arabella Goddard has beautifully shaped arms; and she knows it. "Ne Plus Ultra" to wit. Sophie Cruvelli had beautifully shaped arms; and she knew it. Les Vêpres Siciliennes to wit. They all know and knew it. Where's the harm? (Don't drop the "H"—as Arthur Sullivan does, when he says, "it's all 'abit'"). No pun is intended.

DR QUITE.—Rossini did write an opera called Armida; but that is no reason why he should not have written Il Bruschino. Dr Quite is elsewhere wrong.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1877.

Cambridge University.

PROFESSOR MACFARREN has issued an official letter explanatory of the new regulations adopted unanimously by the Syndicate not long ago. Here it is:—

MY DEAR SIR,—According to the new regulations, candidates for the Degree of Bachelor of Music must first produce evidence of having satisfactorily passed one of the following Examinations in Literature and Science:—

- (1.) The "Previous Examination" of the University, Parts I. and II.
- (2.) The Examination of the "Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Boards." (3.) The University "Higher Local Examinations." (4.) The University "Senior Local Examinations."

This last Examination (No. 4) affords the readiest means of satisfying the University requirements. Candidates for a Musical Degree, announcing themselves as such, are allowed to enter this Examination even though they may be over 18 years of age. The next Examination will be held in December, 1877. A musical candidate is required to satisfy the Examiners—

- (1.) In English Grammar and Arithmetic; (2.) in two at least of the subjects in section B (English History, Geography, a work of some standard English writer, and Political Economy) and in the English Essay; (3.) in one of the subjects of sections C and D (viz., Latin, Greek, French, or German); and (4.) in section E (Euclid and Algebra).

Information as regards the details of this Examination may be obtained on application to the Rev. G. F. Brown, M.A., Secretary of the Cambridge Local Examination Syndicate, St Catharine's College, Cambridge. The Examination for the Degree of Mus. Bac. will consist of three parts—

- (1.) A preliminary Examination in (a) Acoustics,* (b) Harmony, (c) Counterpoint; (2.) The Exercise, namely, a musical composition fulfilling prescribed requirements; (3.) A more advanced Examination in Musical Science; and no person will be accepted as a candidate for the second or third part of the Examination until he has qualified in the previous part or parts. I am unable at present to furnish you with the exact details of this Examination. These have to be settled by the Board of Musical Studies, and will not be announced until November, but it seems probable that the first "Preliminary Examination" will be held early in June, 1878, and the "Advanced Examination" in the following December. The certificate of having passed an Examination in Literature and Science will not be demanded from those candidates who may present themselves for the Musical Examination before the end of the Easter Term, 1879, and who at the time of the Examination are over thirty years of age.

Trinity College, June, 1877.

G. A. MACFARREN.

The late Mr John Oxenford would have passed all these examinations, and in most of them, as well as on many other subjects, would have beaten the examiners; but, when the musical exercise came into question, it is greatly to be feared that Professor Macfarren would have plucked that great man and consummate scholar.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

THE sapling of 1857 has in twenty years expanded into a giant oak. In 1862 it was decided that the Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace should, like the great music meetings at Birmingham and Norwich, and the less imposing gatherings of the Cathedral Choirs, be constituted triennial. It was justly concluded that if Birmingham could support once every three years a festival on an enormous scale, London, with its principal singers, its orchestra, and half its chorus immediately at hand, ought, without much difficulty, to do the same. Sydenham is but an outpost of London; and Sydenham can boast an edifice unrivalled in the world for originality and elegance of structure, for enchanting aspect, and for vastness of accommodation. But there was still another incentive. "Handel, though a German, is the greatest and most universally popular of English musicians." In the land of his birth, not to speak of other countries, his music is not a tenth part so familiar to the majority of the people as it has long been in England. Handel, in short, it may be said without irreverence, has stood foremost among those preachers whose persuasive discourse has been most effectual to strengthen a faith in the inspired beauty of the Christian doctrine. It is a stale aphorism, that "The Messiah"—or Messiah, as it should properly be named—is the most eloquent of sermons; and yet it cannot be too frequently reiterated; for the good it effects is

* A course of Lectures on Elementary Acoustics will be delivered at Cambridge, in the Cavendish Laboratory, during the ensuing October Term, by Sedley Taylor, Esq., M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge.

